"I suggest that this distorted impression is based on a confusion between objective and method. There is no question and there can be no question about the objective of high and stable employment. As Ambassador W. Averell Harriman said to the Council of OEEC earlier this month, it is one of the greatest concerns of all democratic governments. The real question is how to achieve it and maintain it. The choice among methods is the critical point."

A stirring call to the nations of Europe to put aside narrow, nationalistic selfishness in the interest of stimulating trade with each other was sounded by D. U. Stikker, Foreign Minister of Holland and OEEC political conciliator and council chairman.

"Only by honestly admitting," he said, "that in our own self-interest we shall have to shoulder each other's burdens and make sacrifices for purposes far removed from the traditional fields of direct governmental action, we shall be able to embark on the new and promising road of a 'multilateralization of sacrifices' that is the only road which will create a truly European unity.

"It is inevitable that the greater liberalization of trade will affect the whole complicated structure of protected industries and agricultural enterprises which have grown and sometimes flourished behind barriers of protection.

"The advantage of the large European market for those who can produce at competitive prices without the protection of tariffs, quotas and premiums is so great that they should be willing to compensate the losers in the struggle. In every country certain groups will lose if the ideal of one market and covertibility (of currencies) is achieved, but the whole community will benefit, and these gains will so far overshadow the losses these can and should be borne in the common interest. . .

"What is needed now is a new series of 'political devices' to bring our respective governmental systems in harmony with the great technical unification of Europe which is taking place. I am convinced that the moment for decisive action was not yesterday, is not tomorrow, but is today."

CIO Schedules More Nathan Broadcasts

Boom? Bust? Jobs? Unemployment? Wages? Prices? Profits?

These are some of the questions that Robert R. Nathan, noted economist, will discuss in another series of eight radio network broadcasts for the CIO starting May 2. The talks will be heard over the ABC network each Tuesday at 10:45 p.m. (EST) during May and June.

A number of ABC stations transcribe the program and run it at other hours, or on other days. So you'll do well to check the radio columns of your local paper for the exact hour that Nathan will be heard on the ABC station in your city.

Bob Nathan is a nationally-known economist who has prepared a number of wage studies for the CIO and affiliated unions. A former government official, he is also a leading figure in the liberal American Veterans Committee.

He'll talk about the economic problems that concern every American in the months ahead.

So tune your radio to Bob Nathan, speaking for the CIO, on Tuesday evenings at 10:45.

British Healthier

Britain's death rate has dropped to the lowest on record, statistics released by the Ministry of Health reveal. The figures, covering the year ending March 31, 1949, include the first 10 months of the controversial National Health System under which everybody in the country is entitled to free medical care.

The report states that "the family doctors carried the service through its first difficult winter without serious breakdown."

NLRB Rules Walkout May Be Called If Union Gives 60-Day Notification

A STRIKE to win modification of a contract during its term is legal under the Taft-Hartley Act provided the union gives 60 days' notice and the agreement does not contain a no-strike clause, the Natl. Labor Relations Board has ruled.

The decision was handed down in dismissing charges by Wilson & Co. that the CIO United Packinghouse Workers and six of its locals had refused to bargain. It was the first interpretation by the board of Section 8 (d) of T-H, which contains the 60-day proviso, and sets forth the criteria by which it can be determined if employers and unions have bargained within the meaning of the law.

While all five board members agreed that the charges should be dismissed, only three of them concurred in the majority opinion.

The union and the company signed a two-year contract in October 1947 for the period from May 1947 to May 1949. It provided for a single wage reopening at the end of the year upon written notice 60 days prior to the date upon which the notifying party wished to begin negotiations. There was no prohibition of strikes.

IN DECEMBER 1947 the union served written notice of intention to reopen. The company and union got into an argument over interpretation of the reopening clause as a result of which a strike was called in March 1948.

The NLRB majority consisted of John M. Houston, James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Paul L. Styles.

"Section 8 (d) (4)," they found, "prohibits a strike to secure modification of termination of a collective bargaining agreement for a period which is limited to 60 days after a proper notice of the proposed modification or termination has been given.

"As the strike in the instant case occured more than 60 days after the notice of the proposed modification was given, we find that it satisfied the requirements . . . and did not, therefore, constitute a refusal to bargain."

IN DISCUSSING the requirement of 60 days' notice before striking to secure modification of a contract still in force, the three agreed:

"It is apparent that the prime purpose of Section 8 (d) was to prevent so-called 'quickie' strikes designed to secure termination or modification of collective bargaining agreements. To accomplish this purpose, Congress in Section 8 (d) provided for a mandatory 60-day 'cooling off' period, during which a labor organization is forbidden to strike to enforce its demands to modify or terminate the contract.

"Nowhere in the legislative history is there any indication of an intent to extend the statutory waiting period beyond the 60 days to which reference is repeatedly made. Quite the contrary, the statements quoted (from Congressional Committee reports), in our opinion, serve to emphasize that once the 60-day periods has elapsed, so far as the statutory requirements are concerned, unions and employers are free to take economic action."

The decision upset the recommendation of the trial examiner, John Lewis, who held the union was not free to strike until the expiration date of the contract.

"The results which follow from such a literal reading are patently unreasonable and at variance not only with the broad policy of the act, but also with the specific purpose of the proviso of Section 8 (d)," the majority found.

"If Section 8 (d) (4) is read so as to prohibit a strike for modification of a contract until that contract expires the concept of contract modification is rendered almost meaningless, and the act will have destroyed the effectiveness of provisions contained in hundreds of collective bargaining agreements whereby the parties have agreed to consider wage and similar adjustments during the term of the agreement, and, in the absence of a no-strike clause, have further recognized that demands made pursuant to reopening clauses may be supported by the traditional modes of economic pressure.

"SUCH A result would constitute a serious deterrent to the execution of collective bargaining agreements of any substantial duration, and would thereby remove a most important encouragement to stability in industrial relations."

Chairman Paul M. Herzog, agreeing that the charges against the union should be dismissed, in a separate opinion branded their interpretation of Section 8 (d) as "strained." Congress intended the 60-day notice proviso, he maintained, "to apply only to attempts to terminate or modify at about the time of contract expiration."

Abe Murdock, the fifth member, reached the same opinion Herzog did but by another line of reasoning based on a literal reading of the section.

Mine Workers' Board Accepts Unity Talk Bid

Formal acceptance of CIO Pres. Philip Murray's labor unity proposal was voted last week by the executive board of the United Mine Workers.

Acting on recommendations by UMW Pres. John Lewis, the miners' board named Lewis and two other union officers to select an appropriate committee to meet with officials of other labor organizations.

Murray proposed creation of a joint labor unity committee of "duly accredited" spokesmen with "authority" to work out plans for joint action on legislative, economic and political programs; and to search for means of establishing organic unity within the labor movement.

UMW Vice-Pres. Thomas Kennedy, who presided at the mine union session, told the board that "the present situation is advantageous for eventual organic unity of all American labor."

The AFL executive council is scheduled to discuss the Murray proposal at a Philadelphia meeting on May 8.

300 To Lose Jobs On Chicago Paper

About 300 of the Chicago Sun-Times' 1,750 employes are losing their jobs because the paper is abandoning the afternoon field to concentrate on the morning field, competing with the Tribune.

The change was made April 17 and those dismissed included 65 members of the Newspaper Guild and an undetermined number of printers, teamsters and pressmen. The change comes 14 months after the merger of the old morning Sun and the Times.

Murray Pledges CIO Aid To Panama Canal Workers

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in the following statement, pledged the CIO to building a strong and democratic union of Panama Canal Zone workers:

THE FUNDAMENTAL goal of the Congress of Industrial Organizations is to improve the standard of living of workers throughout the United States, its territories and possessions.

The CIO, during its many years of existence, has won historic improvements for its membership. As a result of these efforts, the American standard of living has been improved; workers have achieved greater security than ever before; and their fundamental civil rights have been better protected.

But this progress has not been uniform. There are still areas where the American flag unfortunately flies over scenes of insecurity and distress. The CIO will not rest until those conditions have been wiped out everywhere in the realm of the United States.

No American areas need the help of free democratic American labor unions more than Puerto Rico and the Panama Canal Zone. The CIO is in the process of extending to the men, women and children of these two areas the protection and benefits of democratic unionism.

In the Panama Canal Zone, the CIO is prepared to move vigorously and militantly to bring about the long-overdue improvements in the standard of living of all the employes of the United States Government.

The CIO has improved economic conditions throughout the 48 states. We knew from experience that substandard wages undermine the health and welfare of families. They rob children of their rightful heritage of health, education, decent living conditions. We know that substandard wages are bad not only for the people who are forced to exist on them—but they also have a sinister effect on the standards of workers receiving higher pay. Low wage levels undermine the whole economic society.

The CIO is fully committed to a high wage policy. We know that it improves living conditions, improves the state of health and welfare, and contributes directly to the strength of democracy.

So long as low wage levels exist in the Panama Canal Zone, the men and women who work for the government in that area will be deprived of their right to decent living standards.

The CIO pledges its every power to improve these conditions in the Panama Canal Zone.

The CIO will press for enactment of legislation beneficial to the people of the Canal Zone. We will work for the abolition of inequitable wage standards.

We will help the workers of the Canal Zone to organize free democratic trade unions which can protect their members, win settlement of just grievances, and bring about long-needed reforms in Canal Zone labor policies and economic conditions.

We recognize that the evil weeds of totalitarianism grow best where poverty is rampant. When the economic swamps are cleared, when men and women are paid fair wages and given a chance to better their conditions—that is when democracy flourishes.

There is no area which needs more desperately these vital reforms than the Panama Canal Zone.

We pledge the CIO to work unceasingly for the betterment of the loyal, hard-working, underpaid men and women of the Panama Zone.

Haywood Says CIO Is Ready

The following statement was issued to the Panama Canal Zone workers by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization:

IT IS WITH a great deal of satisfaction that I learned from our CIO representative, Gilbert Anaya, that many of you desire to protect your association and membership with the CIO.

It was unfortunate that the administrators of the affairs of the organization to which you were attached, placed ideological beliefs above your interests—the interests that they were duty bound to serve first at all times.

The CIO is prepared to be of assistance to you. We will work with you to improve wages and conditions of employment, and to obtain greater security. Our concern is for the men, women and children of the Canal Zone—and we want to bring a happier life to you.

We shall continue in our activities until, with you, we shall build a strong union of, by and for the workers of the Canal Zone. We shall build democratically. When the task of building is accomplished, Canal Zone workers will have the autonomous right to adminster the affairs of their organization. They will receive the full support of the national CIO in presenting matters to Congress and to the administrators of Canal Zone affairs.

We are confident that great progress can be made in the interests of every man, woman and child. Where the Stars and Stripes fly, we will bring to all peoples the freedoms that belong to them and the rights that are due every human being who toils.

As Vice-President and Director of Organization of the CIO, I heartily welcome you into this great organization, dedicated as it is to human freedom and security.

'Red' Charge Hearings Set for Three Unions

THE CIO has scheduled hearings on charges of Communist domination leveled against three affiliates — and won a major legal victory in cases involving two unions already expelled from CIO ranks.

Scheduled for hearing are these three unions, with membership concentrated on the west coast:

May 17: Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, headed by Harry Bridges.

May 22: Marine Cooks & Stewards, headed by Hugh Bryson.

May 25: Fishermen & Allied Workers, headed by Joseph Jurich.

The CIO committee which will hear charges against the organizations is composed of Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, chairman; Vice-Pres. John J. Moran of the Communications Workers; and Pres. Joseph Fisher of the Utility Workers.

All three hearings will be held at CIO headquarters in Washington.

Earlier, the CIO had announced that hearings on charges against the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union had been postponed from April 18 to June 1, at the request of Pres. Ben Gold of the union. Gold had requested that it be held after the union's convention on May 21.

IN NEW YORK, meanwhile, U. S. District Court Judge Simon Rifkind dealt a heavy blow to the hopes of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers and the United Office & Professional Workers that they might be able to tangle the CIO ouster proceedings in a mass of judicial tape.

Judge Rifkind turned down their requests for temporary injunctions to hold up the CIO's expulsion move by ruling that the CIO has the right to oust affiliates which it holds "are moved by purposes hostile to those of the federation."

". . . It does not follow that a confederation of associations [like the CIO] may not specify the objectives and purposes animating their common activity, and expel from membership such associations as, in the judgment of the confederation, are moved by purposes hostile to the confederation," Judge Rifkind declared in his opinion.

The judge said that the CIO, from its beginning in 1938, has had "certain political and economic objectives." If the FTA "should now become a dissenter," it can be expelled.

Fitz Reneges on Carey Debate

THE GREAT Fitzgerald-Carey debate was finally arranged, it was thought — until Fitzgerald (Albert J.) laid down the conditions at a conference at Baltimore April 19.

The conditions: No reporters, not even for the IUE News or the UE News; no radio; no recording; their own timekeeper; their own rules on debate; their own chairman; admission by card only, and then only to members of Local 130, United Electrical Workers. And finally, no talk—but absolutely none—about Communism.

James B. Carey, heading the administrative committee of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers-CIO, had been trying for months to get Albert J., the UE president, to debate. In an unguarded moment, when Fitz was before his home Local No. 130, the members chivvied him into accepting. So they wired the IUE in Washington, and IUE leaped at the chance. There were no strings.

BUT THEN FITZ must have heard from New York. When Al Hartnett, aide to Carey, went to Baltimore, he learned there would be conditions. Fitz was to speak last; there would be no flipping of a coin on that; there was to be no impartial third party to set the rules of debate, but their own man; the timer for the speakers would be a UE man; the floor guards would be exclusively UE men; his own men could not introduce Carey.

The IUE rejected the strings. Carey still is ready to debate Fitz, and said he hopes the members of his home local will demand that Fitz do so—and with no strings.

COMMENTING on the IUE's run-out on his challenge, Carey declared, "It's ludicrously obvious that Fitzgerald's Communist masters took fright at the prospect of an open, free debate in the American tradition. The idea of a debate—that concerns a half-million men and women in our industry — being held in secret, behind closed doors with the press and radio excluded, could be only the product of a few frantic little minds that dare not expose their records to the glare of public opinion and democratic choice.

"The idea of prohibiting either of us from discussing Communism in the UE is barely short of lunacy. For 10 long years the issue has been nothing else but Communism in UE; the CIO expelled the Fitzgerald-Matles-Emspak crew because of Communism in UE; congressional committees time and again have found Communism in UE; the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission has barred UE from atomic energy plants because UE leaders would not and could not deny the charges of Communism in UE. And now, in the face of all that, Fitzgerald proposes that we pretend the issue doesn't exist—that the UE is something like the Ladies Aid Society or the Philadelphia Kennel Club—not what it actually is and has been for 10 years, the largest Communist - controlled union in the U. S."

Must Face 'Rights' Problem To Solve It

Trying To Dodge Issue Of Discrimination Accomplishes Nothing; Solution Will Require Work And A Lot Of It

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IN MY OLD HOME town, down in Arkansas, we were taught to say "Nigger" before we were old enough to learn there was such a word as "Negro."

To us Italians were "Wops" and the words "Jew" and "Kike" meant the same thing.

Most of us developed a dislike for Mexicans—although we didn't know any Mexicans—and we made dirty remarks about the small number of Catholics in town.

We regarded ourselves as being real, 100% Americans—the stuff from which the backbone of the nation was made.

We accepted our segregated schools without question and we saw nothing wrong with the shacks in "Nigger Town."

Ah, yes, we were smart brats—but more brats than smart.

I MENTION these things here because I'm getting tired of the apologists who say, "Swim, why don't you go a bit easy on that civil rights stuff? You don't understand the problems we face in my section of the country.

"Sure, we know the CIO is right and you're right—but you just can't rush things too fast. It's going to take time to get things straightened out."

Yes, it's going to take time and probably a lot of it. And it's going to take work, too.

But the job will never be done if we keep putting off until tomorrow the work that should be done today.

And nobody solves problems simply by refusing to face them.

IN TOWN AFTER town, all over the country, the CIO has tackled knotty problems resulting from racial and religious prejudice.

It hasn't been able to find a solution in every case, but it has made much progress.

It has demonstrated time and again that men and women of different races, creeds and colors can work together in harmony in the factory and on union projects.

The CIO's anti-discrimination work has had a real impact on the community—but, frankly, not enough of an impact.

There is still segregation in many schools, on transportation facilities, in restaurants and hotels.

There are still many business firms which will not give good jobs to members of minority groups.

There are still states which do not grant full political rights to Negroes.

LEGISLATION alone would not eliminate all of the evils resulting from prejudice, but it would help a lot.

A real Fair Employment Practices Commission would do much to provide equality of employment opportunities.

Outlawing the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting would help eliminate abuses of the right of franchise.

Passage of laws doing away with segregation would give to a large number of persons many privileges now denied them because of their color.

Let's look at it this way:

Civil rights legislation wouldn't wipe out prejudice but it would eliminate many of the undesirable results of prejudice.

Certainly the time has come for the U. S. to make a real attempt to abolish second-class citizenship.

PREJUDICE IS not confined to any specific region of the nation. It exists all over the country.

It exists wherever men attempt to judge their fellow men not by their ability and accomplishments but by their race, creed or color.

Much of it results from ignorance. Much of it stems directly from fear. Much of it is kept alive by economic insecurity.

Prejudice is an individual matter—and as individuals we can do much to eliminate it.

We can point out the unfairness of discrimination to everybody who will listen. We can examine our own attitudes, straighten out our own thinking, improve our own practices.

Sure it's a difficult problem, but it's one we must solve if we're ever going to have a full democracy in this country.

'Automation'

You'd better learn how to spell and pronounce the word at the top of the column—if you don't already know—because you're likely to hear a lot about it in the future.

The New York Times refers to it as "the newest production science in industry."

Here's what it means: By installing more automatic machines and taking full advantage of technological developments industry can reduce the number of its employes and still increase production.

Yep, that's "automation," and the Times says it's sweeping industry.

That, of course, isn't news to CIO unions whose members have become victims of "automation."

They tell us that some of the newest gadgets are simply marvelous, from a technical standpoint, and some of them closely resemble "mechanical brains."

That isn't any comfort, however, to the man who's been tossed out of a job by a machine. Try to tell him he's making a great contribution to the advancement of industry and he'll probably say, "Yeah! But what am I supposed to use for money?"

The CIO has never been known as an organization that sought to halt technical developments—but it has been known, too, as an organization greatly concerned over the welfare of those who lose jobs through no fault of their own.

"Automation" is creating a problem—a problem that can reach serious national proportions unless something is done about it.

We're not suggesting that there's a simple answer or that we even have the answer. What we're saying, however, is that those close to the problem had better start studying it immediately and come up with some solution.

Handicapped Aid Proposed

A RESOLUTION to coordinate the work among the physically handicapped will be sponsored in all states by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped with the support of the CIO and the AFL.

Confusion in the work has resulted from the splitting of the handicapped-aid programs among different state bureaus.

Under the proposed plan there would be established in each state labor department, a nine-man Advisory Council on Affairs of the Handicapped, consisting of three representatives of employes, three labor representatives and three physically - handicapped persons. The council, which would be appointed by the governor, would act in an advisory capacity to all agencies of the state concerned with aiding the handicapped.

Announcement of the proposal to seek action in all states was made by AFPH Pres. Paul A. Strachan.

"The CIO is fully in accord with your proposal to establish Advisory Councils on Affairs of the Handicapped in all states," Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, wrote Strachan. "We will urge all our affiliates to support this excellent program.

"Organized labor is a party of primary concern in all matters concerning the physically handicapped and their return to employment. Certainly it is absolutely necessary that the enthusiasm and interest of labor, other interested groups, and the physically handicapped themselves be utilized in every state by the establishment of Advisory Councils on Affairs of the Handicapped . . ."

The plan also received the indorsement of Walter Mason, AFL national legislative representative.

Regional Education Rebuffed

THE SOUTHERN regional education plan, set up by 13 States to perpetuate segregation in higher education, apparently won't work in Maryland.

The State Court of Appeals has ruled that the state cannot send Esther McCready, 19, of Baltimore, a Negro who wants to get into the Univ. of Maryland School of Nursing, outside the state for her training. Maryland must provide equal facilities within the state itself, the court ruled unanimously.

Maryland schools are segregated by law. The state contended it can send Negroes to other states for higher education as part of its segregation policy. It proposed to send Miss McCready to Meharrey Medical College at Nashville, Tenn., a Negro institution, under the regional compact.

The court threw out the state's argument that the regional plan "is available as a means of effecting segregation when such means are not available within the confines of the several states." The case will be appealed to the State Supreme Court, it is expected.

Under the regional compact, both white and Negro students of the participating states may seek training in a regional school within the area if facilities are not available in their home states. Parties to its are the Southern and border states where segregation is set up by law.

Some 1c Sales Found Phony

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission has cracked down on the "One-Cent Sales" of the Rexall Drug Co., and its wholly-owned subsidiary, the Owl Drug Co. The FTC has found that the chain "misrepresented the extent of price reductions in some stores by listing as regular prices amounts that are higher than the usual selling prices, with the result that the public has been misled".

The FTC order prohibits the chain from misrepresenting prices in connection with such sales.

"Contrary to the representations made in this advertising material," said the FTC, "in many of the franchise stores the purported 'regular' prices for some merchandise are higher than prices usually charged so that the price for two units is actually more than the regular price of one unit plus one cent."

Rexall, formerly known as United-Rexall Drug Co. and United Drug Co., distributes its products through the Owl Co. and Liggett Drug Co., also a wholly-owned subsidiary, and through independently-owned drug stores which get franchises to operate as "Rexall Stores".—(LPA.)

UPW Local Votes To Stay In CIO

Local 46 of the discredited United Public Workers, representing employes of the Philadelphia (Pa.) County Board of Assistance, has voted to secede and stay in the CIO.

The potential membership of the new unit is about 1000, and according to CIO Regional Director George Craig many board employes who had left the local or refused to join it because of pro-Communist national leadership are now signing up. Local 46 officers staying within the CIO are Pres. Edward Schwartz, Vice Pres. Berjoohy Haigazian; Corresponding Secy. Edward J. Van Dyke and Recording Secy. Lillian A. Beck.

Bias Complaints Rise 18% In N. Y. State

The New York State Commission Against Discrimination reported last week that complaints on discrimination in employment in the first three months of 1950 were 18% higher than in the last quarter of 1949.

Seventy - one complaints were filed in the first quarter of this year, compared to 60 cases in the last three months of 1949, according to Commissioner Edward W. Edwards. Racial discrimination led with 68%, religion was second with 17% and nationality third with 10%. Ninety-six per cent of the charges were filed against employers or employment agencies, but one was against a union and one against an employe accused by his employer of aiding and abetting discrimination.

And He Also Wore Tall Silk Hat

HE WAS A BIG, persuasive fellow—a nice-looking chap with considerable speaking ability — and he hated unions!

He soon became known in the area as the No. 1 enemy of the CIO and the best friend of anti-union employers.

He quoted from the Bible frequently and posed as a champion of the working man. He espoused the causes of liberty and freedom.

CIO organizers figured he was a phony and started checking up on him.

Here's the story as told by a CIO representative who helped expose him.

JONES, AS WE shall call the big fellow, had a habit of showing up at industrial plants at which the CIO had started organizing drives.

He usually dressed in overalls and blue shirt and wore a battered old hat.

As employes began streaming from the plant he would mount a box and begin speaking.

He was a great friend of the working man, he would say, and his chief interest was in preserving their personal freedom.

And unionism—particularly as practiced by the CIO—would destroy such freedom, he would declare.

The workers listened and many of them obviously believed what he said.

JONES KEPT POPPING up here and there — wherever the CIO started a membership campaign.

Organizers soon learned that Jones had a couple of colleagues who showed up at the plants when Jones was unable to be on hand.

They weren't as effective as Jones, but they helped tear down union sentiment.

"Something's got to be done about that fellow," one organizer said to another. "And something's got to be done quick."

They decided to check up on Jones.

Here was what they learned:

JONES WAS THE OWNER of one of the biggest paper plants in the state and he had considerable money.

Fighting unions was more than just a hobby. It was almost an obsession.

He loved to watch the horses run, and quite a bit of his money was gambled away at the race tracks.

"Ah, this situation calls for a camera," said one of the organizers. And a camera was secured.

The organizers obtained a good picture of Jones' palatial home—a beautiful place containing 12 to 15 rooms located in the center of several beautifully landscaped acres.

They also photographed the arched entrance to his estate, showing a sign which said, "Private Property; Keep Out."

IT TOOK A BIT OF work, but the CIO men finally got a good shot of the Jones racing stables.

At this point they figured they had all they needed to explode the myth that Jones was a "poor working stiff" who made anti-union speeches because of his concern for his fellow workers.

They took their photographs and a photostat of a check showing Jones paid one of his employes near-starvation wages, and began designing a leaflet.

They then got a real break—because Jones attended a wedding.

From a newspaper they obtained a picture of Jones leaving the church at which his daughter had been married. It showed him dressed in frock coat, striped trousers and tall silk hat.

This was added to the leaflet, which was distributed a few days later.

And after that, workers refused to listen when Jones tried to address them from a soap box.

SPRING FERVOR VS. SPRING FEVER!

End NLRB's Split Personality, Says Washington Post

Opposition to Pres. Truman's Plan No. 12 to transfer the powers of General Counsel Denham of the Natl. Labor Relations Board to the board is misguided in the opinion of the Washington Post entitled NLRB's Split Personality. The editorial:

LAST WEEK the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report withheld indorsement of Reorganization Plan No. 12 abolishing the office of general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board and assigning his functions to the board and its chairman. Now the Senate Committee on Expenditures has rejected the plan.

The Citizens Committee said that the plan to abolish the office of the general counsel raises issues that are "not wholly organizational, but are matters of national, political and economic policy."

Others argue that the latter proposal entails changes in the Taft-Hartley Act which the Administration has vainly tried to repeal. This objection seems far-fetched, although Mr. Denham's supporters have, no doubt, used it to good effect in their effort to discredit the plan.

Even Senator Taft admits that the present arrangement is defective. Last year he voted for an amendment to the act bearing his name that would have returned to the board the powers exercised by the general counsel although he is now opposing the reorganization plan. Furthermore, he concedes that there is no direct legal objection to the proposed shift of functions.

The existing extreme separation of functions has given rise to friction between the board and the general counsel and has seriously interfered with effective enforcement of the law. In unfair labor practice cases, for example, the general counsel alone determines whether to issue a complaint, and in determining whether or not to do so he need not be guided by the board's previous rulings.

CHAIRMAN HERZOG says that cases have been sent to the board by the general counsel "with the full knowledge that we would dismiss them later." The result is that both labor and management are confronted by a double standard, the work of the board is needlessly increased, and litigation before the courts is encouraged. The board also charges that employes in its regional offices under the supervision of the general counsel have been gradually losing their identity as agents of the board even in handling representation cases.

The present setup of the NLRB was a laudable attempt to separate the prosecuting from the judging functions of the agency. In practice, however, this division of functions has done infinitely more harm than good. Under the reorganization plan internal adjustments would prevent any official from acting as both prosecutor and judge.

The chief difference would be that the board would be in a position to exercise general supervisory powers over prosecuting activities, and prevent conflicts that impair its efficiency as a regulatory agency.

In our opinion, the proposed plan entails no changes in the present setup that cannot be justified as a proper exercise of the authority given the President by Congress to reorganize the executive establishments. This reform is imperatively needed to eliminate the friction, uncertainty and delays resulting from the present two-headed administration of the law.

Alaska Fishermen Get LIU Charter

Local Industrial Union charter No. 100 has been issued to the United Trollers of Alaska, deepsea fishermen in the Far North who bolted from Local 100 of the CIO Fishermen & Allied Workers upon its merger with the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

The two international unions face trial next month and possible expulsion from the CIO on charges of being dominated by the Communists.

The move to shift from the IFAW to the CIO originated among the executive board, which unanimously passed an empowering resolution and recommended it to the local. Branches of the local approved it at meetings in Ketchikan, Craig, Pt. Baker, Wrangell, Petersburg, Juneau, Sitka and Pelican.

'Equality' Has Hollow Sound

Supreme Court Justice John Marshall Harlan, in delivering the majority decision ruling that an employer was within his rights in firing a worker for belonging to a union, refused to acknowledge that the term "equality" in such a case has a hollow sound, says Elias Lieberman in "Unions Before The Bar."

"The very concept of master and servant, employer and employe, suggests inequality in their relative bargaining positions. It is highly theoretical, merely illusory, if not plainly misleading, to reason that the worker has the same equal right to accept or not to accept a job as the employer has to give or not to give the job."

Mr. Jobless Worker Comes To Washington

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

DURING THE WAR, the "E" banners, for excellent production records, flew over the New England factories and the mines of the far west, the shipyards, the little steel fabricating plants. Unemployment was a faint memory and a bad dream.

Now there's a new kind of "E"—"E" for Emergency. No banners proclaim it; its hallmarks are the employment line, the "No Help Wanted" sign, the exhausted state unemployment compensation fund, the mounting relief rolls. When over 12% of the working force in a given area is unemployed, the Federal government gives it an "E."

Nationally things are "still pretty good." Total employment, 57,551,000. Total unemployment, 4,123,000. It's not even a recession, in the language of the Federal Reserve Board. It's good old "normalcy." It's "levelling off."

But what about the "E" areas? What about the sickly "D" areas, with over 7% unemployed? What happens to the people in those areas? What is the government doing, what is it planning, to heal those sores, to keep the plague from spreading?

The administration is worried, but not severely as yet. It is issuing plans, making some effort to get new industrial blood into stricken areas, keeping a close watch on statistics. The whole Fair Deal program, long-and-short-range, is aimed at keeping employment high, prices low, equilibrium constant in the economy. Congress is balking, seemingly wants nothing to do with "expensive" social legislation, would rather try to balance the Federal budget than the economy.

CIO WANTS action. And since the nationwide picture is not one of crisis, since Congress is on dead center, CIO decided to be dramatic. Last week, it brought to Washington some of its unemployed members from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Utah, to tell their story in their own words; and these halting stories were backed up with cold local and area statistics.

The delegations saw their Congressmen and Senators. Three of the groups met with the President's Council of Economic Advisers. They marched into the cool, dim recesses of the Federal Reserve Board building and spent an hour with the chairman and several members of the Board of Governors. They went to the Labor Department and talked to the Bureau of Employment Security, and they conferred at length with Assistant Secretary of Labor John Gibson. They talked to Oscar Chapman, Secretary of the Interior, and Charles Sawyer, head of the Department of Commerce.

Immediately, to relieve the worst situations, they asked emergency extension of unemployment compensation benefits, for another 26 weeks above prevailing state levels, to be made available in the "E" areas.

Then, they asked for an emergency public works fund, as outlined in a bill introduced by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Cal.), to be used in the distressed areas.

THEY ASKED immediate Senate action on HR 6000, the House-passed bill to improve Social Security old-age benefits, which if passed would draw some older workers out of industry; this was stressed particularly by the TWUA group, since the average age level of workers in the stricken textile towns is 45 or more. (Philip Gracella, aged 33, was laid off in 1949 so the company could give a little more work to a 73-year-old man, who couldn't afford to retire.)

They asked standardization of state unemployment compensation laws, as requested by the President; they asked some kind of standardization, somehow, of welfare funds, or at least relaxation of the horrible "pauper law" which in too many states requires a worker to surrender title to all real property in order to quality for relief.

They asked, passionately, for retention, of rent control. (Mrs. Impi Campbell, of Maynard, Mass., who worked only six months in 1949 and has been laid off since January, was emphatic about this; her $3.50-a-week cold-water flat, in which she and her three children live, actually costs $11 a week because heat, light and water are extra.)

The Congressmen and the government officials listened, with shocked attention.

They heard these cold statistics, besides the human stories: Rhode Island, summer of 1949, 60,000 unemployed out of 250,000; 51,000 have exhausted their compensation; the $13 million state welfare fund is completely exhausted along with a deficit appropriation of $2.5 million; the legislature is now considering an $18 million request for the current fiscal year.

New Bedford, Mass.: 17,000 unemployed out of 65,000; Massachusetts as a whole, 210,000 unemployed out of 1,950,000, with 16,500 who have exhausted their benefits.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD put aside its charts and listened to working men. In the austere board room of the Federal Reserve Building, (l. to r.), Chairman Thomas McCa dolph M. Evans give un Graceffa, unemployed Tex

Connecticut: 52,430 fewer persons employed in January, 1950, than in October, 1948, and more "E" areas than any other state in the country; 54,000 exhaustions of benefits.

THE STATISTICS, the officials had heard before. The human stories were new and terrible. And beyond that, there was unintended shock in some of the things they heard—things the speakers didn't realize they were saying. A worried man from New Bedford grumbled about spending all those billions in Europe just so Europe could bring cheap stuff here and throw people out of work; he was wrong, but that's what he said. (For an account of why he is wrong see April 17 CIO News.) A miner complained that the government wasn't stockpiling domestic metals but was buying cheap foreign metals. A lot of people hinted the administration wasn't doing anything, wasn't trying. ("Just what is it you want the government to do?" a reporter asked Lucy Batafarano, of Waterbury, Conn., unemployed metal worker and sole support of her mother and most of her other family. "I just want the government to find us work," she said.)

How To Be

HERE'S A LITTLE more about Philip Graceffa, the man on Page One and Maynard, Mass., his home town.

Maynard is (or was) a one-mill, one-industry town, pop. 7000. The mill, American Woolen's Assabet plant, normally employs 1500 people. It can produce 10 million yards of women's suiting and coating a year. In 1949 it put out 3½ million yards; two shifts were laid off. In February, 1950, it shut down entirely. No orders, the boss said.

Those that were laid off in 1949, and Graceffa is one of them, have used up their unemployment compensation: it started again April 1 but, since it's based on employment in calendar 1949, it'll run out again very soon. The $25,000 local welfare fund is going down fast

Graceffa's unemployment check, when he gets it, is $37 a week: $25 for him, $2 per dependent. Ninety percent of it goes for food. Fortunately, his father owns the cold

THREE FROM PARK CITY, UTAH. Two big mines closed down on June 30, 1949, and 1000 men were thrown out of work, including these three. Unemployment compensation ran out for good last Nov. 19. Winter lasts six months in Park City. A union commissary has supplied food, coal and oil from funds raised elsewhere; tiny state welfare grants are eking out other necessities. He's a veteran: seaman first class, U. S. vy, 16 months' sea duty in both Atlantic d Pacific. Since he got out, in 1945, he's ought three pairs of shoes and one pair of ants, period. He's looked for work everyhere: got on a waiting list for state road ork, for instance, went over to Waltham nd tried to get in GM. No dice. There night be an opening painting "No Help Wanted" signs, he says.

Fortunately again, there's no sickness in his large family. He had to give up a $1000 life insurance policy and has nothing saved, of course: couldn't save anything even in good times. He figures he owes about $400, mostly for food; credit's been good because the grocers are sympathetic, but now they're having to tighten up, too.

Something better happen, he says. Nobody wants charity, but maybe it would be good if Maynard could get a works project to tide it over. Sure, another 26 weeks' compensation would help out. The best thing would be if the mill would open up again. The management says it will, if it can get the orders.

"One place I went," he said, recalling his endless search for a job, "I hopped a ride with a friend, and got to this plant, and there was a big 'No Help Wanted' sign, and this snotty girl in the employment office says 'Can't you read?'

"She made me so mad I said 'No, I can't.'"

So You Think You've Got It A Little Tough!

THE GOOD Lord endowed Jeannette Nealey with a sunny, placid nature. It's a good thing He did, because her life for the past five years has been one of unrelieved grinding, daily tragedy, with which she deals matter-of-factly and as best she can.

She is one of more than 15,000 unemployed textile workers living in Lawrence, Mass. The TWUA brought her to Washington last week, hoping to show the government that the "pretty healthy" U. S. economy was mighty sick in spots. Lawrence is one of the sickest; it's an "E" area, where one out of four workers is walking the streets, the "no help wanted" signs are up, and nine out of 10 of the unemployed have used up their compensation. It's mainly a textile town.

When Jeannette found herself in the same room with the Council of Economic Advisers she was scared stiff. What could she say that would explain Lawrence or tell the government what to do about it? The bigshots just asked her to tell her own story, in her own words. She did, and for a few moments their flow of pleasant generalities was halted.

FIVE YEARS ago, she said, her husband Robert, then a 26-year-old press operator at the Balta Rubber plant, got a slight shaking up in an auto accident, really nothing at all, but three days later he woke up blind, and they found he had this big brain tumor. turned out he'd had it most of his life. Jeannette took off from the mill where she was employed as a twister.

(Times were real good then, she said, so she didn't bother filling out all those union forms about seniority: she'd worked there 8½ years and the boss of the twisting room liked her and said to come back anytime.)

Robert had two operations. First one, they found the thing was so big, if they took it all it'd paralyze him, so they only took part of it and something went wrong and he stayed in a coma for eight weeks, so they tried again and took it all, and he came out of it still blind and with half his face paralyzed all down one side.

So Jeannette set out to support the family. She didn't say just when she found out the boy, now seven, had a rheumatic heart, but it was sometime around then. Soon as she could get someone to do for Robert, she went back to the mill earning her $49 a week. But on Jan. 1, 1949, she was laid off. Happy New Year.

IS THIS A YOUNG SOCIETY MATRON, dropping in to do a little slumming with the jobless? No, it's 29-year-old Mrs. Jeannette Nealey, Textile Workers union member of Lawrence, Mass., dressed in her (borrowed) best, who worked a total of 11 days in 1949, and is the sole support of her blind, partially paralyzed husband and her 7-year-old son, who has a rheumatic heart and weak eyes.

Since then, she's worked just 11 days in the mill. Eleven days in 15 months.

WHEN HER unemployment checks were gone, she went to welfare and they said to call up the mill, right from their office. She did, and the boss said "Jeannette, there's only a handful of girls working here now and they all got big seniority, and I don't think you'll ever see the inside of the twisting room again." Everywhere else, of course, the workers that had been laid off had the seniority. The state blind fund came through with $15 a week and welfare gave her $7, and then she found a job two nights a week carrying drinks in a night club, at $4 a night, and that's what the Nealeys live on, if you can call it living

She's 29 and Robert is now 31, and he's too sick and weak to learn one of those blind trades. Now and then his mind goes somewhere else, she says, and of course she doesn't tell him the really bad stuff, there's a lot of this he doesn't know. She's letting the hospital bills go; they have more money than she has.

orkers' Council of the Shipbuilding Workers; and oseph Falcone, president, Waterbury CIO Council; ated: Albert Spiller, unemployed foundry worker, d Julia Bulevich, unemployed metal worker. All are hipbuilding Workers. Connecticut has more "E" areas an any other state, regardless of size.

HST Plan 12 Puts Gannett Group in Tizzy

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IF ANYBODY in these United States doesn't know by now that the country is facing the "greatest labor emergency since the Wagner Act," he must be one of the rapidly diminishing minority not yet on the mailing list of Publisher Frank E. Gannett's Committee for Constitutional Government.

The committee, which has one of the finest stables of "alarums and excursions" in this part of the universe, has whipped itself up into a Grade-A tizzy over President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 12. That's the one which would restore a limited sort of sense to the Natl. Labor Relations Board by junking many of the functions assigned to the NLRB general counsel by the Taft-Hartley Act and turning them over either to the chairman or the board itself.

The committee apparently has got hold of a list of lawyers—including some of the country's best-known labor lawyers — and has sent to them a bulging envelope heavy enough to deaden the last hint of spring in a postman's arches. It contains six pieces of literature, printed direct or offset and not a union label in the lot, and a return self-addressed envelope.

Addressed To Lawyers

"You, as a lawyer," bawls the one bearing the address, "sworn to defend the constitution, every business client, may soon be confronted with the greatest labor emergency since the Wagner Act.

"Unless citizens across the nation can be roused and induced to speak up to their representatives in Congress during the next three weeks, it is probable that Section 12 of President Truman's Re-Organization Plan will go into effect because a majority to vote it down cannot be found in the House or the Senate.

"Section 12 destroys the independence of the general counsel (Robert N. Denham) which was established by the Taft-Hartley Act."

(This pause is merely for dramatic effect.)

"President Truman said, on Labor Day, 1949, that he wanted 'to rip the Taft-Hartley Law out of the statute books' and now he is attempting to do that, by executive usurpation, destroying legislation over which the Constitution gives sole power to Congress!

(Exclamation mark ours — CIO News; it looks better.)

"But the country must speak up at once in angry protest against the President's action and in support of Sen. Taft's resolution in the Senate and (the late) Congressman Church's resolution in the House to block this usurpation."

(Block that usurpation! Team! Team! Team!)

"Let your citizen's influence be felt and your voice heard at once!

"Write airmail! Telegraph! Tell your senators and congressmen to vote down the President's Re-Organization Plan No. 12. It is particularly important that the lawyers in your community discuss with Congressmen and Senators this use of an executive order to usurp the constitutional power of Congress."

(Why, Harry Truman! You old usurper you! Fie!)

Tories Harbored

The Committee for Constitutional Government, which has nearly as many arms, branches subsidiaries, fronts, etc., as the Communist Party, harbors some of the choicest tories who ever wrapped their reaction in the American flag and tried to pawn it off on the rest of the country as patriotism. This letter is merely one of its demonstrations that it would rather keep the Taft-Hartley strait-jacket on labor tightly laced than loose the lacings and permit labor to wriggle a little.

All that President Truman proposes to do in his reorganization plan is to give the NLRB the same kind of administrative setup that other independent boards and commissions would have and that the Hoover Governmental Reorganization Commission recommended. The plan would end confusion and chaos in the board by ending the dual and conflicting jurisdictions the act gives to the board on one hand and the independent general counsel on the other. Instead of keeping them divided it would make the chairman responsible for administration of the board, and give the board itself final voice on policy.

The letter sent to the lawyers was signed by Sumner Gerard, trustee of the committee, who also is treasurer.

It Ain't Hay

After evangelizing them on Plan No. 12 it got down to the serious business. Money. Not a buck or two a week, like a lot of union members kick in for strikers, but an "additional" $250,000 now "plus $125,000 monthly thereafter." That's a quarter of a million dollars now, plus ANOTHER $1,125,000 in the next nine months. Any farm boy or girl who thinks he scents something familiar will know it ain't hay.

The committee wants this heavy sugar to keep on distributing copies of "The Road Ahead," by John T. Flynn, a onetime liberal now working the other side of the social street, which is a dire warning that conditions prior to 1929 will never, never be brought back and private industry be preserved in its pristine glory unless New Deal laws are wiped from the statute books and "socialism" halted in its tracks.

Now it has another coming up, "Why the Taft-Hartley Act?" by Irving G. McCann, who was counsel for the House Committee on Education and Labor in the 80th Congress of unblessed memory. McCann, like Flynn, is numbered among the outstanding viewers with alarm of our times.

"To get a flying start and to carry this book to hundreds of thousands during the months ahead," says Treasurer Gerard's tract. "we must have immediately orders for 50,000 copies at the prepublication price of 60c. You will want copies for stockholders, civic leaders, clergymen, educators, lawyers, foremen, supervisory personnel, etc.

"This Committee can make one dollar go as far at $25 or even $50 in the hands of labor bosses, but to fight effectively it must have at this time an additional $250,000 plus $125,000 monthly thereafter. The future of this nation may be decided before the year's end. By working through this Committee, you can multiply your influence many fold and project it across the nation."

Think of that!

Order Blank Enclosed

One of the enclosures in the bundle delivered to the lawyer is an order blank for the committee's literature pointing out that an added delight to the lucky purchasers of McCann's treatise is an introduction by Rep. Ralph W. Gwinn (R. N. Y.).

Another, after a frantic page of pleading for the preservation of the NLRB status quo ("copies to all members of Congress, editors, columnists and commentators for immediate release and to all citizens who want to save our form of government"), carries The Joe Ball Washington Labor Letter.

Remember him? He was Senator from Minnesota until he met Hubert H. Humphrey (D.) at the polls. The people, who didn't like him for his vote for T-H and a lot of other votes, picked Humphrey.

The other literature consisted of a second order blank, a copy of a sermon, "The Wise Young Men in Washington and the Road Ahead," by Dr. Walter R. Courtenay, of Nashville, Tenn., and a copy of an address by former Rep. Samuel B. (Sam the Pinwheel) Pettengill of Indiana, the Democrat turned Republican, on "The Grand Strategy of Freedom."

Dr. Courtenay's sermon wraps everything he and other tories don't like about the New Deal, the Fair Deal and Great Britain in a neat package, labels it "socialism," and condemns it. The condemnation also includes Solomon. Dr. C. indorses rugged individualism, Flynn's book, and by implication the Dixiecrats.

Pettengill's speech is familiar to readers of this newspaper. Delivered in Chicago on last Columbus Day, it is now holy writ for the Natl. Committee to Limit Federal Taxing Powers, which wants to starve the federal government to death and thus preserve, to put it quaintly, democracy. Pettengill, like Gwinn, has been writing for Gannett and one or another of his committees or foundations for some time.

April, 1950

Dear Friend and Fellow American:

YOU, AS A LAWYER, SWORN TO DEFEND THE CONSTITUTION, EVERY BUSINESS CLIENT, MAY SOON BE CONFRONTED WITH THE GREATEST LABOR EMERGENCY SINCE THE WAGNER ACT. Please read our enclosed warning of March 23rd to Members of the Congress and 4,000 editors and other opinion-molding leaders.

Unless citizens across the nation can be aroused and induced to speak up to their representatives in Congress during the next three weeks, it is probable that Section 12 of President Truman's Re-Organization Plan will go into effect because a majority to vote it down cannot be found either in the House or the Senate.

This Committee can make one dollar go as far as $25.00 or even $50.00 in the hands of labor bosses, but to fight effectively it must have, at this time, an additional $250,000, plus $125,000 monthly thereafter. The future of this nation may be decided before the year's end. By working through this Committee, you can multiply your influence many fold and project it across the nation. TAKE THESE STEPS:

HYSTERIA LITERALLY SPILLS from the pages of this letter to lawyers from the Committee For Constitutional Government. The committee, which wants Congress to kill President Truman's Re-organization plan for transferring the independent functions of the NLRB's general counsel to the board, sees "the future of this nation" endangered if it does not receive $250,000 and $125,000 monthly for its own particular brand of salvation.

NLRB Revamp Plan Hits Senate Snag

The Senate Executive Expenditures Committee on April 17 voted 9 to 4 that the Senate disapprove President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 12, which would transfer some functions of the independent office of general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board to the chairman and the board itself.

Unless a majority of either House or Senate membership votes disapproval by May 24, the recommendation automatically becomes law.

"They must be going through contract negotiations."

HST Vetoes Kerr 'Gas Steal' Bill

PRESIDENT TRUMAN lowered the boom on the natural gas monopoly on April 15 when he vetoed the Kerr bill limiting federal control of the industry on the ground that it would not be "in the national interest."

He thus saved the nation's consumers a sum estimated at from $300 to $500 million a year by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), former professor of economics at the Univ. of Chicago, who led the fight against the measure in the Senate.

The bill would have exempted the so-called independent producers of natural gas from regulation by the Federal Power Commission. The independents produce natural gas, but do not distribute it through pipelines to consumers. Producers who also distribute are subject to FPC control, as are distributors who do not produce, but the independents were left in sort of a no man's land by the Natural Gas Act of 1938. The Supreme Court recently indicated that the act covers them.

"I BELIEVE," the President wrote in his veto message, "that authority to regulate such sales (by independents to pipe line companies) is necessary in the public interest because of the inherent characteristics of the process of moving gas from the field to the consumer.

"Unlike purchasers of coal and oil, purchasers of natural gas cannot easily move from one producer to another in search of lower prices. Natural gas is transported to consumers by pipe lines, and is distributed in a given consuming market by a single company.

"The pipe line companies, and in turn the consumers of natural gas, are bound to the producers and gatherers in a given field by the physical location of their pipe lines, which represent large investments of funds, and cannot be readily moved to other fields in search of a better price.

"These characteristics of the natural gas business impose natural limitations upon effective competition among sellers. Competition is further limited by the degree of concentration of ownership of natural gas reserves . . .

"Under these circumstances, there is a clear possibility that competition will not be effective, at least in some cases, in holding prices to reasonable levels. Accordingly, to remove the authority to regulate, as this bill would do, does not seem to me to be wise public policy."

THE MESSAGE went to the House, where the bill in somewhat different form originated at the last session of Congress and slipped by unnoticed.

President Truman vetoed it after being under some of the heaviest pressure in his five years in office—from both sides. It was thought not probable that proponents of the bill would try to push it through over his veto, as it skimmed by in the Senate by a six-vote margin, and in final form was greased through the House by 176 to 174 after four Representatives changed their votes.

Spurred By Steel Union, Safety Council Calls For Positive Steps To Halt Accidents

THE ANNUAL Ohio Safety Congress in the past has been a forum for management representatives to give pious lip-service to the subject, and to give manufacturers of safety shoes and fire extinguishers a chance for big sales. Concrete action to make Ohio's factories and shops safe was ignored.

But the 1950 Congress at Columbus was different. The CIO delegates held a caucus in advance. Then, in the metals section, with James P. Griffin of the CIO Steelworkers presiding, a surprise resolution was introduced by Paul Rusen, Steelworkers Dist. 23 director. The resolution passed unanimously.

The resolution listed the 300,000 industrial accidents a year, resulting from demands for stepped-up production despite antiquated safety codes, unchanged since 1925, and the record of obstruction by management whenever safety code committees met.

THE RESOLUTION demanded the Industrial Commission fulfill its legal obligations and adopt "specific safety codes in the light of present day operations, which will afford some real measure of protection to the working people of Ohio." The resolution also asked that enough money be appropriated for enough inspectors "to perform a realistic job."

"The time has come for industry to stop using flesh and blood as an ingredient in the industrial process," said the resolution. "The needless maiming and killing in industry must end."

Rusen said "either we have legislation providing adequate safety codes and real enforcement, or there will be no steel produced."

Wake Up, Chief!

PAC, LLPE Aid 2 Cal. Candidates

THE CIO and the AFL both have indorsed James Roosevelt for Governor of California and Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas for U. S. Senator.

Roosevelt and Mrs. Douglas recently received AFL backing when the AFL's political arm, California Labor's League for Political Education, unanimously gave its blessing to the two candidates at LLPE's state convention at San Francisco.

The California Natl. CIO-PAC earlier indorsed the two aspirants.

The LLPE convention vote followed action in the executive committee, where the oldest son of the late Pres. Roosevelt got 30 votes to 8 for Gov. Earl Warren, after both were interviewed.

REP. JOHN F. SHELLEY, president of the State Federation, and C. J. Haggerty, secretary, said the pro-Roosevelt movement was a "grass roots" drive, with not a single endorsement for Warren coming from any local LLPE.

Warren had AFL backing in 1946, but he opposed AFL measures in the legislature in 1948. On the Taft-Hartley issue, Roosevelt is for repeal, but Warren is for amendment. Both Warren and Roosevelt are seeking the Democratic and Republican nominations, possible in California under its cross-filing system.

A demonstration for Roosevelt followed the vote. Roosevelt, escorted to the platform, called on labor to fight the "special interests" and, citing the Bell System's profits and requests for higher rates, said "that's the way the earning power of labor is siphoned off and put in the pockets of special interests. We must fight those special interests."

Mrs. Douglas is opposed in the Democratic primary by Manchester Boddy, Los Angeles publisher. The Republican candidate will be Rep. Richard Nixon.

Hearings On Rent Control Scheduled For This Week

HOUSING Expediter Woods told a Detroit housing group last week that the nation cannot afford to let rent controls expire June 30. Senate Banking Committee hearings on the extension of controls are scheduled for this week.

"No one can claim that the housing shortage has been licked so long as one of the largest segments of its population—those making from $40 to $60 a week—has not been taken care of," Woods told the Detroit Council for Better Housing.

These are the people who would be hit hardest, he said, because they are priced out of the new housing market and would face higher rents on old housing.

Woods pointed out that new housing has not kept pace with population growth, the vast majority of new housing is beyond the reach of the $40-$60 families, and the vacancy rate is below normal.

Woods cited the substantial rent boosts that followed local option decontrol in six large cities, and exploded the arguments that rent control puts a landlord in a straitjacket. "The rent freeze is a thing of the past," he said. "The owner who uses the several adjustment provisions available does get equitable treatment. The only thing the landlord can't collect on is the inflated rental value of his property growing out of the housing shortage."

He listed the benefits of rent control and added: "I do not believe that we as a nation want to apply the law of the jungle—the survival of those best able to pay—now or after June 30. My belief tells me that we shall follow instead the principle of the general welfare during the present housing shortage and in solving the deeper problems of housing."

U.S. Asks $5000 Fine

A judgment for $5000 for failure to keep records required by the Wool Products Labeling act was asked in a federal suit filed in New York City against the copartners of Shelbrook Coats. The action was filed on request of the Federal Trade Commission, which said efforts to obtain voluntary compliance had failed.

Supreme Court Won't Intervene in Georgia's 'Unit Voting'

BY A VOTE of seven to two, the U. S. Supreme Court on April 17 refused to interfere with Georgia's "unit voting" primary system, championed by the political forces behind Gov. "Hummon" Talmadge.

The majority held that the courts always had refused to take jurisdiction over cases "posing political issues arising from a state's geographical distribution of electoral strength among its political subdivisions."

(The U. S. Constitution states that "the times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the Legislature thereof.")

The two minority Justices—William O. Douglas and Hugo L. Black—in a bitter dissent written by the former, stated flatly that the unit voting system is "the last loophole" by which states are able to get around other Supreme Court rulings "holding that there must be no discrimination because of race in primary as well as in general elections."

Outright discrimination in primaries has been outlawed, Justice Douglas said, but "invidious discrimination" clearly exists in the Georgia primary set-up even if it is done on a mathematical, not a racial, basis.

(The unique Georgia primary system gives each county a set number of "unit votes," which its election officials cast when the county results are in. The candidate receiving the highest total gets the entire unit vote, and the number of unit votes ranges from a maximum of six in the most populous counties down to a minimum of two in the sparsely settled rural areas. The suit was brought by two Atlanta businessmen.)

Justice Douglas stated that the appellants "show that a vote in one county will be worth over 120 times each of their votes. They show that in 45 counties a vote will be given 20 times the weight of theirs. They show that on a statewide average each vote outside Fulton County will have over 11 times the weight of each of their votes.

"Population figures show that there is a heavy Negro population in the large cities. There is testimony that only in those areas have Negroes been able to vote in important numbers . . . I suppose that if a state reduced the votes of Negroes, Catholics or Jews (by name) so that each got only one-tenth of a vote, we would strike the law down."

The unit voting system, he continued, "is as deeply rooted in discrimination as the practice which keeps a man from the voting booth because of his race, creed or color, or which fails to count his vote after it has been cast . . . The racial angle of the case only emphasizes the bite of the (majority) decision.

"The discrimination against citizens in the more populous counties of Georgia is plain. The creation by law of favored groups of citizens and the grant to them of preferred political rights is the worst of all discriminations under a democratic system of government."

JUSTICE DOUGLAS added that arguments, made by Georgia attorneys defending the unit voting system, that the "true election in the Constitutional sense" comes only after the primaries are over, was a "travesty," because the primary "effectively controls the choice" in Georgia, which is a one-party state.

Attorneys for the two Atlanta businessmen had argued that the system violated the constitutional guarantee that every citizen has a right to vote, regardless of race, creed or color—i.e., the Equal Rights Amendment.

Talmadge supporters in Georgia, fearful lest the Supreme Court force abandonment of the unit system, had pushed the primary date ahead to June 28 from the usual Sept. 13, in the hopes that by the time the Court got around to ruling, the case would be "moot" since the primary would already have been held, They were frankly jubilant at the way the decision went, and proceeded with plans to extend the unit vote system to the general elections as well as the primaries.

Fate of Two Negroes Accused of Rape Up to High Court

FLORIDA'S so-called "justice" for her Negro citizens was in the hands of legal dry cleaners last week, but whether they can do anything about it remains to be seen.

The State Supreme Court was weighing appeals from the death sentences meted out to two 22-year-old Negro war veterans, Samuel Shepherd and Walter Irvin, after their conviction on charges of raping Mrs. Norma Lee Padgett, a white farm wife.

At Ocala, a Federal Grand Jury heard evidence turned over by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in a six-month probe and found that the two defendants and Charles Greenlee, 15, were not deprived of their constitutional right to a fair trial. Greenlee had been sentenced to life imprisonment.

It was too late to do anything about Ernest Thomas, 27, another suspect, who was shot to death in the woods near Groveland where he and other Negro residents of the area had fled for safety from white mobs that burned and looted their homes and places of business.

THE APPEAL before the Supreme Court was handled by Alex Akerman, Jr., prominent Florida Republican leader, and Franklin Williams, New York, counsel for the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The crux of their case was that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, because defense witnesses whose testimony was uncontroverted proved the youths could not have been at the site of the alleged rape at the time it took place.

They also claimed the lower court should have granted a change of venue. Not only was the community inflamed against the defendants, they argued, but a mob had tried to lynch them in the same court house in which they were later tried at Tavares, and Negroes were systematically excluded from the trial jury.

The attorneys also accused Lake County officers of beating the three suspects to extort from them a "verbal confession" which was made much of in the community but which the prosecution never even mentioned during the trials.

As the court began consideration of the appeal, a series of articles in the St. Petersburg Times seriously questioned the guilt of the defendants. In an editorial the newspaper warned the court that "the whole democratic ideal" is on trial in the appeal.

THE DISORDERS attendant upon the asserted attack on Mrs. Padgett raged for three days before they were quieted by national guardsmen from Tampa. Williams, who tracked down the defendants after they had been hidden for "safe-keeping," was chased by an armed mob from Tavares to Orlando after the trial and barely escaped lynching. Ted Poston, New York Post reporter and a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, likewise fled for his life. For his coverage of the trial and the events leading up to it Poston won the Guild's annual Haywood Broun Award.

After reading Poston's series, "Horror in Sunny Florida," U. S. Atty. Gen. Howard McGrath invited him to Washington for a conference. The order for the FBI investigation followed shortly.

The U. S. grand jury was made up of citizens of the area around Ocala, three of them Negroes.

It heard evidence, much of it dug up by Poston, that the three living defendants were beaten by arresting officers both inside and outside the court house.

TEN THOUSAND MEMBERS of the CIO Transport Workers held a four-hour demonstration April 17 to dramatize their demands for wage increases, a shorter work week and fringe benefits on lines owned by New York City. Massed in front of the offices of the Board of Transportation, they were addressed by TWU Pres. Michael Quill, who said that the demonstration proved that the union could shut down the whole municipal transport system or any part of it if it wished to. CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood said that if TWU struck, it would have the full support of the CIO.

Leonard Heads Cal. Campaign

CIO REP. Richard A. Leonard has been appointed director of a drive to organize fruit and vegetable workers in the fields and packing houses of California and Arizona into strong CIO unions.

Some of the workers in the past have been represented by the discredited Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, but many of the larger locals and most influential officers voted to stick with the CIO after it had expelled the FTA on charges of Communist domination.

Working with Leonard in the drive will be the three regional CIO directors—Tim Flynn in Northern California; Irwin L. DeShetler in Southern California, and Nicholas Dragon in Arizona.

Their territory includes the vast irrigated valleys of California, reclaimed from the desert by water, in which thousands of migrant workers and their families have been living in abject poverty under the most debasing conditions.

Leonard has been serving as administrator of the California State Industrial Union Council since its charter was lifted by CIO Pres. Philip Murray for failing to follow CIO policy. The California State CIO Council will hold its constitutional convention in June at Long Beach. Leonard will continue to fill both posts until he is free to devote full time to the agricultural and canning workers' drive.

N. J. Telephone Union Wins Pay Boost From Arbiters

THE CIO Communications Workers last week termed the arbitration award covering 12,000 New Jersey operators and clerical workers as the "first significant break in the current nationwide telephone wage dispute."

The award gave the New Jersey workers with at least a year of service a $2.50 a week pay raise. Workers with six months' service received 50c a week boost, while those with the company nine months got $1.50 weekly.

All but 500 workers with less than six months' service will receive general wage increases. Estimated cost of the wage boost, including the cost of town upgrading, is estimated by the union at $2¼ million a year.

Cities ordered up-graded by the arbitration board were Camden, Trenton, Atlantic City and Pleasantville. Workers in these towns will receive $1 to $3 a week, in addition to the $2.50 basic wage increase.

The arbitrators also gave the union a modified union shop, under which newly employed workers must join within 30 days. Those now on the payroll but with less than 10 years' service, must join within four months.

OTHER CONTRACT improvements awarded include severance allowances of one week's pay per year for service up to four years, two weeks pay for each year from five to 12, four weeks pay for each year over 12 with no top limit on payments.

The union had proposed dismissal pay to offset the effects of technological unemployment created by the company's program of conversion to dial phones.

Two of the union's proposals, a shorter work week and four weeks vacation after 20 years service, were denied. A company demand for a one-year no strike clause was granted by the board.

Commenting on the decision, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne said:

"THIS IS the first significant break in the current telephone wage dispute. We hope this development will get bargaining off dead center in our other 25 sessions across the country.

"CWA's position that telephone workers should receive a general wage increase certainly has now been substantiated. Conditions in New Jersey are not much different from the nationwide situation. If pay boosts are justified in New Jersey, they are justified in other places.

"It is time for AT&T to take the halter off its companies and let them bargain."

AT&T can afford wage increases for all its employes, he said, due to the fact that in the past 12 months it rolled up a net profit of over $260 million after taxes.

"AT&T can now show its responsibility to telephone employes and to the public by treating the New Jersey decision realistically and using it for a base for agreements throughout the country," Beirne said.

"The union is strongly convinced that agreements can be reached, thereby averting the necessity for a strike."

Chrysler Still Balks Settlement of Strike

SETTLEMENT of the three-month-old Chrysler strike was still hanging fire as the CIO News went to press. The 89,000 CIO Auto Workers who walked out Jan. 25 were assured April 19 by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther that "it won't be long now," as negotiators hammered at non-economic issues in an effort to end the deadlock.

One of the main problems remaining to be settled is the method of financing a hospital-medical program. The company has offered to pay half the cost but the union insists that Chrysler finance the entire amount.

At the end of the week, federal conciliators were joined by Arthur C. Viatt, who assisted at the Ford Motor bargaining sessions.

The company began laying off engineers and office workers last week. About 2500 were told not to go back to work until a settlement has been reached. Some 7500 other clerical and office employes were warned that more layoffs will be forthcoming if the strike continues.

Haywood Has Many 'Cards'

THE AVERAGE CIO member carries his CIO card in a wallet. But if CIO Vice Pres, and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood carried cards to all the CIO unions of which he is either an active or honorary member, he would need a small-size brief case.

A list of the CIO unions to which he belongs reads almost like the roster of the CIO itself. A few of the more prominent ones in which he holds membership include the Auto Workers, Steelworkers, Paper Workers, Utility Workers, Rubber Workers, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, American Newspaper Guild and the Communications Workers.

The CIO vice president has a number of testimonials in his Washington office from locals and international unions he helped establish.

One of the most treasured is a framed honorary life membership from UAW Local 664 at Tarrytown, N. Y. Terming him the "father of the local," the citation says he "gave freely of his time and talents to direct the organization of our local." The scroll was presented to him 12 years after the local had been founded.

Another valued possession is an elaborate desk set from the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, inscribed as follows:

"A valiant fighter in the cause of labor . . . Allan S. Haywood . . . from your buddies in TWOC-CIO in appreciation of your untiring efforts which made possible the uniting of the telephone workers in the CIO . . ."

There are many more tokens of appreciation from grateful CIO groups given in tribute to a man who helped them during their early struggles.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Richard T. Leonard, CIO National Representative, has been assigned as director of the organizing drive among the fruit and vegetable, packing and growing workers in Arizona and California. Leonard will be assisted in this campaign by CIO Reg. Directors DeShetler, Flynn, and Dragon. These workers are revolting against the control of the discredited FTA, whose leaders have been conforming to the Communist line.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election held at the Gray Manufacturing Co., Hartford, Conn., the workers voted in favor of the IUE-CIO by the following vote: eligible 162, IUE-CIO 113, independent union 27, no union 3.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren J. Houser and Al Hartnett, assistant to the IUE-CIO Administrative Chairman Carey report that in a representation election held at Alladin Industries, Indianapolis, Ind., the IUE-CIO was victorious over the UE in a hard fought campaign by a vote of IUE-CIO 181, UE 157, no union 10. Ray Hobbs, William Brewer and Howard McNamara lived with this situation and are to be congratulated on a job well-done. Hartnett also reports the following victories for the IUE: Sperry Gyroscope, Jamaica, N. Y., IUE-CIO 4,017, UE 662, no union 80; Champion Blower & Forge, Lancaster, Pa., IUE 77, UE 34, no union 2; Conmar Products, Newark, N. J., IUE 457, UE 256, no union 3; Remington Rand, Ilion, N. Y., IUE 911, UE 474, no union 636. Prime Mfg. Co., Lynn, Mass., IUE 30, UE 0, no union 0. NST Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa., IUE 14, UE 0, no union 0; National Foundry & Furnace, Dayton, O., IUE 54, UE 0, no union 1.

Also, Liquidometer, Long Island City, N. Y., IUE 157, UE 24, no union 3; Kuhns Bros. Electric Co., Dayton, O., IUE 155, no union 40, void 2 (UE withdrew); Ohmer Meter Fare Co., Dayton, O., IUE 187, no union 22, challenged 13 (UE withdrew); Stainless Steel Products, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 131, UE 6, no union 0; Dayton Rogers Mfg., IUE 191, no union 4, UE withdrew.

And in addition, R. R. Howell Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 36, UE 35; Allis Chalmers, Cincinnati, O., IUE 288, UE 191, no union 0; challenged 129 (the challenged votes are all rehired workers, brought back after the payroll eligibility date set by NLRB for this election. If the challenge is sustained by NLRB, the first vote above stands and IUE wins. If the 129 votes are counted, IUE-CIO needs only 17 for a clear majority.)

It is interesting to note that out of twenty-seven NLRB elections held in April, IUE-CIO has won twenty-five.

Adolph Germer, Director of Organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports the following IWA representation election victories: Douglas Timber Corp., Woods operations, Drain Ore., IWA-CIO 17, no union 3, challenged 2; James A. Welch Log Co., Drain, Ore., IWA 19, no union 1. A union shop election held at the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., Springfield, Ore., resulted as follows: For 393; against 55; challenged 8. In a representation election held at the Green Valley Lumber Co., Drain, Ore., the IWA-CIO won by almost unanimous vote.

Emerson T. Pence, National Representative, CIO Shoe Workers, reports that in a union shop election held at the John Schroeder Shoe Co., Portsmouth, O., the workers voted 56 to 11 in favor of the union shop.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that the CIO Paperworkers won representation elections at the American Coating Mills, Middleton, O., where out of 51 eligible, 47 voted UPA-CIO; 1 no union; and the AFL withdrew, and at the P. Lorillard Co., Middletown, O., where the UPA-CIO defeated the Food & Tobacco Workers by a vote of 429 to 43. Twenty voted no union. There were 550 eligible to vote. These campaigns were handled by UPA Reps. Logan Goff and Herbert Schwenker.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that in a representation election held at the Rupert Diecasting Co., Kansas City, Mo., the CIO Auto Workers won by a vote of 198 for UAW to 3 for no union. The campaign was handled by Area Director Luther Slinkar and Intl. Rep. John Rinkenbaugh of UAW.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports that the Textile Workers Union of America has obtained recognition for 320 employes of the Liberty Throwing Co., at mills in Nanticoke and Kingston, Pa., through card-check supervised by President Judge W. A. Valentine of the Luzerne County Court. This was the second big victory for TWUA, as the Nanticoke Mill of the Duplan Corp. recently signed a contract for 700 employes. Congratulations to Joint Board Manager Charles Sobol and TWUA Reps. Sam Fiore, Joseph Killian, Joseph Bellas and Al Camer.

CIO Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst reports that in a union shop election held at the Standard Generator Service Co., St. Louis, Mo., 30 voted for the CIO Auto Workers and 6 against.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler reports an election was won at the Jewish Community Council, Los Angeles, by a cross-check of cards, indicating the CIO represents a majority. Recognition was granted by the JCC Board of Directors. This was formerly a unit affiliated with the United Office & Professional Workers.

CIO Sub-Reg. John J. Maurillo reports that in a union shop election held at the Phoenix Toilet & Paper Mfg. Co., Phoenix, N. Y. the CIO Paperworkers won unanimously by a vote of 11 to 0. UPA Rep. John Galluccio conducted the campaign.

CIO Natl. Rep. George DeNucci reports from San Juan, Puerto Rico the following election results: In an NLRB election held at Yanco, Puerto Rico, among the employes of the Gabriel Oliveras Co., the workers voted 32 to 5 in favor of the CGT-CIO. In another NLRB election held among the sugar workers of Dorado, P. R., the workers voted 496 for CGT-CIO to 34 for an independent union. Felix Rios, CGT-CIO representative, handled the election.

In a NLRB representation election among the sugar field workers at Fajardo, P. R. the workers voted as follows: Unit 1, CGT-CIO 221, independent 153; Unit 2, CGT-CIO, 153, independent 9. The workers of the Tropical Distillery, Camuy, P. R., voted unanimously in favor of the CGT-CIO.

A contract was agreed to by 100 Puerto Rico farm owners and the CGT-CIO. A union shop, strict seniority, and a piece work clause were incorporated in the new agreement. The contract was negotiated by Efiginio Cirino, field rep. for the CGT-CIO.

Favorable results will be forthcoming soon from the CIO's Panama Canal Zone Rep. Gilbert Anaya. Anaya has returned to Washington with a report on the workers in the Canal Zone. He will return to Panama soon to start things rolling.

Anti-Picketing Law Enjoined

AN ANTI - PICKETING ordinance passed on the eve of a recent strike at the Victor Products Co. plant at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., was enjoined by court action taken by the CIO Auto Workers, but not until 38 pickets were jailed within half-an-hour after the strike commenced.

The ordinance provided that if a "clash" threatened between management and labor, or if there were a "tumultous assembly of three or more persons, . . . the mayor shall, within his discretion or upon the request of three councilmen, issue an emergency proclamation."

The mayor and councilmen took advantage of this ordinance to issue a proclamation on the morning of the strike prohibiting all assembling and picketing.

The UAW ignored the ordinance and placed pickets around the plant. Within a matter of minutes, 38 picketing officers and members of the UAW, including Intl. Executive Board Member Tom Starling and Intl. Rep. Glenn Brayton, were arrested, fined $50 each and sentenced to 10 days in jail. After a day in jail they were released on bail and thereupon filed appeals.

The UAW promptly brought action in the Circuit Court of Morgan County, W. Va., to have the ordinance declared invalid. Judge D. H. Rogers issued a temporary injunction against all of the city officials involved, preventing them from "enforcing or threatening to enforce" the provisions of the ordinance and proclamation.

Union Hall Named For Van Bittner

CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray dedicated the new union building of Local 1104, Steelworkers, Lorain, Ohio, to the memory of Van A. Bittner, at a ceremony April 16 attended by 600. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, was a vice president of the steel union. The mortgage was burned by Paul Schremp, Local 1104 president.

Vincent Sweeney, editor of Steel Labor, was master of ceremonies. Other speakers were Mayor Flaherty of Lorain, Steelworkers Vice Pres. James Thimmes, District Dir. William F. Donovan, Michael Melia of the local staff, and Steve Caruso, CIO Council.

Robert Karjeski of the Lorain Thew Shovel Local presented a gold plated model of a power shovel to Murray, and Schremp gave Murray a gold plated lifetime membership card in the local. (LPA).

Chapman Warns of Steel Famine

THE long-awaited investigation of the House Judiciary subcommittee on monopoly in the steel industry got under way last week.

On the second day of the probe Chairman Celler (D. N. Y.) announced that he had prepared a draft of an amendment to the Clayton Anti-Trust Act which would force dissolution of companies so big and so strong their very size and strength might create a monopoly.

The big steel corporations fall within this category, he indicated, by their control over raw materials and fabrication. Their grip tends to stifle competition and discourage small competitors from venturing into the field.

Celler disclosed his preparation of the tentative amendment the day after Dr. George Stigler, professor of economics at Columbia Univ., urged such a step and testified the government should move to break up U. S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic into smaller independent units.

The industry, he declared, "displays important monopolistic tendencies that call for corrective social policy." In support of his claim he cited the industry's "price rigidity," uniform sealed bids on government contracts and price discrimination against foreign purchasers.

Stigler urged old-fashioned trust-busting over continuing the present policy of trying to uncover and prosecute monopolistic practices, which he likened to "a game of leapfrog between these large companies and the Anti-Trust Division," and supervision with regulation.

AN OMINOUS warning, in view of strained relations with Russia, was sounded by James M. Boyd, director of the U. S. Bureau of Mines; Secy. of the Interior Oscar Chapman and Federal Trade Commissioner James M. Mead.

The country is rapidly running out of high-grade iron ores easily mined in the Upper Great Lakes region and the industry has lagged in finding deposits that may be used in their place, said Boyd. As a result, he said, steel production capacity will be limited for the next five years while a method of utilizing low-grade ores is found and recent discoveries in Labrador and Venezuela are developed.

Chapman declared that expansion of the industry is dragging behind the growth of the national economy and that the country thus is heading toward a steel famine.

"Maintenance of true competition in the marketing of steel is a nation-wide problem," he testified. "The five companies controlling the bulk of the Lake Superior iron ores reserves control three-fifths of the steel producing capacity of the nation. The decisions of these firms have significant impact on output and price of steel. There is little opportunity for offsetting influence by smaller or new firms."

MEAD TOLD the investigators that the FTC is disconcerted by three things about the steel industry. First he put the shortage of iron ore and control of supplies by the major companies. Second is the continuing absorption of fabricating mills by the basic producers, and third the "persistent shortage" of steel, which he said could not be dismissed as a temporary postwar condition.

"It might interest the committee to know," he said, "that smaller iron and steel companies appear not to own any share of the domestic or foreign deposits of high-grade iron ore, but must buy their requirements from their big rivals."

Frank Smith, Cartersville, Ga., told the committee that Republic Steel prevented him from selling ore to one of its competitors through a contract which required him to sell all of his product to Republic but did not require the company to buy a minimum amount from him.

C. M. White, Republic president, who followed Smith on the stand, said such contracts are "customary" in the South but that the producer could have obtained relief by asking for it.

He urged that Congress "proceed with caution" in "tampering" with big business, to which he attributed practically everything good that's ever happened in the United States.

Humphrey Sees Monopoly As Greatest Threat

Growing monopoly, and not the Fair Deal program, is the greatest threat to the nation, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told an audience of 1000 at the Mosque at Richmond, Va., April 18.

The meeting was under the auspices of the Virginia Commonwealth League, and Col. James Hart Jr., its chairman, presided. The League had invited Humphrey and Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) to debate after Humphrey had called for the abolition of Byrd's so-called economy committee.

Byrd ignored the invitation. Humphrey promptly accepted, but since Byrd was not present, Humphrey did not discuss the "economy" dispute.

Pointing out that business has made more money than ever under the New Deal and the Fair Deal, Humphrey said business men nevertheless oppose the Fair Deal because they no longer have the power to make decisions. The people now make the decisions, he said.

"You all see the signs," he said, "of a well-laid plan to place in power a program which would overthrow the principles of the New Deal and the Fair Deal, which the majority of the American people believe in and voted to support." He assailed the "secret alliance" of the forces opposing the Fair Deal, declared they failed in 1948 to take away the benefits of the New Deal and the Fair Deal, and "they will fail again."

FEPC Bill Supported

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) told the Senate last week that he hoped it would "correct" the watered-down House version of the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill. In a speech, he described the House action as "regretable."

Firm Tries Cutting Unit, Reaps Strike

THE CUSHING, Okla., refinery of the Deep Rock Oil Co. and its crude production and pipeline facilities in Oklahoma and Kansas have been closed by a strike of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union. The dispute is over exclusion of certain employes from the bargaining unit.

The company tried to have 40% of the present bargaining unit excluded, claiming they were supervisors. In one case the firm sought to exclude a janitor by calling him a "sanitary engineer." In one instrument shop, of four employes, the company tried to classify three as supervisors.

A strike against the Quaker State Oil Co. has closed its refineries in St. Mary's, W. Va., and Emlenton and Oil City, Pa. At stake are demands for wage improvements.

Meanwhile the strike against the Texas Co. continues, with the major refineries at Lockport, Ill., Port Arthur and Port Neches, Tex., and Casper, Wyo., shut tight.

The 400 workers at the Lawrenceville, Ill., refinery returned to work, but refused to give a "no strike" pledge. An offer of 1000 to go back at Lockport, pending future negotiations, was rejected by the company. The strike began when the company cut back the work week from 40 to 16 hours and rejected proposals for improved pensions.

Although only 7600 workers of the 39,000 are out, four-fifths of the company's key refining processes have been eliminated, as the strikers are the refinery workers.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 11 million.	Passed House last session. Sen. Finance Comm. will report shortly. CIO has asked further improvements.	Ask Senators to accept and strengthen HR 6000.
ECA Extension HR 7378	Renews Marshall Plan for another year; sets $2,950,000,000 ceiling on funds.	House cut $250 million from authorization; Senate debate scheduled soon.	Ask members of both Houses to restore cut, pass bill as drafted.
Federal Aid to Education S 246	Provides over $300 million aid to states for schools; gives states broad power to supervise use of funds.	Bill, approved by CIO, has passed Senate. House Labor Comm. deadlocked over religious quarrel involving school buses.	Ask members of House Labor Comm. to approve Senate bill.
School Construction Bill S. 2317 HR 5718	Provides emergency U.S. aid to states to build schools and survey school needs.	Senate passed bill. House bill, in Labor Comm., contains long-range building program not contained in Senate version.	Ask House Labor Committee members to approve.
FEPC S 1728 HR 4453	Senate bill would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	House voted substitute bill without enforcement teeth. Senate debate, probably filibuster, due after ECA vote.	Ask Senators to vote for S 1728 without weakening amendments, and to fight filibuster.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.

'Democracy Stinks,' Realty Lobbyist Said

THE MAN the National Association of Real Estate Boards pays $25,000 a year to lobby in Congress against such measures as rent control and middle - class housing aids thinks democracy stinks.

He doesn't think women should be allowed to vote, either.

This version of the "Modern Man" is Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the NAREB, who testified last week before the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.). The statements attributed to him were from a letter, the full text of which was read by Buchanan, written nearly a year ago to T. K. Maenner, of Omaha, Neb., NAREB president.

"I do not believe in democracy," he wrote. "I think it stinks. I don't think anybody except direct taxpayers should be allowed to vote. I don't believe women should be allowed to vote. Ever since they started, our public affairs have been in a worse mess than ever.

"I don't think any form of government is any good which doesn't recognize merit and ability. I am convinced that our present popularity contests in public life are bound to lead to disaster and to some form of dictatorship as the currency is progressively devaluated by public spending in order to buy votes."

Nelson said he believes in a republic, which he said is the kind of government the United States has, and that he doesn't like democracy because it means the "uncontrolled" rule of the majority. Rep. Lanham (D. Ga.), a member of the committee, also thinks a minority should be in a position to protect itself, and volunteered that "that is why I believe in filibusters" in the Senate.

The real estate lobby keeps its grip on the nation's pocketbooks at relatively low cost, Nelson testified. The 18 organizations which make it up, including the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, have spent about $130,000 to influence legislation in each of the last four years, he said. About $40,000 of this went for salaries and specific expenses, and is assumed by the NAREB. The remaining $90,000 came from contributions.

The NAREB is composed of real estate boards in 1115 communities with about 44,000 members, Nelson said.

Guest Center Will Be Britain's Food Thanks

Britain as a nation will thank friends in the Commonwealth overseas and in the United States, for the food gifts sent since 1940, by erecting a residential center in London for students from these countries. It will be "Thanks From Britain" for the "Food For Britain."

To raise the approximately $5 million required, Sir Frederick Rowland, Lord Mayor of London, has launched a campaign for a National Thanksgiving Fund. The drive has the official backing of the Trades Union Council. H. L. Bullock, TUC general chairman, said British workers had a deep sense of satisfaction in the campaign "as a gesture of gratitude to our overseas friends for their generosity during a period of strain and sacrifice."

TELEPHONE INSTALLERS STRIKE: Efforts of U. S. Mediator Thomas R. Steutel (seated center) failed last week to prevent 10,000 CIO Communications Workers installers from striking in 43 states. Firing of workers who refused to go through an impassable muddy field at South Bend, Ind., precipitated the walkout. A walkout of 240,000 other CWA members was later "indefinitely postponed." PUERTO RICANS IN NEW YORK, long exploited by employers, are told of their right to a minimum wage of 75c an hour and time and a half overtime after 40 hours weekly in this Spanish language poster, prepared by the Spanish newspaper La Prensa as a public service under the direction of the U. S. Wage-Hour Division. The newspaper and the division are working closely with the joint CIO-AFL committee which was recently established in New York to work on common propects, and which has undertaken to fit the city's 300,000 islanders into economic and community life and to protect them from chiseling employers. The program also includes housing and social service, and was indorsed by Mayor O'Dwyer.

Man Back of McCarthy Was Discredited in 1947

By Gervase N. Love

WHAT — or rather who — makes McCarthy tick? The answer to that one is fairly well known by now.

He's Alfred Kohlberg, a balding, aggressive New Yorker. For years he has enjoyed a comfortable income by exploiting the artistry of Chinese women who in their squalid huts embroidered the linens he imports.

But "why" is something else again.

Why does anybody give a whoop about the half-truths, evasions, distortions and character-assassinating charges this associate of American fascists has been voicing through the capacious maw of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Why does an important segment of the Republican party take up his fol-de-rol as its own? Why does a committee of the U. S. Senate, paid by taxpayers who have a right to expect something better for their money, waste its time worrying about what he says? Why should the State Dept. be put in the position of defending itself against the ranting of a zealot who himself admits he is neither diplomat nor scholar?

It isn't as if McCarthy's mouthings have brought any substantially new sounds into the relationship between the United and China.

Practically everything he has said has been said before—except for the testimony of former Communist Louis F. Budenz.

Said by Kohlberg . . . and discredited by a jury of experts so thoroughly that almost anyone else would have been shamed into silence forever.

So the answer to "why" must be left to some student of the future.

Kohlberg's basic position is built on a solid foundation of emotion, not reason.

He thinks Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek is good. Whether good for this country, for China or for Kohlberg isn't too clear. Chiang is opposed to the Communists. Therefore, anybody who doesn't agree with Chiang is either a Communist or one of their dupes.

A lot of pretty substantial people don't think that Chiang is good for either the United States or China. They include four U. S. Secretaries of State who agree that continued U. S. support of Chiang's regime would be folly. The basic decision on this policy was made by a man neither Kohlberg nor McCarthy dares attack —Gen. George C. Marshall, durind his tenure as head of the State Dept.

"Why Don't You Stop Following Me?"

—From Washington Post

KOHLBERG first went to bat for Chiang in 1943. At that time he teed off against the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, an organization of some 1,600 scholars, students, writers, industrialists, merchants, bankers and others with an intellectual or economic stake in the Orient. Its support comes principally from the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations, large banks and big industries — the antithesis of Communists.

Kohlberg charged that through its publications the institute was furthering the cause of the Communists in China and harming that of Chiang and the Nationalists. There were so many Communists on the body's staff that they dominated it, he maintained, and were able to turn its books, pamphlets and articles into instruments of party propaganda.

Budenz said the same thing when he testified before the Senate special investigating committee headed by Sen. Tydings (D. Md.).

The battle raged into 1947. Then a group of Institute members took upon itself the job of examining Kohlberg's charges. It was loaded with conservatives, including several top drawer manufacturers and a lawyer from an ultra-sedate Wall St. firm.

It showed that in his allegations the importer quoted from less than 2% of the institute's articles and about .002% of its books. It showed that he had completely disregarded the overwhelming body of facts that did not support his charges. It called him "inaccurate and irresponsible."

Its report was circulated among institute members. They voted 1,163 to 66 that the charges were unfounded.

IT WAS during this fight that Kohlberg first levelled the accusations that McCarthy repeated against Owen Lattimore and Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup — who, incidentally, was a member of the committee that examined his charges and found them wanting.

He also used most of what McCarthy has had to say against John S. Service, another State Dept. officer. Furthermore, it looks as if the Wisconsinite's blasts against Haldore E. Hansen, also of the State Dept., likewise had their inspiration in information supplied by Kohlberg.

Kohlberg is not a wealthy man, as wealth goes. His importing firm does a gross business of $1,500,000 a year, he says.

Yet during his campaign within the institute, and since he was discredited as well, he distributed fantastic numbers of circulars and pamphlets. He organized and suported numerous groups interested in China and sought to channel their public support to his position. He founded the magazine Plain Talk, primarily in opposition to Communism but with a heavier-than-normal flavoring of articles on China.

He even formed the American China Policy Asociation in opposition to the Institute of Pacific Relations and was regarded as a leader in the so-called China Lobby supporting Chiang Kai-Shek. A man of enviable energy, he has approached members of Congress in the highways and the byways and laid his case before them.

He had close contacts with many prominent Chinese Nationalists in this country—and with their agents.

ONE OF the latter was William J. Goodwin, an old-line Christian Fronter of widespread and unfavorable notoriety who collected $65,000 in less than two years, according to the Dept. of Justice, for placing the cause of Chiang Kai-Shek before members of Congress as a registered lobbyist. Goodwin, who ran for Congress from New York in 1936 with the backing of the Coughlanites, circulated Kohlberg's pamphlets.

Kohlberg also was connected with an affair for the International Anti-Communist Entente, founded in Switzerland before the war by Theodore Aubert and indorsed by Hitler. In October, 1949, he was a guest at a dinner given by the notorious National Economic Council, directed by the anti-labor, anti-Semitic, pro-Franco Merwin K. Hart. Some very worthy citizens also attended. So did many of the country's noisiest fascists, including Lawrence Dennis, usually referred to as America's No. 1 fascist.

The importer was singularly successful in persuading members of Congress to insert his views into the Congressional Record, to send them to their constitueneies or to use them in speeches.

For instance Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.), one of McCarthy's more voluble suporters and a long-time plugger for Chiang, asked Kohlberg to prepare a report on China and distributed it from his office. Kohlberg, incidentally, sweetened Bridges' campaign kitty by a $1000 contribution on one occasion.

The first attack on Hansen, for instance, was made in May, 1947, by Rep. Busbey (R. Ill.) and was based on material that apparently first saw light in Kohlberg's struggle with the institute. Busbey had several articles by Kohlberg and from Plain Talk inserted into the record.

Rep. Latham (R. N.Y.) took the floor and went to work on Jessup in January, 1948. His material, too, appeared to have come from Kohlberg. Last August Rep. Smith (R. Wis.) waved in the House a letter from Kohlberg attacking Jessup and had it printed in the Congressional Record. A lot of the stuff McCarthy used a few months later first popped up in that letter.

Kohlberg also claimed to be friendly with and once to have worked for Sen. Knowland (R. Calif.), to whom a day of sniping at the State Dept. is a day well spent.

Kohlberg hit what was probably the highest spot of his career about a month ago.

He wrote President Truman that he ought to be appointed Ambassador-at-Large so he could advise the State Dept. on China.

Secy. Tobin Selects All-Time Ball Club

One of official Washington's top baseball fans is Labor Secy. Tobin. And the secretary really knows the game and its history, too, as his personal all-time, all-star team shows.

Tobin joined 240 other "experts" recently to pick a team of all-time greats for "Big-Time Baseball," a new book by Harold H. Hart and Ralph Tolleris. Here's the secretary's nine:

Walter Johnson, p; Gordon "Mickey" Cochrane, c; George Sisler, 1b; Eddie Collins, 2b; Harold "Pie" Traynor, 3b; Honus Wagner, ss; Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth and Ted Williams, of. Quite a club! (LPA)

Truman Raps McCarthy Without Mentioning His Name

THE PRESIDENT of the United States and the editor of a leading Wisconsin paper have taken full-sized jabs at Sen. Joe McCarthy's headline-hunting charges against the State Department.

President Truman did not mention the Republican Senator's name when he delivered a half-hour radio speech—but nobody had any doubts whom he was talking to.

There's a right way to fight communism, and a wrong way, the President declared.

It was clear that President Truman considered McCarthy's method the "wrong way."

The job of removing Communist infiltration, he said, "cannot be done by publicly denouncing men as 'Communists' without having evidence to support such charges, or by blackening the character of persons because their views are different from the accuser's, or by hurling sensational accusations based on gossip, hearsay or hunch."

The Truman Administration, he said, isn't going to become a victim of hysteria: "We are not going to transform our fine FBI into a Gestapo-like secret police. We are not going to try to control what our people read and think. We are not going to turn the U. S. into a right-wing totalitarian country in order to deal with a left-wing totalitarian threat."

Three major points make up the Administration's anti-Communist policy, he said. They are: (1) strengthening our defenses and building up free nations throughout the world; (2) improving our own form of democratic government; (3) working "quietly and effectively" through a loyalty program and other measures, but within the framework of democracy.

THE Wisconsin editor who spoke out against McCarthy was William Evjue, editor and publisher of the Madison Capital Times, one of the state's most respected liberal papers.

HST Praises Labor For Fighting Commies

Pres. Truman, discussing how the Administration is fighting Communism without hysteria, had a pat on the back for labor. Said Truman:

"The Communists have done their best to penetrate labor unions and the government, but they are being successfully fought on both fronts.

"Labor has been doing a splendid job of cleaning house."

He said Wisconsin citizens who know McCarthy realized he was a "dead duck, politically," on the basis of his record in Wisconsin, and he seized "on this thing" to repair his political fortunes.

McCarthy's background — including a censure from the state's highest court and some grave questions about his 1943 income taxes—are well remembered, Evjue said. People in the state don't consider McCarthy "the man who should be setting the pattern for American patriotism."

THE McCarthy-inspired headlines have wandered far from his original charges that the State Department is infested with Communists. The government's top loyalty review board is considering all the cases named by the Wisconsin Senator, though McCarthy never came through with the "evidence" and "documentary proof" he had once promised.

At present the McCarthy case —or what's left of it—rests on the second-hand testimony of ex-Communist Louis Budenz that other leading Communists told him several years ago that Owen Lattimore was under the party's "discipline".

The Budenz version has been denied by Lattimore; by ex-Communists Earl Browder and Bella Dodd; and by the Communist Party itself. And it's developed that Budenz had never before described Lattimore, who is a leading expert on the Far East, as being under the Party's influence.

Getting to the bottom of this mess of charges, denials and counter-charges is a real problem for Senator Tydings' Senate sub-committee.

While they're trying, two facts remain: (1) McCarthy has offered no real proof of 57, 91 or over 200 card-carrying Communists on the State Dept. payroll; (2), whether Lattimore was or was not once friendly with a few individual Communists, there was nothing to prove him a "top Soviet espionage agent" or a leading Communist party member, or the "architect" of our foreign policy.

"FITZ" RAN OUT just as the United Electrical Workers ran out at Westinghouse, declared CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey (above) at a meeting of UE Local 140 at Baltimore, which consists of Westinghouse employes. Carey, who is chairman of the administrative committee of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, is sitting next to the chair which would have been occupied by UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald, who declined to debate Carey. As this issue of the CIO News went to press, Westinghouse employes throughout the country were deciding whether they wished to be represented by IUE or UE.

ABC Ordered to End Bias As Result of Action By CIO

THE CAMPAIGN of the CIO to force the American Bowling Congress to junk its restriction limiting membership to male whites appeared won last week.

Unless its constitution is revised and its segregation policy ended at the annual convention beginning May 8 in Columbus, O., its charter will be revoked, Judge John A. Sbarbaro ruled in Superior Court, Chicago. He also levied a fine of $2,500 which will stand regardless of convention action.

Judge Sbarbaro originally planned to revoke the charter—obtained in Illinois in 1903—but changed his ruling to permit compliance with Illinois law at the convention.

"This is to allow the members to change that restriction," he said, "since if I entered the order revoking the charter they would not be able to meet to vote a change. However, I want it understood that my intention is to allow the state to oust the ABC charter."

THE court found that the association "has neglected and abused its franchise."

"This court finds," wrote Judge Sbarbaro in his opinion, " that the by-laws of defendant corporation set up a definite policy of racial discrimination; that the practices of such racial discrimination and the penalties provided for failure of members and bowling alley proprietors to adhere to such policies are in violation of the law; that the bylaws and practices are an infringement of the policy of the State of Illinois, are hostile to public welfare, are not required for the corporate purposes and are in fact squarely contrary to, inconsistent with, and opposed to the original corporate purposes."

CIO attorneys found the key to ending racial bias in the ABC after others seeking the same end had groped in vain for years. Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, signed formal notices last fall, on behalf of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, to Atty. Gen. Ivan A. Elliott of Illinoiis, and State's Atty. John S. Boyle of Cook County (Chicago), asking them to bring proceedings to lift the ABC charter on the ground that in its charter, its bylaws and its practices it violated its articles of incorporation, civil rights laws, in Illinois and other states, the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and the constitutions of the United States and Illinois.

IN THE notice Goldberg reviewed the background of the dispute, discussed ABC operations and pointed out that it had become "big business" with "one of the most iron-clad monopolies" in the country. Of the proviso in its constitution restricting competition to "the white male sex," the notice said:

"These provisions of the constitution establish the admittedly discriminatory policy of the ABC and provide for its enforcement. In addition, the discriminatory policy has been carried into effective practice by the ABC and its affiliated organizations. As far as it is known, no non-white bowler has ever participated in an ABC national tournament."

The CIO also warned Elliott and Boyle that unless they started suit to revoke the ABC charter within 30 days, the CIO would do it.

THE action was started by Boyle and the CIO stepped in as "amicus curiae" during the proceedings. A. W. Brussell of Chicago, attorney for the Illinois and Cook County Industrial Union Councils, presented an argument in court during the hearings that led to Sbarbaro's decision.

Floyd E. Thompson, who fought the action for ABC, branded the decision "clearly erroneous" and said it will be appealed.

"To the mind of the court, as it must be to the mind of every American citizen who believes in good sportsmanship," said Judge Sbarbaro in his decision, "there is something abhorrent about a nation-wide organization organized to 'have general care, supervision and direction over the bowling game and all bowling interests in the United States of America' violating its duty to carry out its trust by the adoption and enforcement of bylaws which in their essence are so contrary to fair play, good fellowship and good sportsmanship."

The ABC also has been under fire in New York, where Atty. Gen. Nathan L. Goldstein filed suit to prevent it from operating in that State because of its policy of discrimination. At a hearing in Supreme Court in New York City on April 6 Paul Windels, ABC attorney, disclosed that the organization "in good faith" will thoroughy consider and discuss its discrimination at the convention next month. Judge Benjamin J. Schreiber reserved decision until after the convention.

Strike Causes CIO News To Print In N. Y. City

Washington labor editors—who have written many strike stories—last wek found themselves involved in a strike.

The AFL Bookbinders Union struck all members of the Washington Graphic Arts Association who have bindery operations. The Allied Printing Trades Council then impounded the union label of the struck firms.

A mad scramble for union-approved printing facilities outside Washington followed.

That's why this issue of the CIO News was printed in New York City instead of the Capital.

IUE Winning Again

At CIO News press time, the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers was leading the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in a representation election being conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board at Westinghouse plants throughout the country.

With ballots in from 12 plants, the official count was: IUE 4061, UE 3191, no union 106.

Agreement Expected In Phone Dispute

THE CIO Communications Workers strike against the Bell Telephone Co. was postponed indefinitely last week and there were indications that the union and the company had found a basis for settlement of their dispute.

The walkout, scheduled for April 26, would have taken 250,000 employes of the American Telephone & Telegraph and its subsidiaries off the job in 43 states.

CWA spokesmen appeared optimistic that a settlement could be reached shortly on issues which have stymied agreement in bargaining sessions for the past four months.

Federal mediators in New York, who had been working on the Long Lines Dept. dispute, gave the first indication that progress was being made when they announced that they were ready to step out of the negotiations and let the union and the company go ahead on their own.

As the CIO News went to press, 10,000 installers of the Western Electric Co. were still out on strike in protest against the company's disciplinary action against 104 workers in South Bend, Ind.

Various divisions of the union and AT&T have been carrying on 25 separate negotiations but all eyes were on the crucial sessions involving the Long Lines Dept. and CWA Div. 10, representing 23,000 members. A settlement was expected to set the national pattern.

CWA spokesman said that union and company negotiators were hammering out agreements in principle in a number of instances and the company really was bargaining for the first time.

CIO White Collar Union Started

FORMATION of a new CIO union for insurance and white collar workers is getting under way.

A Philadelphia conference attended by more than 100 persons took steps last week to establish a new CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee. Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, is head of the new group.

The committee will serve as a stepping stone to a new international union to take the place of the United Office & Professional Workers, which was expelled from the CIO in March for Communist domination.

Insurance locals represented at the Philadelphia confab are functioning in Philadelphia, New York, Pittsburgh, Boston, Detroit, Seattle, Memphis and other cities.

An early organizing campaign will be undertaken among the 5600 industrial agents of the John Hancock Life Insurance Co. CIO officials claim that a majority of them have already left the UOPWA in order to rejoin the CIO.

The new organizing committee's executive board was named in part at the Philadelphia meeting, with names of additional CIO members to be announced in the near future.

In addition to Chairman Haywood, the committee is led by Harold Ash, secretary-treasurer, and Simon Helfgott, Brooklyn, N. Y., as vice-chairman. Other members are Wilbur C. Bonney, Boston; Kenneth O'Dell, Trenton, N. J.; Robert Ponsi, Leonia, N. J.; Nat Brennan, Pittsburgh; Jack Belser, New York; Leslie Lucas, Detroit; Edward Lowry, Frackville, Pa.; Harold Brown, Akron, Ohio; and Paul McDonald, Philadelphia.

If GM's Wilson Were Paid in Peanuts, He'd Get 5861 5c Bags Every Hour

Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, doesn't get paid off in peanuts but if he did, the world's largest company would have deposited 5,861 five-cent bags on his desk for each and every hour he worked in 1949.

In other words, presuming Wilson worked 50 40-hour weks, he collected $293,05 an hour, $2,344.44 a day or, to get astronomical about the thing—$586,100 during the year in the form of salary, director's fees and bonus as his share of the $7½ million paid by the gigantic company to 61 high ranking executives.

Wilson's actual salary was $201,100 but he received a cash bonus of $308,021, plus 1,243 shares of GM stock worth approximately $76,979.

The information was revealed last week in a corporation statement mailed to its more than 400,000 stockholders calling for the annual meeting May 19 in Wilmington, Del.

The following executive vice-presidents received total remunerations as follows: Bradley, $511,225; Harlow H. Curtice, $496,100 and Marvin E. Coyle $496,000. These three are executive vice presidents.

Mere vice presidents got theirs in the following order: Frederic G. Donner, $411,300; Louis C. Goad, $411,100; Ronald K. Evans, $411,000 and Francis L. Burke, $311,000.

John J. Schumann Jr., president of the company's subsidiary, General Motors Acceptance Corp., was far down the list with $227,450.

Alfred O. Sloan Jr., GM's chairman, brought up the rear with $48,600, but he still owns 571,826 shares of the common stock of the corporation.

The company had previously made public a separate list of 4,204 awards of bonuses and stock to salaried employes who earned more than $650 a month, totaling $39,739,717 in cash and 163,859 shares of stock.

The awards followed a year in GM history which showed an all-time record of $656,434,200 in net income on a sales volume of $5,700 million.

Job Bias Complaints In N. Y. Rise 18%

Complains of discrimination in employment in New York during the first quarter of 1950 totalled 7, an increase of 18% over a year ago, the state Commission Against Discrimination reported. Eighty per cent were against employers, 16% against job agencies, and one complaint against a union.

A Little Unemployment Is Like a Little Cancer

It Gnaws at the Vitals of Nation's Economy; Treatment Should Be Started as Soon as Possible

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU HAVEN'T been feeling good for weeks, so—after arguing with yourself for a few hours—you decide to go see a doctor.

He checks your temperature, your blood pressure, your metabolism. He thumps you around here and there and then he takes a look at your insides with his X-ray.

Finally his diagnosis is complete. He says:

"You've got a cancer of the stomach. I wouldn't worry about it right now, though, because it's only a small cancer."

Can you imagine such a ridiculous thing? Of course not—unless the doctor is crazy!

RIGHT NOW we've got a "small cancer" that's gnawing away at our national economy. It's called unemployment.

More than four million persons are wholly unemployed and six to eight million more are working only part time.

Yet many of the "doctors" who are charged with helping us retain our economic health say the situation is one about which we shouldn't worry.

After all, unemployment is still small and the number of jobless will have to increase considerably before we face a crisis—so they say.

But, from our point of view, treatment should be provided as soon as possible for our current economic ills.

It would be ridiculous to wait until the nation is on its death-bed.

IT MIGHT BE a good idea, first, to try to determine how the nation got into its present situation.

As soon as price controls were removed following the end of the war, business and industry began a mad scramble for profits.

Prices went up and up and up. So did profits. Wages increased, too, but not nearly as much as prices and profits.

For a period the nation's workers began dipping into their wartime savings to make ends meet.

Then many of them curtailed their buying and others began going into debt.

Still there was no break in prices.

Labor economists issued a number of warnings as to what would happen. Curtailed buying, they said, would be followed by decreased production, which would result in unemployment.

Unemployment, they explained, would result in further production cutbacks.

THERE'S NO NEED here to quote a lot of statistics to show that the labor economists were right. A few figures will suffice.

Unemployment for the past few years has been increasing at a rate of nearly a million annually.

Many of those who lost jobs through no fault of their own have exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits.

Prices are still too high—much too high. The profit picture for the past year was a bright one, from the standpoint of business and industry.

Here's the situation as of today:

Business and industry are enjoying a period of prosperity. More than four million are jobless and additional millions are working only part time.

There's nothing to indicate there will be a change in the upward trend of unemployment.

And yet almost nobody except the labor movement seems to be deeply concerned about our "little cancer."

THE CIO IS NOT just crying "wolf" when it expresses deep concern over the unemployment situation.

It has witnessed at close range the devastating effect that joblessness already has had on some areas of the nation.

Its members who are out of work are hard pressed.

And it remembers what happened to the nation in the last depression.

The problem is one which business, industry and government together should be able to solve.

And if they wait until the "cancer" becomes much larger they may find it's too late and that all of us have a crisis on our hands.

Seaway Called Vital to Defense

CONSTRUCTION of the long-debated St. Lawrence River Seaway and power project is vital to national defense, Secy. of State Dean Acheson and Secy. of Commerce Charles W. Sawyer told the House Public Works Committee last week as hearings were resumed.

Tentative plans call for joint U. S.-Canadian construction of hydroelectric plants and a deeper navigation channel between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean.

"The creation of a great inland waterway," Acheson said, "would make possible the shipment of iron ore from the Quebec-Labrador area, and the low-cost power to be provided would materially reduce the acute shortage in both northeastern United States and southeastern Canada.

"The long-overdue development of one of the world's greatest waterways and power sources will further expand the economies of both countries, thus increasing our joint peacetime prosperity and the ability to defend ourselves."

Sawyer told the committee that construction of the seaway is necessary to insure ore supplies for the American steel industry and to facilitate overseas shipments if an enemy should cripple the ports of Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia or Hampton Roads, Va., where most shipments originated during the last war.

DEPLETION of the Mesabi Range iron ore deposits in Minnesota makes it imperative for the national security that the seaway be built to bring ore from Labrador to middlewest steel centers, he said.

Secy. of the Army Frank Pace Jr., also urged approval of the project "in the interests of national defense," and stressed the value of a "protected inland waterway" in time of war.

Lt. Gen. Lewis A. Pick, chief of Army Engineers, who would direct construction if the project is authorized, pronounced it "economically sound" and said the U. S. investment would be recovered within a reasonable time.

Cost of the seaway, which has been indorsed by the CIO, is estimated at $803 million, of which Canada would put up $230 million. "Reasonable tolls," provided in the pending legislation, would bring in an estimated $36 million yearly, which Sawyer testified would be nearly twice as much as maintenance and liquidation costs. Construction of the seaway would remove a 114-mile navigation bottleneck in the river and permit ocean-going vessels to dock in Great lakes harbors.

"Tell me more about yourself, Mr. Alderson, yuor boyhood, your career, your ideals, your bank account."

Big Unions, Councils Set May Parleys

THE UTILITY Workers union of America, CIO, held its convention last weekend at the Hotel Commodore, New York City, and the CIO Textile Workers sixth biennial convention convened May 1 at the Mechanics Building, Boston, Mass.

(Reports on both conventions will appear in the next issue of the CIO News.)

Both the United Steelworkers and the Michigan IUC will open their conventions next week — the USA-CIO on May 9 at the Auditorium, Atlantic City, N. J., and the Michigan council at the Civic Auditorium, Grand Rapids.

Other conventions are scheduled as follows: May 15-19, Clothing Workers, Hotel Hollenden, Cleveland; May 16, Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers, Hotel Kenmore, Boston, Mass.; May 21, Fur & Leather Workers.

May 24-26, Utah IUC, Ben Lomond Hotel, Ogden; May 25, Packinghouse Workers, Minneapolis, Minn.; June 3-5, California IUC, Wilton Hotel, Long Beach; June 5, Furniture Workers, Hotel Stevens, Chicago; June 16-18, Tennessee IUC, Memphis.

June 26, Newspaper Guild, Hotel Statler, Washington; June 26-30, Communications Workers, Auditorium, Cleveland; Aug. 4-6, Iowa IUC, Des Moines; Aug. 14, Oil Workers, Long Beach, Cal.; Fall, Indiana IUC, Indianapolis; Nov. 21, Delaware IUC, place not announced; December, Rhode Island IUC, Provdience.

Shuck a Buck Back PAC

BLOW AGAINST BIAS

It may seem at first thought that there would be no connection between "10-pins" and civil liberties.

But leaders of the CIO campaign against discrimination were elated when a Chicago judge last week handed down a decision relating to bowling alleys.

Superior Judge Sbarbaro ruled that the charter of the American Bowling Congress should be revoked unless ABC mends its ways.

ABC limits its membership to male whites—and this is rank discrimination, the judge said. If ABC doesn't remove this limitation at its May 8 convention, then its charter will be lifted, he ruled.

Judge Sbarbaro's decision may not seem particularly newsworthy in view of the fact that there are so many discriminations which interfere with the living and working conditions of so many persons.

But it is newsworthy—and it is important. The CIO realized this when it began pushing the case.

It is important because bowling is one of those pastimes which should encourage clean sportsmanship.

It is important because a judge has openly struck at discrimination which stems from prejudice.

The fight for expanded civil rights is not likely to be won in one big battle—in one big sweep. The campaign to eliminate discrimination and segregation won't come to a climax in one big event.

No, the job is too big, too complicated.

It will be accomplished a piece at a time—on the sports front, on the job front, on the housing front.

That's why it's important for us to push every case—little or big—which can strike a blow at discrimination. ★★★

THEY'RE HAVING VERY HARD TIME

Unions which were expelled from the CIO on charges that they were Communist dominated are really beginning to come apart at the seams. Members are literally deserting them in droves.

The CIO electrical union—less than six months old—now has nearly 300,000 members, most of whom formerly belonged to the discredited United Electrical Workers.

The CIO organizing drive among government workers is beginning to make real progress. The ousted Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers union is rapidly losing members to the CIO Steelworkers. The Food & Tobacco Workers union is growing weaker every day. The CIO campaign among office workers is beginning to move.

In not a single instance has a union expelled by the CIO been able to make progress.

This really puts the Commies on the spot. Their base of operations in the labor movement is being rapidly destroyed.

And that's good news to everybody except the Commies.

Then He Yanked Out Buddy's Shirt-Tail

IT WAS hell—just plain hell—and if you don't believe it just ask one of the fellows who was there.

The weather was cold, the food was scarce and the Nazis were tough.

The newspapers called the event "the Battle of the Bulge."

Among those who helped fight the battle was a fellow we shall call Hank. He was big and he was tough.

When the engagement was over Hank was nearer dead than alive. His back was torn nearly to shreds by shrapnel.

AFTER BEING in the hospital for a long, long time, Hank was given a discharge, a "hatful" of medals for bravery and a disability allowance.

Some time later he got a job as an organizer for a CIO union.

He looked like a healthy specimen of manhood—over six feet, broad-shouldered and well-muscled.

He didn't talk about his war experience, didn't try to capitalize on the fact that he was a veteran.

Only a few of his closest friends knew that he had been in uniform and that he still packed a lot of shell fragments around in his back.

And these friends didn't talk about it either.

HANK WAS soon assigned to a tough organizing drive—one of those situations in which management "throws the book" at the union.

He went his even-tempered way, trying to sell unionism to employes of the mill.

Before long, however, he became the special target of a foreman who loved to hurl insults at Hank.

The foreman never missed an opportunity to say something nasty about Hank and the CIO.

He once called Hank a "damn, dirty foreigner," and on several occasions accused him of being a Communist.

Hank, who was much bigger than the foreman, took the insults without letting his anger show and without striking back.

Mill workers, naturally, began to wonder whether the big fellow wasn't "yellow."

IN THE privacy of his room Hank mentally cursed the foreman— and he told other organizers what he thought about the man.

But Hank knew there would be serious consequences for the CIO if he took a poke at the foreman. Furthermore, he didn't know what might happen to him in a fight because of the metal in his back.

The Army had given him a high disability rating—and Hank figured a dead organizer wouldn't do the CIO any good.

So he continued to accept the foreman's insults.

His co-organizers said they'd "fix" the dirty so-and-so but Hank told them to "lay off."

Reluctantly they agreed.

HANK AND his buddies were handing out leaflets at a mill gate one day when the foreman appeared on the scene.

The latter immediately began heaping insults on Hank. "Why don't you go back to Moscow, you damned Communist?" he asked.

Hank replied without losing his temper—but the foreman hadn't had his say. He really poured it on.

Inwardly seething but outwardly calm, Hank contined to hand out leaflets.

But Hank's colleagues had taken all they could take. One of them walked up to him from behind, yanked out his shirt-tail and undershirt and pulled them up over his shoulders.

"There! See that mass of scars. Well he got them in the Battle of the Bulge while you were taking it easy at home!"

That's all there is to the story except that the foreman never opened his mouth about Hank again—and within a short time a couple of workers who also had been in the "Bulge" organized a CIO Veterans Committee which helped sign up the workers.

It's Not A Big Leak Yet—But!

High Court Hits At Exclusion of Negro Jurors

THE U. S. Supreme Court by a 7 to 1 vote reversed the murder conviction and death sentence of Lee Cassell, a Negro, on the ground that Negroes had been intentionally excluded from the Dallas, Tex. grand jury which indicted him.

Cassell had been found guilty of slaying a sleeping watchman with an iron pipe in order to rob a Dallas store. The Supreme Court ruling contained no bar to re-indictment by a properly constituted grand jury and, presumably, a new trial.

The grand jury before which the evidence in Cassell's case was laid consisted of 12 men selected by a judge from a panel of 16 members picked out by the grand jury commissioners under Texas law. The commissioners said they know of no Negro qualified to sit, and picked only those persons personally known to them. The Texas Supreme Court had found that no discrimination had been practiced.

The majority opinion was written by Justice Stanley Reed. Joining in it were Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson and Justices Hugo Black and Tom C. Clark, who also wrote a separate concurring opinion. Another concurring opinion, written by Justice Felix Frankfurter, was joined in by Justices Harold H. Burton and Sherman Minton. Justice Robert H. Jackson wrote the dissenting opinion and Justice William O. Douglas did not participate.

Justice Reed, claiming the high court must assume that a "large proportion" of Dallas County Negroes is qualified for grand jury duty, wrote that the commissioners should have had no difficulty in determining an individual's qualifications for service. Failure of the commissioners to familiarize themselves with the qualifications of those eligible, without regard to race or color, constituted discrimination, he added.

Justice Jackson agreed in his dissent that discriminatory exclusion of Negroes from a trial jury would justify setting aside a conviction. A grand jury, however, is a very different institution, the power of which "is only to accuse, not to convict." Discrimination in choosing its members, he wrote, was "harmless" to Cassell "however great the wrong toward qualified Negroes of the community."

Senate Finance Unit Excludes 500,000 as Self Employed

AFTER three weeks of nearly daily sessions, the Senate Finance Committee has finally made public its decision about the workers to be covered by the 1950 version of the social security bill.

Net effect was to include under the old age and survivors' insurance system just about the same number as would be covered by the bill approved last year by the House. The committee is still working on benefits, tax rates, and proposals for disability insurance and public assistance programs.

However, about 500,000 workers who would have been classified as employes under the House bill will be classed as self-employed under the Senate version. This means they'll have to pay the whole payroll tax themselves, instead of their employer paying half.

Affected by the proposed shift would be, among others: laundry, beer, bakery, and other agent-drivers; industrial home workers; band leaders; all retail merchants; operators of service stations; contract loggers; nine lessees.

Other major change from the House's version is to refuse coverage to about two and one-half million state and local government employes now under retirement systems. The other one and one-half million state and local employes who are not covered by retirement systems can be covered if their state so requests. Employes of municipally-owned transit systems could be covered on request of the state. Under the House bill, employes could vote to come under the federal system by a two-thirds vote; this provision was rejected by the Senate committee.

THE committee rejected proposals to cover farm operators and farm workers, and is still debating whether to cover "borderline" farm workers—those packing and processing farm commodities off the farm, or maintaining irrigation ditches, for instance.

All in all, about the same number—seven million—are added to the 35 million now enjoying protection as were brought under in the House-approved bill. Of these, five million are under the "self-employed" category, and about one million are domestic workers.

Knocked out in the Senate version are an estimated 200,000 employes of hospitals, organizations and businesses "owned or controlled" by a religious denomination. These, along with other employes of non-profit organizations, had been covered in the House version, Tips and gratuities are excluded from the amounts on which social security benefits are calculated, in the Senate committe's draft. The House had included them.

While the method of collection is not provided in the social security law itself, spokesmen for Chairman Walter George (D.-Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee indicated that the Treasury Dept. believes that self-employed can pay their tax once a year, computing it from the "profits from business" schedule C of their income tax form and paying it when the return is filed. Domestic employes would have their tax computed and collected by the employer, since it is intended under the details of the bill that only relatively permanent workers would be covered.

THE COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS heard the story of the unemployed. Dr. Leon Keyserling, acting chairman, said he thought Congress "should worry at least as much about unemployment as it does about flood control," evinced active interest in CIO's program. Shown sitting at the conference table, l. to r.: Robert Moyer, unemployed CIO Steelworker, of Terre Haute, Ind; Dr. Keyserling; Pres. Claude R. Becktell, of the Indiana CIO Council; Clifford Baker, unemployed CIO Steelworker of Terre Haute; and Pres. Dirvin Corle of the Altoona, Pa., local of the United Railroad Workers, affiliated with the CIO Shipbuilding Union.

Murray Asks 3-Prong Attack on Unemployment

FOUR more groups of the CIO unemployed came to Washington last week and told their stories to government officials.

They came from Altoona, Pa., where the Pennsylvania Railroad has its repair shops and has, to all intents and purposes, stopped repairing its rolling stock. They came from Muskegon, Mich., and Terre Haute, Ind., which have slipped from booming wartime production centers to "E" areas. And they came from New York City, now a "D" area where not only ship repair but shipping has taken a sickening slump.

What they were trying to sell the government was the idea that the overall "healthy" appearance of the U. S. economy contained some local plague spots carrying the dangerous slump virus, which can spread as rapidly as outside manufacturers feel the buying slack and start laying off their own employes.

The CIO program for what it considers an emergency situation is set forth in the following letter from Pres. Philip Murray to the leaders of the House and Senate. He sent it on Friday, April 21. Murray wrote:

"THE CIO is increasingly concerned about the serious proportions unemployment has reached in many geographical areas in the United States. There are over 40 areas in the United States in which unemployment has exceeded 12% of the labor force. In more than 80 cities and towns unemployment has reached between 7 and 12% of he labor force.

In this latter category are most of the large cities of the United States, such as Boston, New York City, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Detroit, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Baltimore, Los Angeles, San Francisco and many others. Unemployment, as a percent of the labor force, exceeds that of the national average in approximately 120 cities and towns throughout the United States.

"Action must be taken to aid these workers, many of whom have been unemployed for a considerable length of time. The President of the United States has already sent to the Congress a message on unemployment compensation.

The CIO joins with him in urging Congress to extend immediately the level of unemployment compensation benefits as well as their duration. However, in addition, I urge that the Congress immediately enact the following measures designed to aid these emergency areas:

"1 Extend the duration of unemployment compensation benefits for those workers in areas where unemployment has exceeded 9% beyond the 26 weeks recommended in the President's message. This would permit unemployed workers to continue to draw unemployment compensation when, through no fault of their own, they have been unable to secure employment.

"2 Enact an emergency public works bill similar to H. R. 7444. This bill would establish an emergency reserve fund of $1,8000,000,000 which the President could tap to accelerate various public works programs in depressed areas as well as make direct grants to states and local communities to establish programs of their own to help relieve unemployment.

"3 To reestablish a Civilian Conservation Corps similar to that proposed in H. R. 7463 and S. 3144. These bills are aimed at relieving unemployment among the younger people of the nation.

"These are three specific emergency measures that would help the immediate situation in these areas where unemployment has exceeded 7 to 9%. In addition to these emergency measures, the entire program of the Fair Deal must be enacted if we are to develop job opportunities for all our workers. However, because of the seriousness of the immediate unemployment situation in certain geographical areas, I am urging you to take these emergency actions now.

"If we are not successful in bringing immediate relief to these many emergency unemployment areas, the effort of unemployment nationally by summer and early fall may be of very serious proportions.

"Within the framework of large scale unemployment, the successful prosecution of our foreign policy as well as the continued need to bring the benefits of technological developments to the American people becomes more difficult of attainment. Action, therefore, to aid the more than 120 areas with more than 7% of unemployment becomes all the more imperative."

Reds 'Liberate' German Labor

Workers in Eastern Germany are now under the Russian labor system, with unanimous adoption by the Communist-controlled legislature of a new labor law. The Communist press hailed the law as a "Magna Charta," but anti-Communists disagreed.

Women are to work in mines and factories as the equals of men; pay will be on piecework basis and "labor norms are to be increased constantly"; workers will vie in increasing output, with medals and bonuses for the most productive.

Women are to be drawn into heavy industry to straighten out bottlenecks, especially in the field of mining.

The Communist press said the law was evidence of the full liberation of workers and their advance over workers "still enslaved by capitalism."—(LPA)

Muskegon: Jobs Disappear, Hardship Grows

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

"WE HEAR so much about labor being responsible. I think it's time management and government took a little responsibility too."

That's what 52-year-old Charley Bowers, intermittently employed CIO Auto Workers member of Muskegon, Mich., told the Council of Economic Advisers last week.

The auto parts plant he works in, when he works, is threatening to move out of town, and Muskegon since early 1949 has been mostly an "E" (for emergency) area. More than 24% of the working population is unemployed; another 22% is working only two or three days a week. Charley owns his own home, doesn't want to move, and doesn't know where he would find a job if he did move.

It's hard to put your finger on what's wrong in Muskegon, except for the "smart" management policy which dictates decisions to move elsewhere, or to stop subcontracting and build your own parts plant instead.

That's what General Motors did, for instance; it used to employ 3,500 persons in Muskegon, indirectly, but then it decided to build its own plant in Saginaw (where there is full employment already), and the parts plant is down to 1200 and dropping rapidly.

Or you might say it was the employment policy of industries for whose products the market is seasonal. The Norge division of Borg-Warner has a plant in Muskegon; it hires a lot of people every spring to make a lot of refrigerators for the summer sales, and then lays them off again.

MUSKEGON is a foundry and parts town, mainly, and nobody seems to know exactly how it got into its present fix.

During the war, local industry expanded, at government insistence, with government money. A lot of labor was imported from the Deep South, and maybe if the imported labor would just go home, there'd be enough work for the original Muskegon group. Trouble is that the "influx never had it so good," as Charley Bowers says. They don't want to go home and nobody could really expect them to.

But, says Charley, "the machines, the labor, and the ability are there, and something should be done to put them to use."

Unemployment compensation is just a memory to most of Muskegon's unemployed, it's been going on so long, and the relief rolls are so high that the county had to borrow $400,000 from the state in 1949. The county relief allowance is $3 per adult per week, for food.

Ellis Howard, World War II veteran, told the Council what happens to a young man coming back to a town like that. He'd been working before he went into the service, and got out on Sept. 15, 1947, feeling safe and sure under the seniority provisions of union contract and of law. But employment in the plant had dropped from about 5,000 to around 800. No job for the veteran, it just wasn't there. So he shopped around.

Ellis has a partial disability—nothing that would prevent him from doing a good day's work at the trade he's used to, according to him and to doctors who have examined him. He feels fine. But the employment offices won't even let him make application. "I'm just not physically fit for the job," he says. He hasn't had one day's work since Uncle Sam let him go.

AS FOR Michigan's upper peninsula, Owen Whitford told the council, it's a mining and timber area with an occasional plant. "But now," he says, "the timber's been cut and the stumps are left, the ore's been mined and the holes are left, and local industry has no solution."

Owen himself has been out of work for 11 months. He's 35, is married, and has two children.

"It's just chronic," he says. "People are really getting desperate. I could tell you what one guy told me, but it'd sound wrong here. You have to be up there to know how it is."

"Go on, tell the Board," said Charley Bowers.

"Well," said Owen, "this fellow's a veteran with two kids, and he can't find work. He's a nice guy. But the other day we were talking and he says to me, 'You know, the government taught me to use a gun during the war, and I may just decide to use it again'."

"Don't let the name fool you sister."

Terre Haute: 9000 Idle, Others on Part-Time, City Is 'Sick'

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., is a "mixed" town, industrially — the kind of "healthy" town economy which, ideally, should make a good living for everyone in it. It has a little of everything, it seems: aluminum fabricating, railroad parts, farm equipment supplies, foundries, breweries, a large distillery. It's a big food processing center, also, and has a wide variety of service trades.

But Terre Haute is sick. Of its 43,000 potential workers, over 9000 and jobless, and 5000 have exhausted their unemployment benefits. Food processing is seasonal, but the part-tme and layoff virus has struck all over town.

For months, the fabricating plants have been working on short shifts—a short week on a week off, for most of the employes.

The week they work, they earn maybe $21 or $22. Then they're off, and if they get their benefit check, it's $20.

"Even the breweries aren't working right now," said unemployed Robert Moyer, "because people like me can't buy the beer."

And, he added, the distillery has laid off two shifts. "When that happens, things are really bad."

"I just don't think there's a plant in town working full time," he added.

Clifford Baker chimed in. "We get some government orders in our plant," he said. "We make aluminum corn cribs for the farmers to store their corn in. The orders come in little batches, always with a hurry, hurry, hurry on them.

"Everybody is called back and works his head off, and you know the faster you get it done, the sooner you'll be laid off again. Can't the government give us some more orders, or give us a time extension anyway?"

In Moyer's plant, they make railroad supplies. "We get about half our orders from the railroads, and they've stopped ordering," he said.

The delegation from Altoona, Pa., where they are supposed to do the repair work with the parts made in Terre Haute, just laughed. They aren't working either.

ICC Head, Jobless Agree Pennsy Layoffs Don't Make Sense

"IT DOES'T make any sense to me," roared Col J. Monroe Johnson, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, when he heard what was going on in Altoona and Pitcairn, Pa.

It doesn't make sense to the 16,700 Pennsylvania Railroad maintenance and repair workers who on April 24 were told their jobs were "abolished," either.

In Altoona and Pitcairn, the PRR repairs its freight cars, checks their condition, and builds a few new ones.

Every time there's a coal strike, PRR lays off all its repair and maintenance workers. They were all laid off last June. In August, they started being called back. By the end of January, there was "full employment" in the yards. In Februry came another layoff. Re-hiring started the beginning of April. Altoona climbed off the "E" list. "E" means emergency due to unemployment.

Then the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen called a strike (since postponed) for April 26, against PRR and three other roads.

PRR immediately announced that all the jobs in Altoona and Pitcairn were "abolished"—a technical phrase meaning that, if PRR could get away with it, re-hiring could take place without regard to seniority.

THE members of the CIO United Railroad Workers who came to Washington to tell their story to high government officials wanted to ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to put some extra inspectors on PRR to see whether the ICC safety regulations were being complied with, in all this hullabaloo.

Col. Johnson said ICC had too few inspectors, couldn't do it, but he exploded into wrathful language over PRR's layoff policy.

"You're not telling me anything I don't know," he shouted. "I've been after those men for years, to keep up their repair work. I tell them that when a strike is on is the time to get their rolling stock in shape so they'll be in a position to haul the freight when the strike is over."

"But," he added, "the railroad men who are smartest in the world when it comes to running a railroad are stupid, and I've told them so, when it comes to anything outside actual operation.

"All the railroads are pursuing the same policy," he said. "The result is that the government is getting good and worried about the numbers and condition of the nation's rolling stock. The ICC a fortnight ago issued an absolutely unprecedented order, calling for an immediate report from each road on the number of 'bad order' cars, and for similar reports every two weeks till further notice."

(ICC can't make the railroads repair the cars, but it can ask for reports and "try to bring them to their senses," Col. Johnson said.)

The first report showed that 14% of the nation's rolling freight stock is in bad order—unusable unless repaired. "Even during the war, it was only 2%," Col. Johnson said wrathfully. Further, he said, the report showed that there had been a 52% increase in the number of bad-order cars since a year ago.

"We need about 250,000 more freight cars of all types," he said. "That's a shortage of new rolling stock. And in the face of this, the roads not only won't build new stock—they won't repair what they have."

"The answer is," he continued, "they won't lay any money out when they don't have any coming in. They're all losing money. They're so preoccupied with their losses they can't see an inch ahead of them."

PRR has an $8 million fund set aside for repair work, the union told him. "They just shift that to another pocket," he replied.

"There is enough back work piled up to keep every man working for five years," said E. W. Smith, president of the Pitcairn local of URW.

"I know it," said Col. Johnson.

"So you're a Senate investigator—so you still ain't going to peek into this book!"

Coffee Probe

Ever Make Your Money Increase 22 Times?

THE SPECULATORS who put an economic hydrogen bomb under the price of coffee are wringing crying towels over two continents now because Uncle Sam has the bad taste to inquire into their take.

The take was as spectacular as the rise in coffee costs, according to figures compiled by a Senate Agriculture subcommittee headed by Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.). One Brazilian plunger built a $3000 stake into $207,000 in seven months. A little group of Brazilians who started out with $151,000 about the end of last July had run it up to $3,333,333 by the end of March, it appears. None of the priofits were subject to income tax in either the U. S. or Brazil.

How many there were in the group is a matter of controversy. Paul Hadlick, committee counsel, named three commissionmen from Sao Paulo, Brazil — Paulo and Luiz Suplicy, brothers, and their brother-in-law, Tom Simonsen. Alfred Boedtker, of Volkart Brothers Co., New York brokerage firm, said they may have represented any number of additional plungers.

HE READ a message from his clients charging the committee with publishing "misleading" statements and conclusions, "hurt-friendly relations between the U. S. and Brazil."

"Brazilians cannot understand why such investigations ever started," the cable continued, "when the price support policy of the Agriculture Dept. of the United States helped increase the price of similar products in our country."

"We protest against unnecessary publishing of names and making public business positions which by world tradition should be kept strictly secret."

Witnesses who appeared before the committee made the same squawk against their highly profitable operations being made public. Among them was Robert E. Atkinson, president of the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

WHEN supports sent up the price of cotton in the United States, Boedtker maintained, the price in Brazil likewise went up. That made it profitable for planters there, he added, to rip up their coffee trees and start growing cotton.

What the Brazilian speculators did was deal in futures, or contracts for future delivery of coffee, on the New York exchange. They bought them as fast as they were offered and as they were delivered, bought more. On each completed deal they made a healthy profit as they forced up the prices, according to the committee. At the same time they sold coffee in Brazil, but it is not within the committe's jurisdiction to determine the profits of their operations there.

The Suplicy syndicate still holds 30% of all the open, or undelivered, future contracts on the New York exchange—enough in the opinion of most market specialists to constitute a monopoly, the committee reported.

Robinson Quits Mine-Mill Post

Reid Robinson, vice president of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers union since 1948, has resigned for "personal reasons." He said he hoped to "continue to serve the labor movement," but refused to comment on whether he would be retained on the Mine-Mill staff in some other capacity.

Robinson, 41, was international president of Mine-Mill for 11 years, from 1936 to 1947. He was one of the Mine-Mill officers charged with being pro-Communist in the hearings which resulted in the union's expulsion from the CIO early this year.

Minority Report:

Ending NLRB Counsel Post Good Organization

IN ITS majority report issued April 24, the Senate Committee on Excutive Expenditures supported the resolution of Sen. Taft (R.-O.) to reject Pres. Truman's proposal to transfer the powers of the general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board to the board.

The nine-man Dixie GOP majority which voted against the Truman plan early this month took the word of incumbent General Counsel Robert N. Denham that the five-man NLRB itself was talking through its hat when it backed the President.

However, the four man minority of three Democrats and one Republican concluded that elimination of Denham's job "conforms to the pattern of good organization recommended for regulatory commissions generally by the Hoover Coommission."

The minority also said that the plan "conforms to the will of the Senate in passing favorably on proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley law, last year." In addition, the minority held that the Truman plan, which becomes law unless turned down by Congress by May 24, would eliminate the confusion now existing in the NLRB because of its two-headed character.

DENHAM, long under fire from both the CIO and AFL, testified against the Truman plan before the Senate Committee after NLRB Chairman Paul Herzog, speaking for the whole five-man board testified.

Herzog, upon whose testimony the minority leaned heavily, told the Senate Committee that Denham constantly tried to bring small local businesses under the Taft-Hartley Act, although the board thought cases involving such enterprises and the union in them should be settled locally.

The board chairman also claimed the NLRB never knew what kind of unfair labor practice charges Denham dismissed. Under T-H, the general counsel has exclusive power to accept or reject unfair practice cases and there is no appeal from his rejection.

Members of the four-man minority are Democratic Sens. Humphrey (Minn.), Leahy (R. I.) and Benton (Conn.) plus Republican Ives (N. Y.).

CIO Urges Rent Control Extension for Year As Well As Authority for Cities to Recontrol

THE CIO last week asked Congress to extend the Rent Control Act for another year and to re-define local autonomy so that a community cannot only decontrol rents but also recontrol them if they get too far out of line.

The plea was made by Michael Mann, CIO regional director in Chicago, in testimony before the Senate Banking Committee on April 26. So long as the war-created housing shortage exists, he declared, local communities should be able to decide if they want to decontrol or recontrol rents.

A premature end to control—which will come on June 30 unless the act is extended—will bring on the "havoc and fear" in this country that the Communists want, he asserted.

Mann was one of a more than a score of witnesses who testified before the committee. Among them was Housing Expediter Tighe Woods, who asked for a one-year extension with the recontrol proviso the CIO seeks.

"In the face of our present acute housing shortage," he said, "there would be an intolerable rise in rents if controls are removed June 30."

WHERE CEILINGS have been lifted, he said, the heaviest burden was imposed on tenants in units paying less than $30 a month. In eight decontrolled cities he named increases averaged 26 to 41% for all types of housing, with the percentage boost highest where the rent was lowest.

"The continuation of rent control for another year," he said, "will provide an orderly transition to a free rental market and an orderly process of decontrol as each community meets its housing needs."

Woods put into the record figures compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics showing that during the winter the vacancy rates in 25 cities ranging in size from New York to Mobile, Ala., varied from .8% to 3.9%, compared to the normal 5% to 6%.

The rate of "habitable" rental vacancies was even lower, the figures showed, varying from .1% to 2.7%. In only three of the cities did rental vacancies exceed 1% of the total habitable rental property.

To show that the shortage is not confined to large cities, Woods read newspaper stories and letters to editors describing acute conditions in several communities with less than 10,000 population. One man said he had to drive 500 miles each weekend to see his wife and children because no rental housing was available in Belvidere, Ill. (Pop. 8000). In Miamisburg, O. (Pop. 5500), a minister and his family were reported ill from dampness in the church basement, the only housing they could afford.

If controls are abandoned now rents in Connecticut will jump 35% to perhaps 50%, according to testimony by Gov. Chester Bowles, wartime head of the Office of Price Administration. The state has its own public housing program, he said, but will need 10 years to catch up with the shortage unless the Federal government takes the lead to lick it. Rent control is one of the government's tools, he added.

DISCONTINUANCE of controls "would not be only extremely unwise but dangerous to the stability of our entire economy," he said. Connecticut needs them for at least another two years, he claimed.

Sen. Myers (D. Pa.), co-author of the Truman administration's bill to extend controls, warned that higher rents will mean increased demands for higher wages.

"A loss in real wages to a laborer in Pittsburgh," he said, "will probably be reflected in an attempt at obtaining increased wages at the first opportunity. If a laborer's rent skyrockets from $50 to $75, don't think for a moment that come the next contract negotiations time, he won't be out asking for a wage boost to even up the score."

The same stand was taken by Pres. William Green of the AFL. The U.S. Dept of Labor, he said, has estimated that decontrol will lift rents 25% for the average worker, or the equivalent of $2.50 a week.

"This increase in rent is equivalent to a wage cut of 5% or over 6c an hour, assuming a 40-hour week," he went on. "The implications for collective bargaining are bound to be quite far-reaching".

In the face of such increases, he said, organized labor will have to go after higher wages.

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) said new increases would cause "untold suffering and human misery."

William Boucher III, representing Americans for Democratic Action, pointed out to the committee that decontrol "would bring about a vast reduction in purchasing power" which the country can ill afford at a time when unemployment is increasing.

Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, citing "little improvement" in the shortage of medium and low-priced rental units in Illinois cities, predicted that State legislation in case of an end of controls will bring "last-minute improvisation with serious dislocations in effective administration." He expressed alarm at the increases which have followed some local decontrol actions and said that rent boosts in seven large cities ranged from 27 to 45%.

Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), co-author of the extension bill with Myers, declared a good portion of U.S. citizens just would not be able to meet the added burden of higher rent in case of decontrol. He predicted "exhorbitant increases," and said the Apartment Building Owners and Managers Association of Chicago, with the Cook County Fair Rent Association (a landlord group), has asked for a 71% increase.

Scott Donaldson, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Air Force, urged continued control near military installations and war industries.

Heart Fund Given $3575

LABOR SECY. TOBIN, Chairman of the National Labor Committee of the American Heart Association, announced last week that it had received $3575 from Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, as the union's contribution to the 1950 Heart Campaign.

In a letter to Tobin, Potofsky, who is serving as a member of the labor committe, said:

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America as a part of our great organized labor movement is vitally interested in fighting this terrible disease since its cruel hand is felt most keenly by those families least able to stand the economic burden and privation it renders so mercilessly.

"In making this contribution we feel hat we are helping in the expansion of a nation-wide program of heart research, public education and community service so that this serious health problem may be successfully attacked and brought under control."

In accepting the contribution, Tobin said:

"This gift is in accord with the record of the ACW in supporting endeavors for the welfare of our people and is further evidence that American Labor is making an outstanding contribution towards the task of combatting heart disease, among whose major victims are the working men and women of America."

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IT'S NOT usual for a man who starts out as a policeman to go into the ministry. But that's not the only unusual thing in the life of the Rev. Amos H. Carnegie, now an honored Negro leader in religion and education who is devoting his energy and talents to improving conditions among his people.

Carnegie tells part of his captivating life story in the first volume of his autobiography, "Faith Moves Mountains," just off the press. It is a simple and yet thrilling story of the "mountains" he was able to move by his deep, religious faith.

Amos Carnegie was born on the island of Jamaica, British West Indies, more than 50 years ago, the son of a poor farmer with nine children—four girls and five boys—one of whom died in infancy. His parents were deeply religious and all the children became active church workers at an early age.

JOB opportunities for Negroes then as now were limited.

When young Amos and his brothers were grown, three of the boys decided to stay and work on the farm with their father. Amos joined the police force on the island. It was a rough and tough life, and young Carnegie feared for a time he would be swallowed up by the evil around him, but after three and a half years, he was dismissed because of impaired eyesight. Policemen were not allowed to wear glases. This was the turning point in his early life.

He had long yearned to become a preacher, and in 1913 he went to Toronto, Canada, to try to work his way through school in preparation for the ministry. There to his great surprise, he immediately ran into racial prejudice, and could get only the hardest and dirtiest kind of work.

Only his great faith in the Lord and the aid of a few fine people whose religious principles and kind hearts moved them to help him, enabled him to meet the hardships and misfortunes that fell upon him in Canada and later in the U. S., where he finally went to study for the ministry.

STARK POVERTY stares bleakly out of the picture of this shack, typical of thousands to be seen on plantations in the Deep South. Considered along with the filty, crowded slums of our big cities in the North where so many Negro Americans are forced to live, it should present a powerful argument for drastic steps to bring the high standard of living in America, which we boast about, to all our citizens.

DURING World War I he served a term in prison at hard labor because his conscience would not permit him to bear arms. In his autobiography, Carnegie says that in spite of the hardships he suffered while in prison, he considers the time he spent there as the "happiest days in all my Christian experience."

For there, as everywhere he went, Carnegie had a tremendous influence on the people he met, inspiring them through the intensity and sincerity of his religious faith.

The trials and tribulations Amos Carnegie endured before he finally was graduated from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, as he tells them in his autobiography, make engrossing reading. Forty-eight hours after his graduation he was on his way to South Carolina to start his work of organizing Sunday Schools in destitute communities.

Out of this work grew his activities in trying to organize schools, with the aid of money from the Rosenwald Fund, which offered to match funds contributed by the county and state.

Fear of some Negro organizations and leaders of antagonizing the white people sometimes hindered this work greatly, but Rev. Carnegie refused to be discourged, no matter how bad things looked. He had a way of overcoming antagonism or indifference that was most disarming.

IN MORE recent years, Rev. Carnegie has spent his time laying the foundation for a national, self-help hospitalization movement for the Negro people. (He plans to tell this story in the next volume of his autobiography, which he is now writing.)

REV. AMOS CARNEGIE

Starting out with only $5 and a stubborn faith in his mission, Carnegie traveled 45,000 miles through the country, visiting 170 cities in 48 states, to contact Negro churches everywhere and arouse interest and support for the hospital movement.

Subsequently he organized the National Hospital Foundation, Inc., to raise funds to build hospitals in local communities with the aid of federal funds available under the Hospital Survey and Construction Act. A national membership drive for the foundation will be launched officially in August.

A fine-looking man with deep-set intelligent eyes which shine with goodness and sincerity behind his glasses, Carnegie is confident that the hospital movement will succeed in improving the present deplorable medical and hospital facilities which the Negro people now have to endure.

Proceeds from the sale of "Faith Moves Mountains," will go to the foundation. Orders for the book may be sent direct to the Rev. Amos Carnegie, Carver Hall, 211 Elm St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Including postage charges, it sells for $1.10.

Growing Dictatorship Threatening S. American Unions, Potofsky Finds

LABOR in the U. S. is ready to back up the country's "Good Neighbor Policy" with the Latin American republics, CIO leaders told Pres. Gabriel Gonzales Videla of Chile.

The pledge was made at a banquet in honor of the Chilean chief executive, sponsored by the United Nations World magazine in New York; and in a conference between President Gonzalez and five CIO officals.

Noting that American unions felt that Pres. Roosevelt's Good Neighbor Policy was "long overdue," Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers said at the banquet:

"Today, more than ever, we are determined that the Good Neighbor Policy, based on friendship and equality among peoples, will remain the basic philosophy of our government and our people in their dealing with our sister republics of Latin America."

The same day, the President met with Potofsky, who heads the CIO's International Committee; CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Sam Eubanks, executive vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild; Dr. Ernst Schwarz, director of the CIO Latin American Committee; and Pete Mosele, CIO director in New York.

Potofsky quoted Pres. Gonzalez as hailing U. S. aid, and noting that Chile is breaking out of its old "colonial economy thanks largely to the hope given by the Truman Administration."

"We told the President," Potofsky said to reporters, "that we are anti-Communist — but it's necessary to make a sharp differentiation between Communism and legitimate organized labor unions.

"We said we hoped that the Chilean government's anti-Communist fight would continue without injuring the rights of labor."

IN HIS speech, Potofsky voiced concern with a growing trend to dictatorship and suppression of liberties throughout much of Latin America. He said:

"When the dictators come, legitimate trade unions are the first to go — with their rights abolished and their leaders crushed or driven into exile. And when the trade unions go, the people are deprived of the power to resist the forces of oppression."

The CIO committee chairman pointed out that the assault against free government is the problem of every government in the Western Hemisphere.

"The drive to dictatorship in any one country in America concerns you in Santiago as it affects us in Washington and New York," Potofsky told President Gonzalez.

"We of labor cannot sit idly by and watch the strangling of democratic rights and trade union rights of millions of our fellow Americans anywhere. We will never halt the struggle against those who would appease dictatorships."

HE SAID that the CIO is glad to know that "in Chile, organized labor is a recognized force for good. I am sure that your nation will benefit increasingly from healthy collaboration among labor and the democratic political parties."

"Democracy does work," Potofsky emphasized. "It works far more successfully than the knock on the door at midnight, the terror of the secret police, or the brutality of the concentration camp.

"Those methods only instill fear —but fear is no substitute for voluntary cooperation, for hope, for enthusiasm, for creative partnership in a democratic cause."

Potofsky said that the CIO will always support the efforts of people in Central and South America "to extend industrialization, to win political democracy, economic advancement and a more just social order."

The Chilean President has been visiting Washington and New York as an official guest of the government. He plans to visit the Tennessee Valley and New Orleans before returning to his native country.

Israel Homes Aided By ACW

HEAVY purchases of bonds to finance large-scale, low-cost housing in Israel were made at a recent trade union conference held in New York under the direction of the newly organized Amun-Israel Housing Corp.

The "Amun" in the title stands for American labor. The project was initiated at the request of the Israeli Federation of Labor and is a joint non-profit enterprise of labor and management.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and a vice president of the corporation, announced that New York locals would buy $500,000 of the $10 million bond issue and indicated he expected the international also to make a purchase. The AFL Intl. Ladies Garment Workers bought $1 million and will promote sale of the bonds among individual members. Spokesmen for other unions said their groups also expected to make purchases.

George Silver, corporation president, explained that bonds, in $100 to $5000 denominations, will pay 3% interest protected by Israeli laws providing for the transmittal of dollars. The government also has agreed to establish a special mortgage insurance fund patterned after the U. S. Federal Housing Authority. Funds raised by the bond sale will be loaned on first mortgages not to exced 50% of the property value.

Reuther Shooting Case Now Two Years Old

It was two years ago that an attempt was made to assassinate Pres. Walter P. Reuther, of the Auto Workers. The UAW reward of $100,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the people involved still stands, the union announced April 21. An additional $100,000 offer for the apprehension of the criminals who make the attempt on the life of Victor Reuther, UAW educational director, a year ago is also outstanding.

Warning—Profiteers Ruin U.S. Shipping

TWO WARNINGS were sounded by W. R. Steinberg, president of the CIO American Radio Association, in an address broadcast over Stations WCUO, Cleveland, and WDET, Detroit.

1. The U. S. merchant marine has declined from a wartime high of 5387 ships to 1208 vessels, "less than we had at the outbreak of the war" and too few to provide a sufficient measure of safety for the country.

2. All seamen will fight to defend their union hiring halls "with everything they've got."

Steinberg recalled that when World War II started the United States had fewer than 1400 merchant vessels—"too few to provide steady employment for the necessary skilled personnel."

"Our government," he said, "had to spend billions building ships and millions training personnel to man the radio rooms of the transports, freighters and tankers carrying troops, planes, tanks, guns and the sea of oil on which the entire modern war machine floated.

"The sad truth is that lives were needlessly lost because our own short-sightedness had allowed our merchant marine to rot away to almost nothing. Now, the same thing has happened again.

"It appears that two world wars have taught us nothing."

"OUR merchant fleet has been ground between the harsh teeth of men without wisdom who have failed to provide for its healthy growth and operation," Steinberg said. "It had been demobilized and is being gradually destroyed by the greed of some of our own citizens who have engaged in transferring their ships to the flags of foreign nations, such as Panama, Honduras and other small nations helping them to evade paying American wages, undercut high American safety standards, and dodge payment of taxes to the U. S. Treasury.

"Workers in industrial plants can imagine how jobless America nseamen feel when, for example, German sailors were recently flown into Baltimore to man the tanker S. S. Olympic Flame, which is owned by a Greek who is an Argentine citizen, flies the Honduran flag, and is under charter to carry oil for an American company, the Texas Co. (which has locked out 5000 members of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union).

"They would feel the same if the factory they work in were moved to China because coolie wages could be paid and money spent on safety devices could be put instead into higher profits."

SINCE the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, Steinberg said, the maritime unions "have been been fighting for their very lives." Under T-H the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that union hiring halls are illegal.

"Seamen fought for the hiring hall with good reason," he said. "Before they had their own democratic hiring halls they were literally slaves. I said slaves, and there is a wealth of official evidence to prove exactly that.

"The seamen do not intend to go back to the slavery of the crimp joints, with bribery, brutality and bigotry as their bosses."

Only the Communists who want to disrupt Atlantic Pact shipments to Europe and "short-sighted anti-labor elements in both government and industry" want union hiring halls permanently outlawed, he said. He urged support of the Magnuson-Lesinski bill legalizing them.

ILGWU Aids Auto Workers

THE executive board of the Intl. Ladies Garment Workers, AFL, has voted unanimously to contribute $100,000 to the Chrysler strike fund.

David Dubinsky, ILGWU president, in a telegram to the CIO Auto-Workers said, "Your unflinching stand in the present struggle vouchsafes decisive victory and commands wholehearted support and solidarity of all organized labor. Good luck and best wishes to your union and its officers."

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, said the entire amount would be distributed to Chrysler locals for direct relief.

In his reply to Dubinsky, Reuther said, "This splendid demonstration of the solidarity of all labor is a further inspiration to the Chrysler workers who will carry on their fight to compete victory over the forces of organized greed."

"I wonder what happened to the guy with the flute."

TOUCHING TRIBUTE: CIO Pres. Philip Murray dedicates the building of Local 1104, United Steelworkers, in Lorain, Ohio, to the memory of the late Van A. Bittner, Steelworkers vice-president and director of the CIO Organizing Committee. More than 600 people witnessed the mortgage burning ceremony and dedication. Behind Murray on the platform are (left to right) Vincent Sweeney, Steelworkers publicity director; Paul Schremp, president of Local 1104; Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council; and I. W. Abel, union district director. (LPA)

Delegation Says More Joblessness in Private Shipyards Than During Depression

EMPLOYMENT in private shipyards is below the deepest depression levels, a CIO delegation told their Congressmen and the Assistant Secretary of Commerce last week. And it's due to get worse.

For the first time in history, more men are employed in government yards than in private yards. Less than 30,000 men are employed in private yards. During the worst of the depression, betwen 50,000 and 60,000 were on the job.

It's the same when it comes to manning merchant vessels. Overall, counting ships at sea and ships being built and repaired, the nation's shipping industry is at about a 40% employment level.

At the Bethlehem yards in Hoboken, N. J., between 200 and 500 men are employed per week even in the depression, from 1,500 to 2,000 were steadily employed there.

At the big CIO Natl. Maritime Union hiring hall in New York, over 5,000 seamen are waiting for jobs that don't come.

Bethlehem, Todd, and Maryland Drydock all have told the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers that everybody will be laid off by the end of the year—laid off for good, apparently.

There are two main reasons for this situation, and NMU and IUMSWA propose, if they can, to get something done about both.

FIRST and most important is the transfer of U. S.-built, privately-owned merchant ships to foreign registry. More and more vessels are carrying the Panamanian, Honduran and Liberian flags, and sailing with "mixed" foreign crews, none of them citizens of the three countries.

Since they are under foreign registry, they can escape U. S. inspection and get their repair work done in foreign parts—in the Panamanian and South American yards and in Japan. This means more profit for the private shipowners and no work for U. S. seamen and repair workers.

The delegation asked Congress to stop the transfer to foreign registry, figuring there might be an interesting tax angle involved which might appeal to Congressmen who would remain untouched by the spectacle of unemployment in the U. S.

There are mutterings about backing this up with direct union action. NMU high councils are considering ratification of a proposal to refuse to sail ships which have not been repaired in this country. There's a major safety angle involved as well as an ugly human situation.

NMU also wants to make sure that the Economic Cooperation Administration enforces the restriction that not over 50% of the goods procured here for distribution under the Marshall Plan are shipped in foreign bottoms.

THE second trouble is that the U. S. government is not repairing its own reserve merchant fleet—the 1900 vessels bearing permanent Maritime Commission registry, 1,000 of which need repair. This work is necessary for national defense. A bill now pending in Congress which would set aside $25 million for this repair work is backed by the Maritime Commission and is soon to be acted upon. IUMWSA is pushing this bill in every possible way.

There has been no top policy dcision, either, on how large a merchant fleet the U. S. needs, and there are those who think it should be much, much bigger, and that new construction of speedier, stronger vessels is desperately needed.

Also, IUMSWA says, the armed services should give a thought to contracting their shipping to private firms instead of doing their own hauling. "We claim," says Rosalind Schulman, IUMSWA research director, "that when you do the work privately you get it cheaper."

All of this makes the Taft-Hartley "restriction" on hiring halls, as imposed by the courts, doubly unbearable to NMU, which is pressing for passage of the Magnuson-Lesinski bill to legalize hiring halls. Without the hiring hall, NMU claims, the huge unemployment situation can quickly be used to tear down standards for U. S. merchant seamen, to sell jobs to the lowest bidder.

CIO Spokesman Asks ITO Charter Approval

THE U. S. Government should approve the proposed charter of the Intl. Trade Organization — a United Nations agency — to help the world's economy, the CIO advised Congress last week.

Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director, said that while the ITO charter plans may have some weakness in details, we'll do far better with the international trade group than without it.

In fact, he added, "we'd be further along the road to better world understanding and economic development" when the ITO is set up in permanent form.

Ruttenberg stressed the importance of foreign trade to the U. S. economy. Starting with the United Nations charter and the Bretton Woods Agreement, he said the U. S. "piece by piece has been constructing the necessary machinery for a free world."

"This machinery, and U. S. foreign economic policy, would not be complete," he added, "without an organization that dealt with the problems of trade, which are basic to the problems of world economics.

"The U. S. now has UN specialized agencies in the fields of international finance, agriculture, health, aviation, labor, education, science and culture, but none in the basic field of world trade."

THE ITO Charter, instead of pushing the U. S. into socialism, will have the effect of lessening governmental restrictions on foreign trade, he said. It will also tend to lessen the restrictive influence of cartels by extending the basic principles of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act into the international field and stimulating competition, he maintained.

Ruttenberg said the CIO would like to see in the Charter more positive provisions covering employment and labor standards, development and investment, and commodity agreements, but is not taking a stand against them.

Speaking specifically of unemployment, he said the Charter provision does not even go as far as our Full Employment Act of 1946, and that the CIO would like to see a clause calling for a more vigorous attack in favor of full employment. U. S. workers still fear a repetition of the unemployment of the 30's, he said, and other countries fear the prospect of another depression in the U. S.

"If we fail to attain he goals of full employment and production the whole underpinnings of our concept of increased foreign trade and thus our whole foreign policy is jeopardized," he said.

House Unit Told Big Biz Only 'Talks' Free Enterprize

BIG BUSINESS leaders often preach until they're hoarse about the virtues of competition, but they do precious little practicing of it.

That's the conclusion that inevitably pops up after reading the testimony of James S. Martin, former chief of the decartelization branch of the American Military Government in Germany and former special assistant to the Attorney General in the economic warfare section, before the House Judiciary subcommittee investigating monopolies.

Martin, who quit his job in Germany over cartel policies, entrenched himself behind a table full of documents and records of the international steel cartel that existed before the war as he gave his testimony on April 24. Many of the documents had never been made public before and had been seized by the AMG in a raid on cartel headquarters in Luxembourg in 1947.

(A cartel is a monopoly on an international basis, with supposedly competing firms in the same industry in different countries dividing world markets between thm so as to eliminate competition and fix prices.)

Martin charged that:

1. U. S. Steel, Bethlehem and Republic, through the Steel Export Asociation, joined the cartel in 1938 in an agreement to divide the market, fix prices and limit competition. Other smaller U. S. firms were gradually forced in until 90% of this country's steel production was controlled.

2. American steel company "observers" were sitting in on "off-the-record" meetings in Brussels in 1947 at which resumption of cartel agreements was discussed.

3. The cartel group is trying—successfully so far—to block development of a steel industry in some countries contrary to U. S. policy under the Marshall Plan and the Point Four program of economic development.

"The international steel cartel carried out openly for over 10 years, and its component parts are now carrying out covertly," he said, "a policy which can only be described as the diametrical opposite of the Marshall Plan and President Truman's Point Four.

"Powerful American firms participated in that effort to stifle and control economic development, and these same firms are now participating in the establishment of the same kind of unofficial economic foreign policy for the United States while our Government is trying to move in the opposite direction."

Martin's documents covered the period from 1933 to 1941, when World War II was under way. They included minutes and memos of the negotiations of the Nazi steel magnates to get British and American steel interests into the combine, which Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), committee chairman, described as a "plot" to control world steel. Martin said the cartel amounted to a "privately operated world government."

SOME of its maneuvres, he said, were "nothing more or less than a full-scale effort to end competition among American firms in export trade."

Before the war, he maintained, the cartel blocked the development of steel industries in Norway, Greece, Holland and the Balkans—later overrun by Germany—and also in Turkey. They haven't fared any better since the end of the war, he went on, because the cartel refused to furnish them with the materials necessary to build steel mills. He cited an effort Norway made last year, but before the Marshall Plan money available to do it could be used the Organization for European Economic Cooperation had to approve the project. Norway never got the approval, he said, because the OEEC is made up of representatives of countries in which the steel industries were in the cartel.

"Cartelization," he asserted, "is a kind of privately organized socialism."

U. S. Steel and Republic issued statements denying they were tied up with any international trade agreement.

SECURITIES & Exchange Commissioner Donald C. Cook reported that a study of 16 integrated steel companies showed that all but one — Bethlehem Steel, the second largest — have directors who are affiliated with consumers of steel and other big firms.

These connections of the other firms, including U. S. Steel and Republic, run from steel fabricating companies, coal firms and mines to banks and insurance companies, he said.

J. P. Morgan & Co., he continued, has 32 directors who also serve as directors of 40 industrial firms and 22 banks and insurance companies which have combined assets of $25.6 BILLION. He said "it's reasonable to assume" that this is the largest financial grouping in the world.

U. S. Steel had corridors jammed with axles, gears, nuts and bolts and similar fruits of its industry to impress the committee with its virtuosity.

Rep. Gross (R. Ia.) seriously questioned in the House the propriety of allowing the company to jam two corridors "with 15 satin-bedecked exhibits" until the third floor of the House office building "looked like a carnival."

"If this sort of thing is to be permitted," he observed tartly, "I trust there will be no complaints when farmers come in to testify if they fill the corridors with sacks of potatoes, crates of eggs, bales of cotton and perhaps a few live hogs and steers."

Louisville U. To Admit Negroes Next Fall

The University of Louisville, Ky., will admit Negroes to its graduate and professional schools in the fall, and to the entire university in September 1951, the trustees announced. The Municipal College, Negro branch of the University, will be closed this fall. The day before, three Louisville Catholic colleges decided to admit Negroes. A week before, Berea College, Berea, Ky., took similar action. Kentucky U. began admitting Negroes to its graduate and professional schools last year.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Philadelphia, the birth place of our country's freedom was the scene of another great event Saturday and Sunday, April 22-23. Steps were taken to create another great CIO union by setting up the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee - CIO.

As in June 1947, when the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee was established in Philadelphia, the same hotel, and room were used in setting up this new committee. At this conference of insurance and office workers, delegates from many places were in attendance, men who had been under the Communist yoke of the UOPWA long enough. And since the UOPWA has been expelled from the CIO for adhering to the Comiform and ignoring its obligations to the union members, these insurance and office workers are setting up this committee and are determined to build a strong trade union in the insurance and allied fields. The delegates attending were able to express themselves freely without being subject to control and restriction as was the case in the UOPWA.

Officers and an Executive Board were elected. The delegates requested that the writer be Chairman, Simon Helfgott, President of the Industrial Insurance Employees Union No. 1706-CIO, Vice-Chairman ,and Harold Ash, Secretary-Treasurer. The headquarters for the Commitee is in Philadelphia at 1105 Bankers Securities Building. There is also a large office in New York at Room 2405, 101 West 31st Street, New York, N. Y.

Because of its ideological connections the UOPWA failed miserably in the insurance and office workers field. The workers are opposed to regimentation. UOPWA has been rejected by the workers, who want, as do all true trade unionists, the freedom of expression, economic and social gains to improve their living standards.

The Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee-CIO will go forward and build a strong American trade union for the millions of white collar workers.

The concentration at the moment is in the insurance workers' field, and when operations are well under way, other white collar groups will be brought into the committee. At a later date a convention will be held at which time the workers will adopt rules and regulations to govern themselves. In the meantime, the Committee will be governed by a few simple rules determined by the executive board which is made up of officers and members of the local unions affiliated with the committee.

In elections in which the IUE has participated in former UE shops, the IUE-CIO has won bargaining rights for 51,240 workers, while the UE has won bargaining rights for only 3200 people. Up to this writing the IUE-CIO has won 36 out of 39 NLRB elections held in the month of April.

CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson reports that in a second NLRB election held at the Pratt and Letchworth Co. (Production), Buffalo, N. Y., the IUE-CIO was victorious by a vote of 320 to 115 for the discredited UE. Three voted no union.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE victories: Simond, Worden White Co., Dayton, O., IUE 104, no union 1, (UE withdrew); Standard Register Co., Dayton, O., IUE 365, no union 36; Packwood, St. Louis, Mo., IUE 7, UE 10; Easy Wash Machine Co., Syracuse, N. Y., IUE 1127, no union 105; Boston Electrical Co., Boston, Mass., IUE 79, no union 6, (UE withdrew); Dayton Scale, Dayton, O., IUE 190, no union 17; Local 768, Dayton Pump, Dayton, O., IUE 117, UE 89, no union 0; Presto Lock, Cliffton, N. J., IUE 308, no union 8.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender reports that UE Local 109 which has jurisdiction at the Bendix Freeze plant, Towson, Md., voted to disaffiliate from the UE and affiliate with the IUE-CIO, without a dissenting vote.

CIO Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports that the United Steelworkers of America won an NLRB representation election at the Machine Shop of the American Can Co., Newark, N. J., the results being: USA-CIO 421, Independent Union 255, IAM 44, challenged 27, no union 8.

Adolph Germer, Director of Organization, IWA-CIO, reports that in a representation election held at the White River Lumber Co. Enumclaw, Wash., the workers voted 425 to 135 in favor of the IWA-CIO over he AFL. There were 10 challenged and 3 neither votes.

CIO Natl. Rep. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election conducted by the Commissioner of Labor, Puerto Rico, among the sugar workers of the Alfredo Ramerez Co., Cabo Rojo, Puerto Rico, the workers voted 25 for the CGT-CIO to 21 for the communist-controlled UGT. The CGT-CIO sugar workers in the Aguadilla area have just completed the signing of a union shop, check-off contract with 12 large sugar cane farmers covering over 2500 workers. Manuel Ramero DeLeon, president of the CGT-CIO union, handled the negotiations. The sugar field workers at Naguabo, P. R., negotiated a contract with farm owners calling for the basic wage, union shop and check-off.

CIO Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl reports that the employes of the Botany Mills Lake Wales, Fla., in a representation election voted 42 for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO to 10 for no union and 4 for the AFL. This campaign was handled by Ruth Vaughn and Bette Wharton of the Amalgamated staff.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a consent election at the Frontier Refining Co., Cheyenne, Wyo., and the loading dock workers, the workers voted unanimously in favor of the Oil Workers Intl. Union, Local 574. Intl. Rep. George E. Jenkins was in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports in a representation election held at the Peerless Serum Co., Kansas City, Kan., the workers voted almost unanimously for the Packinghouse Workers. The organizational work was done by Dist. Dir. Ralph Baker of UPWA and Intl. Rep. Willard Murphy.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. Sylvester Graham reports that in a representation election held at the Intl. Natural Gas Div., Montana Power Co., Cut Bank, Mont., 21 workers voted for the Oil Workers Intl. Union-CIO, 6 for no union. Dist. Dir. B. J. Rickey handled this election.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports a victory for the Steelworkers in a representation election at the Walter Williams Steel Mfg. Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa., by a vote of 35 to 14. USA-CIO Rep. Thomas J. Cann was in charge.

Use of Franking Privileges to Aid Lobbies Is Flayed

TWO MEMBERS of Congress allowed the real estate lobby to use their free franking privileges in the distribution of four million pieces of propaganda, Leo C. Goodman, director of the Natl. CIO Housing Committee, told the House Lobby Investigating Committee on April 25.

He did not name them, but he displayed a copy of the CIO News for Feb. 28, 1949, which identified the pair as Rep. Ralph W. Gwinn (R. N.Y.), noisy reactionary and writer for Publisher Frank E. Gannett's Committee for Constitutional Govrnment, and Rep. Noah Mason (R. Ill.), like Gwinn a rabid foe of rent control. There appeared no disposition on the committee's part to explore his charge. Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R. Ind.) made the observation that Congress had never set a limit on use of the franking privilege.

Goodman pointed out that the free franking of four million copies of speeches against rent control, public housing and Federal aid to education, all of which are favored by the CIO, the rest of organized labor and practically all liberals, cost the taxpayers "tremendous sums of money" even though they were not printed at government expense.

GIVING THEM the Lowdown: Leo Goodman, director of the CIO Housing Committee, tells members of the House subcommittee on lobbying that two Congressmen allowed their franking privileges to be used by the real estate lobby for attacks on rent control. Here Goodman is showing a copy of the CIO News containing the story to Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) and Rep. Haskell (R. Ind.).

Goodman described how the CIO operates to secure passage of measures pending in Congress which it favors, such as the housing bill. He said he had helped draft legislation and write speeches for members of Congress, that the CIO had entertained Congressmen at dinner meetings, and that local union members were asked to write or wire their Congressmen. In addition, he told how the housing committee works at a CIO national convention and how its recommendations are acted upon.

HALLECK RECALLED that Herbert U. Nelson, $25,000-a year executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards — the man who believes that "democracy stinks"—had testified that the NAREB did not resort to political action, and asked Goodman about the CIO Political Action Committee.

The CIO-PAC does its best to bring the voting records of all members of Congress before the members of its unions, Goodman said.

When the hearing continued the following day Goodman charged that Nelson and the NAREB were in politics "up to their ears," and was granted time at a later date to prove it.

EARLIER Calvin K. Snyder, secretary of the NAREB's legislative wing, told the committee that 600 to 700 members of local real estate boards have been appointed to "keep in touch" with their congressmen in an effort to influence legislation. The legislative group asks the local board to suggest "some one who is familiar with" congressmen in the particular area, he said.

"It was suggested that this 'some one' should know his representative or senator well enough to offer the industry's side of the story to that member of Congress," he explained.

Snyder insisted repeatedly that there is no "super-real estate lobby." Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), committee chairman, had read a letter in which Nelson had written that 18 organizations, including the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, "usually are referred to as the real estate lobby."

Chrysler Strike End Up to Firm, UAW Says

THE CIO Auto Workers strike against the Chrysler Corp., now in its 14th week, continued as the 89,000 members of the auto union stood firm in their determination to win.

The company continued to attempt to confuse the issues by means of full-page newspaper advertisements in leading daily papers, complaining that UAW is "now pressing for many contract changes that have nothing to do with pension and insurance benefits" and expressing great concern over the welfare of "our employees."

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther said in Detroit that "the strike will continue until the Chrysler Corp. is willing to accept its responsibilities and agree to the reasonable proposals of the Chrysler workers."

He pointed out that the union's proposals are based upon necessary improvements in the working contract.

"UAW is asking Chrysler to agree only to contract provisions which have been agreed to by Chrysler competitors," he said.

"The Chrysler worers have a right to make progress in terms of improved working conditions and greater job security," Reuther continued. "Why does Chrysler continue to block settlement by its unwillingness to agree to contract provisions that are standard in the industry?"

Meanwhile, the UAW executive board voted to ask the union's 700,000 working members to continue $1 weekly strike contributions "for as long as necessary."

Election at GE Set for May 25

One hundred thousand General Electric employes will decide May 25 whether they wish to be represented by the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers or the discredited United Electrical Workers.

The election was ordered by the Natl. Labor Relations Board April 27 and shortly thereafter the date was fixed by NLRB's Baltimore Regional Director.

In an earlier representation election employes of the General Motors electrical division had chosen IUE, and balloting was being conducted at Westinghouse plants as the CIO News went to press.

T-H Hearings Delayed

Hearings in South Carolina and Georgia on the impact of the Taft-Hartley act on textile workers have been postponed, Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.) announced April 18. Cause of the postponement was the illness of Mrs. Murray, it was learned. Hearings were scheduled for April 20, 21 and 22 in Anderson, S. C., and Rome, Ga.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO

Strike Pix Snafu Stirs Germans

POLICE in Memphis, Tenn., made another of their regular contributions to "democracy" last week.

The beneficiaries were a couple of German labor leaders, visiting this country to study labor conditions and inspect democracy at work, who wanted to take a picture of the CIO Steelworkers' picket line at the American Snuff Co. plant.

Police Inspector Bruns McCarroll wouldn't let them.

"I got pretty hot," said J. D. Harris, national CIO field representative, who used to be a Memphis cop himself, "and asked McCarroll why they couldn't take pictures."

"Because they're — Germans and not American citizens," thundered McCarroll, one of Boss Crump's finest.

Later a member of the striking union asked the inspector the same question.—

"Because I said so!" McCarroll asserted.

The Germans sought to photograph scabs being herded into a company bus to be taken from the plant. The Germans, in a party of six visitors from Western Germany, were at a loss to understand why they could not use their cameras, Harris said, because a commercial photographer was taking pictures for the company.

The union had a run-in with police over taking pictures at the same plant in February, when officers confiscated exposed film and holder from Bob Christofferson, CIO publicity representative.

Christofferson and CIO Reg. Dir. Bill Crawford went to bat with Chief of Police Claude Armour, who finally returned the equipment with a pious statement that his men were trying to do their duty without partiality.

Vol. XIII | WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 8, 1950 | 82 | No. 19

A CIO News Exclusive:

The Landlords' Lobby That Didn't Exist

In this issue, the CIO News tells how the U. S. Congress was and is in grave danger of falling for the propaganda of a lobby that really doesn't exist — the "landlord" lobby, which is supposed to speak for the small owners of rental property.

It's a funny story, all right, but it has tremendously serious overtones.

Extension of rent control is perilously close to failure.

More than 9 million rental units are still under controls, yet only a tiny handful of landlords are complaining.

Act Now To Keep Your Present Rent

Rents of 30 million Americans will be increased if the real estate lobby succeeds in its campaign to prevent extension of rent control beyond June 30.

Why don't you write your senators and congressmen today, urging them to make a real fight for continued control of rents?

The average controlled rental is $33 a month. The average increase in that category, where controls have been lifted, has been between 50 and 60%. The housing shortage is still acute. These are the facts that Congress should remember. (See story on Page 12.)

Congressmen who are worried about whether they will be re-elected should also remember that the biggest, noisiest "landlord" lobby was the creature of the Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards and ceased to exist two years ago. They should bear this in mind when they hear tales about "small property owners demanding action." (See story on Page 7.)

"IT WAS A LONG HARD FIGHT, BUT WE WON!" said happy Chrysler strikers as they heard the news of the settlement of the 99-day-old strike over the loudspeaker of the sound truck of Local 7 of the CIO Auto Workers. The strike, second longest in the automotive industry, had idled 89,000 Chrysler workers since Jan. 25. The settlement carried a $100 monthly pension, including social security benefits, for workers 65 with 25 years' service. Hospital and medical benefits were also increased. (For details of the conclusion of the strike and terms of settlement, please turn to Page 3.)

IUE Swamps UE At Westinghouse

THE CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers will represent a minimum of 28,000 workers in plants of the Westinghouse Electric Co. as a result of Natl. Labor Relations Board elections which were tabulated last week.

The red-tinged United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, ousted from the CIO because of its devotion to the Communist Party line, will represent but 14,000 Westinghouse employes.

Still undetermined is the winner at the chain's biggest plant, at East Pittsburgh, Pa., where 5763 workers voted for IUE, 5663 for UE and 170 for "no union," and 147 votes were challenged. The NLRB is investigating the challenges, with the IUE-CIO confident of being declared winner when the probe is completed.

The election was held April 27. Its results mean that the IUE-CIO now has won collective bargaining representation elections for 101,071 workers, compared to about 18,000 workers in plants where the discredited UE scored victories. In addition, IUE-CIO contracts cover a total of 29,563 workers in plants where no elections were needed.

The IUE-CIO total is expected to swell further within the next few weeks as additional elections are held. The NLRB has ordered balloting to determine a bargaining representative for more than 100,000 General Electric Co. employes—last of the large chains—on May 25. In addition, it has directed a vote among nearly 7000 Radio Corp. of America employes in Camden, N. J., and Pulaski, Va., within 30 days of April 21. The exact date had not been set as this edition of the CIO News went to press.

THE NATIONWIDE Westinghouse election, for which the NLRB set up 51 separate collective bargaining units, showed the UE at its worst and most desperate. "Its tactics smacked strongly of Communist techniques, with their overload of lies, calumny slander—and the party line," IUE observers said.

In the campaign at East Pittsburgh, where both sides centered their major efforts, the UE broadcast nightly from a McKeesport radio station. Its first "commentator" was barred after he had been identified as a Communist. The second was Bill Moody, whose "news behind the news" was described as outright Communist propagands. Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers, who spoke on behalf of IUE-CIO at a rally in the ball park at Turtle Creek, where many of the workers live, identified Moody as "a Communist decoy duck" who once served on the publicity staff of Transport Workers Local 234 in Philadelphia.

"When the members found that out they dumped him fast," observed Quill.

The IUE-CIO also had a radio program. In addition it used spot announcements in the last few days and hired an airplane to fly slogans over the area. When UE propagandists saw it they hired one, too.

The IUE-CIO's big concluding rally at the Turtle Creek ball park was addressed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is chairman of the IUE-CIO Administrative Committee; Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, and Quill.

Throughout the campaign East Pittsburgh and Turtle Creek were overflowing with UE organizers, some of whom were sent from dis tant points by other left wing unions friendly to UE. The IUE-CIO had the assistance of representatives of other loyal CIO unions in the area, including many from the United Steelworkers.

THE GENERAL Electric election will be held in 57 plants in 14 states ranging from coast to coast, with 122 collective bargaining units.

Trains For Job

William Belanger, Jr. (above), 14-year-old son of Pres. William Belanger of the Massachusetts CIO Council, has been appointed to attend the Capitol Page School in Washington and to serve as a page in the House of Representatives.

Among them will be GE-operated atomic energy plants near Schenectady, N. Y. In these, the NLRB ruled, certification of any union chosen as bargaining representative for the employes will be conditioned upon compliance with the Atomic Energy Commission's security requirements for labor organizations and their officers. The AEC previously had barred the UE from these plants on the ground it could not comply with security requirements and that UE leaders had failed to deny Communist affiliations.

Five AFL unions, the American Federation of Labor itself and one unaffiliated union won places on ballots in various cities, in addition to the IUE-CIO and the UE. In the GE election order the NLRB rejected UE's attempt to prevent the IUE-CIO from using local union members. The vote was ordered held despite the UE's frantic efforts to block it on the ground that its contract was still in force.

The UE also tried to block the election ordered at the RCA plants in Camden and Pulaski and to deprive the IUE of the right to use local union designations, but the NLRB again ruled against it.

Old Cal. Council Loses Legal Bout

THE NATIONAL CIO won a major legal victory May 1 when Judge Theresa Meikle in San Francisco threw out of court the frantic efforts of the charterless left wingers to retain the bloodless skeleton of the old California Industrial Union Council.

The charter of the old council was revoked by CIO Pres. Philip Murray on Jan. 25 on recommendation of a trial board which found that it was "a notorious front organization of the Communist Party."

Judge Meikle in her ruling last week vacated the temporary injunction she had granted the old council on Jan. 30, rejected its request for a preliminary injunction, and sustained the CIO's demurrer in full by tossing the original complaint out of court.

"The application for preliminary injunction is denied," she wrote in her opinion, "on the grounds that plaintiff State Council has failed to exhaust the remedies afforded to it by the Constitution and Rules of the National CIO . . .

"By the internal rules of the CIO the plaintiffs could have, but did not, appeal the Jan. 25, 1950, findings of Pres. Murray to the CIO Executive Board which met on Feb. 14 and 15, 1950, and thereafter to the next Convention in 1950.

"Thus it failed to exhaust its internal remedies within the CIO before coming to court."

Judge Meikle's decision was hailed by Richard T. Leonard, National CIO representative and temporary administrator of the new CIO-California Industrial Union Council, as "a complete victory and vindication for CIO, and a total rejection of the campaign of abuse and slander engaged in by the anti-CIO officers of the defunct former council."

He pointed out also that the decision clears all possible legal restraints against the founding convention of the new council, which will be held June 3-5 in Long Beach, Cal. Already, he said, 258 local unions have affiliated with the new group.

THE INJUNCTION suit was brought by James Dougherty and Bjorne Halling, officers of the charterless council. It was directed against Murray, Leonard, Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; Tim Flynn and Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO regional directors in Northern and Southern California, respectively; and nearly a score of CIO local union officials who filed the original charges against the old council. The CIO legal victory was won by Jay A. Darwin, counsel for the National CIO.

Halling and Dougherty can appeal Judge Meikle's denial of the preliminary injunction and have 30 days to file an amended complaint because the original was thrown out of court.

New IUC Steps Up Drive For Western Farm Workers

THE CAMPAIGN to organize 10,000 workers in California and Arizona fruit and vegetable packingsheds into a strong CIO union has swung into high.

Richard T. Leonard, CIO national representative in charge of the campaign, is pressing the Natl. Labor Relations Board for an early decision on petitions for representation elections filed by the United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers Local Industrial Union No. 78.

The local was founded on the ashes of Local 78, Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, after that international union was expelled from the CIO on charges of Communist domination.

IT HAS OPENED offices in Salinas, El Centro and Watsonville, Calif., and Phoenix, Ariz. The CIO has asked the NLRB for representation elections in the Salinas-Watsonville area, where some 3000 migrant workers will be packing lettuce by the middle of the month; in the Imperial Valley of Southern California, and the Salt River Valley of Arizona.

The campaign was opened with a meeting at Watsonville at which Leonard said:

"We're in this fight to stay and we don't propose to enter the fray without the help necessary to start and to finish the job. Speaking for CIO, in making this commitment to you people in the packingsheds, we're going to keep it. We're going to stay with you until the job is completed—and the best barometer is going to be the help and cooperation each of us throws into the campaign."

The discredited FTA hasn't given up entirely. It tried to force a shop steward on the workers in one Salinas packingshed but they revolted, held their own election and picked a CIO member by a 41 to 5 vote. The FTA also tossed out the union shop and signed a contract with the Growers-Shippers Association, then tried to invoke the non-existent clause to force dues payments out of the workers.

All efforts of FTA to force dues collections, as well as its threats of sitdown strikes against CIO members in the sheds, have been defied successfully by workers in the Watsonville area, Leonard said.

LEONARD TOLD the Watsonville workers the CIO would help them combat such threats.

"We will give adequate protection to you people in your efforts to have a free, democratic union," he said. "We will help you solidify the gains you have made in membership and go on to build an organization that will better the wages and working conditions in the industry, and will not provide a front for people who are dupes of the Communist Party."

Regional Director Says:

Organizer, Faced with Disruption Of Home, Leaves CIO for UE

The decision of the CIO to use surgery on the Communist cancer within it has not been without its personal tragedies as well as its more commonplace highlights of outstanding devotion to the workers.

Among the few to whom it meant tragedy is Michael Clune, a member of the Transport Workers and for 10 years a CIO field representative working out of the Buffalo, N. Y., regional office under Regional Director Hugh Thompson.

Clune has been known for his "leftist viewpoint," according to a story in the Buffalo Evening News. But when the chips went down he professed loyalty to the National CIO so effectively that Thompson, under pressure to ask his resignation, did not do so.

The resignation was forthcoming anyway a couple of weeks ago. Now Clune, after trying to help the disintegrating United Electrical Workers win the Westinghouse election from the CIO International Union of Elctrical, Radio and Machine Workers, is reported headed for a job with the Office and Professional Workers in Buffalo. The last-named union, like the UE, was expelled from the CIO because it was more concerned with following the Communist Party line than CIO policies.

The tragedy in this situation is made clear in a statement Thompson made to Buffalo newspapers at the time of Clune's resignation.

"He (Clune) has been under observation for some time as to his sincerity in the labor movement," said Thompson, "because of the activities of his wife, Frances Clune, whom we have known for some time as a devout follower of every twist and turn of the Communist Party's crooked line.

"The National CIO, on several occasions, has asked me to request his resignation. On each of these occasions I discussed his resigning and in every instance he made promises to remain loyal to the CIO and now, after all these promises, his action of resignation can only be termed traitorous to the labor movement, his country and himself.

"I have had many personal discussions with Michael Clune concerning the activities of his wife. He has indicated in these discussions that the Communist Party and his wife had been putting tremendous pressure upon him, even to the threat of splitting his home. We have been giving him every opportunity to stand up against this pressure by retaining him on the CIO staff.

"We can only feel sorry for him as a man because he has failed to stand up against the pressures of the Communist Party and has now cast his lot with them, and stands exposed publicly as just another drone in the UE Communist Party machine. His resignation will not cause even a ripple in the CIO in the Buffalo area."

Murray To Congress:

CIO Is All Out For Plan No. 12

THE CIO's "unequivocal support" of President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 12 was made known last week to all members of the House and Senate in a letter from Pres. Philip Murray.

Reorganization Plan No. 12 would abolish the independent status of the general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board and give the board an administrative setup similar to those of other independent agencies. It would end dual authority and responsibility in the board's operations and make for a smoother, more efficient operation.

Murray emphasized that the CIO's support of the reorganization plan has nothing to do with its opposition to the present general counsel, Robert N. Denham. The text of his letter follows:

"WE SHOULD like to emphasize at the outset that CIO support of Reorganization Plan No. 12 is grounded on sound principles of government administration and not on its estimate of the personage chosen to fill the independent Office of General Counsel. It is common knowledge, of course, that the CIO vehemently opposes the incumbent, Mr. Robert N. Denham.

"This is because of his animus towards organized labor which is reflected in the record of his vicious anti-labor administration of the vast dictatorial powers vested in the office of General Counsel by the Taft-Hartley Act. Indeed the CIO on several occasions has urged the removal of Mr. Denham from office.

"However, the CIO's objections to this independent office are separate from and in addition to its opposition to the person of Mr. Denham.

"For over two years, bona-fide collective bargaining between employers and unions has been seriously impeded by the dual administrative structure imposed by the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947.

"Both management and labor have been subjected to conflicting rulings and chaotic uncertainty. Internal strife in the administration of the Act has interfered with the legitimate growth of unions and the development of sound contractural relationships with employers.

"EVEN THE staunchest adherents of the Taft-Hartley philosophy have come to recognize that such dual administration is unworkable. As a result, the Taft Bill containing several amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act, which passed the Senate last year, provided for the abolition of the General Counsel's office.

"The dual administrative structure which makes of the General Counsel's office an autonomous and separate entity has enabled a single individual to exercise unparalleled, unbridled administrative power. As it has worked out in practice the office of the General Counsel has used its vast arbitrary powers in a continuing crusade against unions and to make the Taft-Hartley Act even more oppressive than its literal provisions.

"This was inevitable when the office of the General Counsel was created as a separate entity. Differences between the General Counsel and the Board as to the Board's jurisdiction have had the effect of extending the application of the Taft-Hartley Act in so far as sanctions against unions are concerned, but have restricted the representation features of the statute.

"The dual administrative structure has destroyed the National Labor Relations Board as a cohesive body, and has reduced its prestige and general importance to that of the lowest of any federal labor agency. On the other hand, the office of the General Counsel, fundamentally a prosecutive and investigative office, has been invested with a monopoly of effective power in the administration of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"The time has come to end this administrative monstrosity."

Denham Yearns For Good Old 'Daze'

NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham heaved a nostalgic sigh at Old Point Comfort, Va., the other night and told the Eastern Seaboard Conference of Graphic Arts Industries that the independence of American youth is being "threatened" by a "gimme" era.

"The familiar bond of loyalty between employer and employe," he sighed wistfully, "which made for a degree of contentment and a sense of stabilized security" (for the employer, Mr. D.?) "seems to have been replaced by an ingrained state of 'gimme.' More and more the demand is for something for nothing."

Denham, many people agree, is always willing to give a union anything—so long as it's in the neck.

99-Day Chrysler Strike Ends; UAW Wins Pension Demands

THE 89,000 CIO Auto Worker members who "stuck it out" in a 99-day struggle with the Chrysler Corp. were back on the job this week with a "victory over the blind selfishness of the company."

Following ratification of the contract by the membership of the 22 Chrysler locals, the workers went back with their demands met for a $100 monthly pension, backed by a jointly administered trust fund.

According to UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, the union got benefits which equalled the 10c-an-hour package it asked when the strike was called Jan. 25.

In making the announcement of the end of the automotive industry's second longest strike—longest was GM walkout of 113 days in 1945-46 — Reuther congratulated the workers on their determination and solidarity.

"We salute the Chrysler workers on their victory over the blind selfishness of the Chrysler Corporation," he said. "Their solidarity compelled the giant company to retreat from its fixed and arbitrary position and to abandon its 3½c pension and insurance proposal and in the end agree to meet fully the 10c proposal of the union.

"It is most unfortunate that Chrysler workers and their families were forced by the company to undergo a long and costly strike before winning their reasonable and just demands."

Here's what the Chrysler workers won:

1 Pensions of $100 a month, including social security, for those 65 years old with 25 years service. The pensions will be backed by a financially sound trust fund to be administered jointly by the union and the company.

2 A medical-hospital and insurance program with broader coverage and greater benefits, amounting to approximately 3c an hour.

3 A 3c per hour wage increase for thousands of workers in Kokomo, New Castle and Evansville, Ind., which reduces the differential between these and Chrysler's Detroit plants.

4 Five cents an hour wage increase for 45 job classifications.

5 Increase in vacation pay of $31.10 a year for workers with three to five years service.

Also won were strengthened grievance procedure, improved seniority provisions and greater job security.

The strike had closed down all manufacture of Chrysler, DeSoto, Dodge and Plymouth cars and trucks with a resulting loss to the company, its dealers and supplier firms of an estimated $1 billion.

UAW officials figure it will cost the company $86 million to fund past service credits for time already worked by employes eligible to retire.

The company agreed to permit its hourly paid workers to remain on the job until they are 68, rather than retire at age 65 as originally proposed.

Reuther termed the strike "more than a fight for pension, hospital-medical and insurance benefits." "This strike," he said, "was part of a great human crusade to build a better tomorrow and a better world—a world in which we and our children can have a little more of the good things of life. It is to the eternal honor and credit of the Chrysler workers that they had the courage and will to stand up and fight for justice and fair play despite the tremendous odds and sacrifices involved in this struggle."

Textile Union Aids Chrysler Strikers

The CIO Textile Workers executive board announced last week that the union had given $25,000 to the Chrysler strike fund for the CIO Auto Workers. TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said, "The fight being made by the auto workers against the giant Chrysler Corp., concerns all labor." The gift was announced several days prior to the settlement.

Chicago Site Of CIO Conclave

The 12th constitutional convention of the CIO will be held Nov. 20-24 at the Palmer House in Chicago, CIO officials announced last week.

The pre-convention meeting of the Executive Board will be held in Chicago a week earlier, probably on Nov. 15.

Union Groups Merge In Italy

The two chief anti-Communist union federations in Italy, and part of a third have merged to become the Italian Confederation of Labor Syndicates, with an initial membership of about 1,600,000. Those that merged were the Free Italian Confederation of Labor, the Federation of Italian Labor, and part of the Union of Autonomous Italian Workers Federations.

The first is predominantly Catholic-led. The second is largely Socialist, and the third is a group of non-political and non-religious unions.

Bell Gets Down to Bargaining So CWA Postpones Walkout

THE CIO Communications Workers indefinitely postponed a strike against the Bell Telephone System when the company abruptly reversed its stalling tactics and began to engage in genuine collective bargaining.

The postponement was announced from CWA headquarters in Washington following dispatch of a telegram from Pres. Joseph Beirne to all divisions advising them that "recent developments indicate possibility of agreement in present Bell System dispute.'

Reversal of Bell's position that there would be no contract concessions in 1950 saw bargaining stepped up in all parts of the country. CWA spokesmen indicated that the possibility of a strike this year appeared to be fading with the company's change of attitude.

Reports implied that the chief concessions won by the union involved two major demands—decisive shortening of wage schedules and upward classifications of towns.

Application of new schedules, town reclassifications and some job reclassifications is expected to bring immediate increases in wages to a majority of telephone workers.

It appeared likely that Western Electric Co. workers would be in line for equivalent concessions.

The company was reported to be yielding in some areas on its traditional opposition to all forms of union security. While varying results were anticipated on this proposal, it was expected that clauses requiring maintenance of union dues will be won in several instances.

Although general wage increases and the shorter work week were not won in 1950, CWA leaders said the fight to establish them will be waged without letup.

He Really Did Big PAC Job

A TERRIFIC one-man campaign by a member of the CIO Oil Workers has been credited with pushing the registration of voters in Kern County, Calif., to the highest point ever recorded.

The man who is believed to have set a new record in PAC activity is W. A. Johnson, member of Kern River Local 19.

The accomplishment: Registration of a total of 2349 voters in less than two months.

Johnson's record was established outside the big metropolitan areas in California—which means he had to go out and look for registrations, rather than sit on a street corner or in large gatherings and wait for them to come to him.

More than 90 percent of citizens registered were affiliated with the Democratic Party.

Corporations' Liquid Assets Of $40 Billion Greatest Ever

U. S. corporations last year showed an increase of $2.9 billion over 1948 in liquid assets but that doesn't necessarily mean that they were all in the milk business.

It does indicate, however, according to a Securities & Exchange Commission report, that the net working capital of all corporations in the country hit a new high during 1949 with a total of $67.7 billion in liquid wealth.

For a long time, giant corporations have resisted efforts of labor unions to secure wage raises for their members on the grounds that large sums had to be set aside for "plant expansion" and "technological improvements."

But by the end of 1949 the corporations had put away a neat $40 billion in cash and U. S. government securities — presumably against the prospect of a rainy day in the future, or even a series of them. The remainder of the $67.7 billion went for dividends and plant expansion.

THE $40 billion figure is over and above any sum used for expansion or plant equipment, the report says. This is the largest amount ever held in liquid assets by U. S. corporations.

Anguished howls were expected from the direction of hungry stockholders at the revelation of the huge melon from which they had been denied slices.

The report states that since 1942, a period of seven years, corporations have increased their working capital by $31.4 billion. Part of the increase in liquid wealth came from a reduction in taxes owed to the government and to state and local authorities.

In other words, the liquid position of U. S. corporations as a whole was such that they held 72c in the bank or in government securities for every $1 of their current liabilities.

Among manufacturing corporations, the ratio was even higher—they actually held more than $1 in cash or federal notes for every dollar of liability.

In 1948, the ratio for all corporations was 61c of cash and government securities to each $1 of current liabilities. Before the war, the ratio was only about 45c.

Socialized Medicine May Be Bad, But—

It Has Nothing To Do With National Health Insurance, Designed To Finance Good Health Services For Everybody

By ALLAN L. SWIM

POLITICAL candidates in some parts of the country have already begun making a campaign issue of "socialized medicine."

Those seeking to capitalize on the issue are going through some strange, contorted reasoning. Their argument goes something like this:

A person who is dissatisfied with present health services and believes national health insurance should be provided is an advocate of "socialized medicine." "Socialized medicine" is state medicine—and anybody who believes state medicine is desirable must certainly be a Communist or at least friendly to Communism.

Communists are enemies of democracy and, consequently, an advocate of health insurance is an enemy of the "American system."

The only thing wrong with such reasoning is that it's completely false!

OPPOSITION to "socialized" or state-controlled medicine for the United States has been expressed in this column on a number of occasions.

This opposition represents general CIO policy on the subject.

But this column has frequently lauded the idea of national health insurance.

This represents no contradiction—although the American Medical Association would have you believe otherwise.

The AMA has hung a phony tag on health insurance and is conducting a costly propaganda campaign in an effort to convince the people that two entirely different things are the same thing.

Doctors who support the AMA in this campaign and condone its underhanded tactics should be throughly ashamed of themselves.

They're reflecting no credit upon themselves as individuals or upon their profession.

LET'S TAKE A good look at the health situation and see if we can determine what prompted the AMA to shoot off such large quantities of propaganda fireworks.

Back before the war a number of persons became concerned about the state of the nation's health and the inability of many of our people to obtain adequate medical and hospital services.

Their advocacy of some form of government health insurance didn't attract a lot of attention.

Then, with the drafting of millions of men for the armed forces, the nation got a great shock.

The male citizens of the "healthiest nation on earth" turned out to be far from the prized physical specimens many had thought them to be.

The number rejected because of disabilities was appalling.

This, plus sharp increases in the cost of health services, revived and increased the demand that "something be done" about the situation.

THE AMA, SENSING the revived interest, embarked on a campaign designed to scare the public into opposition to national health insurance.

The AMA drive has made real headway among those who have never taken the trouble to find out what health insurance actually is.

And there's considerable evidence that many doctors fall into this category. They read in their own Journal that health insurance is "socialized medicine" and that is that!

So, at the twist of a bandage or stab of a hypodermic needle they'll tell their patients that a national insurance plan would lead us down the road to "state" medicine and to disintegration of the medical profession.

Socialized medicine is government controlled and government administered. It does not allow patients free choice of doctors and denies doctors the right to reject undesirable patients.

National health insurance would merely provide the people with a "pay as you go" plan under which they could finance medical care. The present right to choose doctors and patients wouldn't be disturbed.

And there's a great difference between the two!

If the people of the nation want better health services they should make a real effort to get an honest presentation of the facts relating to national health insurance.

They shouldn't be content with slogans and phony tags. They shouldn't be content with the word of the zealots on either side of the fence who make outlandish claims.

They should get the facts—the hard, cold facts—and then act according to their own best judgment.

LOBBY PROBE

We hope the House committee investigating lobbying activities will dig down deep into the meat of the cocoanut and won't be content with merely tapping the shell.

There are many things the public wants—and needs—to know about the men and women who are paid to influence Congress.

The techniques used by lobbyists have been well known for a long time. Probing these techniques is unlikely to bring out anything startlingly new.

After all, lobbying is legal and legitimate—and the "smart boys" on Capitol Hill operate within the law.

But there are many things about the lobbies that should be aired.

The public knows—or can find out without difficulty—what the CIO, AFL and many other organizations are doing in the lobbying field and why they're doing it. Such organizations announce what they're for and against and usually seek the widest possible publicity on their programs.

The same thing isn't true of other groups. They operate quietly behind the scenes and many of them have some strange tie-ups.

It would be interesting, for example, to learn exactly what's behind the lobbying designed to gain U. S. recognition for Dictator Franco of Spain.

We think the public would be interested in the manner in which some business lobbyists cooperate with each other and we'd like to see a full explanation of the work of such outfits as the Committee for Constitutional Government.

The House committee conducting the current probe has an opportunity to do a real job, but it can't be done without a lot of deep probing.

MUST NOT BE KILLED

A group of men and women—many of them wealthy and politically powerful—are now engaged in a fast-moving campaign which, if successful, would result in a sudden cost-of-living increase for many Americans this summer.

This group wants to prevent the extension of rent control after the present law expires June 30.

The real estate lobby is offering all types of arguments for permitting rents to again become "free."

The condition of the nation's housing, however, shows that a great burden would be placed on many persons if rents were permitted to shoot suddenly upward this summer.

All you have to do to get a good idea of what would happen would be to study the record of increases in areas that have already been decontrolled.

There's one group in Washington which should be told immediately and in no uncertain terms how the "average citizen" feels about rent control.

This group is made up of our lawmakers, the only persons who can extend rent control.

Why don't you sit down right now and write to your senators and congressman, telling them how you feel about the situation?

Most of them are listening carefully right now to the "voices from back home," simply because this is an election year.

Appleknocker Byrd Pays--But Not Much

HARRY F. BYRD, Virginia's senior U. S. Senator. one of the most outspoken advocates of economy in the national Government, is one individual who practices what he preaches.

Byrd apparently believes in putting his economic theories into practice in a manner calculated to do him the most good, according to a recent story in a Washington, D. C., newspaper. The article says he pays 250 men who work in his 2600-acre Virginia apple orchards, the magnificent sum of 55c an hour for daylight work. If they work all night, the "Apple King" throws in a $1 bonus.

The story, entitled "Byrd Keeps Smudge Pot Vigil To Save Apples," told of the heroic efforts of Byrd, his two sons and the 250 workers to keep Jack Frost from doing a job on the apples during a recent cold snap.

IN NUMEROUS speeches on the Senate floor, Byrd has charged that the present administration is "spending" the country into another depression.

(If things should turn out that way, presumably the Old Dominion Senator could be prevailed upon to furnish the unemployed with a means of keeping the wolf from the door by supplying them with "Byrd Apples" to sell on street corners—at the right price to him, of course.)

According to the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Byrd is the biggest apple producer in the country. Washington State's production is about 2½ times that of Virginia, but the Evergreen State apparently has no individual to compare with Byrd either as an apple grower or in other respects.

It takes 15 years to grow a top grade bearing apple tree, the Senator says.

Sometimes it takes longer than that to develop into a top grade representative of the people of this country.

Proposed Loan To Argentina Protested

STRONG OPPOSITION of the CIO to the proposed $125 million Import-Export Bank loan to the Argentine Government was registered May 3 by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Affairs and Latin-American Affairs Committees, in a letter to Assistant Secy. of State Edward C. Miller.

The net result of such a loan would be to strengthen the totalitarian grip of the Peron government on the people, said Potofsky, who also is president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

"Millions of freedom-loving Americans inside and outside the CIO feel strongly that by such favors to Peron, we are jeopardizing our moral leadership among the democratic nations and thus depriving the peoples of the world of one of their dearest hopes for a better future," he said.

"It is, perhaps, superfluous at this date to point out that the Peron dictatorship is opposed to everything we cherish. It has made and still makes a mockery of the four freedoms and is steadily violating the charter of the United Nations.

"Spokesmen of the opposition are hunted and persecuted and forced to leave the country. Leaders of free labor are crushed, imprisoned or banished for no other reasons but their love of freedom; and free labor, itself, fights an unequal struggle against the final aim of the Peron government to destroy free unions. Ironically, this proposed loan from our great democracy will help to tighten the iron grip of Peron upon the people of Argentina.

"During the last war, Peron was on the side of the Nazi-Fascist axis. During and after the war, Peron and his companions have peddled their brand of Fascism and anti-Americanism throughout the Hemisphere. Today, they cooperate closely with the military juntas in Peru and Venezuela which they have helped at least spiritually to bring into existence.

"I respectfully submit: What reason is there in morals, in honor, in democratic principles, in sound economics, for espousing a loan to a regime which is so openly opposed to our aims of peaceful inter-American cooperation?

"Such a loan would inevitably be construed as a compromise of democratic principles and appeasement of dictatorships. Totalitarianism, whether of the left or right, must be fought to the end—not strengthened."

Situation Tough--Organizer Buys A Gun

THIS IS A STORY about a CIO organizer who got into a tough spot and solved his problem by buying a gun.

He had no intention of shooting anybody or even of threatening them.

He didn't get a pistol or a revolver—simply because he figured a rifle would get the job done better.

Some of his colleagues thought his actions were completely screwy, but they made no effort to stop him.

And he got the last laugh on those who were critical of his scheme.

THE ORGANIZER, whom we shall call Mike, had built up a very good reputation as a "contact man."

He had the knack of going into a strange community and in short order obtaining the names and addresses of plant workers who might be interested in unionism.

He always went on the theory that "you gotta make some good contacts with the guys" before you really open an organizing drive.

Nobody quite understood how he was able to get so many names in such short periods—but they liked to have him around at the opening of a campaign.

That's why he was given a certain assignment in the Mid-West a year or so ago.

MIKE ARRIVED in town, was given the lay of the land by the organizer in charge of the project and was told that his first job would be to "get a lot of good contacts."

Mike went to work as usual but it became obvious within a few days that he wasn't meeting with the usual success.

He didn't turn in a long list of names and addresses, but he said, "I'll get 'em for you in a couple of days."

But he didn't.

When Mike faced a tough problem he would sit down by himself and ponder the situation—and on this occasion he did a lot of pondering.

It wasn't only that his job was important to the drive; his reputation was at stake.

"Well, I've finally got it figured out," said Mike after his first pondering session.

"A lot of the fellows at the plant hang out at ..... Tavern. I'm going out and make friends with the fellow who runs the place and in a few days I'll have all the names I need."

MIKE DID WHAT he said he would but his plan didn't bring any real results.

"This is really a funny situation," Mike reported. "I didn't have any trouble getting next to the guy who runs the tavern and I think he wants to help us out.

"But, darn it, he's sure a stupid guy. He just knows the plant workers as Joe or George or Harry—doesn't know their last names or where they live."

Mike shook his head sadly, then said, "Well, I guess I better sit down and do some real hard figurin'. We can't get started until I get some names."

And so Mike went off by himself to ponder some more.

MIKE WAS A smiling optimist the next day when he made a report on his "thinking session."

"Well, I really got it figured out this time!" he declared. "I'm going to get those names in a hurry."

"How you going to do it?" he was asked.

"I'm going to buy a gun!" he said.

"You can't do that—and, besides, what good would it do?" he was asked.

"Oh, I'm not going to buy a gat. I'm going to get a good rifle and raffle it off at the tavern.

"Every fellow who takes a chance will have to fill out a slip giving his name and address and where he works."

Mike probably doesn't remember who won the rifle but he recalls—pleasantly—that the scheme saved his reputation as a "contact man."

Newsman Quits Beaverbrook Paper Over Smear Story

WHEN THE Beaverbrook newspapers in London, England, launched a vicious smear attack on John Strachey, Great Britain's new secretary of state for war, they paid heavily.

The attack, which sought to link Strachey with Dr. Philip Fuchs, the atom bomb spy, cost the country's most powerful publisher the services of one of his best men, James Cameron, for five years chief roving correspondent of the London Daily Express.

Cameron resigned his job in professional objection to Lord Beaverbrook's misuse of the free press to pillory Strachey, who has had a checkered political career and has not always opposed Communism. However, his name was not even mentioned in Fuch's trial. But after his conviction the first edition of the London Evening Standard, Beaverbrook's other London publication. carried a banner headline:

Fuchs Purge: Strachey Faces Personal Crisis

The head in the next edition was even worse:

Fuchs and Strachey: A Great New Crisis

Cameron explained his position in a letter to the London Times. Among other things he said:

"My difference with the Standard-Express over the Strachey business was a professional objection; if the Herald had used the same tactics on Woolton or Churchill, I should have objected just as strongly, and on exactly the same grounds.

"I think newspapers have every right to examine, question, and if necessary expose any defection of loyalty in cabinet ministers; I just don't agree that they are entitled to associate them with highly-topical and recently convicted traitors in a palpably malicious innuendo.

"AS FAR AS I am concerned that is that; my affair was more widely remarked than I expected; and the thing is over, until the next time.

"Far more important than my personal attitude is the future attitude of our whole trade to these situations.

"I have no idea what happened in the Standard; I suppose that the Strachey lead was handled in some way by fellow members. Even if the actual operation was undertaken at a higher level it was surely difficult for anyone within range to dodge some of the droppings from those page one heads.

"I would with deference suggest that while we accept these sanctions on our jobs and until we protest when need be with what authority we have, we have no real right to regard ourselves as professional men and women.

"As far as I can see, there just isn't any other way of making this craft an occupation worth working in."

Ernest Jay, a former president of the National Union of Journalists, British reporters' labor organization, in a letter to the New York Times declared that Cameron had rendered a service both to the profession and to all newspapermen.

HE POINTED OUT that the union has tried for years to obtain recognition of the right of its members to maintain "the highest standards of decency in journalism," and that it has been "thwarted by the indifference of a section of newspaper proprietors who . . . prefer the role of 'power without responsibility'." He continued:

"We have done much in our one-sided efforts to improve standards, but our aims cannot be fully attained until all concerned in newspaper production are conscious that the dissemination of news is a public duty of the highest importance to our democratic way of life.

"It may be that more journalists will have to make the same sort of sacrifice as Mr. Cameron has done before this essential, long overdue acceptance of public service is fully recognized.

"He is but the latest of many fine journalists who have taken such a stand, and it is well that the public should be aware of the efforts being made by men with a social conscience on this matter."

An Ironic Touch

According to the Guild Reporter, official publication of the CIO Newspaper Guild, there is an ironic touch to the Beaverbrook headlines and Cameron's resignation. The Guild Reporter points out that when the Royal Commission of the Press investigated British journalism last year Herbert Gunn, editor of the Evening Standard, set a pretty high standard of "headline ethics" for his newspaper. He said:

"Above everything watch carefully that headlines do not give false impressions. This is our practice and our aim at all times."

The Journalist, the NUJ publication, commented:

"Many journalists were enraged by this introduction of the lowest trans-Atlantic smear technique."

Rieve To TWUA Convention:

'We Have Fought Our Enemies To A Standstill'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

IN 1946 the inflationary boom started to roll, and in 1948-49 it ended with a thud for thousands of textile workers.

The results haven't been pleasant for the million men and women of the textile industry. Thousands of them found their jobs had disappeared. Companies shut down—for good.

Hopes for wage increases and other improvements had to be put back on the shelf.

And then there was Taft-Hartley.

Employer spokesmen and reactionary politicians proclaimed it as a law of justice—but in the Southern mill towns where the Textile Workers Union had started its biggest organizing drive, Taft-Hartley was a tailor-made club for use by anti-union corporations.

Organizing progress slowed down. Strikes dragged on and on.

BUT THE textile union dug its heels into the ground.

At its sixth biennial convention in Boston last week, there was a feeling that the worst was over—that during the next two years the TWUA would once again be rolling on to new advances.

As Pres. Emil Rieve put it to the 1900 delegates in the cavernous Mechanics Building auditorium in Boston:

"I have no apologies to offer for the record of our union over the last two years. We were faced with the strongest and most violent opposition in our history.

"We have fought our enemies to a standstill. They have done their worst—and they have failed.

"Thanks to your loyalty, and that of all our members, we have held the fort—and now we are striking back."

WHAT HAPPENED in textile was no great surprise. The textile union, as well as most other unions, had warned that the orgy of profiteering that followed the end of OPA would end in trouble for industry and workers.

Five-dollar shirts piled up in stores, and textile mills slowed down.

"By mid-1949, 250,000 textile workers were jobless and most of the million still employed were on short time—often as little as two or three days a week," TWUA officers noted in their report.

"Since our last convention, 139 mills employing 32,000 workers have been completely liquidated."

DURING THE LAST two years, Rieve reported, the TWUA conducted 119 strikes, involving about 23,000 workers. TWUA won 98; it lost 17; four are still in process.

"Yet these few strikes cost our union more than three-quarters of a million dollars from the international union's treasury—not counting the thousands of dollars spent by joint boards and local unions.

"Strange as it may seem to Senator Taft, there are employers who do not want to bargain with us even after the workers have overcome all the obstacles of the Taft-Hartley Act in order to join the union.

"The Southern mill-owners have joined in a widespread conspiracy to prevent the development of peaceful collective bargaining in that area. This conspiracy was aimed, not only at preventing new organization, but also at destroying those unions already in existence."

What's to be done about it?

To the textile union, its officers and the speakers who came befor the convenion, the answers all point to political action.

Rieve, looking back over these last two difficult years, put it this way:

"Political action for our union is like breathing; if we stop, we're finished. I know you're not ready to stop breathing just yet."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, given a tremendous ovation when he reached the platform, agreed that 1950 is "another political year, a year of destiny."

"Is it just enough for me to say to you here this morning that a Congressman must be elected in every Congressional district? No.

"When you elect a Congressman, you are electing a man who will vote either for the continuation of the Taft-Hartley Act, or for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"You will be voting for a Congressman who will give the people the opportunity to secure either improved social security for all of the people throughout the United States, or he will be against it.

"When you vote for a Congressman this fall, you will be voting upon this great issue of unemployment—the question of what the Congress intends to do to alleviate the aches and the pains and the miseries and the starvation and the death that trails in the wake of widespread unemployment."

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers saw the CIO proposals for labor unity as a means toward more effective political action.

Pointing to the defeat of liberal Sen. Pepper in the Florida Democratic primaries, Potofsky declared:

"What has happened in Florida must not happen anywhere else. We must combine in order to lick our enemy."

CENTER OF CONTEST: Rival candidates for executive vice-president of big Textile Workers Union were all smiles as they shook hands with Pres. Emil Rieve—but union election campaign was plenty warm. At left, Mariano S. Bishop, New Bedford, Mass., who was supported by Rieve; at right George Baldanzi, Paterson, N. J., who was re-elected by a vote of 1,038 to 742 cast after a four-hour floor discussion of the election issues.

TWUA Asks CIO To Probe ECA

The textile convention has called for an investigation of the Economic Cooperation Administration to determine whether labor is getting sufficient recognition in the agency's staff.

The resolution said "we have been disturbed by reports which indicate that the labor movements abroad have little or no participation in the administration of Marshall Plan aid in their own countries."

It mentioned reports "that there is little reflection of labor thinking in the application of such aid, that a spirited labor point of view is lacking in the administration of ECA, and that the danger exists of labor representatives gradually becoming more adjuncts of the State Dept."

The resolution recommended that CIO Pres. Murray appoint a CIO committee to get the true facts on labor's status in ECA.

"If the aforementioned reports are correct, that the CIO make formal representations for forthright labor participation in policy and administration of ECA and for the more widespread reflection of labor thinking in ECA policy."

Workers Worry Over Textile Imports Despite ECA Assurance

WITH unemployment affecting dozens of mill towns, textile workers are showing worry about imports of textile products from other nations.

As Pres. Rieve told the Textile Workers Union convention, "We want the people of other countries to win a high standard of living—but not at the cost of lower standards in America."

Rieve suggested that international trade in some consumers goods does more harm—in terms of industrial displacements and unemployment—than it does good.

But Paul Hoffman, administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration, who was a guest speaker, voiced disagreement with Rieve's ideas.

Noting that imports of textile goods to this country have so far been a small percentage of American production, Hoffman added:

"It seems clears to me that we can't meet the problem of unemployment in the textile industry in the United States by cutting off this modest—this infinitestimal—volume of imports from western Europe."

"The way to solve unemployment in the textile industry—or again, in any industry—is to expand our domestic consumption and increase our exports," Hoffman said.

Textile union leaders don't disagree with that argument—but they point out that they also don't see textile unemployment falling very fast.

The convention passed a resolution opposing any cut in textile tariffs and urging the United Nations to set up international codes of fair-labor practices, including minimum wages and a 40-hour week for textile workers everywhere.

A U. S. investigation was also asked by the union to study conditions in the Japanese textile industry.

Baldanzi Re-elected

GEORGE Baldanzi was re-elected executive vice president of the Textile Workers, a post he has held since 1939. He defeated Mariano S. Bishop of Fall River, Mass., by a vote of 1038 to 742.

Bishop was supported in his campaign by Pres. Emil Rieve and Secy.-Treas. William S. Pollock, both of whom were re-eected without opposition.

Differences between Rieve and Baldanzi have been brewing for several months, but it was only a few days before the convention that the union president announced he was supporting Bishop, who has been the union's cotton and rayon division director.

The issues were given a thorough airing during the course of a four-hour convention debate, which was hailed by leaders of both groups as a demonstration of union democracy in action.

Rieve, during the course of an emotion-charged speech, revealed that he had come to the reluctant conclusion some months ago that he could no longer work "organizationally" with Baldanzi.

Talking of problems among the union's leadership group, Rieve charged that "one wheel of that team has fallen away, and I want to replace that dead wheel with somebody else."

Rieve and other speakers supporting Bishop maintained that Baldanzi had made cooperation difficult. A number of internal organizational problems were referred to during the course of the debate.

Baldanzi, in reply, denied the various specific complaints, and predicted that if re-elected he would have no trouble working with Rieve and other officers—"absolutely none."

He charged that he was the victim of a "plot" to achieve unity through his political "extermination," and said that much of the problem arises from the hazy outlining of functions of the executive vice-president's post in the union's constitution.

Baldanzi said he was agreeable to a new constitutional provision providing that in event of the president's death, the executive vice-president would not automatically succeed to the top post, but he and Rieve disagree as to how a successor should be chosen.

Baldanzi To Quit As Drive Leader

George Baldanzi told the Textile Workers union convention that, win or lose in his campaign for re-election as TWUA executive vice-president, he will leave his other post as director of the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive.

Baldanzi was named to the CIO post last year to succeed the late Van A. Bittner.

It's Only Decent To Bury Landlord Lobby, Dead 2 Years

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THIS IS the inside story of how the National Association of Real Estate Boards, an organization with a total membership of 33,000 wealthy real estate operators, built a sucker trap for Congress and baited it with votes it didn't have.

So successful was its propaganda that although this particular trap never was really powerful and has been abandoned, a great many members of Congress still believe it's there and are scared of those "millions of votes" that don't exist and never did.

We can't reveal how we got this story, much as we'd like to. But here it is:

Back in 1945, the NAREB, headed by Herbert U. ("democracy stinks") Nelson, decided to get itself a popular front in order to influence legislation.

It set up, under District of Columbia charter, a three-part "National Real Estate Foundation," one of whose parts was the National Home and Property Owners' Foundation. (NHPOF.)

The NHPOF was supposed to enlist millions of small property owners into an organization which would effectively wield legislative power. NAREB would remain strictly in the background, publicly taking a position of independent concurrence in the "spontaneous" recommendations and demands of its front.

AS NELSON himself put it, "There are only 33,000 of us (in NAREB) and so we can't influence Congress. What we need is an organization that can speak for millions of voters."

So with due pomp and circumstance, NHPOF came into being.

NAREB wouldn't entrust anything to chance, though. The NHPOF organizational set-up was rigidly controlled by a handpicked board of trustees.

(In this decision NAREB was guided by the recommendations of a Chicago firm which had been retained as far back as 1931 to map out such a project for NAREB. The 1931 recommendation pointed out the "danger that an executive committee might be elected whose ideas would not harmonize with those of the parent body.")

Only trustees could elect new trustees, so control was simple enough.

HAVING carefully made sure that the grass roots members, if any, would have no voice in the affairs of the new organization which was to speak for them, the NAREB then turned its creature loose with instructions to put on a whirlwind membership campaign.

The obedient NHPOF trustees met in October, 1945, in an atmosphere of optimism and enthusiasm. They set a financial goal of $5 million and a membership goal of two million, and projected 25,000 branch offices throughout the U. S.

They hired a $500-a-month mansion at 1773 Massachusetts Ave., in Washington.

They elected Arthur W. Binns, a large-scale Philadelphia real estate operator and NAREB stalwart, as president, and instructed him to get the moral (and financial) support of as many trade organizations as possible for the "spontaneous" movement.

Out came a flood of literature:

"To speak as the unified voice of the 27 million home and property owners of America . . ."

"To foster, maintain and protect the private ownership of homes, farms and other property . . ."

"To fulfill the long and deep-felt need for a research and educational institution serving all property owners . . ."

"A primary aim will be assistance to the 25 million small property owners now totally unorganized on a national scale . . ."

TWO YEARS later, the ONLY trade association to officially back NHPOF was guess who—the NAREB.

"You are the officers," one of NHPOF's executive directors told NAREB back in 1945, "and we will supply the troops."

A year later there were still 33,000 officers. There were only 20,000 "troops."

Late in the summer of 1946, along about when the national Congressional campaigns were getting hot, Nelson conceived a master plan for recruiting members for NHPOF, figuring perhaps that the new incoming Congress would be a softer touch for NHPOF than the old one had been.

Nelson proposed that a week be set aside during which each one of the 33,000 realtors in NAREB would devote himself to getting new members for the Property Owners' Foundation. This was to be known as Realtor Foundation Week. Boyd T. Barnard, then NAREB President, issued a proclamation setting aside the week of Sept. 23, 1946, for the drive and calling on each realtor to get 100 new members during that week.

"If we do this," read the proclamation, "think what we can accomplish! The Foundation will in one week become an organization of three million owners. With that strength we can:

"Get rid of rent control;

"Get rid of socialized housing;

"Build and develop property without Washington control;

"Recover our economic freedom."

NELSON, IN NAREB's official publication, "Headlines," told the real estate men that if they got their quota of 100 members, "that would mean 3,300,000 wronged citizens who could speak with a united voice . . . Property owners are thrilled when they see that the realtor is helping fight their battle."

Hundreds of thousands of leaflets, posters, and flyers were published, and thousands of "sales kits" were sent around to the realtors. The trustees met a fortnight before the start of Foundation Week and passed resolutions pointing to themselves as saviors of the country, and Binns told them that "80 to 90% of all property owners will join up as members of the Foundation if they know about it and if they are asked."

But the "wronged citizens" refused to be saved. Foundation Week netted just 10,000 members.

EVERYBODY got mad at everybody behind the doors of the Massachusetts Ave. mansion. There were resignations, firings, bloody noses. Employes were first given salary cuts and then forced to "lend" the Foundation part of their salaries. A lot of disgruntled employes started suits against Binns, Nelson, NHPOF and NAREB. Some of these are still pending.

Complaints started coming in from the membership, too, though it is hard to see why they thought they had any right to speak up. The members started squawking loudly that this Foundation which had been sold to them as a "research and educational institution" was spending too much time fighting rent control and public housing and not enough in research.

To be exact, one of the most important selling points had been a projected information service on real estate law, and this had not even been started. Not a penny of the more than $500,000 the Foundation dissipated had gone for that type of research. For the last year of its life, in fact, NHPOF had no research department at all.

Early in 1948, NHPOF quietly died. NAREB killed it. The particular small property owners who joined it will probably never fall for anything like it again, but the big boys will keep trying.

(CIO has asked the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities to investigate an outfit called "The Property Owners' League" which is now busily stirring up a "March on Washington" to protest extension of rent control.)

IT SEEMS incredible, now that the farcical story of NHPOF is out where it can be seen, that any Congressman in his right mind could have believed it really represented the millions of small property owners of this country or that, if he didn't go along, the vengeance of this organization would be shown at the polls. Yet Binns' "widows-and-orphans" approach to Congress was amazingly successful. He used a simple technique—made membership claims that were vastly exaggerated, and statements that could not be checked.

For instance, speaking before the House Banking Committee in 1946, Binns airily said the Foundation had 120,000 members, at a time when the books showed only 20,000. Bidding for the support of the U. S. Savings and Loan League on another occasion, Binns said that NHPOF's official organ, "The Property Owner," was read by 250,000 people. To the trustees, he reported membership would reach into millions.

Probably his most laughable statement was made to the press in November, 1946, when he said the Foundation would "get" Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.) for his support of public housing. The remark was widely quoted if not believed.

Nelson took the same approach. He spoke to Congressional committees with the assurance of a man who had the nation's property owners back of him, praised NHPOF as an organization with which NAREB was in symphathy, and wrote in "Headlines," a bare three months before NHPOF folded entirely, that "more and more home owners look to the NHPOF as their only way of expressing their convictions and their political principles."

Neither Binns nor Nelson has done much to counteract the impression that there still is such an organization at NHPOF or something very much like it.

Will Congress fall for such an approach again?

Danish Labor Leaders Quit CP

SHUT UP And Obey. Only those who follow that motto stay in the Communist Party, three prominent Danish trade union leaders charged in an open letter of resignation from the Danish Communist Party.

The three who became fed up with taking orders that had no rhyme or reason and hurled cries of "dictatorship" as they left the party were the top leaders of the Railroad Workers Union—Henry Olsen, chairman; Victor Madsen, treasurer, and M. Ollgaard Rasmussen, secretary.

Their letter, addressed to the party secretariat, was printed in the newspaper "Social Demokraten" on April 16. In it they flatly blamed the party leadership for failure of efforts to capture Danish workers despite post-war conditions that appeared to conspire in their favor.

"Our opinion is that our key leaders are at fault and that our key leaders have failed in moments of importance," they bluntly declared.

The most serious mistake, they said, was the leaders' disregard of the level of education and intelligence of the Danish worker and their insistence upon using methods "which perhaps were justified" in Eastern European countries where literacy is much lower.

Time after time, they wrote, the party leadership issued orders which section leaders and active members were compelled to follow blindly "irrespective of whether the results would harm the leaders in question and thereby our position in the trade union movement or not." They described this dictation to the boards of labor unions as "a great mistake."

THE REDS once had a chance to win the allegiance of the Danes, they said, because their politics were honest at that time. But things have changed within the last two years, they went on, and "no means is now too dirty to be used." As a result, "the workers feel they have been let down," because they have been forced out on senseless and costly strikes.

Another thing the sturdy Danish worker couldn't stomach was the synthetic enthusiasm of the party press for life behind the Iron Curtain, the three made clear. The average man could not help but notice, and find out why, "so many of the leading Communists in these countries disappear from their posts," and "it would be strange if the Danish worker cannot see there is something rotten in the system," they said.

"Continually it is asserted that we are not directed by the Cominform (or are we?), but when this assertion is maintained why has a definite Danish policy not been cultivated which, based on Danish conditions and on the Danish population's mentality, had made honest use of all the constructive forces which are available in this country?" they demanded.

"Why has the party not worked on a policy which would convince the population that here in this country a real democracy could be created in which any opinion without risk could be voiced? Nobody has any guarantee that an opinion which is not the Communist Party's will not be remembered later."

Frede Danielson, president of the Copenhagen Street Car Employes Union, resigned on the same day after 30 years as a party member.

Company Searches Its Soul—But Workers Jobless

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SMOKE NO longer pours from the big chimneys of the Pressed Steel Car Co. plant at McKees Rocks, Pa., near Pittsburgh. The windows are boarded up, the iron gates locked. It is a desolate sight for the eyes of any of the firm's 2200 laid-off workers who may walk past it now and then in the faint hope of seeing some signs of a reopening.

The big, sprawling plant which makes railroad freight cars has been closed since last summer. The reason—lack of orders. The railroads need new freight cars—plenty of them—but the orders aren't coming in. Pressed Steel Car, third largest concern in the industry, hasn't enough business to keep going. Its plant in Mt. Vernon, Ill., has been closed since last August.

High freight rates, truck and plane competition, out-of-date policies and general mismanagement have taken a heavy toll of revenue from the railroads.

It's no comfort to PSC's employes to read that unemployment figures went down last week. The overall picture may not look too bad in the statistics, but from where they stand it looks black. They're out of work and have been for nearly a year.

All they have to stir their hopes are vague rumors now and then that the plant may reopen—some time. The important thing they want to know is when, and how many will get their jobs back. There is some indication that even if the plant does resume operation, it will not employ more than 1500 workers. It's the uncertainty that makes their worry heavier.

MEANWHILE the small village of Preston, a suburb of McKees Rocks on the mud flats of the Ohio River, where many PSC workers live, is fast becoming a ghost town. Nine out of 10 of the men there have been jobless since the PSC plant, from which the village draws its life blood, closed.

Unemployment compensation which kept them going for a time is now exhausted. A few have been "lucky" enough to get odd jobs. Many have been forced to go on the relief rolls.

The CIO United Steelworkers, union representative of the PSC workers, explains that the plant's laid-off employes are generally well advanced in age, with an average age in the late 40's or early 50's.

"This means that it is increasingly difficult for these people to find work," states Otis Brubaker, the union's research director, "especially since most of them have spent most of their lives in the car building business and are not particularly well prepared to go into other lines of manufacture."

THE COMPANY indicated, Brubaker said, that employment of older workers who had considerable experience in the carbuilding business was a deliberate policy which proved of definite advantage to the company.

The company's annual report to shareholders, issued recently, concludes with a word of praise for "the efficiency, loyalty, and teamwork" of its employees, but it has some harsh things to say about the failure of the carbuilding industry to keep step with modern progress.

"In 1897 your company, for the first time, substituted steel sheets for the lumber usually employed," the report says, "and in succeeding years all cars came to be built of steel. Progress then stopped. Freight cars today are basically the same as they were when the industry was revolutionized by the introduction of steel cars . . .

"Since early in 1948, it has become increasingly apparent to your management that the carbuilding industry had failed to maintain its original leadership in product design and engineering. In almost every industry but ours the customer looks to the manufacturer for product improvements.

"Inasmuch as railroad men are strong proponents of car standardization as a means of reducing original cost and maintenance expenditures, we, as carbuilders, should have been working toward this end and offering the railroads a better and better product.

"Instead, we have been content to build the same product we have always built. If we continue to default our leadership in this direction there is no reason for our existence and no reason for our customers to refrain from manufacturing the product themselves."

THESE SHARP DIGS the company gives itself, of course, have a purpose beyond mere self-criticism. They are pointed up to explain and win support for the firm's program of plant improvements, experimental work and tests on newly designed freight cars which apparently have been going on while its plants have been closed. The cost will undoubtedly run high.

"When all of our tests have been satisfactorily completed and approved," the report says, "you will be given an opportunity to see them (the cars) yourselves, either by picture or by personal observation."

Whatever chance PSC's laid-off employes have of ever getting their jobs back—if they don't starve meantime—seems to hang on the success of the company's long delayed effort to bring its cars up-to-date and get big orders for them.

IF YOU LOOK CLOSELY, you'll notice a lot of worried faces in this picture. It was taken at a recent mass meeting attended by more than 500 members of CIO Steelworkers Local 1844 in Pittsburgh. The men have good reason to look glum. They are workers who were laid off last summer by the Pressed Steel Car Co., when the firm's plant in McKees Rocks, Pa., near Pittsburgh, closed down for lack of orders. With their unemployment compensation already exhausted, many of the workers have been forced on relief. More than 2000 workers were furloughed when the plant closed. The company's plant at Mt. Vernon, Ill., has also been down since last August. Some kind of federal aid that would enable the plants to reopen was discussed at the meeting. USA-CIO District Dir. John Murray proposed a program of creating freight car orders underwritten by the government. Three congressmen whose aid in this direction was sought were pessimistic about getting support for a "piece-meal program on a local level." The railroads are not even keeping their present rolling stock in repair; shop layoffs are common.

Industry Told New DP's Being Created

American employers are "sweeping a serious problem under the bed" by refusing to hire middle-aged workers, Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, told the American Trade Association Executives at a meeting in Washington.

The jobless man of 45, "too young to retire and too old to find a job," is the new "displaced person in our society," he said. Hiring and firing policies are adding to a "wickedly wasteful human scrap pile," he asserted, and he warned the executives that private industry "must grapple with the problem or there'll be more government agents gumshoeing through our workshops."

Bill Gives Special Benefits to 'E' Area Idle

REP. YOUNG (D. O.), a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, last week introduced an emergency bill to give another 26 weeks' unemployment compensation benefits to persons in distressed areas who have been unemployed for 27 weeks and have exhausted their state benefits.

The measure, HR 8374, received the enthusiastic indorsement of the CIO Full Employment Committee, which has been seeking action along similar, though not identical, lines.

"We hope this bill will get prompt action in both houses," said Everett Kassalow, executive secretary of the committee. "It is urgently needed as a temporary measure to relieve the worst situations and keep up purchasing power while Congress works out longer-range programs."

In spite of the fact that unemployment declined nationally by 608,000 from March 11 to April 8, Young pointed out that "nearly two million workers used up their rights to unemployment benefits in 1949."

"The figure was 591,000 in the last three months alone," he said. "Although some of these people may again become eligible for benefits, the situation is very serious. In many states, moreover, there is no other provision for looking after families who suffer from unemployment. The public aid program frequently is not available at all, or only to paupers, after all savings, insurance and other assets have been used."

President Truman recently asked Congress to establish minimum unemployment compensation standards, but Young pointed out that while he supported this proposal, Congress and "the state legislatures would have to act before the unemployed received any advantages."

"The situation in many areas is so serious that the unemployed cannot wait for the legislatures to meet," he added.

UNDER THE Young bill, the Secretary of Labor would be empowered, whenever the unemployment rate in a labor market area had exceeded 9% for more than three months, to make federal funds available for the payment of up to 26 weeks' additional benefits at whatever weekly rate the state ordinarily pays.

Young made no estimate as to the cost of his proposal, stating simply that it would depend "upon the amount of long-continued unemployment."

Organizing Utilities 'Foremost Job,' Says Fisher

CIO UTILITY Workers Pres. Joseph Fisher told 400 delegates to the union's recent convention in New York City that the "foremost job facing us today is the task of organizing the thousands of unorganized workers in the utility industry."

He disclosed that organizing campaigns were now being carried on in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia and named 22 companies with which the union now holds collective bargaining contracts.

The UWUA president voiced concern over the increasing unemployment problem in the country and criticized industry for "storing up money for dividend payments to stockholders rather than building new plants."

Asst. Secy. of Labor John Gibson told the delegates that the Truman administration is "deadly serious" in its intention to press for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act at this session of Congress.

"I can promise you that President Truman and the administration will not relax in their efforts to erase this un-American legislation from the statute books," Gibson said.

He held that collective bargaining was not "free" under the present act and declared that free collective bargaining which has become a necessary basic freedom, had "prevented Government domination of the trade union movement and preserved the free-enterprise system."

Gibson commended UWUA for the "thorough house-cleaning job" on the Communists formerly in its ranks and said the advice and encouragement of American labor leaders enabled trade union leaders in Europe to "stand up and be counted for the cause of democracy."

CIO VICE PRES. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood told the convention that the Communists had failed in an attempt to gain control of the light, heat and power industries in America, and congratulated the UWUA leadership.

CIO National Maritime Union Pres. Joseph Curran declared that the only way Communists could be driven out of the American labor movement was by "extermination."

A number of resolutions were passed by the convention including support for the "organic unity" of labor proposal as recently put forth by CIO Pres. Philip Murray: repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and restoration of the Wagner Act; establishment of political action committees by each local; support of national health insurance and opposition to the further entry of the government into the private-owned utility field.

Other resolutions adopted would extend the present rent control law, accelerate the construction of public housing and wage a continuing fight for "substantial wage increases in all future negotiations."

Other speakers were CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey; CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll; CIO Shipbuilders Pres. John Green and Vincent Impellitteri, president of the New York Council.

Officers were not up for election as the present officials are currently serving three-year terms.

The next convention will be held in Cleveland, O., 18 months from now.

Stand Reversed

NLRB Rules Craft Unionism Not Suitable in Aluminum

THE NATI. Labor Relations board reversed a previous stand last week and announced that as a general policy it will not order craft collective bargaining units in the aluminum industry.

The unanimous decision was handed down in a ruling dismissing the petitions of four craft unions seeking bargaining rights for their members in the Mead and Trentwood, Wash., plants of the Permanente Metals Corp. of Oakland, Calif., owned by Henry J. Kaiser.

Its net effort is to restrict bargaining in the industry to the CIO type of industrial unionism.

The old CIO Aluminum Workers Union was certified as bargaining agent at both plants in 1943. When the union was merged with the CIO United Steelworkers of America in 1946. CIO representation was continued through the USA.

THE STEELWORKERS and the company both contended that the only appropriate unit was one made up of the production and maintenance workers.

The AFL Electrical Workers had sought either separate units for about 60 electricians at Mead and 48 at Trentwood, or a single unit of the two groups; the AFL Carpenters Union sought to represent 70 millwrights at Trentwood; the AFL Plumbers Union asked for a unit of 45 pipefitters at Trentwood, and the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists asked rights covering 130 machinists at Trentwood.

The board dismissed their petitions and also one by the AFL Spokane Aluminum Council for a separate industrial unit covering all production and maintenance workers at the Trentwood plant.

The board a year ago had ordered a craft unit election among 45 machinists at the Bellwood, Va., aluminum plant of the Reynolds Metal Co. In reversing that decision, it said:

"It is true that in the Reynolds Metals Co. case, we held that, in the absence of persuasive proof as to the exact character of an industry, the predominant pattern of collective bargaining in an industry was not alone sufficient to deny separate representation to groups of employes organized along traditional craft lines.

"By the present record, however, we have been presented with more cogent evidence of the integrated and interdependent character of the more basic operations in the aluminum industry and its similarity in major respect to the basic steel industry.

"THEREFORE, because of further study of these considerations and because of the history of collective bargaining in the industry on a predominantly industrial pattern, we now believe that the facts require us to reverse the conclusions reached in the Reynolds Metals case and to find in this case, in conformity with the decision reached with respect to basic steel, that collective bargaining on other than an industrial basis will not assure employes in the aluminum industry the best opportunity to exercise the right guaranteed by the act."

In dismissing the craft union petitions the board added:

"We expressly overrule the Reynolds decision, and hold that the principles enunciated in the National Tube Co. case are applicable in view of the continuous process and integrated operations here shown to obtain in the aluminum industry."

The National Tube case is the governing case in basic steel.

In holding the two-plant unit appropriate at Permanente, the board said:

"The history of collective bargaining in both plants would not alone adequately establish the appropriateness of a single multi-plant unit.

"But when to such history there are added the fact that the Trentwood plant is the natural outlet for all of Mead's production, the further fact that under normal circumstances the plants would both be a part of a single integrated industrial unit, and the fact of this employer's centralized management and common labor policies, we are persuaded that a single multi-plant unit would be most appropriate."

The decision was signed by Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members John M. Houston, James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Abe Murdock. Paul L. Styles, newest board member, did not participate.

Kroll Calls Election Result 'Challenge'

THE NEW DEAL and the Fair Deal took a pushing around in primary elections in Florida and Alabama on May 2.

The CIO didn't fare any too well, either.

In Florida Sen. Claude Pepper, for 14 years one of the Senate's outstanding liberals, was defeated for the Democratic nomination for another term by Rep. George Smathers, who has been playing footsie with the Dixiegops after being elected to his first term in the House two years ago with the support of the CIO Political Action Committee.

In Alabama loyal Democrats seeking to recapture control of the state party machinery from Dixiecrats who bolted the national ticket in 1948, managed to eke out a victory only after two days of ballot counting. Final makeup of the state committee executive board must await runoff elections which are scheduled to be held May 30 in eight districts.

The Tuesday primaries are a grim warning to the American people," declared Jack Kroll, chairman of the CIO-PAC.

"We face an assault upon the whole pattern of our society—upon unemployment compensation, old age income, public housing, health and education. The danger is real and immediate; the enemies within our gates are cunning, rich, desperate and unscrupulous. They will stop at nothing.

"This challenge will be met.

"This is no time for trimmers. This is no time for appeasement. We must stand our ground and carry forward the Fair Deal.

"The issue in 1950 is the general welfare. The stakes are social and economic security, and the peace of the world.

"The assaults upon them can and will be met, by placing the campaign on the basis of the realities—past, present and future. Toward that end, the CIO-PAC will do its full part, in the service of labor and the people."

PEPPER, supported by the CIO, was defeated in one of the most furious and dirtiest campaigns in Florida history. Thousands of dollars of Republican and Northern money was poured into the state to beat him, and not one major newspaper in the state supported him. Everybody on down from Guy Gabrielson, Republican National Committee head, had a different reason for his rejection by the voters. CIO members on the scene agree that his reported failure actively to oppose FEPC legislation was the major factor.

The "loyal" Democrats in Alabama won 37 of the 72 places on the State Democratic Executive Committee and the State Righters 26 seats, with one victor unpledged to either group. The remaining eight contests must be decided in the May 30 runoff. "Loyal" candidates won most of the other nominations.

In Ohio, State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson rolled up a 51,000 plurality to take the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator from six rivals. His opponent will be Sen. Taft (R.), co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, who coasted to an unopposed victory. The CIO-PAC stayed out of the primary contest. Gov. Frank J. Lausche won the Democratic nomination for governor by 300,000 votes in a three-man race.

Seven Democratic and four Republican incumbents won renomination to the House in Indiana. Senate candidates will be picked at state party conventions next month.

WHOOPING IT UP at an IUE-CIO victory celebration following the Westinghouse election are these members of Local 617 at Sharon, Pa. One of the largest units in the Westinghouse chain, the Sharon plant returned a substantial majority for IUE-CIO over the discredited UE, and the members are looking forward to a decent contract at last. They're also getting ready to help swing General Electric employes into the CIO union in the representation election the NLRB has set for May 25. IUE-CIO bargains for 101,071 workers.

Ala. Council Head Likens KKK To CP

THE ALABAMA CIO Industrial Union Council conconvention held in Birmingham recently heard Council Pres. John J. Playfair strongly condemn the reappearance in the South of the Ku Klux Klan.

Pointing out that the Alabama Council had been instrumental in forcing the passage of the anti-masking bill by the State legislature, Playfair called upon all CIO affiliated international and local unions to "combat this ugly menace and to do everything within your power to stamp it out for all time."

"The Ku Klux Klan," he declared, "is just as dangerous to the trade union movement as the Communist party or any other subversive group."

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll urged CIO members in the state to "go to bat against the Dixiecrats" whom he termed "Republicans in disguise."

He predicted that the Dixiecrats would lose in the battle for posts on the State Democratic Executive Committee "if CIO members get out and do the job."

ANTHONY W. SMITH, assistant IUC director, told the delegates that the current CIO Southern organizing drive would go on "just as long as it takes to get the job done."

Smith called industrial unionism as exemplified by the CIO "the foundation-stone of national economic equality," and urged council members to renew their efforts to bring the unorganized into the CIO.

The convention passed resolutions in support of the elimination of the Southern wage differential, repeal of the poll tax, and increases in unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation.

Playfair and Eugene M. Wells were reelected to the offices of president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Following are the elected vice presidents: Fannie Neal, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Ben Porch, Communications Workers; C. N. Bowden, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; W. J. Hoodless, Marine & Shipbuilders; Rufus B. King, Oil Workers; Ada Lee Howell, Packinghouse Workers; Frank Parker, Retail, Wholesale, Dep't Store Union; H. L. Knowles, Rubber Workers; R. E. Farr, Steelworkers; C. D. Boartfield, Textile Workers, and Hal Davis, Intl. Woodworkers.

"Union maid—Tried and found not wanting!"

FEPC Coming Up Again

THE FAIR Employment Practices Commission bill, sidetracked in the Senate when other measures were given priority, is scheduled to come up for action this week.

It was expected, of course, to run into the usual Southern filibuster. This in turn may lead to the first test of the new cloture rule.

Decision to bring it up as soon as the Marshall Plan appropriation bill is disposed of was made last week by the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, according to announcement by Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), Senate majority leader.

A combination of Republicans and Southern Democrats may be able to stave off debate on the hotly-contested measure, which is a Democratic campaign promise and is supported by the CIO. The Dixiegops may muster enough strength to give priority to the basing point price fixing bill conference report, a privileged measure on which extended debate is anticipated, or Sen. Taft's resolution to disapprove President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 12 —the one that would end the independent status of the Natl. Labor Relation Board's general counsel.

The Senate's cloture rule permits shutting off debate when a majority of the members of the Senate vote to do so. Heavy absenteeism would make such a resolution difficult if not impossible to pass.

Slap 'em Back With Bucks for PAC

Political D.A. Persecutor of Bell Strikers

TWENTY-THREE union men are on trial at Lockport, N. Y., on charges of rioting and conspiracy. Each faces a maximum penalty of six years in jail and a $5000 fine.

District Attorney William Miller, of Niagara County, a young Republican who wants to go to Congress, is riding the case for all it is worth—hoping that a conviction will boost his career.

All of the defendants took part in the bitter 19-week Bell Aircraft strike, which ended last October with Local 501 of the CIO Auto Workers winning a contract. Until this mass indictment, the law against rioting had not been used in 30 years.

Rarely in the history of American labor has the legal prosecution of union workers assumed such ferocity. In most strikes, legal action against the union and its leaders is withdrawn as a consequence of an honorable settlement. But in this case the employer and the Republican politicians seem determined to get their pound of flesh.

As a result of the strike, 116 trials were scheduled; 62 workers face maximum penalties of more than $350,000 in fines and 350 years in jail; at the peak of this legal assault, the UAW had posted $431,000 in bail to keep its people out of jail. While criminals were getting out on nominal bail the Niagara County judges were fixing bail of $5000 to $15,000 for Bell strikers charged with rioting.

Arrested strikers were held incommunicado for as long as 72 hours before being arraigned. When some of them tried to get the sheriff tried for violation of the law, the Grand Jury refused to take action.

Miller addressed office workers, scabs and strikebreakers inside the Bell plant, and promised wholesale arrests of union leaders and bail too high for the union to raise.

The company furnished helicopters, horses, two-way radios, food, drink, and shelter to an army of deputy sheriffs.

Despite this array of force and power, 1400 of 1700 strikers stuck by the union and won a contract which preserved Local 501. And now, six months after the end of the strike, with Bell officials, scabs and strikebreakers acting as witnesses, the county is trying to send these union men to jail.

AMONG THE earliest witnesses were several Niagara County police who despite Miller's most adroit questioning were able to place fewer than half the defendants on the scene at the time of picket line disorder last September. And only one of them was able to testify that he saw blows aimed.

Three employes who went through the picket line during the walkout testified with perfectly straight faces that the September "riot" was "plotted" at a meeting of Local 501 which they attended. The stooges, a supervisor and two engineers, told the court the speakers were Edward F. Gray, UAW sub-regional director; Robert V. Siegler, then Local 501 president, and Donald Slaiman, a member.

Charles J. McDonough, defense attorney, took the heat out of their testimony by showing that the meeting, held in a Buffalo hall, was an open meeting which was well advertised by radio and newspapers as well as by handbills. (LPA).

"You're going to register to vote now —if I have to drive you there!"

TWUA Plans Institutes

HUNDREDS of active members, shop stewards and local officers of the CIO Textile Workers Union will be flocking to school again this summer under the union's ninth annual summer institute program.

Larry Rogin, the union's education and publicity director, announced last week that the first institute will be held the week of July 16-22 with an advanced course for New England workers at Wellesley College in Massachusetts. This will be followed by a general course at the Univ. of Connecticut, in Storrs, July 23-29.

Other institutes scheduled later are:

Advanced courses for midwest members at the CIO Auto Workers Camp, Ottawa, Ill., Aug. 13-19.

Both general and advanced courses for southern members at Black Mountain College, North Carolina, Sept. 3-9.

General course for mid-Atlantic area members, Sept. 10-16; advanced courses, Sept. 17-23, at Hudson Shore Labor School, West Park, N. Y.

Rogin said that collective bargaining for pensions will be emphasized in advanced courses at this summer's schools.

Ruling Again Refused On Ga. Poll Laws

THE U. S. Supreme Court on May 1 again refused to give a ruling on a plea by a Georgia voter to do something about the state's admittedly undemocratic election laws.

This time, the court said it wouldn't give a ruling on the constitutionality of Georgia's law compelling re-registration of the state's 1,200,000 voters and requiring them, for the first time, to pass a literacy test before being allowed to register.

The law was passed in 1949 by Gov. "Hummon" Talmadge's legislature. "Hummon" openly stated, when he asked approval of the proposal, that it was aimed at ending "the evils of block voting" by Negroes.

Approximately 120,000 Negroes were registered in Georgia before the legislature acted—24,000 in Fulton County (Atlanta). Talmadge charged that the Negroes were "lined up to vote in controlled blocs." As of January, 1950, only 3500 had re-registered in Fulton County, although all reports indicated that the registrars were being scrupulously fair.

The literacy test is comparatively mild. It is not the substance of the test that has aroused opposition from Georgia's liberals, but the fact that it is being given at all, and that it was openly set up to "get" the Negro voter. The liberals claim that the law is a violation of the Constitutional guarantee against race discrimination. The Supreme Court, however, claims that no federal question is involved, since the Constitution also says that the states set up their own voting rules.

Just two weeks ago the court refused, for the same reasons, to give a ruling on the constitutionality of Georgia's "unit voting" system, under which a single vote cast outside Fulton County has, on an average, 11 times the effect of a single vote cast in Atlanta.

Oil Union Wins $65 Monthly Pensions and Social Security

OIL WORKERS Pres. O. A. Knight announced that agreement had been reached with the Cities Service Co. on improvements in a plan which provides for minimum pensions of $65 a month in addition to social security payments for employes who retire at normal retirement age with 25 years service.

Knight said that under the plan the average Cities Service employe will have a total retirement income of approximately $140 a month, counting social security payments of $75 monthly.

About 20,000 employes of the various operating divisions of the company will benefit from the agreement, he said.

The pension plan will not be affected for an individual in the case of future strikes or lockouts and an employe may be laid off for as long as 365 consecutive days without breaking his continuity of service, Knight stated.

The increased pensions will apply retroactively to all employes already retired. A nationwide conference of Cities Service OWI locals had unanimously recommended acceptance of the improved plan.

AT FOUR OF the Texas Co. refineries — Port Arthur and Port Neches, Tex., Lockport, Ill., and Casper, Wyo.—the workers were locked out after offering to resume work.

At Lawrenceville, Ill., the company accepted the offer of the strikers to return to work, but the refinery was being operated at only one-third of capacity, because of management's fear to put its big stills and catalytic cracking units in full operations in view of the possibilities of another strike.

The union believes that the lockout puts it in a favorable position. Because there is a lockout and not a strike, the OWIU members draw unemployment compensation in most states.

The strike and the subsequent lockout produced a series of damage suits—two against the union and one against the company. In the latter action which is also the latest, OWIU sued Texas Co. for $2 million plus all time lost for the duration, claiming the company had not given the required 90 days' notice at Port Neches.

N.J. CIO Says Firm's Action Withholds Jobless Benefits

THE GERA MILLS of Passaic, N. J., have deliberately misrepresented facts to prevent payment of unemployment benefits to their workers, the New Jersey CIO Council charged, calling for court action to penalize the management for violating the law.

Carl Holderman, state CIO head, made the demand in a letter to Harold G. Hoffman, director of the division of employment security. He charged the Gera action was typical of other employers who seek advantages in collective bargaining by making false representations about the eligibility of their workers for unemployment compensation.

Holderman said that Gera employes had been laid off several weeks before negotiations for a new contract opened; in the negotiations the firm asked wage concessions as the price of reopening the plant; when the union refused, the company claimed a labor dispute existed, and therefore the employes were ineligible for unemployment compensation.

Although a deputy has already held hearings, and ruled against the company, the firm has appealed and now asks an indefinite delay in the hearing. Meanwhile, the employes out of work are getting no unemployment compensation.

John Yancey to Aid Canal Zone Campaign

JOHN YANCEY, assistant director of the CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee, left May 3 for Panama to assist in organizing U.S. government workers in the Canal Zone.

Yancey, who has a distinguished record in the labor movement and in Chicago civic activities, is on leave from his post as vice president of the CIO Transport Service Workers Union.

He will work closely in Panama with Gilbert Anaya, CIO special representative who has spent several weeks there setting up a widespread organizing drive intended to bring "genuine democratic trade unionism to workers who were sadly misled by the United Public Workers." The UPW was expelled from the CIO in February on charges that it is dominated by the Communists.

Anaya, who came to Washington a fortnight ago for a hasty conference with CIO Pres. Philip Murray; Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; Anthony J. Federoff, chairman of the organizing committee; Milton Murray, secretary-treasurer of the group, and other members, has made considerable progress in Panama despite harrassing by UPW diehards.

JOHN YANCEY

ON HIS return from the Washington conference he announced that dues for membership in the new CIO group would be lowered to $1 and that the CIO will bear the full expense of the organizing drive, with per capita to be fixed when a new local is chartered.

The membership campaign is being conducted on an individual basis—new members are being signed up one by one. An offer by some officers of UPW Local 713, which has branches in several cities and in many fields, to bring it into the CIO as a group, was turned down.

"There will be no deals with anybody or any group," Anaya asserted in a statement upon his return.

"We start from scratch and are at the service of all local rate workers on the Canal Zone who want to join up with a decent, democratic labor union to help them improve their living and working conditions.

"Present officers have been named only to take care of the organizational drive. As soon as the membership fully develops a new set of officers will be elected from the rank and file."

Government officials in both the Canal Zone and Panama are as keenly interested in the CIO campaign, as the workers. They see it not only as a means of blocking Communist aggrandizement in a critical area, but regard the effective representation CIO unions give their members as a lever for raising wages, improving living conditions and helping to stabilize the economy of Panama.

3 More UFWA Locals Vote CIO

The members of three more CIO Furniture Workers locals have voted support to Pres. Morris Pizer and his fight to keep the union within the CIO, according to an announcement by the UFWA Rank and File Committee for CIO.

They are Local 137, Springfield, Mass.; Local 36, Granville, N. Y., and Local 464, Huntington, W Va. Locals 36 and 464 also elected pro-CIO delegates to the forthcoming UFWA convention. The CIO has cited the UFWA for trial and possible expulsion on charges that it is Communist-dominated, but Pizer is leading a fight to clean house of the pro-Reds and stay in the CIO.

Dollar's Buying Power Up .7c

You lucky person, you!

That dollar bill which in March, 1949, bought 62c worth of whatever you needed in terms of January, 1939 purchasing power bought 62.7c worth in March, 1950, the National Industrial Conference Board discovered last week.

Plan To Use and Preserve Niagara Falls

PUBLIC utilization of the power possibilities of the Niagara river for the benefit of the American people while at the same time preserving its scenic beauties is called for in a bill introduced simultaneously in Congress last week by Sen. Lehman and Rep. Roosevelt, New York Democrats.

Entitled the Niagara Development Act of 1950, the bill proposes a power development in accordance with plans recently completed by the Bureau of Power of the Federal Power Commission which would greatly increase the average annual energy available in the U. S.

Sen. Lehman said that "the whole object of our bill is to provide power to the people at low cost."

In brief, here's what the bill would do:

1 Authorize the U.S. Corps of Engineers to plan and construct the necessary project works.

2 Direct the President of the U.S. to turn over the works to a designated agency of New York State.

3 Provide for repayment of construction costs by New York to the federal government, with the costs for works designed solely to preserve the scenic beauty of the falls to be borne by the U.S. government.

4 Provide that if New York State does not choose to acquire and operate the project, or if no agreement is reached by the time the project is ready to deliver power, the power will be distributed through an authorized U.S. government agency under the terms of the Flood Control Act of 1944.

C. of C. Meets Again To Dream of Past

THE U. S. Chamber of Commerce held its annual convention in Washington last week, and it was just like all the others.

Some 2500 delegates who still dream of the "good old days" passed the same old resolutions, heard the same old speeches, cheered and booed in the same old places and sounded the same old warnings.

They called for the same old anti-trust curbs on "monopolistic practices" by labor unions, the same old curbs on government spending, the same old freedom from government for individual initiative and private enterprise.

If there were any Democrats around, they kept that fact secret. Sen. Taft (R. O.) was the same old whiteheaded boy even if he had to move over and make room for that distinguished educator, Dr. Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania and former governor of Minnesota, who, even if he was a newcomer as a speaker, said the same old things his predecessors did.

Taft declared the "socialists" are pushing the country into "the complete totalitarian state," a fancy bit of mouthwork that won't get him any votes he hadn't already lined up. He made it clear he doesn't think much of the Truman Administration.

"Big business wants protection for its profits," he said in a plea to keep government out of business, which is where he intimated it is. "Little business wants protection from big business. Farmers want the government to guarantee parity prices. Labor wants every man guaranteed a job."

Stassen also thumped the New Deal and the Fair Deal winning applause that bounced lustily off the walls at a luncheon in the Statler Hotel. Even the bouncing was done in the same old way—strictly in accordance with the laws of physics that govern the movement of sound waves.

He called inflation "a cowardly government method of financing" and gently chided business and industry for not ballyhooing themselves more effectively to their workers.

"The most important informational job that needs to be done in America," he proclaimed, "is to develop a better understanding by the American workman of the modern capitalistic system."

STASSEN followed Claude Robinson, president of the Opinion Research Corp., Princeton, N. J., who told the delegates that "people do not understand business." And the less they know about it, he said his polls show, the less they like it.

Before going back home the delegates passed resolutions urging business to stop trying to get money out of the Federal government and putting it to expense which is reflected in taxes; to use Marshall Plan funds so as not to cut off U. S. exports—one of their number, Eugene Holman, president of Standard Oil of New Jersey, had warned them earlier that they can't go on exporting as much as they have and importing as little as they have in recent years — and encourage nationalistic restrictions against the U. S.; expressing "growing apprehension" over the way the anti-trust laws are being enforced; opposing price controls except in time of war; favoring lower corporate taxes and "rigid economy" in government, and recommending that President Truman's Point Four program for undeveloped countries be carried out by private enterprise and private investment.

There was one touch of novelty at the convention. Otto A. Seyferth, Muskegon, Mich., foundry owner, who used to be a union man himself, was elected president. He once was an organizer for the AFL Stone Carvers Union and served as president of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Trades and Labor Council.

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The Utility Workers Union of America held its convention April 28-30 in New York City, and the writer had the pleasure of addressing this fine group. This is the same group that James Matles, director of organization of the discredited United Electrical Workers, failed with, and to build up himself for his own 1949 convention, he stated that the CIO had failed. Our greatest proof of success is the Utility Workers themselves. They are proud of their affiliation with the CIO. They have recently negotiated a wonderful pension plan for the members, one of the best plans in the country today. The Utility Workers are continually going forward with their good leadership, which is alert and stands for all that is clean trade unionism.

The writer also addressed the Eastern Area Conference of the United Automobile Workers-CIO on April 29. It was a pleasure getting together with Brother Charley Kerrigan, Director of Regional 9-A, UAW-CIO, and renewing old acquaintances of 1937 and 1938. It was really enjoyable being with them.

Coming up on Tuesday, May 9, at Atlantic City, N. J., is the convention of that great organization, the United Steelworkers of America-CIO.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a certification election held at the Rice Corp., Winamac and Monterey, Ind., the results were as follows: Clothing Workers-CIO 69; against 23; challenged 1.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election held at the Kraft Food Co., Summitville, Ind., the workers voted in favor of the United Brewery Workers-CIO by the following vote: Eligible 25, Brewery Worker 18, Food and Tobacco Workers 2, no union 2, and challenged 1.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following election victories for the IUE; Local 406, American Gas Accumulator Co., Elizabeth, N. J., IUE 100, no union 3; Local 728, Electric Products Co., Cleveland, O., IUE 148, no union 11, (UE withdrew); Local 425, Ford Instrument Co., Long Island City, N. Y., IUE 868, no union 12, (UE withdrew). In an election conducted by the Michigan authorities at the JIC Electric Co., Detroit, Mich., the IUE was victorious.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following NLRB representation elections and union shop elections in Illinois: representation elections, Borden's Soy Processing Co., Kankakee, Ill., eligible 37; Chemical Workers-CIO 27; Universal Atlas Cement Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 6, Steelworkers-CIO 4; union shop elections: Kensington Steel Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 186, UAW-CIO 169; Decatur Castings Co., Decatur, Ill., eligible 91, United Steelworkers-CIO 64; Earl Soesbe Co., Melrose Park, Ill., eligible 19, UAW-CIO 16; Barrett-Cravens Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 70, Amalgamated Local 453, UAW-CIO 66; Illinois Hair & Feather Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 45, Chicago Joint Board Textile Workers 31.

A. J. Reger, union representative of Amalgamated Local 1798, Steelworkers, reports that USA-CIO scored almost a 100% vote in a recent union shop authorization election at the Budigar Lang Plant, Berkeley, Cal. With 38 workers eligible, all but one voted for the union shop in NLRB election.

By a unanimous vote, the Reno Newspaper Guild won in an NLRB-conducted maintenance of membership authorization election on the Reno Evening Gazette and the Nevada State Journal, according to Pres. Frank McCulloch of the Reno Guild.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that a representation election was won by the CIO at the Tremont Lumber Co., Winnfield, La., by a vote of CIO 83; no union 39; void 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci reports that the Steelworkers won two elections at Provo, Utah. The office workers at the Ironton Steel plant voted 14 to 2 in favor of the USA-CIO, and the clerical workers at the Geneva Steel Plant voted 95 to 71 in favor of the USA-CIO.

Anti-Trust Violations Charged To Gas Firms

The Butane Corp. and Fannin's Gas & Equipment Co. operating in Arizona, have been charged with violation of the anti-trust laws in the sale of liquefied petroleum gas to consumers, Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath disclosed last week.

The liquified gas, known as butane or propane, is used as a fuel for cooking, refrigeration and heating where there are no gas lines. The complaint chaged the companies with leasing storage tanks to customers on condition that they not buy gas from competitors.

New CWA Unit

Local C-4, CIO Communications Workers, Toronto, Can., has been officially chartered by Pres. Joseph Beirne. Local C-4 consists of 500 workers in the installation and sales departments of Northern Electric, Canadian counterpart of Western Electric. President is C. Byrnes. Local C-4 is the fourth chartered in Canada by CWA.

Unions, Liberals Fight Rent Control Compromise

THE ANNUAL fight over rent control is starting again. The real estate lobby, part of whose machinations is exposed elsewhere in this issue, has never put on such pressure. (See Page 7.)

Certain Administration Congressmen are already talking compromise.

Unions and liberal organizations are fighting back.

The Senate Banking Committee has completed hearings on S. 3181, which the CIO supports, and the House Banking Committee starts hearings this week on HR 5790, a duplicate version.

TIGHE WOODS, administrator of the Office of the Housing Expediter, which administers the present law, also supports these bills. They call for straight-out extension of one year, with just one amendment; they make it as easy for a community to secure recontrol as it now is to secure decontrol under "local option" provisions of the present law.

Pres. Truman sent a special rent control message to Congress stating that "a sudden and simultaneous removal of rent controls on a national scale would precipitate a wave of exorbitant rent increases. Such increases would seriously reduce the purchasing power of millions of families."

The arguments of the real estate lobby have been answered time and time again.

The facts remain. The landlords never had it so good. The foreclosure rate on rental properties is at its lowest point in 25 years.

There are now approximately 30 million people living in controlled rental accommodations, paying an average rental of $33 a month.

Experience in decontrolled areas has shown that these average tenants can expect an average increase of from 50 to 60%.

The housing shortage is not ended for any income group, even those who can afford high rents. For the middle-and low-income groups it is just as severe as it has been for the past three years. "Vacancy figures" quoted to committees by local real estate boards have been proved to be phony in almost every instance they have been checked.

The government's low-cost housing program will not "take hold" for at least a year, and when it does, it won't help the middle-income group.

AMPLE allowance is made in the present law for justifiable increases in rent, and in the past year, three out of four landlord requests for permission to increase rents have been granted.

Yet so strong is the real estate lobby's hold on Congress that compromise is already in the air.

Chairman Brent Spence (D.Ky.) of the House Banking Committee has introduced a bill which would extend the present law till June 30, 1951, but would actually let it expire Dec. 31, 1950 in any community whose governing body had not, by that time, specifically voted that it continue.

The Wall Street Journal hailed this as a "please-everybody" bill, designed "to let Congressmen eat their cake and have it too."

CIO opposes this compromise. The real estate lobby is delighted with it.

Census Bureau Finds Rental Housing Survey Made By Nashville Property Owners False

Here's one example of the accuracy of landlord "surveys" of housing vacancies:

The Property Owners' Association of Davidson County, Tenn., which includes Nashville (pop. over 250,000), back in January stuffily accused the Office of the Housing Expediter of "merely wasting government funds in an effort to perpetuate rent control in this area."

"Surveys," the association said, "have shown beyond the shadow of a doubt that the housing shortage has been reasonably met." Signed, Harry Lester, Executive Secretary.

The "survey" made by the property owners was put before the Nashville City Council along with a motion for decontrol. According to the "survey," the vacancy rate in Nashville was so great that anybody who wanted to take the trouble could find reasonably priced, attractive rental accommodations.

The City Council was impressed, and in executive session, voted to ask OHE for decontrol. The story leaked out, though, and such an uproar was raised that the Council reversed itself and asked OHE to make a new survey of vacancies.

OHE asked the Census Bureau to make the survey, so the results could not possibly be construed as biased.

And here's what the Census Bureau found:

The GROSS vacancy rate of rental accommodations was 1.5%. (A rate of 5% is considered "normal.")

Of every four vacant rented units, only three were "habitable"—i. e., fit for human beings to live in. The balance were "uninhabitable and dilapidated."

Of the "habitable" rental units, only two out of three were even being offered for rent. The others were for sale only, or neither for rent nor for sale.

In other words, the actual vacancy rate for rental units in Nashville was found to be eight-tenths of one percent.

Social Security Bill Called 'Woefully Inadequate'

THE SENATE Finance Committee, after weeks of delay, began last week to complete action on its version of an improved Social Security bill, and drew immediate fire from Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, who said the Senate edition was "woefully inadequate."

The House last year passed HR 6000, which upped primary old age benefits by an average of 70% but in many other respects fell short of what CIO believes to be absolutely necessary improvements in the present law. The Senate appears to be heading for a less satisfactory bill than that passed by the House.

One improvement made by the Senate committee is a benefit adjustment which raises the average benefit by 90% instead of 70% but, through the action of other clauses in the bill, still holds the average cash benefits to $49 a month, nearly $100 short of the minimum necessary budget for an elderly couple as estimated by the Labor Dept.

Here are the principal changes and omissions in the Senate bill which hold it below House standards and far below the goal set by CIO:

1 The Senate completely ignored the limited program of permanent disability insurance approved by the House. At present, permanently disabled workers must wait till they are 65 years old before they receive any Social Security benefits, and in the interval the amount of the benefits they do receive at 65 declines because they are not working. The House said permanently disabled workers could receive benefits regardless of age. CIO approved the House proposal and asked similar treatment for temporary disability.

2 At present, workers earning more than $3000 a year receive no more in benefits than the lower-paid group because social security tax deductions are made only on the first $3000 earned in any year. HR 6000 upped this to $3600, and the CIO asked that it be increased to $48000.

3 The Senate made no change in the present method of calculating "average" wages, on which benefits payments are based. Now, the worker's "average" is pulled down whenever he is unemployed or disabled. HR 6000 would not allow periods of disability to pull the average down. CIO has asked that the average be computed on a best-five-years basis, thus eliminating the downward drag of involuntary unemployment and/or disability.

In the field of unemployment insurance, covered in the same bill, the Senate committee ignored President Truman's recommendation (see story Page 8) and proposed, instead, that loans be provided for state agencies which run out of funds, Cowan pointed out that this move did nothing to help those who had exhausted their benefit rights or who are not covered at all.

Commenting in general, Cowan said:

"The success of our unions in bargaining for pensions has spurred Congressional action. But Congress has been deaf to our request that the federal legislation be made really adequate so that our unions' plans would not have to be our main reliance. Clearly our unions will have to continue their collective bargaining efforts."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 11 million.	Passed House last session. Sen. Finance Comm. to complete action shortly. CIO has asked further improvements.	Ask Senators to accept and strengthen HR 6000.
Rent Control Renewal S 3181 HR 5790	Extends rent control one year to June 30, 1951, allows local option recontrol.	Senate Banking Committee has completed hearings. House hearings start this week.	Ask members of both Houses to vote full extension, accept no compromise.
ECA Extension HR 7378	Renews Marshall Plan for another year; sets $2,950,000,000 ceiling on funds.	House cut $250 million from authorization; Senate debate scheduled soon.	Ask members of both Houses to restore cut, pass bill as drafted.
Federal Aid to Education S 246	Provides over $300 million aid to states for schools; gives states broad power to supervise use of funds.	Bill, approved by CIO, has passed Senate. Ship Union Protests Pennsy Furloughs

Pres. John Green of the CIO Shipbuilding Union, has protested the Pennsylvania Railroad's off again-on again employment policy in its maintenance of equipment department following the fourth mass furloughing in the last year. He acted in behalf of Railroad Workers Division of the union.

Green sent protests against the most recent layoffs—which came a day after men were being hired for the same jobs — to W. S. Franklin, PRR president; Col. J. Monroe Johnson, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin.

Public Housing Foes Working A New Angle

Opponents of public housing in California are circulating petitions to amend the state constitution to require an election before any low-rent public housing project may be started.

At present approval by a county board of supervisors or a city council is the only authorization needed to permit local units to seek federal housing aid.

PREXY GREETS VEEP—Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley (seated) presided over the Senate in the early afternoon, dashed to the Washington Airport, flew to Atlantic City, hurried to the Auditorium and—appearing to be as relaxed as if he were on vacation—addressed the CIO Steelworkers convention. Dixiegops Pass Sen. Taft's Move To Delay Vote On FEPC

THE Southerners who have blocked every piece of civil rights legislation proposed since the Democrats won control of the Senate in 1934 did it again May 10.

They combined with anti-administration Republicans to shunt aside, still another time, debate and ultimate vote on Fair Employment Practices Commission legislation in spite of a vigorous fight by Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), Democratic majority leader.

The excuse was Sen. Taft's privileged resolution to take up consideration of President Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 12—to end the independent status of the general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board—so that a vote might be taken quickly.

THE VOTE ON Taft's motion to shift Senate attention from FEPC to reorganization was a thumping 50 to 22. Twenty Democrats joined with 30 Republicans to supply the majority. The Southern Senators voted for it as they would vote for anything that delayed a showdown on FEPC—even those who later voted in favor of the reorganization plan. Republicans who will vote for FEPC seemed more interested in retaining NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham, who has been called the most powerful single individual in government.

Debate on FEPC started on schedule on May 8 with Southern Senators frankly avowing their intention of filibustering it.

Discussion got under way slowly, with Sen. Thomas (D. Utah), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee which reported the bill without recommendation last year, saying it is designed to right a wrong "which fairly shouts for remedy."

It merely guarantees, he said, "an old, established right, the right of an equal place in our democracy for all of its citizens in the matter of consideration for that important element in every man and women's life, the getting and holding of a job worthy of his talents."

SEN. IVES (R. N.Y.), who remarked that the New York State FEPC law is working successfully, stressed the "conference, conciliation and persuasion" angles.

Sen. Russell (D. Ga.), leader of the anti-FEPC forces, dug deep into his bag of time-honored oratorical labels and declared the bill would establish "an army of thought police" and destroy American business.

The following day Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) urged passage of the measure for its international effect in answering Soviet propaganda belittling democracy in the United States. He told how, as Assistant Secretary of State in charge of public affairs, he had analyzed Communist propaganda and seen how it "distorted" our civil rights problems.

As U. S. delegate to three UNESCO conferences, he continued, he saw "how our unresolved civil rights problems hampered our efforts and our prestige in reaching out for the minds of men."

He warned that segregation in Washington has a "bitter effect" upon students and diplomats of all colors visiting from abroad.

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.), speaking against the bill, maintained that improvements for minority groups will not be attained by legislation of the FEPC type but "by constructive, affirmative programs—education, hospitals and health centers, public health and the prevention of disease, decent homes and housing on the farm and in the city, adequate wages and economic security under our American free enterprise system."

ON MAY 10 so much time was taken up with discussion of the Taft resolution and other odds and ends which had nothing to do with either FEPC or reorganization that Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), was the only one able to get in a word on the bill.

"It's not what we now say of FEPC but what we do that will be watched closely," he said, "not only in this country but in many other areas of the world.

"Our standing in the world and our influence in international relationships are as much at stake on the FEPC bill as on any measure which has been or will be before us for consideration and action."

Ever Hear of Bank Prexy Backing Strike? Guild Did

"And what is so rare as a day in June?" James Russell Lowell wanted to know 100 years or so ago.

The CIO Newspaper Guildsmen, on strike at the Arkansas Gazette in Little Rock more than 90 days, think they may have the answer.

It is in the person of Louis Layer, Dierks, Ark., bank president who carries not one, but two union cards in his pocket. He is a member of both a CIO and an AFL union.

He is unquestionably the only bank president in the country who has openly declared himself on the side of the Little Rock strikers.

The head of the Bank of Dierks has been a union sympathizer since the time when, as a young man, he covered a violent Colorado mine strike for a large Denver daily. He didn't like the way the paper gave an anti-union slant to his story and proceeded to say so.

When he finaly secured another reporting job, Layer continued to be sympathetic to workers. As editor of the Dierks Banner, his editorials indorsing labor unions were quoted by labor papers all over the country.

In 1943, shortly after being elected president of the Bank of Dierks, he was instrumental in helping organize the Dierks Lumber & Coal Co. for the CIO Woodworkers.

At a rally in Dierks a few weeks ago Layer and the IWA members at the mill assured the Arkansas Newspaper Guild that the Guild would win its strike.

Senate Defeats Plan To Curb NLRB Counsel

REPUBLICANS and the Southern Democrats joined forces May 11 to kill Pres. Truman's Reorganization Plan No. 12, which would have transferred to the Natl. Labor Relations Board the powers of its General Counsel, Robert N. Denham.

The vote was 53 to 30. Voting to kill the plan were 35 Republicans who were joined by 19 Democrats, all from the South except Sen. Gillette (D. Iowa).

Twenty-five Democrats—four of them from the deep South—and five Republicans supported the President's proposal.

Defeat of the plan was a personal triumph for Sen. Taft (D. Ohio). He killed two birds with one stone. By introducing the measure to defeat the plan he also forced postponement of the vote on the FEPC bill.

TAFT'S opposition to the plan was illogical, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote in a letter to members of Congress a few weeks ago:

"Even the staunchest adherents of the Taft-Hartley philosophy have come to recognize that such dual administration is unworkable. (i.e., the division of authority between the NLRB and Denham.)

"As a result the Taft bill containing several amendments to Taft-Hartley Act, which passed the Senate last year, provided for the abolition of the General Counsel's office."

But last week Taft had changed his field. He charged that Truman's proposal was part of a general plan to nullify T-H.

CIO Backs St. Lawrence Plan 100%

FULL SUPPORT of the CIO for the proposed St. Lawrence power and seaway development under public auspices was given to the House Committee on Public Works last week by Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

At the same time John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, gave that union's indorsement to the project.

Smith made it clear to the committee that the CIO's support of the seaway and power development is based on the assumption that enabling laws and the necessary treaty with Canada will provide adequate safeguards.

These he said, should assure a reasonable division of this country's share of the power between New York and other states, and its proper social use; self-liquidation of the seaway phase, and due protection for the "living resources" of the area.

Both he and Edelman stressed the necessity of getting more and cheaper power into New England as quickly as possible.

"WE FAVOR the approval of the agreement between the U. S. and Canada with the major qualifications contained in all of the bills which have been introduced granting such approval," Smith said.

"We would add a number of other qualifications and reservations, providing safeguards as to the manner of production, transmission and distribution, protecting other resources, giving instructions in regard to industries and communities and the like.

"The points which have been made in respect to federal control over the entire operation, including the provision of current to states outside New York, are of particular importance from our point of view. We regard them as conditions of our indorsement; the other qualifications also should, in our opinion, have the careful consideration of this committee."

SMITH SAID that the CIO indorsed the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the principles implicit in it, as long ago as the 1944 convention. The CIO reaffirmed its position that the production, transmission and distribution of St. Lawrence power should be done by public agencies or cooperatives.

In general, he continued, the CIO believes that the federal government should assume responsibility for hydroelectric power development.

A major reason why the CIO supports the seaway part of the project, Smith said, is that it will stabilize employment throughout the midwest.

Exhaustion of high grade iron ore in the Mesabi Range of Minnesota means the U. S. must turn to the Labrador-Quebec deposits or those in Latin America, with the result that there is a tendency of the steel industry to desert the middle west and concentrate in the already over-populated Atlantic seaboard.

Other industries might well folfow, he said, resulting in "great social dislocations" which should be avoided. The relocation can be minimized, he maintained, by providing proper water transportation from the Labrador-Quebec iron deposits to the midwest.

EDELMAN agreed with Smith's arguments against social dislocations. The TWUA spokesman told the committee that the high cost of monopoly electric power in New England, whether based on water or steam, is forcing many firms, especially in the textile industry, to move to other parts of the country.

"The Textile Workers urge the enactment of the proposed legislation primarily on the grounds of broad national interest," he said. "Our particular interest in the maintenance of a sound and thriving economy in New England has a vital bearing on the whole national welfare.

"I again emphasize that a clear majority of the people of New England and the people of New York want this undertaking to go through.

"I can guarantee you that the great majority of people who work for a living in this country are for this particular type of legislation, and especially they are for the broadest program of resource development that this country can undertake."

AFL Approves Early Labor Unity Meeting

THE AFL's top-level Executive Council last week showed interest in CIO Pres. Phillip Murray's proposal for labor unity.

Though not yet ready to join an over-all joint labor unity committee, as Murray had proposed, the AFL authorized early talks to explore the matter still further.

Meeting in Philadelphia, the Council approved a letter of reply from Pres. William Green.

Green wrote Murray that the AFL Council has "authorized and directed me to advise you and your organization that we are prepared to select a committee to meet a like committee of the CIO to engage in a conference looking toward an early and successful realization of unity upon a permanent and secure basis between our respective organizations."

Murray, presiding at the convention of the steel union, said that "we are anxious to meet with representatives of the AFL to discuss problems affecting the U. S."

He predicted that the CIO would soon name a committee to meet with the AFL spokesmen on the unity matter. The United Mine Workers and the Intl. Association of Machinists — both unaffiliated have already accepted Murray's proposal for a joint labor unity committee. Leaders of the railroad brotherhoods have the suggestion under consideration.

MURRAY, in setting forth his unity proposal, had called for the creation of a joint committee of "duly accredited representatives" of the various union groups with authority to set up a common legislative, economic and political program—and to work on means of achieving a merger of all the groups.

Green's letter indicated that the AFL Council is still interested in achieving "organic unity" as a first order of business, and voiced the Council's serious doubts that the Murray proposals would accomplish that goal.

Green added:

"We find ourselves in complete accord with the necessity of unity in all fields of organized labor's activities, and would direct attention to the several appeals previously addressed to your organization in the past number of years for unity not merely upon a tentative and cooperative basis, but upon a permanent and organized basis."

Nevertheless, because of the "mood and temper" of Murray's letter, the AFL is prepared to hold further talks on the subject, Green said, adding:

"We therefore await your early —and we trust favorable—consideration regarding the foregoing proposal for unity of organized labor, as represented by our respective organizations . . ."

Murray Calls Special PAC Meet In June

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has called an extraordinary conference in Washington on June 16 to rally all CIO national unions for an all-out effort in the 1950 Congressional and state elections.

"I most urgently ask the presence of the officers of our international unions—the presidents, executive vice presidents, secretary-treasurers and board members — the regional directors of the CIO, the leaders of the State Political Action Committees and the Director and Executive Board of the CIO-PAC," Murray said.

The conference, almost a full-scale convention of all top CIO officers, was called in a letter sent to all persons concerned on May 5. Public announcement was made on May 11, when Pres. Murray took the rostrum at the Atlantic City convention of the CIO Steelworkers, of which he is President.

[The decision to call the conference was made in the wake of primary results on May 2, when Fair Deal Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.), in spite of united labor support in Florida and a record turnout of votes, was defeated for the Democratic Senate nomination by conservative Democrat George Smathers, mainly on the FEPC issue.]

"We can in this year," Murray said, "by political action, win broad advances for the principles of human welfare and human security to which the CIO is dedicated.

"Or we can fall back into unemployment and depression, into scarcity and suffering—back into the economic jungle where the people perish and there is no provision for the general welfare.

"That is the decision that is going to be made in November of this year.

"It must be made right!

"Those who are moved by selfish greed, those who fatten upon the labor of others, those who fear the power of the people, are determined that it be made in their selfish interest.

"IN EVERY ward and precinct of our country these greedy interests are working today to seize control of our government and impose upon our people a reactionary and destructive program. They have endless money. They dominate the channels of public opinion. And they are desperate and unscrupulous, for they see in the election of 1950 their chance to subjugate this nation.

"We of the CIO have a high duty in this regard, to preserve ourselves and our country. But high purpose and good will are not enough in this dangerous year. Our course requires understanding and money and work...

"Please let me know as soon as you can of your arrangements to attend."

3 State Labor Curbs Upheld

THE U. S. Supreme Court last week handed down three decisions which upheld state court rulings that restricted the right to picket. They were:

1. A State of Washington law prohibiting picketing to organize employes not members of the picketing union.

This case grew out of a state court order prohibiting an AFL Building Service Employes Union from picketing a hotel on the ground that it sought to compel the proprietor to "coerce" his employes into joining the union. The order also barred boycotting the place and stopping of delivery service.

2. A California court decision prohibiting picketing of a Richmond department store to force it to hire Negro clerks in the same proportion as its Negro customers. The State Supreme Court had upheld the ruling of the lower court that such picketing violates the state's public policy against racial discrimination.

3. A State of Washington court ruling that picketing a business establishment to force an employer to observe specific opening and closing hours has been barred by the state's common law policy limiting picketing to situations where there is an immediate employe-employer dispute.

Two AFL unions had picketed to persuade two Seattle used car dealers to make their business hours to conform to those of the majority of the business in that city.

Bonine-Tripp Act Outlawed

Michigan's "Little Taft-Hartley Act"—the Bonine-Tripp law—was thrown out as unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court last week.

The law provided that Michigan unions must submit to a state-conducted election before calling a strike. The high court ruled that Michigan's law was in conflict with the federal statute and therefore invalid.

Chief Justice Vinson, speaking for a unanimous court, said the Michigan strike vote requirement for unions whose members are engaged in interstate commerce "conflicts with the exercise of federally protected labor rights. A state statute so at war with federal law cannot survive."

The case reached the Supreme Court as the result of a suit filed by the CIO Auto Workers in connection with a 1948 strike at Chrysler for a "third-round" wage increase. Irving J. Levy, UAW-CIO general counsel, argued the case.

Rehearing To Be Sought On High Court Red Oath Ruling

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

BY THE END of last April 108,646 officers of American labor unions had filed with the federal government an affidavit which said:

"1. I am a responsible officer of the union named below.
"2. I am not a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with such party.
"3. I do not believe in, and I am not a member of, nor do I support, any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods."

That affidavit is required by Section 9 (h) of the Taft-Hartley Act from officers of any union—national or local—that wants to use the services of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

It had been challenged as unconstitutional by the CIO United Steelworkers, in a case arising out of the union's demand in 1947 that the Inland Steel Corp. bargain with the union for pensions.

Last week the U. S. Supreme Court in a long decision overruled the Steelworkers and held that the oath is valid.

Five members of the court—Justices Vinson, Reed, Burton, Jackson and Frankfurter — held that Sec. 2 of the affidavit, which covers Communist Party membership, is constitutional.

Three — Justices Vinson, Reed and Burton—ruled that Sec. 3 of the affidavit—is also valid.

One—Justice Hugo Black—held that both sections are unconstitutional.

Two — Justices Jackson and Frankfurter—agreed with Black that Sec. 3, with its stress on a person's belief, is unconstitutional.

Justices Minton and Clark did not join the decision, because they had been involved in the case in the lower courts and in the Dept. of Justice, respectively; and Justice Douglas abstained because he had been ill when the case was argued before the high court.

With the court thus split 3-3 on a major part of the affidavit, CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg announced he will file a petition for re-hearing.

Attorneys of the CIO American Communications Association, which had a similar affidavit case before the Supreme Court, also will seek reconsideration of the issues.

MUCH OF THE union case against the constitutionality of the affidavits rested on the argument that it violated the intent of the First Amendment to the Constitution, with its guarantees of freedom of speech and belief.

Justice Vinson, who wrote the majority decision argued, however, that the intention of Congress in approving Sec. 9 (h) of Taft-Hartley was not to interfere with free speech, but to regulate "harmful conduct which Congress has determined is carried on by persons who may be identified by their political affiliations and beliefs . . .

"Sections 9 (h) is designed to protect the public not against what Communists and others identified therein advocate or believe, but against what Congress has concluded they have done and are likely to do again," he wrote.

The Chief Justice argued throughout his lengthy discussion that the affidavit does not prevent an individual from voicing his beliefs, but does help prevent a union officer from pursuing a course of political strikes which would obstruct interstate commerce.

But though the majority decisions was filled with references to political strikes it gave no adequate description of them, nor did it indicate any clear or present threat to the national economy from this kind of walkout, which the Communists have rarely tried to use in this country.

Justice Vinson also held that the "belief" section of the affidavit raises no problem different from those in that section of the affidavit covering Communist membership. He added that the argument against the "belief section" as a form of "thought control" was an attack on a "straw man."

And he charged that it "is inaccurate to speak of Sec. 9 (h) as 'punishing or forbidding' the holding of beliefs."

BUT JUSTICES Frankfurter, Jackson and Black held sharply different ideas about that statement, and all of them indicate a worry that an oath which talks about "beliefs" could set a precedent for all sorts of discriminatory legislation.

Justice Jackson, whose decision included a bitter denunciation of Communist policies and tactics, concluded however, that any sections of the oath "that call for a disclosure of belief unconnected with any overt act is beyond its (Congress') power."

"We must not forget," he said, "that in our country are evangelists and zealots of many different political, economic and religious persuasions whose fanatical conviction is that all thought is divinely classified into two kinds—that which is their own, and that which is false and dangerous . . .

"Moreover, in judging the power to deny a privilege to think otherwise, we cannot ignore the fact that our own Government originated in revolution and is legitimate only if overthrow by force may sometimes be justified.

"That circumstances sometimes justify it is not Communist doctrine but an old American belief."

Jackson noted that he himself doesn't believe in forceful overthrow of a representative government.

JUSTICE BLACK, one of the most consistently liberal members of the court, argued that the majority decision rejects the "fundamental principle" of the First Amendment that "beliefs are inviolate."

He charged that no past case cited by the court gives any precedent that Congressional power to regulate trade and traffic "includes power to proscribe 'beliefs and political affiliations.'"

Justice Black, in a long review of history, charged that the test oath has always been an efficient instrument "for inflicting penalties and disabilities on obnoxious minorities . . . It helped English rulers identify and outlaw Catholics, Quakers, Baptists and Congregationalists — groups considered dangerous for political as well as religious reasons."

Even though only a small number of people may be affected by Sec. 9 (h), Justice Black continued, "centuries of experience testify that laws aimed at one political group, however rational in their beginnings, generate hatred and prejudices which rapidly spread beyond control."

Warning that restrictions such as that imposed by the Taft-Hartley oath are apt to spread, he asserted that the majority's reasoning would also lead to upholding laws "barring Communists and their suspected sympathizers from election to political office, mere membership in unions, and in fact from getting or holding any jobs whereby they could earn a living."

And, he said, one can visualize a situation where the oath could be used against other political parties—since members of one major party are now charging the other with "fostering a 'welfare state' alien to our system."

THE AFFIDAVIT provision of Taft-Hartley has been roundly criticized by spokesmen of all wings of the American labor movement.

They argued that the oath would have little effect in removing Communists from positions of union leadership; that it was an instrument to harass and smear democratic labor leaders; that no similar oath of any kind was required of employers; and that government services, including those of the Labor Board, should be available to all citizens.

In the three years since Taft-Hartley was passed by the 80th Congress, the oath has been signed by officers of almost every CIO union—but almost without exception they have so under protest and in order to protect the basic interests of their organizations from employer pressures and attacks.

Back Pay Suits Get 'Go' Signal

The way to possible collection of several million dollars in back pay was opened by the U. S. Supreme Court last week when it ruled that the Wage-Hour Act covers employes working under federal cost-plus contracts.

Some $40 billion of war work was done under cost-plus contracts in which an employer agreed to do certain work for a fixed fee plus expenses. Most workers employed under such contracts collected overtime pay as the act requires.

Some employes at the following installations said that they received partial back pay or none: Lone Star Ordnance Plant, Texarkana, Tex., operated by a B. F. Goodrich Co. subsidiary; the St. Louis Ordnance Plant, operated by the U. S. Cartridge Co., and the Arkansas Ordnance Plant, Jacksonville, Ark., run by Ford, Bacon & Davis.

The Supreme Court decision means they can sue to collect.

Higher Rent Campaign Bogged Down by Facts

The realty lobby at Grand Rapids, Mich., hoping to bolster its drive to end rent controls, inspired a housing survey by the City Commission.

When a special count by mail carriers showed only half the vacancies reported in the 1949 school census, the landlords decided to forget about the survey.

Fancy Slogans Poor Substitute For Action In Nation's Battle Against Strange Ideologies

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A LOT of people—if they're like me—are getting awfully tired of having "Americanism" drummed into them morning, noon and night.

It's almost impossible to get away from it these days.

Flip on your radio and you hear some character declare, "Be a good citizen. Help preserve the American way of life."

Turn to the editorial pages of many newspapers and magazines and you run arcoss the same thing.

Be a good American. Be a good American. Be a good American. Be a good American.

On and on it goes.

The idea, of course, is a worthy one. And behind it all is the desire of many people to prevent the spread of Communism.

But if the U. S. is in danger of Communism we're not going to drive back the menace with slogans and catch phrases.

UNFORTUNATELY, too many of those who go about beating their chests in the name of "Americanism" and the "free enterprise system" favor neither true political democracy nor equality of economic opportunity.

Their idea of a wonderful nation doesn't appeal too much to those who toy around with the idea that, maybe, somebody else has a better system than ours.

They, for the most part, would like to return to the "good old days"—the days before the New Deal, the days before the Wagner Act, the days when labor was weak.

They either won't admit there was anything wrong with the way we did things in the past or they're unwilling to remedy the faults that existed.

They'd create a 1928 model United States in a fast-changing 1950 world.

IT WOULD INDEED be refreshing to find the commentators and the editorial writers waging a campaign for a better America—for a nation which need not fear any totalitarian ideology.

The strange isms which most of us fear or dread breed in the slums—not where there are fine homes and beautiful landscaping.

The slums haven't been eliminated by "free enterprise," but the noisy "enterprise" advocates fight government slum clearance on the ground that it's socialistic.

Unemployment probably does more than anything else to make men question the value of our system.

Today there are more than four million totally unemployed and six to eight million who work only part time.

Yet there is no hue and cry on the part of anybody—except labor—for action designed to provide full employment.

Providing jobs, we're told, is the task of private enterprise and any over-all planning aimed at the achievement of full employment is socialistic.

LET'S MAKE NO mistake about one thing. No nation has done a better job for its people than the U. S.

But that doesn't mean there still aren't improvements to be made, problems to be solved, mistakes to be remedied.

Many of our citizens are denied the full exercise of their civil rights merely because of their race, creed or color.

In some parts of the nation there is no political democracy. In some places there is boss rule. In others there are voting restrictions which keep large segments of the population from the polls.

Technological developments are throwing thousands out of work, yet nobody has made any provisions for them.

The present relationship between prices, profits and wages is an unhealthy one, but the "American way" advocates say the situation is just dandy.

BE A GOOD American. Be a good American. Be a good American. On and on it goes.

At times it's easy to believe that the sloganeers question the loyalty of the people.

At other times it's easier to believe that they'd rather spend time and money on slogans than tackle the problems which need to be solved.

Sure all of us should be good Americans. And being a good American means living up to certain rules and meeting certain responsibilities.

It means behaving today so our country will be better tomorrow. It means trying to give a break to everybody—not just the chosen few.

And it means using all of the facilities at our command—private facilities when possible and government facilities when necessary—to create a society in which man has real dignity and the strange isms wither up and die.

THE PEPPER DEFEAT

Some political observers are trying to use the defeat of Senator Pepper in the Florida Democratic primary to prove something which they hope is true—that the Fair Deal is on the wane.

Frankly, we're not inclined to take these "experts" too seriously, especially in view of their poor record of prognostication in the last Presidential election.

But the defeat of Pepper shouldn't be brushed aside lightly by organized labor, which lost a real friend when he failed to win re-nomination.

His defeat should serve as a spur to CIO-PAC workers throughout the nation—should make them realize that they have a real task before them.

The Pepper-Smathers contest was a nasty, bitter one. The race issue was injected into it by the Smathers forces and exploited to the fullest. And Pepper's liberalism was frequently pictured as proof that Pepper was a Communist or at least sympathetic to the Reds.

And those who claim labor support is a liability instead of an asset never point out that Florida is not an industrial state and, consequently, is not highly unionized.

But, as we said earlier, the Pepper defeat should spur the liberals to greater activity.

HIGH TIME FOR ACTION

A lot of people will have a right to ask "how come?" if the Senate fails to pass a decent bill to set up a federal Fair Employment Practices Commission.

Both the Democratic and Republican platforms in the 1948 election talked convincingly about the problem of civil rights in our America.

But the action of the 81st Congress on the whole civil rights program—including FEPC—is in sad contrast with the words of the party platforms.

In the House, reactionary Republicans and southern Democrats teamed up to accomplish what the CIO Steelworkers convention rightly called "one of the most shameful displays of political chicanery ever perpetrated."

Now the Senate is considering FEPC, in a listless atmosphere that does not suggest vigorous action to combat the Dixiecrats' promised filibuster or to achieve final passage of a workable, effective law.

FEPC is not just something for minorities.

The rights of any majority are never secure so long as any minority can be pushed around at will. And minority groups—in the north and in the south—have been pushed around too long, through job discrimination and bias.

Furthermore, the FEPC issue affects America throughout the entire world, as Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) has pointed out. So long as Congress dawdles, we're a sitting duck for Soviet propaganda attacks against our democratic form of government.

So, millions of people—at home and overseas—are watching to see how the 96 members of the Senate act on FEPC.

We hope that they won't disappoint the supporters of democracy.

Packinghouse Workers Ask 30-Hour Week

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers have set their sights on a number of objectives in an industry-wide drive to improve hours, wages and working conditions for UPWA members. The aims are outlined in the union's "Program for 1950."

Foremost on the agenda will be a campaign for a realistic goal of "40 hours' pay for 30 hours' work," with an immediate objective of "40 hours' pay for 35 hours' work."

According to the union's statistics, more than half of all packinghouse workers, especially in the big chains, are on a 36-hour weekly guarantee. Layoffs, however, are so frequent and severe that large numbers of workers are unable to average even the meager 36 hours on an annual basis.

The union contends that while the basic rate for men in the industry is $1.15 an hour, the take-home pay of many workers amounts to less than $40 a week in spite of the fact that business is good, with volume at near peak levels and the outlook good for continued high profits.

Other improvements sought will be a guaranteed annual wage, which has already been successfully put into effect at the Hormel Co. plants, and the elimination of geographic wage differentials, especially in the South.

THE 1950 PROGRAM will also attempt to end discrimination against women workers by eliminating the present wage differentials due to sex, on the grounds that such a practice tends to lower general wage levels.

Health and welfare protection is scheduled to get a lot of attention from UPWA negotiators during the year. The union seeks to establish employer - financed medical service for the membership, as well as to provide retirement pensions and extension of present sick pay eligibility.

An all-out fight will be waged against discrimination in the industry because of race, creed or political beliefs, and a broad educational program among the rank and file will be instituted.

Various other features of the "Program for 1950" include paid election days with half holiday; full compensation on production above standard; pay for time spent handling grievances; check-off of authorized contributions, such as PAC, and time and one-half for all Saturday work.

CIO Protests Postal Cuts

"EMPHATIC objections" to the curtailment of postal services recently ordered by the Post Office Department have been registered with Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson by two of the top CIO officers—Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

In asking him to rescind the order, they advised Donaldson that the CIO and its officers are convinced that "ordered unemployment" will have a doubly adverse impact upon the national economy.

It will hamper both expansion and improvement of the mail service as other activities expand, they said, and add an undetermined number to the "threatening total" of unemployment.

"The allegation of economy in this instance," they wrote, "will not blind the American people to the fact that larger economies could be effected through greater efficiences and fewer inadequacies in the postal service.

"Real economy could be achieved by correcting inefficiencies and inadequacies in initial operations. It cannot be achieved by curtailing the end service to the American people."

82 Firings Upheld

The U. S. Court of Appeals at Chicago, Ill., has upheld the dismissal of 82 supervisory employes who refused to enter the Gary, Ind., plant of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., during the 1946 strike of the CIO Steelworkers. The 82 were not members of the union. The ruling upheld a prior decision by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

It Was A Mistake But A Good One

THE HERO of this story is an "eager beaver" whom we shall call Joe—a guy who didn't mind giving a helping hand when it was needed.

He didn't know much about the labor movement when he joined a local union, but he began learning rapidly.

Before long he developed a flair for organizing and frequently volunteered to help out in local membership drives.

He was one of those fellows who would walk in where angels fear to tread and occasionally he accomplished the seemingly impossible.

Then, one day, he made a mistake—and this is the story of his error.

THE CIO representative in the area was a bit of an "eager beaver," too, and he usually had a lot of irons in the fire at the same time.

He would start one organizing campaign before another was finished and sometimes he tackled more jobs than one man should handle.

When this happened he would call for volunteers from the local unions to help him out—and he always got help.

He could always depend on Joe—if he told Joe exactly what to do and explained how it should be done.

THE CIO representative had a lot of important work piled up on him when he got a summons to a conference many miles from his base of operations.

He couldn't ignore the summons, so he locked up his office, hurriedly packed his bag and caught a plane.

At the conference he immediately plunged into some more work—and then he remembered that he was in a jam back home.

He had set a time-table for himself on the job of obtaining the membership applications of a majority of workers at a small plant.

He felt that the plant was "in the bag," so he hadn't pushed the project too hard.

But he decided that something had to be done in a hurry.

DURING A luncheon break in the conference the CIO man rushed to a telegraph office and dashed off a message to Joe back home.

"We're in a jam," he said. "Must have majority of workers at . . . plant signed up by this week-end. Can't get back until Monday or Thursday. Appreciate it very much if you'll assume responsibility for getting majority. Thanks."

He breathed a sigh of relief. Joe was a good fellow and he knew enough about the situation to handle it.

So back to the conference he went, feeling certain he could forget about the project back home.

FOUR OR FIVE days later the CIO representative returned to his home base, opened and read his mail.

Then he had some visitors in his office—and then a luncheon engagement.

Finally, late in the afternoon, he called Joe.

"Well, Joe, how did it go?" he asked.

"Swell," replied Joe. "Didn't have a bit of trouble."

"How many signed up?"

"Oh, about 70% of 'em. Say, I'll bring the application cards right over."

Joe showed up about 20 minutes later, with a big smile on his face and a handful of union application cards.

He tossed the cards on the desk and the CIO representative started examining them.

"None of these names seem familiar to me," he said. "Are you sure all these fellows work at.....?"

"Why, hell no!" Joe exclaimed. "You told me to get a majority at the.....plant."

"Well, you've organized the wrong place, but we need a good union there, too."

Smathers' Victory Seen Pointing To New NAM Tactics

THE BIG SHOTS in the Natl. Association of Manufacturers are reported to be kicking their heels against each other in glee since Rep. Smathers licked Sen. Pepper for the Democratic nomination for Senator from Florida.

This is the first time since 1936 they've kicked against anything except the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

They are telling each other that Smathers is their boy, that he is favorable to business and that from now on the business point of view will be heard in Washington, according to an interview with an unnamed NAM official printed in the Christian Science Monitor under the byline of Joseph C. Harsch, chief of its Washington bureau.

But more important even than the victory of Smathers and the fact that the Democrat always wins in Florida is the change in NAM political thinking, according to the article. Business was as favorable to Smathers as Smathers was to it, the interview explains.

"Business backed Mr. Smathers in a substantial manner," said the writer's paraphrase of the NAM official. "It paid off."

The important part is, he concludes, that business has learned its lesson. Having tasted victory and replaced a man it regarded as its implacable foe with a pal, it will divorce itself from the Republican party which it has been using as a means to the end of getting rid of the New Deal and killing off the Fair Deal, he writes.

And instead of supporting a party it will support candidates regardless of label where it will be advantageous for it to do so. Thus in a few years, he implies, Smathers' solo act will grow into a chorus.

There's nothing wrong with supporting your friends, of course. Organized labor has been doing it for years.

Senate Changes May Liberalize Social Security Bill

THE TWO TOP Democratic Senate leaders announced last week they intend to propose two important liberalizing amendments when the Social Security bill reaches the floor.

These amendments will meet some of the serious objections of organized labor to the bill approved by the Senate Finance Committee.

Sens. Lucas (D. Ill.) and Myers (D. Pa.) said they will ask the Senate to enact a program of permanent and total disability benefits as contained in the House-approved version of the bill.

They also will seek to raise the wage base above the $3000 limit voted by the Senate committee. By this method, Lucas and Myers said, "we hope to correct what we regard as the most serious weakness in the benefit formula established by the committee."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who was informed of the Senators' decision by telegram, replied that he appreciated their efforts to liberalize the Senate bill.

"We urge in addition," Murray said, "that you include retention of the present 1% annual increment." (This would have the effect of giving workers who had been covered longest proportionately more in benefits than newly covered workers who will be brought under the Federal old age benefit provisions for the first time if the proposed measure passes. The Senate draft has cut out this feature entirely.)

The Finance Committee has completed preliminary action on the bill, HR 6000, which passed the House last session. It will report the measure to the floor sometime within the next fortnight.

AS DRAFTED, THE Senate version is "woefully inadequate," according to Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director. In some respects it is better than HR 6000, but in others it is far worse.

The House bill extended coverage to another 11 million workers, whereas the Senate bill adds approximately 8,280,000.

The Senate bill ups present benefit rates by about 90%, as compared to the House-approved increase of 70%. But in effect it retains the present low maximum and the present unfortunate method of calculating "average wages." This has the effect of twice penalizing workers for disability.

In a streak of economy, the Senate committee cut another section of the House bill which would have increased the federal share of contributions to federal-state public assistance funds.

Give A Buck and Some Of Your Time To Strike Out The Pro-TH Nine

In Years Gone By

Steel Union Was Built With Workers' Blood

By WILLIAM WEISS

Well-meaning individuals outside the labor movement are sometimes puzzled by the tenacious spirit of workers on strike against large corporations.

If they are puzzled, it is because they do not understand that men on strike against an employer's injustice do not measure the cost in terms of suffering or hardship.

They know when they make the decision to walk off the job what the consequences will be—long hours on picket lines, short food rations and pressure from various groups to go back to work on the employer's terms. They know what the price will be and are willing to take their chances on winning, regardless of the odds against them.

This spirit of determination has become the heritage of the CIO Steelworkers in battles against the steel companies.

IN NOVEMBER, 1892, Henry Frick, then superintendent of the Carnegie Steel Corporation plant in Homestead, Pa., was doing a little wishful thinking when he sent the following cable to his boss, Andrew Carnegie, who was touring the art galleries of Europe:

"Our victory is now complete and most gratifying. Do not think we will ever have serious labor trouble again . . . We had to teach our employes a lesson and we have taught them one they will never forget."

Frick was referring to the end of the four-month strike against the company, called by the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers and broken by a combination of Pinkerton detectives and 8000 national guardsmen. Seven strikers and three detectives were killed and more than 60 men wounded in a pitched gun battle with the Pinks early in the strike.

The strike resulted from the company's refusal to renew its contract with the union.

From 1892 until 1919, Frick continued to look good on his predictions. In the latter year the Amalgamated's membership had shrunk to 10,000, scattered among small, unimportant mills.

During that period the steel companies had a simple and effective formula for discouraging workers from joining the union. Devised by an executive, it consisted of the following technique: "If a workman sticks his head up, hit it!"

HOW WELL THE method succeeded in keeping the workers cowed is shown by the results of a survey made in Homestead in 1907.

In fifteen years the common labor wage rate had risen from 15 to 16½c an hour while the cost of living had jumped 22%. The eight-hour day had given way to the 12-hour shift, and 60% of the men received less than $2 a day.

In 1919 the men in the steel mills tried once more to unite for their protection. In September of that year, 60,000 walked out in the Pittsburgh district and were shortly followed by 300,000 others in Wheeling, Chicago, Cleveland, Youngstown and Johnstown.

Strikebreaking in this instance took the familiar pattern. The newspapers labeled the strikers "aliens" and called attention to the "foreign nature of these agitators."

The mayor of Duquesne, near Pittsburgh, left little doubt as to where his sympathies lay by declaring that: "Jesus Christ himself couldn't speak in Duquesne for the AFL."

The nationalist spirit was dragged into the dispute by the steel companies when it was asserted in full-page nawspaper ads: "There is a strong possibility that the Huns had a hand in fomenting the strike, hoping to retard industrial progress in America."

Two strike-breaking agencies were hired by the companies—Corporations Auxiliary and Sherman Service—and instructed to stir up as much bad feeling as possible between Serbians and Italians. The companies further fanned the flames of racial hatred by importing carloads of Negroes from the South to take over the strikers' jobs.

The strike collapsed Jan. 8, 1920, and the beaten men crept back into the plants—except those who were blacklisted. It was another outstanding victory for the companies.

The depression in 1929 hit steel hard. Stockholders were getting the headlines by diving out of Wall St. windows but the companies were setting the stage for a first class rug-pulling act on the steelworkers.

On Oct. 1, 1931, U. S. Steel and Bethlehem began the process by slapping the workers with a 10% wage cut. Weirton Steel slashed payrolls five times in 11 months. Getting the true spirit of the thing and not to be outdone, U. S. Steel and Bethlehem again lowered wages 15% in May 1932.

IN 1932 a worker in the steel mills—if he was fortunate enough to be working full time—was getting $13.20 weekly. A study by the Dept. of Labor of 53,000 steel workers showed unskilled labor averaged $11.71 a week that year. The average worker got $600 annually.

In 1933 the steel barons discovered a new method of depriving their employes of a voice in matters pertaining to wages and working conditions—the open shop. Little attempt was made to indicate that the employe representation plans, as they were called, were coming spontaneously from the workers.

The philosophy behind these plans was summed up by one millionaire steel maker: "My people do not know what is good for them. Only I know what is good for them. And I know that a union is not good for them."

Eugene Grace of Bethlehem put the matter a little more bluntly when he said: "If 95% of my men belonged to a union, I would not recognize them as union men or as members of the union. I think that is better for the men."

By 1934 between 90 and 95% of the steel mills in the country were under company union plans. As it turned out later, the industry, sponsoring the company unions, was unknowingly building the foundation of a genuine trade union movement. In effect they made it easier for Steel Workers Organizing Committee when SWOC representatives under the direction of Philip Murray started the now historic steel organizing drive in 1936.

PANIC SEIZED the industry as thousands upon thousands of workers rushed to join the new union despite company efforts to stem the flow by hasty wage increases and improved working conditions.

Early in February, 1936, SWOC had 150,000 members, but the crowning blow to the steel makers—who had termed the organizing drive "a complete failure,"—came in March when Carnegie-Illinois, a U. S. Steel subsidiary, signed a contract with SWOC. It recognized the union as sole bargaining agency, raised wages 10%, and established the eight-hour day and 40-hour week with time and a half for overtime.

Within three months SWOC had contracts with 140 steel companies, including one of the largest independents, Jones & Laughlin, and by July had the industry 75% organized. The "impossible" had been accomplished.

That other 25%, which included "Little Steel" companies, however, was a different matter. Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Inland Steel and Youngstown Sheet & Tube refused point-blank to sign. On May 26, 1937, a strike of 78,000 workers commenced.

VIOLENCE BEGAN almost at once. At South Chicago's Republic Steel plant police fired into a group of 1000 workers gathered to celebrate Memorial Day. Ten were killed and 90 wounded.

In addition to those steel workers killed in the Memorial Day Massacre, three were killed at Massillon, Ohio; two died in Youngstown, Ohio; and another was fatally injured at Beaver Falls, Pa.

It was industrial warfare at its worst. Some time later, the LaFollette committee of the U. S. Senate heard testimony that the four "Little Steel" companies, together with state, county and municipal authorities, had spent more than $178,000 for munitions with which they attempted to break the strike.

"Little Steel" finally signed in the face of the solidarity of the steelworkers, and today the companies who fought the efforts of the workers to organize in the early days now accept the United Steelworkers as the bargaining agent for their employes.

The companies would like to forget those early days—but the men who work on the open hearths and in the hot mills can't forget the years when they had no union to protect them.

Marine Board In Commerce Dept. Backed By Sea Unions

THE COALITION of American unions in the maritime industry set up a few weeks ago to combat communism on an international scale has advised Pres. Truman of its support of Reorganization Plan 21, which would abolish the Martime Commission and create a Maritime Board and Administrator of Maritime Affairs in the Dept. of Commerce.

The President was notified of the unions' support in a letter signed by Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee and Washington representative of the Natl. Maritime Union, and Matthew Dushane, Washington representative of the AFL Seafarers Union.

Supporting the plan, in addition to the NMU and Seafarers, are Marine Engineers and American Radio Association, both CIO; the Masters, Mates & Pilots and the Radio Officers, AFL, and the unaffiliated Marine Firemen.

"These organizations took this position (of support of Plan 21) because they could not support a continuation of the commission in its present form," Haddock and Dushane wrote, "since the commission has failed to take action when action was needed.

"Upon occasions when it has acted, its actions were often improper and against the better interests of the merchant marine.

"The Martime Commission has hindered the welfare of the merchant marine by its position on the transfer of American vessels to foreign registry, the operation of American-owned foreign flag vessels, the militarization of the merchant marine and other vital issues.

"The Commission has failed to provide constructive and vigorous leadership for the industry. Their collective attitude has brought, as a whole, either negative or destructive results.

"Seamen and those affiliated with the martime industry are incensed at the attitude and actions of the Commission. Public opinion is crying for a change.

"In view of their record and the lack of public confidence, the maritime unions feel that vigorous support must be given to your Reorganization Plan 21."

Medicos' Money

The American Medical Association's views of the relative importance of improving quality of medical education and of lobbying against health insurance are shown in the figures of how it's spent on each. The doctors' organization is raising a $3 million fund to fight health insurance. Over the past 45 years, its Council on Medical Education and Hospitals has spent between $3 and $4 million on improving and developing training of doctors.

GM's Huge Profits Backdrop For UAW's 31c Package Proposal

FRESH FROM a smashing victory over the "arrogant" Chrysler Corp., the CIO Auto Workers are ready and willing to take on the industry's giant, General Motors, in the union's "fourth round" pension and wage hike drive.

Delegates to the UAW General Motors Conference last week authorized Pres. Walter Reuther and other union leaders to cancel the existing GM contract "whenever they see fit" unless substantial progress is shown in coming bargaining sessions.

(The two-year contract expires late this month, but the union and GM have agreed to extend the contract until a 30-day cancellation notice is served by either party.)

Reuther has called the union's proposals to GM for a wage increase, $125 monthly pensions and other benefits, "the UAW pattern for 1950."

Dir. T. A. Johnstone of UAW's GM Dept., said he had reported to the conference that "no noteworthy progress" has been made in 21 meetings with the company since negotiations opened March 29.

Union proposals made to the company include a "package" of 31c an hour increase for the 260,000 UAW members in GM plants throughout the country. The union is asking $125 monthly pensions, a 9c an hour wage boost, larger company payments for insurance benefits, a union shop, severance pay and increased vacation pay.

A factor which impresses UAW negotiators is the huge amount of GM profit.

During the first 90 days of 1950, the huge auto corporation made $212,387,765 profit after taxes—a rate of close to $2½ million profits a day.

The first quarter was even more profitable than the previous record-breaking third quarter of 1949. Last year, GM cleared $656,000,000 after taxes, and appears set to go even higher this year.

Reuther, addressing the Steelworkers convention, pointed out that during the first three months of 1950, General Motors made $1.16 profits for every dollar it paid out in wages.

Last year, GM argued that the company's high profits did not warrant wage boosts because they were only temporary and would drop in 1950. UAW officials look for the same routine this year—that operations are "at a record high" and can be expected to drop.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed by UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey that expenditures in the 100-day Chrysler strike totaled $3,001,391.-12.

He estimated that emergency strike relief, which would be continued until Chrysler workers drew their first pay checks, would amount to an additional $1 million.

PJNW Leaders Honored

Approximately one hundred members, guests and friends in the Buffalo area of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers on April 27 attended a dinner honoring Intl. Pres. Anthony H. Esposito, and Intl. Secy.- Treas. Alex Bail

Among the guests at the event which was held in a Buffalo hotel, were Hugh Thompson, CIO Regional Director, toastmaster; James Miller, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Buffalo CIO Council; Joseph J. Lovas, CIO field representative; John T. Galluccio, CIO Paperworkers international representative; Clifford Haley, regional director of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; John Paran, field representative IUE-CIO, and Bee Devine, New York State CIO Council Board Member.

Murray To Steel Union Conclave:

Strike Spurs Demand For Better Social Security

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THEY MET on the stage of the big auditorium at Atlantic City and shook hands. Photographers' flash bulbs popped and delegates applauded.

Then Philip Murray, president of the CIO and the United Steelworkers, walked to the microphone at the steel union's convention last week and introduced the Vice President of the U. S.—Alben W. Barkley.

And Barkley, a gifted speaker, captured the close attention of some 2300 unionists as he drew a sharp word picture of the worldwide "war" between democracy and communism.

Barkley put it this way: The best way to defeat the forces of totalitarianism is to make democracy work better.

"We are trying by all of our power and our influence—domestically and internationally — to preserve the rights of the men and women and children of the world and of this great nation of ours," Barkley said.

"We are striving to make our democracy stronger. We are trying to fortify the foundations of our economic life so that every man and woman—without regard to race or color or politics—may feel that they have a chance with every other man and woman in the battle of life."

BARKLEY MADE it plain he felt that "bad economic conditions make bad politics and bad government" and that greater freedom requires other security.

And it was on a "security" note that Murray opened the convention—the fifth biennial meeting of the Steelworkers.

The steel union, he said, made great progress last year toward establishment of real social security for the nation's workers—but not without undergoing the rigors of a major strike.

"The issues involved in that strike were of such a fundamental nature that the response of our people to the call of the national organization in striking for the institution of pensions and insurance agreements was, to say the least, magnificent.

"That was one strike you won. You won it not only for your own union but you won great gains for people in all walks of life—in the CIO and in other labor organizations—and millions of people who are not affiliated with any labor organization are bound to derive great material benefits from the victory which attended your efforts."

Take a look at Congress today, Murray said, and you can see the far-reaching effects of the pension-insurance program won in 1949 by the Steelworkers.

Before the strike was won, he said, "CIO officials wore the soles off their shoes walking through the halls of Congress" in an effort to obtain improvements in the federal social security system "but we could not move them."

An "almost miraculous change" took place after the strike, he said.

"Republican Congressmen, Dixiecrats and all got together," he said. "Employers rushed down to Washington and met them and they said: "'We have got to have better social security. We have to protect the interests of the poor, the weak, the infirm and the sick.'

"They are all supporting improved social security now because they don't want to pay all the bill, you see."

DEBATE AT the convention followed trade union—not ideological—lines, but Murray received heavy applause when he lashed out at the Communists.

He outlined the procedure by which the CIO last year set out to accomplish a general housecleaning, then turned his attention to the United Electrical Workers union, which was thrown out of the CIO on charges that it was Commie-dominated.

"The old UE is the hard core of red communism in America—that's what it is," he declared.

"It has the type of leadership which devotes itself exclusively to serving the interests of international communism and the Soviet government.

"And so, as citizens of the United States, who believe in God, who believe in country and who believe in our democratic institutions, we say to the red leaders, 'Get out; we don't need you in America.'

"We are fighting those boys; we are fighting all of their evil, diabolical, traitorous methods of undermining America and the American labor movement."

SECY. OF Labor Maurice J. Tobin gave the American labor movement a firm pat on the back for the role it has been playing in international affairs.

"If I were to leave this platform today without paying due tribute to the labor movement for the contribution it has made to the strengthening of the democracies this side of the Iron Curtain I would be remiss in my duty as Secretary of Labor," he said.

He referred to the workers of the U. S. as "super-diplomats" and said they had done "superior work" in their efforts to strengthen democracy in Western Europe.

"You have done your duty on the international front," he said. "You have done your duty on the domestic front—and I am confident that in the year 1950 you are going to do your duty again by contributing to the election of men and women to the Congress of the U. S. who will preserve the gains that we have made and contribute toward the building of a more prosperous economy than America has ever known before."

Tobin sharply criticized the Taft-Hartley Act, calling it "one of the great dangers to the future economy of the country."

PRES. WALTER P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told the convention:

"We cannot meet the challenge of the Cominform in the world by using pious slogans about democracy's virtues. We must meet the challenge of the Cominform by a practical, realistic program of social action which demonstrates that American democracy has the moral strength and the practical know-how to come to grips with and solve the basic problems of the great mass of the people.

"The world will judge America, and we in America must judge ourselves, not by our technical progress but by our ability to translate technical progress into human progress, into human security and human happiness and human dignity."

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers said that by creating a demand for improved social security legislation, the Steelworkers had "legislated, not only for yourselves, but for millions of workers in America. . . . Your strength is our protection and the protection of all labor."

CIO AND STEELWORKERS Pres. Philip Murray was delivering his opening convention address when this picture was snapped.

Politics Absent

There was no open politicking at the steel union's convention this year. Next election of officers (including district directors) will be in February 1953.

'A Courageous, Great Man,' Murray's Tribute To Bittner

"He had confidence in men; he had faith in men, and he believed in God—a courageous man, a great man, a man who provided much inspiration and hope to his fellow men.

"And he died just one year ago as he lived. He died, virtually speaking, with his boots on. For a period of approximately 18 months prior to his death he was very ill, and yet he would get out of his sick bed and go to meetings . . . . . dragging his poor little weak body, with its great spirit, across those Southern states to address men and women and to provide them with inspiration."

That's what Philip Murray said at the steel convention about his friend of many years—the late Van A. Bittner, vice president of the Steelworkers and director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Union Shop Declared Next Major USA Goal

THE UNION shop — under which every worker must join the union — is the next "primary goal" of the CIO United Steelworkers.

A resolution enthusiastically endorsed by the USA-CIO convention called on union officers to seek NLRB union shop authorization elections so that the Steelworkers may properly demand a union shop clause in future contract negotiations with the industry.

"The union shop is essential to protect our union against the attacks on the part of those who seek to weaken or destroy our organization," the USA-CIO resolution said.

The union shop, it added, is necessary to assure that the "small minority of free riders" who benefit from advances won by the USA-CIO "will contribute their just share to the support and maintenance of our organization."

The resolution was one of nearly 50 brought to the floor of the steel union's fifth biennial convention.

They commended officers and members for achieving the union's pension and welfare victory last year; hailed Pres. Murray "as an outstanding leader of labor," and paid tribute to the late Vice-Pres. Van Bittner for a "career of service to labor and all the American people."

"We heartily acclaim, approve, support and commend the CIO" for its forthright stand against Communist-dominated unions, the Steelworkers said, and they pledged "full support and assistance" to the new IUE-CIO in its fight to rid the electrical industry of Communist-dominated unionism, in the form of the old United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

Other resolutions backed CIO Pres. Murray's plan for labor unity, endorsed the CIO legislative program, called for a national health insurance program and improved social security, demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and passage of the President's Civil Rights program, and listed the winning of a guaranteed annual wage as a major goal of the union.

960,738 Members

A "fact-sheet" provided reporters at the steel convention says the union has more than 2000 local unions with a total membership of 960,738 and that the net worth of the union on Dec. 31, 1949, was aproximately $8.5 million.

Steel White Collar Workers Cut Juicy Melon

THE CIO Steelworkers have signed a precedent-making agreement with four U. S. Steel Corp. subsidaries granting a $10 million retroactive salary adjustment to 20,000 white collar workers, Pres. Philip Murray told the convention last week.

The adjustments are part of the wage inequity and job classification program undertaken in the industry in 1944 by order of the War Labor Board. The study was completed in 1947.

Murray predicted that the company-wide agreement, the first ever negotiated covering salaried workers in a basic industry, would be the key to similar contracts for 75,000 to 100,000 white collar workers in major steel companies.

He said that if Bethlehem, Republic, Jones & Laughlin and other large producers follow the lead of U. S. Steel, the industrial white collar workers would share in a $40 million melon in retroactive pay.

Under the schedule of rates set up for 16 job classifications, messengers are to be paid a minimum of $160 a month; file clerks $196; typists $212; and stenographers $227. At the top of the list are designing draftsmen at $415 monthly.

The new rates go into effect on the first pay day after July 15 and apply retroactively to Jan. 1944.

$2 Billion In Life Insurance Covers 630,000 Union Members

The CIO Steelworkers Union has negotiated agreements which provide approximately $2 billion in group life insurance coverage for 630,000 members, Pres. Murray told convention delegates.

The union, he said, is now in the process of working out pension and social insurance agreements for an additional 125,000 members.

A total of 1,750,000 persons—630,000 union members and their families—are now protected by hospitalization benefits, he added.

Pair Of NLRB Rulings

Quizzing Workers About Union Barred

THE NATL. Labor Relations Board has found the Meier & Frank Co., Inc., operators of the largest department store in Portland, Ore., guilty of committing unfair labor practices by using illegal tactics to block union organization and questioning its 3000 employes about their union activities and sympathies.

In another ruling the NLRB found that a union needing individual wage data to bargain intelligently can get it for the year prior to the contract negotiations.

In the Portland case the board upheld virtually all of the recommendations of Trial Examiner Thomas S. Wilson which were made public several weeks ago.

When the Portland Oregonian printed them at the time, the company promptly cancelled the bulk of its advertising. The action touched off a storm of attack by defenders of the free press, including unions, liberals and conseratives. The company has since restored some of its advertising volume to the newspaper.

CHARGES against the company were filed by the AFL Retail Clerks, Union. The board unanimously found the firm guilty of promulgating and enforcing a "no solicitation rule" too broad in scope; permitting a store detective to trail an employe and a union organizer outside the store; timing a cut in hours, with no cut in pay, so as to discourage organization; permitting a supervisor to discourage employes from reading union handbills by urging them to throw "that trash" into a large waste basket conspicuously placed at the employes' entrance, and by questioning the employes as to their sentiment toward the union.

The board held that the company was within its rights in banning solicitation of union membership on the selling floors at any time. But the NLRB added that it went too far when it prohibited such solicitation off the selling floors during the employes' non-working hours—such as before and after work, and during lunch or rest periods.

By a three to two vote, it ruled that the store did not violate the act by prohibiting organizers from making engagements with employes while on the selling floors.

The ruling on making wage data available to unions was handed down in a case involving a local of the AFL Office Employes and the Yawman-Erbe Mfg. Co., of Rochester, N. Y., which was found guilty of unfair labor practices. It covers the names, job classifications and wage rates of all employes in the bargaining unit, whether or not they are union members.

HOWEVER, a union is not entitled to such data for earlier years in the absence of a specific showing that such information is essential to a full picture of the wage situation, the board held.

A three-man board quorum composed of Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Abe Murdock agreed the union should have been given the information for Jan. 1, 1949 and Jan. 1, 1948. Murdock dissented from the majority ruling that it was not entitled to the same information for the two earlier years.

"The negotiations brought directly into issue the wages being paid under the 1949 contract," said the ruling, "and a disclosure of such wages by the respondent (company) was necessary to enable the union to bargain intelligently.

"Most certainly the going rate is factor to be considered by a union in determining whether or not to press or eliminate its demand for a general wage increase.

"Likewise, current wages are directly related to the demand for a minimum. Without such information, there is no basis for determining to what extent, if any, the minimum wage would affect any employes in the unit.

"Further, the information requested for 1948 would enable the union to ascertain if any wage inequities existed among employes in the unit and to frame its contract demands so as to eliminate any possible discrepancies."

NLRB Rules Out Useless Pay Data

An employer who tries to outsmart a union by giving payroll data in such a form that it is useless, can't get away with it, the Natl. Labor Relations Board told the B. F. Goodrich Co., Akron, O., on May 13.

During bargaining sessions the company gave Local 5 of the CIO Rubber Workers an alphabetical list of employes and a separate list of pay scales in all departments but wouldn't match them up.

The NLRB, on the union's complaint, ordered the firm to provide a list of all employes identified by name, department and payroll number showing the salary of each before and immediately after a wage increase of July 1, 1948; the present wage, and the number of performance rating points received by each at the last rating.

Speeches Don't Count At Polls, Kroll Tells Ohio PAC Institute

SOME 285 CIO-PAC workers in Ohio were back home last week putting into practice the lessons they learned in a week-end of hard, concerted study at a Political Action Institute conducted by the Ohio CIO-PAC.

The institute, designed primarily for those leading PAC units in Ohio industrial areas, will be duplicated in other sections of the state. It's part of a big pre-campaign "get-ready" program.

The "students," representatives of unions having membership in the state, heard qualified instructors tell them just how to do an effective political action job. The students split into groups of about 55 each for five separate courses.

"We are here to learn how to use the implements of democracy more effectively than we ever have in the past," said Jack Kroll, chairman of both the national CIO-PAC and Ohio CIO-PAC, in a keynote address.

"On election day they don't count speeches, radio broadcasts, pamphlets or news releases. The only thing they count is votes.

"Therefore, it is up to us to see to it that more people than ever before are registered; that they are made aware of the paramount importance of this election and the issues that are at stake. And finally, and most important, that they get to the polls and vote on Election Day."

Kroll said that no democracy has ever failed when its citizens have taken an active interest in their government.

THE COURSES of instruction were led off by one on registration, with I. W. Abel, of Canton, district director of the CIO Steelworkers, detailing the way registration drives should be conducted.

Julius Uehlein of the Ohio CIO-PAC staff, sketched the proper technique for building a live-wire, successful organization of block workers.

Methods that can be used to get the story on the issues into the homes of the voters were expounded in classes on PAC publicity by Dr. A. L. Lewis, publicity director of the CIO United Rubber Workers.

The building of an election day organization—which he stressed should be started immediately—was described by Jacob Clayman, Ohio CIO secretary-treasurer.

A COURSE ON the PAC organization was taught by Paul Shearer and Elwood Dietrich, of the Ohio CIO-PAC staff, who described the full table of organization, its duties and the means of financing it.

Darrell Smith, of the National CIO-PAC staff, at an overall assembly midway in the sessions, outlined the major issues in the 1950 campaign. The students discussed ways and means of getting these issues home to the general public as well as to CIO members.

The main issue in the Ohio campaign will be Sen. Taft (R.), co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, who is running for re-election against State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson, the Democratic candidate.

Packing Union Halts Efforts of Safety Conference To Ignore Undulant Fever

EVERYBODY perspires more or less in hot weather. But how would you like to perspire —have it pour off you—from one year's end to another?

Especially when you feel pain in every joint every time you move, and your knees and ankles and fingers and the rest of the places where your bones come together swell out of shape? And it stays with you, and if you could look inside yourself you'd see that your spleen was a lot larger than it ought to be?

If you suffered like this you'd be like a lot of members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers. The chances are it would be undulant fever, also known as Malta fever because of its prevalence in the Mediterranean area. It's caused by bacteria that live in the intestines, and it's no fun. It is transmitted by cattle, pigs, goats, etc.

But when the plant safety directors and union representatives and state officials got together recently for an industrial safety conference sponsored by the Illinois Department of Labor, the subcommittee on "bacteriological factors as a cause for occupational disease" tried to brush off undulant fever and other bacteria-caused ailments as something of little importance.

THE SUBCOMMITTEE didn't quite get away with it, however, because the lone labor representative on it was Lyle Cooper, research director for the Packinghouse Workers.

Over the objections of the other members—the medical directors of two packing houses, the safety division head of another, and an insurance agent—he filed a minority report calling for a thorough-going survey of diseases like undulant fever "by people who have no special axes to grind."

The majority tipped its hand in the opening sentence of its report. It read:

"Biological factors as a cause of occupational diseases in the state of Illinois have never been reported as a significant item since the enactment of the Occupational Disease Law in 1936."

COOPER DERIDED the majority's statistics as completely meaningless. Whenever a thorough study of the kind he called for has been made, he pointed out, it has shown that undulant fever is a lot more prevalent than official statistics indicate.

"There are packinghouse workers in this audience," he said from the floor, "who aren't too concerned with abstract studies and statistics. Some of them are victims of the very disease we're talking about. All of them know men and women working in the industry who are disease victims."

Sam Curry, president of Local 347, Packinghouse Workers, supported Cooper's stand during discussion. He described some of the conditions in packinghouses that expose workers to the diseases common to the industry, such as undulant fever.

"We don't have fancy words for the diseases the packinghouse workers get," he said. "We know, however, that a great number of us are afflicted with skin diseases, fevers, itches and other ailments. You just can't pass us by with a whitewash report."

WARNING: You don't have to work in a packinghouse or around food animals to contract undulant fever. It can also be transmitted — and most commonly is — by drinking unpasteurized milk.

Health Insurance Booklet Issued

"Did you ever have a sick child —with the nearest doctor miles away? . . . Did you ever put off going to the doctor, or lie in a hospital bed and worry—because medical bills come so high?"

"These things are happening every day to millions of Americans," says a booklet issued last week by the Democratic National Committee for widespread distribution throughout the country.

Titled "Better Medical Care That You Can Afford," the booklet describes the President's National Health Program and explains why national health insurance is a necessary part of it. The booklet says the program is a "common sense plan," which would "remove the dollar barrier by everybody paying his share of the cost of medical care in small regular payments."

The booklet is attractively illustrated and makes a case for national health insurance simply and to the point. Information about obtaining copies in bulk for union distribution can be obtained from the Democratic National Committee, 1200 18th St. N. W., Washington, D. C.

Carey Sure IUE Will Win At RCA In Elections Set For This Week

THE RADIO Corporation of America this week took the spotlight in the campaign of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to free employes in the electrical industry from the red-tinged United Electrical Workers.

Six thousand, seven hundred and fifty RCA workers will go to the polls in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election at Camden, N. J., and Pulaski, Va., May 18 to determine their collective bargaining agent.

IUE-CIO Administrative Committee Chairman James B. Carey expressed "complete confidence" over the outcome of the election, predicting that the new CIO union would win by an "overwhelming majority."

Other developments in the battle between the two unions included a blast at the UE by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) for "falsifying and distorting" statements he made during an interview with a reporter from the UE NEWS and a second statement from the Atomic Energy Commission that the UE would be barred from U. S. atomic installations.

Congressman Powell, in an angry reply to the UE article, said: "This is a sorry spectacle—all in all, 14 lies, half-truths and distortions in a one-page newspaper article! And for the purpose of beclouding the issues in a fight for trade union democracy!"

He said he was "shocked" when he found that the UE reporter had "twisted my remarks into an attack on President Truman and the CIO."

The re-affirmation of the November, 1948, AEC stand on the UE in atomic plants came when Acting Chairman Sumner T. Pike made it clear that the UE would be barred even if it won collective bargaining rights in the AEC General Electric plants.

When asked about the forthcoming elections in GE, Pike said: "They can't have any organization in any plant we operate, and they can exercise no disciplinary action over our employes."

"That doesn't mean, as you know," he said, "that a UE member can't work there after he has been investigated and has a thorough clearance, but that there can be no union organization within that shop."

When asked if he meant no union at all, Pike replied: "I mean no UE."

"FOR POLITICAL ACTION and to beat Bob Taft I can afford a dollar any day," declares Elizabeth Vanderbank, 82-year-old member of the CIO Clothing Workers of Cincinnati, Ohio (above), as she hands a dollar of her pension money to ACW Employment Manager Ben Herman.

Women's Magazine Unwittingly Argues For National Health Insurance Plan

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

NOTHING can scare the wits out of the average worker more than the threat of serious sickness in the family—unless it is the fear of unemployment. And often these two frightening specters go hand in hand.

They did in the case of Merrill and Virginia Phillips, a young couple with a five-year-old son who live in Walton, Ind.

The true story of what happened to this typical American family as told in the May issue of the Ladies' Home Journal, makes argument indirectly for the National Health Insurance program advocated by the CIO.

There are millions of lower income families in the U. S. who have found themselves in similar serious predicaments—or might at any time.

They say trouble comes in bunches. It certainly did for the Phillips family. As Dorothy Cameron Disney reports the story in "Was it Cancer?" one of a series of articles on "How America Lives," it started when Virginia Phillips noticed a lump on her breast one hot evening in July, 1949.

SHE DIDN'T go to the doctor about it, largely because of expense. Merrill Phillips' pay averaged only $60 a week, and out of this they were trying to save aside enough to finish the work on the small house they had built themselves, and were now living in before it was quite finished.

A big medical bill would set back the work of getting their house comfortably livable. Besides Virginia thought that she might be only a "worry wart," and that there was nothing seriously wrong. Still the fear of cancer continued to haunt her and she lay awake nights, sick with worry, thinking about the cancer operation her mother had undergone two years before.

In addition to the expense, other factors which made Virginia delay seeking medical attention answer some charges against national health insurance.

One of these goes: It would do away with the personal relationship between a patient and his family doctor. (The Phillipses had no family doctor.)

Another claim: Voluntary insurance meets the hazards of emergency sickness.

(The Phillipses had hospitalization insurance — it cost them $7.50 a month—but it provided only partial coverage. Virginia was afraid the extra costs would jeopardize their hard-won home.)

IRONICALLY it was more trouble, that brought relief to Virginia's worry about possible cancer. A 250-gal. oil tank fell on Merrill one evening while he was on a job, pinning him helpless to the ground with the tank resting on his chest. Four men who rushed to help him struggled frantically to lift it off him and at length succeeded.

When Merrill was lifted to his feet, he was relieved to find that his chest wasn't crushed and that his legs worked all right, but his arms hung useless. Both his collarbones were broken.

For ten weeks Merrill was forced to wear a heavy cast strapped from his neck to his waist. He had to be spoon-fed at home like a child. The good that came out of his accident was that at last Virginia's fear about having cancer got attention. The doctor attending her husband examined her and insisted that she must have an operation.

As soon as it could be fitted into the Phillipses' emergency regime, the operation took place and Virginia's fears were dissolved. The growth was not cancerous.

THESE TWO serious hospital experiences were not the only ones that fell upon the harassed family. The small son who had been limping around was found to have a cyst on a leg joint which had to be removed. And a mole which the doctors cut out of Merrill Phillips scalp was found to be malignant. The diagnosis was skin cancer! Extended X-ray treatments were ordered.

At this critical point, an American Legion Post came to the rescue of Phillips, who was an ex-GI, and obtained his admission to Hines Veterans Hospital where his head was operated on again to assure removal of all malignancy.

It was at the height of the family's agonizing worries over sickness and fear of not being able to keep their little home, that the second terrifying specter struck at them. Phillips' boss fired him, explaining that he was forced to reduce expenses.

AND YET, if all the tragedies sickness and unemployment have brought hard-working American families were known, this story could be said to have a happy ending.

For the Phillips family pulled through the ordeal by sickness—thanks to charity—and were able to keep their little home.

(Merrill Phillips still has not been able to find a steady job.)

But think how much needless worry and suffering they could have been saved under a comprehensive national health insurance program.

Umpires Safe At Gadsden, During Strike At 'Coke' Plant

The baseball park at Gadsden, Ala., promises to be a safe place for umpires with faulty vision to work this summer.

Insults, catcalls and boos will still be heard when a decision is rendered against the home club but the satisfying sound of an empty Coca-Cola bottle thudding against the skull of the offending arbitrator will be missing.

The reason behind the lack of "umpire ammunition" is that Gadsden CIO members have slapped a consumers' boycott on the sale of the beverage in the stands. They did it in support of the strike being waged by Local 34 of the CIO Brewery Workers against the Gadsden Coca-Cola Bottling Co.

During the opening game of the season, with more than 6000 fans in attendance, not a single bottle of Coke was sold.

Other CIO uions in the state are cooperating with the Brewery Workers by insisting that plants under CIO contracts remove Coca-Cola vending machines from the premises.

Local 34 members walked out Jan. 24 when the company refused to negotiate a new contract. A wage increase is the main issue, according to E. W. McGrory, Brewery Workers representative.

Negotiators Are Seeking To Avert Lumber Strike

NEGOTIATORS for the CIO Woodworkers and the powerful lumber barons of the Pacific Northwest were working intensively last week to head off a threatened strike of 40,000 timberworkers.

The walkout, if called in support of the union's fight for six paid holidays and a health and welfare plan, would affect lumberjacks and employes of mills, plywood plants and similar operations.

J. E. Fadling, IWA president, said that the workers, by a substantial majority, authorized the Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee to call the strike not later than May 15 unless the committee has an employer offer good enough to put before the members.

The figures were not revealed, but more than 40,000 strike ballots were sent out.

The union's health and welfare program calls for $3000 life insurance with double indemnity for accidental death or dismemberment; $40 a week sick pay for 26 weeks off the job, and $20 per week for 26 weeks to supplement inadequate workmen's compensation payments; and employer-paid hospitalization with medical and surgical care. The Federal Conciliation Service is assisting with the negotiations.

The Woodworkers and Canadian operators employing 30,000 members in British Columbia also are deadlocked on negotiations for a wage increase of 17c an hour and the union shop.

OWIU Seeks 'Gas' Inquiry

THE CIO OIL Workers Intl. Union last week asked Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), chairman of the House Monopoly Investigating Committee, to see if a number of oil companies are not violating anti-trust laws through reciprocal agreements to fill market commitments on gasoline.

The request was made in a telegram signed by international officers and members of the international executive board. The union also wants the Celler committee to see whether or not the various companies fix prices collusively, and if all consumers are penalized because of the production difficulties of one firm.

"We particularly urge you to investigate the present conduct of the Texas Co.," the telegram said.

"Our union has been in dispute with this company since April 4. Since that date, four-fifths of the Texas Co.'s refining capacity has been closed down, first because of strikes by our members and later because of a lockout of these members by the company.

"Despite this sharp curtailment of its refining operations, the Texas Co. has continued to meet its market obligations due to reciprocal aid from other companies.

"In the State of Texas, the price of gasoline has been raised one-half cent a gallon by all major companies, apparently because of the difficulties caused by our dispute with the Texas Co.

"It is apparent that the customers of all companies are thus being penalized because of the difficulties of a single company."

Oklahoma Fair Names McVay

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert W. McVay has been appointed to the Executive Council of the Oklahoma State Fair & Exposition to be held Sept. 23-30 at the State Fair Grounds in Oklahoma City.

McVay also serves as a member of the Executive Board of the Oklahoma Industrial Development Committee, the Oklahoma City Mayor's Committee, and the Greater Oklahoma City Bond Drive.

Lola Graves, representative of the CIO Communications Workers, has been appointed to the advisory council of the Oklahoma Employment Security Commission.

Joint Labor Dance

With State officials present, the joint CIO-AFL political action committee of the county held its first annual ball at Bay City, Mich. Dave Finn, AFL, is president and Rudolph Sierras, CIO, is recording secretary. Among the guests were Gov. G. Mennen Williams, State Rep. Martha Griffiths, Tom O'Laughlin, president of the State AFL, Chuck Rogers, CIO Auto Workers legislative and PAC representative, and Bill Kemsley, Michigan CIO Council education director.

Senate Isolationists' Drive on ECA Fails

SENATE AND House conferes were at work last week trying to reconcile differences—most of them minor—in an omnibus foreign aid bill that authorized expenditures of $3,122,450,000 during the coming fiscal year.

The bill was passed by the Senate the night of May 5 and continues for another year Marshall Plan aid to war-damaged foreign countries despite a desperate isolationist drive to cripple it.

The Senate authorized $2.85 billion for the Economic Cooperation Administration — the same amount as the House approved—after administration forces had beaten down an amendment by Sen. Kem (R. Mo.) to slash the $3.1 billion request by $1 billion. A second amendment by Sen. Taft (R. O.), pruning it by $500 million, lost by a 40-40 vote.

However, a third amendment, proposed by Sen. Bridges (R. N. H.), to uphold the House cut of $250 million was accepted by a 47-33 vote.

No appropriations were made in the bill, which merely authorizes the spending. The isolationist and economy forces in both Senate and House will make another attempt to whittle down the ECA funds when the appropriation measures come up.

The CIO urged support of the bill in its original form, including $3.1 billion for Marshall Plan aid alone.

THE MAJOR point of difference in the Senate and House bills lies in the authorizations for implementing President Truman's Point Four program for building up the world's economically underdeveloped areas. The House approved $25 million, including $10 million left over from last year.

The Senate approved $45 million, including the same $10 million, after defeating by a 37-36 tally a Taft proposal to shelve the whole thing. A few minutes before, the Senate had turned down by 41-33 a substitute amendment setting the program aside pending a study by a bi-partisan commission.

In addition to funds for the Marshall Plan and the Point Four program, the bill approved $100 million for aid to Korea and reappropriated the same amount for non-Communist China and nearby areas, and $27,450,000 for the relief of Arab refugees in Palestine. When the House passed the bill a month ago it authorized the same amounts.

Sen. Connally (D. Tex.), who led the floor fight, in an effort to head off the $500 million cut in ECA funds demanded by Taft, needled the Republican leader.

"The Senator from Ohio," he said, "sits in his office with one eye on the map of Ohio and the other on his pocket, and could not name six of the European projects for which this authorization is requested."

In trying to defeat the Bridges amendment Connally read a letter from Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul G. Hoffman describing the various economy proposals as "penny-wise and pound-foolish," and warning that they place "in real jeopardy" the $10 billion American taxpayers have already invested in recovery.

SEVERAL amendments were defeated and two approved before the measure was finally passed by a 60-8 vote. The diehards were Sen. Johnston (S.C.), the lone Democrat; and Sens. Kem, Jenner (Ind.), Malone (Nev.), Wherry (Neb.), Dworshak (Ida.), Williams (Del.) and Young (N. D.), all Republicans.

One of the defeated amendments would have required ECA to supply European food and fibre needs by purchases of U. S. farm surpluses, while another would have required sanctions against participating countries discriminating in any way against American importers or products.

Still another would have demanded of the participating countries that they remove all fiscal controls by the end of the year and join in a United States of Europe.

One of the approved amendments requires FBI clearance of all Point Four program employes. Another prohibits France from using ECA counterpart funds until discrimination against former U. S. GI's now in business in French Morocco is ended.

Ruttenberg On Way To UNESCO Parley

Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director, sailed for Europe last week as a member of the U. S. delegation to the world-wide conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization.

"I'm working my daughter's way through nursery school."

Union Aides' Faith In ECA Reaffirmed

TWENTY-ONE labor union representatives, including eight CIO leaders, met recently in Washington with Economic Cooperation Administrator Hoffman and reiterated their whole-hearted support of the Marshall Plan.

The trade unionists were invited to the conference by the ECA chief. He gave them a first-hand report on the progress of the Marshall Plan to date and discussed objectives for the remaining two years of the program.

Hoffman reviewed the accomplishments in Europe during the past two years, including the part played by both American and European free trade unions.

He asked for continued support for ERP and presented to them for consideration, the problems that remain to be solved before the plan comes to an end in 1952.

Hoffman specified that he was not asking for commitments from the labor leaders at the present time but he asked that they consider these aspects of the Western European problem:

- Increased productivity to stimulate an increased flow of commodities at lower prices and higher wages.
- The import-export program designed to close the dollar gap.
- Assistance that must be given the trade union movement in Europe to continue holding back Communist control of the labor movement.

The following CIO leaders were present:

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, Pres. Michael J. Quill of the Transport Workers, CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg, Education Dir. Victor Reuther of the Auto Workers, Executive Secy. Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale, Department Store Union, and Elmer Cope, CIO European representative.

Monkey Ward Sued For $730,000 By Union

A suit asking $730,000 damages has been filed in superior court, St. Louis, by Local 20, United Mail Order, Warehouse and Retail Employes-CIO, against Montgomery, Ward & Co. In a 1945 dispute the government seized the plant and Sewell Avery, board chairman, was carried out of his office by soldiers.

The company got an injunction, which ordered the union to stop publishing allegedly defamatory articles. The injunction was later set aside by higher courts. The union now charges the injunction damaged the union and its leaders.

Ice Firms Indicted In Anti-Trust Case

The New Orleans Ice Delivery Corp., 13 ice manufacturers and certain officers of the companies have been indicted by a federal grand jury in New Orleans on a charge of violating the Sherman anti-trust act. At the same time a civil suit was filed by the Justice Dept. to enjoin continuation of the charged violations and to restore competition. The defendants are accused of pooling production, fixing prices, allocating customers and restricting importation of ice.

FAIR SEX UNIONISTS: If a pretty girl is like a melody, there was plenty of music at Textile Workers convention. Large proportion of delegations were women and girls. These three were "having wonderful time"—and working hard, too. They're Barbara Bennett, Holyoke, Mass.; Alice Deschesnes, Salem, Mass.; Mary Vaz, Ludlow, Mass.

7500 Wis. Bell Workers Win 7c An Hour Raise

THE CIO Communications Workers union has signed a new agreement with the Wisconsin Bell Telephone System bringing pay rises averaging 7c an hour to approximately 7500 plant and traffic employes.

The pact, which CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne termed "a good guide" for settlement of 24 other disputes with the Bell System, provides pay hikes for 70% to 75% of the 10,000 workers with an average boost of 7c an hour on the basis of a 40-hour week.

The contract does not include a general wage increase. The wage boost is figured by shortening the eight-year apprentice period to six and a half years, upgrading 16 of 60 towns and a number of jobs in both plant and traffic departments.

The increase was effective May 7 for workers in Milwaukee and May 14 for those in the rest of the state.

CWA had scheduled a strike of 250,000 of its members for Feb. 24. It was deferred for 60 days at the request of Pres. Truman. A few hours before the April 26 deadline, the strike was "indefinitely postponed."

The union announced at the time that developments in negotiations "indicate the possibility of agreement in present Bell System disputes."

CIO Committee Attacks D. C. Segregation Proposal

THE CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination notified all members of the House last week of its opposition to the McMillan bill, which would transfer to the District of Columbia some recreational facilities in the District now under the jurisdiction of the U. S. Dept. of the Interior.

The District Commissioners have announced the swimming pools will be operated on a segregated basis even though they have been run on a non-segregated basis in the past.

In a letter signed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is chairman of the committee, the group pointed out that the bill—HR 5968—was reported out favorably by the House District Committee without public hearings.

The CIO Committee maintained that its passage "would not only set a dangerous precedent and be detrimental to the District of Columbia and the United States, but is timed to cause the maximum of confusion and increase racial tension."

"The passage of this bill," Carey wrote, "in the light of the intention announced by the District Board of Recreation, would confirm to the world at large the hypocrisy that America is charged with practicing regarding the rights of our minority groups. Therefore, the CIO opposes and condemns the McMillan bill."

Liberalized Aid For Idle Killed

The Republicans on the Michigan House Labor Committee ganged up on Gov. G. Mennen Williams' proposals for a liberalized unemployment compensation law, killing the bill in committee by a straight party vote of 6 to 3.

The measure would have increased benefits, extended the duration of payments, brought all industrial workers under the act and eliminated crippling amendments in the present law. The committee is heavily weighted with Republicans and hopes to stall a report until after the present special session.

Travel Time Injuries Held Compensable

If a man draws pay for time spent traveling to and from work he is covered by workmen's compensation, the California Supreme Court declared in a precedent-making decision.

The case grew out of claims arising from an accident in which three workers were injured and one killed on their way home from a construction project in San Bernardino. Under their employment agreement, they were being paid for an extra hour each day for travel.

Advisers Find Flaws In Jobless Aid Rules

PRESIDENT Truman's program for establishing minimum uniform unemployment compensation standards received important support last week from the Federal Advisory Council of the Dept. of Labor, which is composed of representatives of industry, the public and labor.

The council, after an exhaustive study of state compensation laws and administration under the present federal-state system, unanimously found that "substantial defects and gaps exist . . . that require speedy correction."

It further urged the Secretary of Labor to make an urgent request to Congress for "appropriate federal action" and also to make "the strongest representations to state governors that the states should take prompt action to correct the deficiencies in their laws, whether or not the federal government establishes minimum standards."

The report was not unanimous in all particulars, since the two labor representatives, Mrs. Katherine Ellickson of the CIO and Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL, urged a completely national system of unemployment insurance. Industry and employe representatives would not go so far.

However, the report was unanimous in its criticisms of the present state of affairs, as follows:

1. About one-third of all jobs, involving 19 million workers, are not covered by unemployment benefits. "If these gaps in coverage are to be closed, federal action is indispensable."

(Under the present system, the government decides who shall be covered and collects the tax from covered employers. The tax is held in a special fund to be drawn upon by the states, which set their own schedules of eligibility, amount and duration.)

2. "Benefits average less than 40% of average wages . . . and in many states more than one-half of those who receive unemployment insurance benefits are exhausting their benefits before going back to their old job or finding a new one."

The Council recommended that state maximums be increased to permit payment of 50% of average wages, and that state duration of benefits be raised to 26 weeks.

3. Disqualifying provisions in many state laws are too strict.

Aimed at the small percentage of chiselers, they are hitting the innocent. The average nationwide rate is 16 disqualifications per 100 applicants, a number the council found too high. It "believes that the problem of chiseling and fraud can be met without penalizing workers who are genuinely unemployed."

4. "There are many thousands of claimants who are entirely or partially deprived of benefits" because they are employed in more than one state, and the states will not or do not cooperate on combining wage credits.

Where such combinations are made, there is often intolerable delay. The Council recommended that Congress should empower the Secretary of Labor to require state participation in methods for combining wage credits and paying interstate claims.

5. Some states are exhausting their contributed share of the federally-managed Unemployment Fund, while others are nowhere near exhausting it.

The council found that since it would be patently unfair to require the stricken states to up their unemployment tax rates, thus putting themselves at a competitive disadvantage in acquiring or keeping industries, the overall excess in the federal fund should be made available to them.

It was unable to agree on the proper method; industry representatives recommended a loan system such as that proposed by Chairman George (D. Ga.) in the pending Social Security bill, while the labor representatives agreed with the Dept. of Labor that outright grants should be made.

U.S.-State Help Aids Deaf, Hard-of-Hearing

More than 5000 jobless or unsuitably employed deaf and hard of hearing persons were prepared for and placed in self-sustaining jobs during 1949 through state-federal vocational rehabilitation services, reported Michael J. Shortley, of the Federal Security Agency.

Before rehabilitation about 87% of the deaf and 60% of the hard of hearing were unemployed. The agency estimated that at least 37,000 deaf and 237,000 hard of hearing need rehabilitation to earn a living or work at their fullest capacities.

Brilliant Idea

Landords who are organized into what they call the Federated Taxpayers' League at Grand Rapids, Mich., want to boycott unions which favor rent control. They'd refuse to hire union members to build or repair their structures and wouldn't rent them to union families.

CIO Urges Aid To Handicapped

CIO SEC'Y-TREAS. James B. Carey told a Senate subcommittee recently that problems involving the welfare of the physically handicapped "are beginning to stir the conscience of the nation."

The testimony before the subcommittee on Vocational Rehabilitation of the Physically Handicapped was delivered by Frank Tembach of the CIO Research Dept.

Carey declared the CIO wants adequate provision for on-the-job training for the physically handicapped, so they may qualify for more lucrative and suitable employment.

Carey called for support of a proposal that grants be provided to aid states in establishing rehabilitation centers. The CIO is in favor of eliminating the present 90-day limitation on hospitalization as prescribed by the Vocational Rehabilitation Act.

"We cannot afford to allow millions of our neighbors to suffer the frustrations and the hopelessness inherent in the belief that they are economic deadwood—a burden to their families and the community," he said.

He declared the CIO favors either Senate Bill 1066 or 3465. Both of them would transfer the program of job training, job counseling and job placement of the physically handicapped from the Federal Security Agency to the Dept. of Labor.

More Jobs Needed

Non-farm employment in New York State increased by 27,200 jobs to 5,442,300 between Feb. 15 and March 15 but was still 16,100 less than in March, 1949, Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi reported last week.

Gains were recorded by all major industries, with retail trade and government employment leading the way, he said.

OWIU Says ILWU Intervened In Poll

A RED-SHAFTED knife was plunged into the back of the CIO Oil Workers in California's East Bay area last week on the eve of two of the most important NLRB elections in the petroleum industry in years.

It was struck there by those supposed "champeens" of the working man, leaders of the CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. This is the union for which the National CIO has set a hearing this week on charges that it is dominated by Communists. The hearing committee could recommend expulsion of the ILWU, whose president is Harry Bridges.

The stab-in-the-back came in the form of a heavy distribution of ILWU leaflets 24 hours before a two-day election at the Richmond refinery of Standard Oil and a week before an election at the bitterly anti-union Union Oil Co. at nearby Oleum. The Oil Workers were challenging the so-called Independent Union of Petroleum Workers at Richmond, and fighting off its challenge at Oleum.

THE NET result of the comfort which Bridges' ILWU gave to the company union was to help swing some 200 votes from the Oil Workers in the Richmond contest and to deprive it of a clearcut victory, according to local officers.

The tally was OWIU 897; IUPW 839; no union 89; challenged 55. The Natl. Labor Relations Board immediately began a determination of the validity of the challenged votes—21 of them cast by OWIU members who were blacklisted after the 1948 strike and ordered reinstated by an NLRB trial examiner last year.

The Oil Workers need 941 votes for a victory. If all the challenged votes are thrown out, a second election must be held.

The Oil Workers feel the ILWU leaflet was levelled at them because their international president, O. A. Knight, is chairman of the trial board which will hear the Communist-domination charges against the Bridges' union.

THE LEAFLET completely ignored the autonomy of the Oil Workers and was filled with words and phrases straight from the party line, such as "autonomy" and "top brass" and "kangaroo court." In a way it was reminiscent of the kind of support the ILWU gave the Oil Workers during the critical 1948 strike.

At that time ILWU top brass spearheaded efforts by the old California CIO Council—the charter of which has since been revoked by the CIO because of its Communist domination—to wrest control of the OWIU from its properly elected local and international officers and take over conduct of the strike. That effort didn't succeed.

The conduct of the Bridges union contrasted sharply with the support other Bay Area CIO locals and the Northern California CIO regional office gave the OWIU in the representation fight. Auto Workers Local 560 of Richmond, for instance, purchased a half-page newspaper ad urging Standard Oil employes to vote for the Oil Workers if they wanted a democratic union and honest, able representation.

LEADERS OF the Oil Workers declared flatly that rank-and-file ILWU members had nothing to do with the stab in the back. There was no record, they said, that the leaflets were authorized by any membership vote.

"If the ILWU is not a Communist-dominated group, they have nothing to fear," said the Oil Workers in a statement. "The group will get a fair and impartial trial.

"Why, then, does the present leadership of ILWU continue to try to interfere in the affairs of the Oil Workers International Union, unless this interference is Communists-inspired?

"This bulletin is in no way trying to discredit the rank-and-file membership of ILWU—no more than the ILWU attack was inspired by that membership.

"We have been saying for months that we are unalterably opposed to communism and to company unions—and now both factions join in an attempt to defeat organized labor."

La Follette Gets Leave From ADA

Francis Biddle, Natl. Chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, has announced that ADA Natl. Dir. Charles M. La Follette had been granted a leave of absence on account of ill health.

La Follette, lawyer, former Congressman, former Military Governor in Germany and ADA National Director since July 1, 1949, has been advised by his physician to retire temporarily from the strenuous routine of work he has followed in his years of public service.

"We shall miss La Follette's great zeal in promoting democratic liberalism," Biddle said. "We hope the cause which he has served so devotedly for many years will not long be denied his services."

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The convention of the United Steelworkers of America-CIO was one of the finest affairs that the writer has ever had the pleasure of attending. Those in attendance displayed a tremendous loyalty, devotion and pride in the splendid organization they represent. It was a great tribute to Pres. Murray and his associate officers. The 1949 steel battle that gave to steelworkers all over the country greater security, pensions and hospitalization has completely won the hearts of these workers and their families.

In an NLRB union shop election in Philadelphia for the 10,000 members of the Transport Workers, Local 234, these workers expressed by their vote their desire for a union shop and the CIO program. Of the 8598 who voted, 7805 marked ballots for the TWU-CIO union shop; 643 voted no; and there were 80 challenged votes. A great deal of credit goes to Pres. Quill, the officers and members of Local 234 for these splendid results.

CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson reports that in a representation election at the Consolidated Packaging Machinery Corp. the workers voted 85 IUE-CIO; 5 no union. Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE victories: Eastern Tool and Stamping, Lynn, Mass., IUE 61, no union 8; a run-off election at the Remington Rand Co., Ilion, N. Y., IUE 1074, no union 928; Thordarson Electric Mfg. Co., Chicago, IUE 141, no union 10; American Pulley Co., Philadelphia, IUE 178, UE 36, no union 3; Consolidated Electric Lamp Co., Champion Lamp Works Div., Lynn, IUE 294, no union 20; Metric Metal, Erie, Pa., IUE 616, no union 64, void 1; Superior Electric Co., Springfield, Mass., IUE 7, no union 0.

The Steelworkers have won several major victories over the discredited Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at the Jenkins Valve Co., Bridgeport, Conn., the workers voted 362 USA-CIO, 308 MMSW. CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports a representation election victory at the United Iron Works, Pittsburg, Kan., by a vote of 81 USA-CIO, no union 1. The organizational work in this campaign was handled by Harold Edwards, sub-regional director, District 34, and Intl. Rep. James Baker. Intl. Rep. N. A. Zonarich reports that in a representation election at the Calumet and Hecla Consolidated Copper Mining Co., Calumet, Mich., the USA-CIO was victorious by a vote of 908 USA-CIO, 869 MMSW, void 4 and 1 challenged.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that in a union shop election at the Lunkenheimer Co., Cincinnati, the workers voted in favor of Local 1728, USA-CIO, by yes 1022, no 34. USA-CIO Rep. Al. Jordan was in charge of the election for the union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at the Chambers Range Co. warehouse, Indianapolis, Ind., covering 19 employes, 14 voted in favor of the CIO; 2 voted no union and there were 3 challenged votes.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the System Electric Products Co., Vernon, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the UAW-CIO by 8 to 1. This campaign was under the direction of UAW Intl. Rep. Lester Learned.

CIO Reg. Dir. Del Garst reports the following union shop election results: St. Louis Spring Suspension Service Co., 8 UAW-CIO, 0 against; Moog Industries, Inc., 159 UAW-CIO, 6 against.

Delay On Rent Control Measure Aiding Foes

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

RENT CONTROL extension is heading for the last-minute Congressional rush which always precedes adjournment, particularly in an election year.

The House Banking Committee is proceeding at a leisurely pace with hearings on extension—magnificently ignored by the daily press.

The Senate Banking Committee has finished hearings but "has not even considered the question of when to take the bill under consideration," according to a committee clerk.

AND MEANWHILE, in the dim recesses of the House Appropriations Committee, the Office of the Housing Expediter, which administers rent control, is fighting for its financial life. Unless Congress gives it another $800,000 by May 26, it will go out of business—more than a month before the present law expires on June 30. Nothing would please the real estate lobby more.

As of May 5, no hearings had even been scheduled on the request for $800,000, though it came straight from the White House.

This is the kind of situation which makes things look bad for the renters and good for the "compromisers." The wise money is now on what amounts to six-month extension of the present law, with a very low appropriation, until the end of this coming December.

This half-hearted measure, "best we can do in an election year," has enough support so that debate on it can be held to a minimum and it can slide through with relative ease in the last days of Congress.

THE SIX-MONTH extension measure is even being promoted by Chairman Brent Spence (D. Ky.) of the House Banking Committee, and by several key Senators who last year voted for full extension. The bill, as the Wall Street Journal remarked, is a "please-everybody" measure—it pleases the voters who want rent control extended and it mollifies those who want it ended.

Congressmen who want full extension surely will take it in preference to no law at all, the wiseacres predict, and the closer comes June 30, the date the present law expires, the heavier the pressure for compromise will become. And, of course, the GOP pressure for "economy" is mounting all the time.

The compromise contains a clever vote-getting hooker, too.

It doesn't exactly end rent control next Dec. 31; it just ends it then except in those areas whose governing bodies vote before that date to continue it.

Human psychology being what it is, that proviso is practically a guarantee that most city councils will be caught napping. Most people only scream after they have been hurt.

Meanwhile 29 million people living in controlled accommodations are in danger of receiving simultaneous notices of rent increases.

The average of these controlled rents is now $33 a month.

HERE'S WHAT has happened, in a few cities where controls have been lifted, to renters paying $30 a month or less, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics:

Houston, Tex., 46.4% increase; Dallas, Tex., 55.8% increase; Topeka, Kans., 37.7% increase; Oklahoma City, 39.8% increase, on top of a general 20% increase granted under the law.

These figures for the most part represent increases in "shelter rents" only and do not reflect the "hidden" expenses which most tenants are forced to pay in addition, such as heat, light, water and gas, and whatever janitor service is provided.

(Yet in none of these cities have the governing bodies requested re-control. What chance is there that in other cities now under controls, the governing bodies will act before the controls expire?)

Vacancy rates for the entire nation, including the areas that never were controlled and those that have been decontrolled, as well as the controlled areas, are between 1 and 2%, as compared to a "normal" pre-war rate of 5 to 6%.

But in the controlled areas, the overall vacancy rate runs around 1.2% and of this low percentage, a large proportion are plainly not habitable, according to the BLS and the Census Bureau.

Elsewhere on this page we present the government's definition of a non-habitable dwelling. A brand-new chicken-coop would be fit to live in according to that definition.)

For example, the vacancy rate on habitable dwellings in a few typical rent-controlled cities is as follows:

Atlanta, .4%; Baltimore, .9%; Cincinnati, .7%; Chicago, .4%; Detroit, .5%; Kansas City, .1%; New York, N. Y., .4%; Richmond, Va., .3%; St. Louis, .4%.

(Mayor Joseph M. Darst who before he was elected was an active member of a real estate firm, said that if controls were lifted suddenly in St. Louis, it would bring about a situation "that isn't pleasant to contemplate.")

TIGHE WOODS, OHE administrator, brought the above figures and many others to the attention of both Senate and House Banking Committees but was not received with marked enthusiasm.

He answered point by point the various charges made against rent control by the real estate lobby:

"Rent control retards new construction."

There is no rent control on new construction, hasn't been since 1947.

"The large volume of new construction has provided an adequate supply of vacant housing."

See the figures in this story on habitable vacancy rates.

"There has been a decrease in the number of rental units in recent years as a result of rent control."

There has been a decrease, all right, as a result of a shift toward owner occupancy, but about half the decrease occurred in farm areas which have never been under rent control; the percentage decreases in these areas were more than four times as great as in controlled areas.

"IT MUST be remembered," Woods commented on this point, "that properties have been selling for two to three times as much as they would bring before the war. The opportunity to realize a big profit has motivated many owners of rental property to sell. The incentive to sell would have existed whether or not there was rent control.

"Proof of this is found in the fact that most of the newly constructed units have been built for sale rather than for rent, even though there has been no rent control on new construction for almost three years."

To which he added that in many cases the tenants were forced to buy in order to get a roof over their heads.

"In the face of our present acute housing shortage," Woods continued, "there would be an intolerable rise in rents if controls were removed on June 30.

"Chicago landlords have already gone on record as to the size of the rent increase they would put into effect in the absence of rent control.

"In a case which they recently carried to the U. S. Court of Appeals they contended that their evidence justified an increase of 71.5%, but insisted that the court order an immediate increase of 45%, with the statement that the 'balance should come through the operation of economic laws at the end of rent control.'"

WOODS' MOST damning indictment of the real estate lobby's claims came, however, in one revealing paragraph, where he showed that out of the 10 million landlords whose properties are still controlled, only 80,000, or one in 125, had applied for increases under the "fair net operating income" provisions of the law and that only 29,000, or about one in three of these, were found to be operating at less than a fair income.

Heap o' Holes Needed To Make House Unfit

Here is the Housing Expediter's definition of a house or apartment which is not habitable, i. e., unfit to live in:

"A unit is not habitable if its state of repair includes: deficiencies in physical construction rendering it inadequate or unsafe as shelter, i. e., sagging of roof, walls or floor; holes, open cracks, rotted, loose or missing materials over a considerable area of foundation, walls, roof, floors or ceilings; extensive damage by storm, flood or fire; or several similar deficiencies which in combination render the unit inadequate or unsafe as shelter; makeshift or inadequate original construction."

IT IS NOT ROMANCE: It certainly looks like the real McCoy, but it's all for PAC. The fellow—a Canadian delegate to the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers convention in Cleveland, Ohio—gives a buck to PAC to kiss the girl—a member of ACW's southern staff. Moral: All CIO members in the U. S. should give a buck to PAC. The "kiss sale" was at a party given by ACW's Southern Regional locals, North Georgia Joint Board and the New Orleans Joint Board. Monopoly Charges Filed Against 7 Coast Refiners

THE DEPT. of Justice has filed a suit in Los Angeles under the federal anti-trust laws charging seven major oil companies with conspiring to control petroleum production and sales in the Pacific states area.

The court is being asked to order the oil companies to get out of the retail and wholesale gasoline business, to break up their committee which controls production quotas for all oil producers, to end "exclusive dealing" contracts with independent gas and oil retailers, and to quit their price-fixing practices.

Defendants, who according to the Dept. of Justice control about 94% of all crude oil produced in the area, are: Standard Oil of California, Texas Co., Shell Oil, Tide Water Associated Oil Co., Richfield Oil Corp., General Petroleum Corp., and Union Oil Co. The monopoly charges involve their operations in California, Washington, Oregon, Nevada and Arizona.

EFFECT OF their practices, it is charged, is to eliminate any competition from independent producers, refiners and marketers. The seven companies have done this, the suit charges, by limiting the amount of crude oil the independents could produce, refusing to allow independents to use their pipelines on the same basis they are available to other defendants, and "eliminating competition by purchasing the stock and assets of independent refineries and inducing independent refineries to dismantle their refineries in return for an agreement to furnish such refiners their full requirements of refined petroleum products."

The seven get the independents coming and going—first by limiting their production of crude oil, and then by refusing to sell them enough additional crude oil to keep their refineries going at capacity, the suit says.

In addition, the seven big companies have eliminated all competition among themselves. This they have done, according to the complaint, by regulating the amount of oil each will produce, setting uniform prices for the oil any of the seven will buy from independents, and pooling their pipeline facilities to the exclusion of independents.

Finally, the seven companies control prices of gas and other refined products both at wholesale and at the corner gas station by refusing to sell to price cutters, and refusing to sell to any wholesaler or retailer who won't sign an agreement to deal exclusively in the products of one of the seven big companies.

Charging that the oil monopoly has actually used its power to set prices and eliminate competition, Assistant Atty. Gen. Herbert Bergson pointed out that the actions of the seven companies toward independents "are conducted as though all seven defendant companies were a single concern under single management."

Bergson adds that this is the third time that these same companies have been charged with monopoly practices. However, the two previous suits did not effectively end their exclusion of competition.

(The CIO Oil Workers a fortnight ago asked Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), chairman of the House Monopoly Investigating Committee, to seek to determine if the anti-trust laws are not being broken through reciprocal agreements to fill market commitments on gasoline. The request was based on the fact that although 80% of the refining capacity of the Texas Co. has been shut down since April 4, first by strikes and later because of lockouts, gasoline and similar products are still being widely sold under the company's name.)

Oil Industry Ax Hacking At Union Again

THE OIL INDUSTRY apparently is staging one of its periodic attempts to wreck the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, with nearly all oil companies working together in the effort.

Through evasiveness at the bargaining table, the companies have brought about several strikes within the past few months.

But OWIU members are calling industry cards as fast as they are laid on the table. As a result, thousands of members are on the outside of the refineries, looking in.

Nearly 8000 employes of The Texas Co., one of the nation's largest, have been on the picket lines since April 4.

On that date they struck five refineries. Later, the strikes were turned into lockouts at four of the refineries. On strike now are about 500 workers in Texaco's Lawrenceville, Ill., refinery. Locked out are more than 7000 workers at Port Arthur and Port Neches, Tex., Lockport, Ill., and Casper, Wyo.

The strike began because the Texas Co. would not bargain. On the question of pensions, the company said it would not hold informal discussions on a national level, insisting that they be on a local basis. Local managers said they could not talk about pensions, because they involved high finance that could be studied only in the New York headquarters.

Thus there was no bargaining on pensions.

On other issues the local managers were evasive.

Now, four-fifths of the Texas Co.'s refining capacity is out of operation. But with the bulk of its refining knocked out, the company continues to meet its market demands. That is because other companies, through reciprocal agreements, "are taking good care of the Texas Co.," OWIU leaders say.

The situation is that a union cannot fight one oil company individually. When it takes on one, it takes on the whole industry.

It is as if, during the recent UAW Chrysler strike, GM had made Plymouth and Dodge cars for Chrysler.

Months ago, Quaker State Refining Co. employes in three Pennsylvania and West Virginia refineries asked for pay increases, because rates were far below national standards.

Quaker State retaliated by closing three days a week. So OWIU struck the refineries nearly four months ago.

Quaker State's motor oil has not disappeared from the service stations, either. Some other company is refining it, OWIU says.

How The Steel Plunderbund Is Ruining A Little Guy

By ALVAINE HAMILTON and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THE HOUSE Monopoly Investigating Committee received a revealing lesson the other day on how a big business combine goes about pushing a small businessman off the dock. The teacher was Samuel Wasserman, president of the American Pipe & Equipment Co. of Baltimore, wholesaler of steel pipe and related equipment.

Wasserman has been in the steel business one way or another since he went to work as a blacksmith's helper at 15, he told the committee. But he won't be in it much longer, he said, because the big boys don't like him. They don't like him because he doesn't belong to the "club", he contended, and because he's sold pipe and other items at prices below those set by the big boys.

Wasserman started his company in 1939 with $8,600. In 1948, his peak year, his sales totaled $600,000, but he hasn't been able to make a profit since because of pressure from the big steel makers.

"I'm going out of business," he told the Congressmen in detailing a story that began nine years ago.

IN 1941, Wasserman said, other pipe jobbers in Baltimore belonged to a luncheon group, called informally the "Pipe Club," which met to agree on prices for the local market. However, Wasserman kept his own prices below the club's quotations. One day an agent for Republic Steel, third biggest company in the steel industry, called on him ostensibly to see his stock. Wasserman, who was buying from Mercer Tube, of Sharon, Pa., was pleased and opened his warehouse to the visitor. But instead of commenting on the stock, the Republic man proceeded to threaten Wasserman with ruin, according to the latter's testimony.

"I was criticized severely," Wasserman informed the Congressmen, "for selling pipe below the price currently being quoted by other wholesalers in the city. He told me that if we did not discontinue the practice of selling pipe under the prevailing quoted price that we would be run out of business, or other coercive words to that effect."

Wasserman told the Republic representative to go climb a tree. After that the squeeze began, the small businessman's testimony revealed. First the Baltimore Commercial Bank withdrew all credit, he said. Then Mercer Tube tightened credit unmercifully. Finally a representative of Bethlehem Steel, second biggest in the industry, visited him to voice new threats. Nevertheless, Wasserman survived the war years profitably, but from that time on, he testified, he never could get enough pipe to hold his inventory at the proper level.

TWO YEARS ago the squeeze started again. In August, 1948, Mercer Tube announced it was withdrawing from the Baltimore market because of the Supreme Court decision outlawing the basing point price system in cement, and because of pending Federal Trade Commission action against monopoly pricing of steel. Wasserman was informed his company would have to get in touch with Bethlehem, which has a plant at Sparrows Point, near Baltimore.

Then came the snapper: Bethlehem flatly refused to sell pipe to him.

Meanwhile, Bethlehem Shipbuilding, a subsidiary of the big company, began buying thousands of dollars worth of valves from Wasserman and continued to buy them for several months. Finally, Wasserman received a letter from the Bethlehem home office asking where he bought the valves he'd been peddling to the shipyards. The valves came from his old inventory, but before replying to the letter, he learned from a Bethlehem agent that the Bethlehem people never bought from anybody who didn't buy from them. Wasserman was anxious to do this very thing. He wrote Bethlehem explaining the situation but never received a reply.

In the end, a Mercer Tube official told him Bethlehem wouldn't sell to him because he "wasn't a member of the fraternity."

After that, Wasserman declared, he was forced to buy pipe from a variety of sources at disadvantageous terms. Not until last summer did he find a steel producer who could supply him regularly, and this mill could take care of him only one week in four. Meanwhile, he spent the best part of six months last year visiting his Congressman in Washington and roaming from one federal agency to another vainly seeking a solution to his problem. No wonder he thinks he'll go out of business. Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), chairman of the Monopoly Investigating Committee, and Rep. Lane (D. Mass.) think steel executives should be called in to explain why "this little businessman can't make a living."

There are lots of things that could be done about the way big steel treats its small customers. The Monopoly Investigating Committee can propose strengthening the anti-trust laws. It can urge that the big steel companies (which own railroads, steamship lines, ore reserves, as well as steel mills and fabricating plants) be broken up into smaller units. It can propose federal policing of prices in the steel industry, as has been suggested by the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Now that the four weeks of hearings on big steel have been concluded, it's up to Celler's committee to act.

"You're my lawyer. Figure out some way I can take it with me."

Confused?

In an American Town Meeting of the Air broadcast sponsored by the CIO Clothing Workers during the union's Cleveland convention, Rep. Biemiller (D. Wis.) took W. W. Vandeveer, member of the Natl. Petroleum Council, to task because he referred to the President's Medical Health Program as "socialized medicine."

Disregarding the criticism, Vandeveer continued to refer to the program as "socialized medicine."

A member of the audience asked Vandeveer whether he thought the questioner should become a charity patient because he was unable to pay for medical care, Vandeveer replied:

"I don't think so. If you work for a corporation or a plant, you will probably come under Social Security."

There were snickers from the audience. Apparently, Vandeveer was under the impression that free medical care is provided by the Social Security Act. As soon as the program ended he left for his train, preferring not to risk questions.

FTA Contract 'Signed' Before Negotiated

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

TOTALLY DEGRADED anti-labor policies of officials of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers were stripped to their roots last week when FTA spokesmen testified in a National Labor Relations Board hearing at Los Angeles that:

1—FTA officials gave full "authority" to employers to photograph their signatures and place them on an "agreement" which they had not even read and even before it was negotiated.

2—FTA aimed at splitting up the large California-Arizona local into small bargaining units—thus setting back unionism among the "fruit tramps" more than a decade.

Startling admissions that they had allowed their signatures to be placed on a "contract" by the employers were made by two FTA "leaders" in on-the-record testimony before the NLRB.

Charles Fellar, who said he was president of the FTA Imperial Valley District unit, openly admitted he had signed a blank piece of paper so that his signature could be attached to the "contract."

Fellar signed the blank sheet before workers had approved of any agreement, and even before any agreement had been drawn up.

A second admission that a signature had been "attached" to a contract before the signer had seen any agreement was made by L. T. Cunningham, who claimed to be general chairman of FTA Local 78.

IN RESPONSE to questions by Robert Rissman, attorney representing CIO, concerning the source of his signature on the 1950 agreement, Cunningham first claimed it had been photographed from the 1949 settlement.

Further questioning broke down that story, and Rissman then demanded: "Well, where did they get your signature?"

Cunningham replied lamely he did not know, adding that "they" got it from "some place."

Later, Cunningham admitted — on the record—that the first time he saw the 1950 agreement was after it had come off the printing press, with his signature already printed on it.

BUT IT REMAINED for Jack Montgomery, identified as an FTA regional director, to voice the most cynical admission of all.

Montgomery testified he had "agreed" with employers that they could get signatures of FTA "leaders" from any document they happened to have around, photograph them and place them on the 1950 agreement.

In reply to a question from Rissman if that were the "usual way" signatures were placed on contracts, Montgomery answered FTA had no reason to question the "honor and integrity" of the employers.

AS ONE ANTI-LABOR answer after another was entered into the official record by FTA spokesmen, it became apparent FTA was attempting to claim the 1950 agreement was a bar to an election.

It was obvious the "agreement" had been hastily "signed"—even before it had been negotiated—and then hastily printed in order to be used as an attempt to prevent an election.

IUE-CIO Wins RCA Election, Drives Toward Big Vote at GE

DUPLICATING its successes in the General Motors and Westinghouse chains, the IUE-CIO swept the tottering UE out of both the Camden, N. J., and Pulaski, Va., plants of RCA in an NLRB election May 18.

The RCA tally brings the IUE-CIO representation figure for the first half of May to 26,316, compared to UE's May total of 334. Of 43 May elections, IUE has won 40, the UE 1. Two runoffs remain.

Total IUE-CIO representation stands at 150,467. The UE has won elections involving 18,003 workers.

The RCA vote in Camden: IUE-CIO 2857, UE 2532, no union 30. The vote in Pulaski: IUE-CIO 358, UE 337, no union 9.

A second big win on May 18 was registered when IUE-CIO trounced the AFL at the Monsanto Chemical Co., Springfield, Mass. IUE-CIO got 834 votes; the AFL garnered 260. There were four no union votes. This was the first major test between IUE and the AFL.

WITH THIS string of victories behind them, IUE-CIO forces girded themselves for the May 25 election in the giant General Electric chain. Some 105,000 GE workers will vote in the crucial test of strength between IUE-CIO and the UE, expelled from CIO last year because of Communist domination.

Lynn, Mass., Schenectady, N. Y., Erie, Pa., and Fort Wayne, Ind. are the four key plants in the balloting. Largest of the GE installations they have been the focal points of the bitter campaigning between the rival unions.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray took a personal hand in the battle at Lynn, Mass., speaking there at a rally. On the platform with him were the U. S. Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin and James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and IUE-CIO Administrative Committee chairman.

One of the best contracts negotiated anywhere in the industry this year was won last week by IUE-CIO Local 350, in North Tonawanda, N. Y.

The new agreement, signed with the Wurlitzer Co., carries a 12½c package increase including a 9c blanket wage increase, plus 3c in hospitalization and other benefits. The 9c hike tripled the 3c average increase won by UE in the Buffalo area. The contract also provided for a dues checkoff, guarantee by the company to recognize no other union, and a union shop as soon as Local 350 wins the required NLRB election.

The contract was signed one month after the local had voted to abandon the old UE and affiliate with IUE-CIO.

Northwest Lumbermen Sign With IWA Except For Weyerhaeuser

THE MAJOR lumber operators and operators' associations of the Pacific Northwest, with one exception, came to terms with the CIO International Woodworkers as 40,000 members prepared to walk out on strike to enforce their demands for an employer-paid health and welfare program and paid holidays.

The sole exception was the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., largest lumbering firm in the country, whose 8500 IWA employes laid down their tools and walked off the job when their demands were still unmet at the deadline.

The firm's far-flung operations, extending from Everett, Wash., to Klamath Falls, Ore., were closed when the company refused to agree to a settlement similar to that made with the other operators and to accept a union shop clause on some operations, an additional issue with this tycoon.

The walkout was not made immediately effective at two recently opened Weyerhaeuser operations where negotiations for complete new contracts were under way. These were a new plant at Springfield, Ore., and a logging operation at Sutherlin, Ore. However, negotiations here broke down a few days later and picket lines were thrown around them the morning on May 18.

The settlements that were concluded with the pine and fir operators of Oregon, Washington and California provide for three paid holidays and an employer-paid life insurance and sickness, accident and hospital benefit plan, at an estimated cost of 7½c an hour. The holidays—Memorial Day, July 4 and Labor Day—are the first to be negotiated in the Pacific Northwest lumber industry.

"WE WILL NOT settle with Weyerhaeuser for less than the other operators have agreed to," said Pres. J. E. Fadling.

"We have already rejected the phony Weyerhaeuser pension scheme which this firm is trying to foist off on the lumber workers with the help of the AFL Carpenters and Joiners Union. And we are insisting on a health and welfare program along with paid holidays and the union shop on those operations where they did not already have such a contract."

Al Hartung, IWA vice president, pointed out that Weyerhaeuser has granted union shop contracts to its pulp operations under AFL contract, and that at its new Springfield plant it signed a union shop contract with the AFL for its fibre board division before either a union shop authorization election or a collective bargaining election was held.

"The IWA-CIO membership at these plants," he declared, "has all voted overwhelmingly for union shop contracts in regularly conducted Natl. Labor Relations Board elections.

"With the rest of the industry under union shop agreements, these crews are of no mind to allow Weyerhaeuser to continue its open shop, union-busting policies."

ILWU Trial Board Opens Hearings

A THREE-MAN CIO committee last week heard scores of thousands of words of testimony involving charges that the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union is Communist-dominated.

The hearing was the sixth conducted by the CIO on charges that a group of affiliated unions have consistently followed the Communist Party line rather than seeking the objectives of CIO policy. Four have been expelled.

Harry Bridges—head of the ILWU, who was recently convicted of perjury in connection with his gaining U. S. citizenship five years ago—led the longshore delegation to the hearing. Also present were Vice-Pres. J. R. Robertson and seven members of the ILWU executive board from California, Washington, Illinois and Hawaii.

Conducting the hearing were three members of the CIO Executive Board: Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers; Vice-Pres. John Moran of the Communications Workers; Pres. Joseph Fisher of the Utility Workers.

The same committee will hear two more cases this week. On Monday, May 22, it will hear similar charges against the Marine Cooks and Stewards, headed by Hugh Bryson; and on May 25, against the Intl. Fishermen & Allied workers, headed by Joseph Jurich.

On June 1, a different committee will hear similar charges against the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union. Pres. Ben Gold of the union, who is a member of the Communist Party's a National Committee, had asked for postponement from an earlier date until after the union's convention, which began May 21 in Atlantic City, N. J.

The longshore union hearings, which were closed to press and public, opened at 11 A. M. on May 17, and were continuing when this paper went to press.

But it was learned that four witnesses appeared to testify to Communist domination of the union: Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers; Pres. William Steinberg of the American Radio Association, who filed the charge last November; George Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; and Everett Kassalow of the CIO Research Dept. staff.

Bridges and other members of the ILWU were expected to deny the charges.

Bridges, who had appeared as a speaker in New York the night before the CIO hearing, told reporters he would fight to stay in the CIO. He also indicated that if the CIO Board eventually votes to expell the ILUW, he may try to take the matter into the courts.

ALL Laborers Worthy Of Hire, CIO Maintains

WOMEN workers deserve as much pay as men who do the same work, the CIO bluntly informed Congress last week.

Testifying before the House Labor Committee, Mrs. Helen Blanchard of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers declared:

"Women are not asking for a privileged position. They simply want to be accepted as equals.

"The very least Congress can do is to abolish the horrible practice of discrimination purely on the basis of sex."

Mrs. Blanchard charged that wage discrimination against women has "had serious repercussions for the rest of society."

Another witness at the hearing was Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, who also urged passage of HR 1584, the equal-pay-for-women bill. The CIO Auto Workers filed a statement in behalf of the bill.

Beirne—whose union includes scores of thousands of women workers—said that in the telephone industry there are differentials of as much as $30 a week in the scales for men and women doing the same job.

In Baltimore, he said, the phone company pays a maximum of $90 a week to a man, and only $59 to a women, for work dealing with customers' complaints and the arranging of additional phone service.

"The only difference between the men's jobs and the women's jobs is that the company refuses to send the women out to homes or to places of business to take up the complaints with the telephone users," Beirne said.

The CWA president said he doesn't quite understand why Congress keeps holding hearings on the same bill without acting on it. The bill has been introduced in 1945, '47, and '49. Beirne said he had testified in its favor for five years in a row, and that either this or the next Congress could pass it without hearings.

Chairman Tom Burke (D. O.), a CIO Auto Union member and strong supporter of the bill, said he hoped so, too.

The proposed law would make it an unfair practice for an employer to "discriminate in the payment of wages between the sexes . . . except where such payment is made pursuant to a seniority or merit increase system which does not discriminate on the basis of sex."

They Seemed To Pine For 'Good Old Days'

Speakers at C. of C. Convention Intimated Business and Industry Should Direct The Operation Of Our Country

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MY EYES HURT and my brain is in a bit of a whirl—but I said I was going to do it and I did!

Here's how it happened:

A friend came into the office with a stack of papers in his hand and said, "These are copies of the speeches—and excerpts from speeches—made at the U. S. Chamber of Commerce convention.

"I think it would be a good idea if you'd read them and then write a column for the CIO News about what business and industrial leaders and men like Taft and Stassen had to say."

I did what he suggested—and, believe me, it was fascinating reading!

BY USING THE technique employed by Sen. McCarthy to smear the State Dept. I could "prove" that the Chamber of Commerce and Joe Stalin are working hand-in-hand.

Joe (Stalin, not McCarthy) says the United States is going to hell lickety-split, and there's no doubt about it.

C. of C. speakers said or implied the same thing.

But at this point the similarity ceases. Joe says the trouble with us results directly from mean, old capitalism. C. of C. speakers said our danger lies in our "drift" away from capitalism and toward socialism.

One or the other—or both—must be wrong.

Joe would remedy the situation by having his Commies take over the country and impose totalitarian rule.

The C. of C. would go back to the "good old days."

DON'T GET THE idea that a C. of C. convention and a NAM convention are just alike—because they're not.

Compared with the NAM, the Chamber is a liberal organization in many respects. (Compared with the CIO, of course, it's conservative and some of the things it advocates are reactionary.)

But that doesn't mean the Chamber doesn't like to hear from speakers who definitely aren't friends of labor—men like Taft and Stassen.

One of the country's big troubles, Taft said, was that labor unions "aren't responsible to anybody, not even their own men." This "irresponsibility," he added, made the Taft-Hartley Act necessary.

And Stassen intimated that America's working people are pretty stupid when it comes to trying to understand our economic system. And no wonder, he added, because—

"He (the workman) has been subjected to a steady bombardment of misinformation by left-wingers, by many labor leaders and by many politicians."

C. OF C. PRES. Herman W. Steinkraus said that "the concern about communism in our government is a real one," and that business men are having it tough because of "uncertainty as to future government action."

What's needed right now, he said, is to "clear the air" of misunderstandings. He put it this way:

"The Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. and all business organizations throughout the country have the responsibility of clearing the air so all of our people will understand what needs to be done."

Aw, gee! That's wonderful! But what about the millions who are convinced that business doesn't have all the answers?

In none of the speeches did I see any indication that anybody thought that labor or the farmers might have some good ideas about the way the country should be run.

CONVENTIONS like the one held recently by the Chamber are a real asset to the American way of life (and no kidding).

Through them an important segment of our population makes known to the public how it feels about the problems which plague us.

Suppose we in the labor movement disagree. Suppose we think that some of the Chamber's policies are completely wrong. Suppose we think some of their pet ideas stink!

It takes at least two to disagree.

But, really, all of those speeches and excerpts I read gave me a feeling that what the Chamber really wanted was a nation run by business men and industrialists who adhere to the policies of the Republican Party.

Maybe we're radical. We'd like to have our nation run by all the people, with each segment of our population having a representative voice in its affairs.

SAME OLD STORY

We've told this story several times before and we're going to tell it again—and again— and again.

We may change the words now and then and we may try to figure out new ways of putting our idea across, but we don't think we'll be fooling anybody. It'll still be the same old story.

Why all the repetition, you ask. Well, it's simple.

We're convinced that labor and other liberal groups will lose their shirt—or at least part of it—in the 1950 elections if they don't jump with both feet—and with arms swinging—into the political brawl that's brewing.

Conservatives and reactionaries have a habit—a bad habit, from our viewpoint—of making political hay during those years when nobody is campaigning for the Presidency. It's happened before and it could happen again.

In the "off" years people frequently stay away from the polls in droves because their enthusiasm for politics hasn't been whetted sufficiently.

We in the CIO have an organization that's capable of doing a lot of whetting. We usually refer to it as PAC.

Well, as we've said before, this is the "whetting" season. PAC needs contributions. It needs block workers. It needs door-bell pushers. It needs people who can answer the silly arguments of those who pine for the return of Hooverism.

The political pot has already begun to boil. Leaders of both parties are really beginning to get steamed up.

And it's time for the people throughout the country to start doing the same thing.

Speaking of politics . . .

THE SAME OLD TAFT

One night last week Sen. Robert A. Taft, who would like to move Mr. Truman out of the White House and take over the job himself, provided the nation's radio listeners with a fine example of a man talking through his hat.

Whatever else can be said about Taft (and we frequently say some nasty things about him), he's no piker—at least not when it comes to making outlandish claims.

The Truman policies, he declared, would bankrupt the nation, convert it into a regimented "handout" state and possibly plunge it into World War III.

The Republicans, on the other hand, stand for four-square resistance to communism, for individual freedom and for equality between business and labor—or so he said.

And then he had the unmitigated gall to cite the Taft-Hartley Act as something designed to provide such equality!

The Taft radio speech didn't surprise us because we'd known for a long time that the GOP intended to peddle the phony line of "Liberty vs. Socialism."

But we had a hunch the Senator would sound more convincing, more reasonable, more aware of the problems that confront us.

We even figured he'd come out in favor of something other than platitudes.

But, as it turned out, he was mostly against those things which Truman favored when the people elected him to the Presidency.

And, so help us, he tried to convince his listeners that the people don't favor those things, after all.

Peron Gets U. S. Loan To Pay Off U. S.

THE U. S. Export-Import Bank last week granted a $125 million loan to a group of Argentine banks — a move which the CIO had opposed as helping Dictator Peron to overcome his economic difficulties.

Most of the loan from the U. S. bank will be used to pay off debts of Argentine importers to creditor banks and business houses in this country. About $30 million will pay off debts of the Argentine government itself to U. S. exporters.

The loan, which has been guaranteed by the government-controlled Bank of Argentine, is supposed to be repaid by 1964.

Early this month Chairman Jacob Potofsky of the CIO's International Committee had called for the U. S. government to refuse the loan, on grounds that it will help "strengthen the Peronist totalitarian grip upon the Argentine people."

In a letter to Assistant Secy. of State Edward Miller, in charge of Latin American activities in the State Dept., Potofsky said:

"Millions of freedom-loving Americans inside and outside the CIO feel strongly that by such favors to Peron, we are jeopardizing our moral leadership among the democratic nations—and thus depriving the peoples of the world of one of their dearest hopes for a better future."

MILLER, IN a letter of reply, indicated the business loan could be justified on grounds that the U. S. government should not "cut ourselves off from contact with, or influence in the lives of the peoples of these sister nations."

Miller, who has been reported as having highly cordial conversations with Peron during a recent visit to Argentine, voiced hope that this government "can learn to work with the government of Argentine."

He added that the government's attitude toward the Argentine regime of Peron had not been reached haphazardly."

POTOFSKY, IN HIS letter to the State Dept. official, recalled that "during the last war, Peron was on the side of the Nazi-Fascist axis.

"During and after the war, Peron and his companions have peddled their brand of fascism and Anti-Americanism throughout the hemisphere. Today, they cooperate closely with the military juntas in Peru and Venezuela which they have helped at least spiritually to bring into existence."

Basis Pension Of $50 Plus A Bonus Demanded By CCL

The Canadian Congress of Labour has proposed to the Old Age Security Joint Committee of the Commons and Senate that basic non-contributory pensions be supplemented by a contributory pension program.

"Old age security is one of the most urgent problems confronting the present parliament," a CCL spokesman said. "It is a problem which must not be set aside and its solution must not be delayed. Neither government nor parliament should allow itself to be frightened by the magnitude of the task. Canada can show no greater faith in its future than by assuring a safe and contented future for citizens in their old age."

The CCL said the maximum pension of $40 a month provided under the federal act could not be justified "by any standard of justice, humanity or social welfare."

The CCL made four main proposals for amending the present act: Payment of a basic pension of $50 a month to every Canadian 65 years of age; a contributory pension plan with graduated contributions and benefits to supplement basic pension legislation; assistance to provide for those unable to build up adequate pension rights, and increase of the basic pension by a productivity bonus of 2% a year on a cumulative basis.

Inter-American Honor to Schwarz

Dr. Ernst Schwartz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, has been elected to the executive board of the newly-formed Inter-American Conference for Liberty and Democracy, which met in Cuba May 12-14.

The conference, attended by spokesmen for labor and liberal groups throughout the hemisphere, drew up a Charter of Havana. It calls for guarantees of human rights to all persons regardless of race, color and creed; a fight against dictatorships of the left and right; and a continuing struggle to strengthen democracy.

They Talked And Talked And Talked

MOST PERSONS have heard about that "dramatic moment" at tense negotiations when the union representative comes up with exactly the right words at the right time and saves the day.

Such stories tend to leave the belief that all contracts are agreed to at "official" bargaining sessions at which men pound the table and puff out great clouds of cigar smoke.

But there's another kind of story—such as this one—about deadlocks being broken after negotiations apparently have failed.

A YEAR OR SO ago one of the CIO unions picked a Southern mill town as the place at which it would attempt to set a wage pattern for the industry.

Soon after negotiations opened it became apparent that the mill owner had no intention of granting the 10% wage increase requested by the union.

The union eventually took a strike vote and then selected a date for a walkout. The mill owner was notified that his plant would be shut down if he didn't agree to a raise by that date.

And still he continued to say "no."

The union didn't want to strike unless it had to and the owner certainly didn't want his plant shut down—but two days before the strike deadline no settlement had been reached.

Then the negotiating committee wired one of the union's top officials and asked him to give a hand.

THE UNION OFFICIAL caught a plane the next day from his headquarters city and arrived in the Southern town late in the evening.

He went, unaccompanied, to the home of the mill owner, whom he had known for some time.

He was given a very cool reception at the door but was invited inside. He spoke to the owner's wife, who also greeted him coolly.

"Say, I was walking along the street in New York the other day and ran into ———— ————, and he said for me to tell you 'hello' the next time I saw you," the unionist said. "He seemed to be feeling fine."

"Well, I'll be darned," said the owner, "I haven't seen him for a long time. He and I have been friends for years."

"Oh, by the way, I also saw ———— ———— a couple of weeks ago and he said for me to take you his greetings," said the unionist.

"Gee, I'm glad to hear from him; haven't seen him in a couple of years."

AN HOUR OR more passed and still the two men didn't mention the impending strike or anything to indicate they were having anything other than a social visit.

"Let's have a drink," the owner finally said. "Ok," said the unionist. They had a drink, then another, and a third.

By then it was after midnight and the owner's wife decided to retire for the night. After she had excused herself, the union leader started "moving in" on the mill owner.

"With so many back orders to fill a strike right now would be pretty bad for you, wouldn't it?" he asked.

"Yes, it would," replied the owner.

"I'd sure like to avoid a walkout in the morning, wouldn't you?" he asked.

"Yes, I certainly would," said the owner.

"Don't you think we might make another real try to get a settlement if I keep the fellows from striking?" asked the unionist.

"Yes, I'd be willing to try."

The two men parted about 2 a.m. The strike scheduled to begin at 8 a.m. was postponed and by noon a satisfactory contract had been signed.

"That union official of ours sure is a smart guy," said one of the negotiators. "That night he got the boss into such a habit of saying 'yes' that he forgot himself and didn't say 'no' when we asked him again—for about the hundredth time—for a 10% raise."

Memories of The Early '30s

Popular Articles On Labor Compiled Into Readable Book

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WITH THE exception of a few characters of the stripe of Westbrook Pegler —who makes his living mostly by hating unions—very few people today, even if they do distrust and fear organized labor, will admit it publicly.

And there is probably no field in American life about which more garbled notions and misconceptions have gathered.

Although there has been much improvement in recent years, labor has never done a very good job of interpreting unions to the public, for obvious reasons. One is that unions are made up of working men and women who don't have the time or ability as a rule to write books or articles. They're too busy earning a living. So for the most part they have to rely on outsiders to tell the union's story to the public.

Some earnest and thorough studies of labor and its problems have appeared in recent years, but like earlier works, they are inclined to be ponderous and academic —pretty dry stuff for the average reader. On the other hand labor's case has been presented fairly and honestly in a number of popular articles which have been appearing in increasing numbers the last few years.

A COMPILATION of some of these outstanding articles reprinted in book form is therefore a genuine contribution to the too scant popularly written material on unions. Such a compilation has just been provided in a book titled "American Labor Unions," published by H. W. Wilson Co. as one of its "Reference Shelf" series.

Edited by Herbert L. Marx Jr., executive board member of the New York Newspaper Guild, CIO, this collection of significant articles about labor, including three picked up from The CIO News, are grouped together under special headings. The selections in the volume, Marx states, are "intended, above all else, to show the part played by organized labor in the drama of American life."

"An Overview of Unions," the first group, includes three pieces explaining labor's goals, a plea for understanding, and "Sinews of Unions," a section on labor legislation gives both labor's and the Natl. Association of Manufacturers' analyses of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Inside the Unions" has an article on the role of the regional director taken from the CIO News; another on a little discussed subject, "Women in Labor Unions," by Gladys Dickason, vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and a number of others on such subjects as the financial status of unions, union leadership and shop stewards.

ARTICLES grouped under "Big Unionism on the Defensive" discuss so-called monopoly power of unions pro and con and bureaucracy. The next section takes up the subject of the "Division in Labor's Ranks," with articles on the fight against Communism and the prospects for all groups of labor uniting into one big labor organization.

"What Labor Wants" includes articles on pensions—one by CIO Pres. Philip Murray from the CIO News—basic contract demands, and the guaranteed annual wage.

The concluding section, dealing with "The Unions' Role in Society," presents articles on labor in politics, on the radio, as part of the community, and in international affairs. A 12-page bibliography refers interested readers to other recent material in book, pamphlet and periodical form.

In its brief 240 pages, "American Labor Unions" has gathered together a collection of interesting and readable articles which presents a unified picture of labor today that makes a useful and much needed reference book.

Fifth Circuit Appeals Court Slapped Down

The U. S. Supreme Court caught up with the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals last week.

The lower court covers Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and the Canal Zone, and has been a big help to southern industrialists trying to block unionization of their plants.

It was thumped good and proper by the highest court of the nation in rulings upsetting its refusals to enforce Natl. Labor Relations Board orders requiring two employers to bargain. The Dept. of Justice, which had appealed, charged the Circuit Court with establishing a "pattern of denial" of enforcement orders. As a result of the Supreme Court action, the Mexia Textile Mills, Mexia, Tex., must bargain with the CIO Textile Workers, and the Pool Mfg. Co. of Sherman, Tex., with the AFL United Garment Workers.

Democratic Political Pot Bubbles, Taft Boils

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

PRESIDENT TRUMAN jubilantly returned to Washington last week from a 10-day, 7000-mile, 58-speech trip which culminated in an address to the Democratic Party's Jefferson Jubilee in Chicago, where the Democratic National Committee also met and drew up a forthright 1950 platform.

The Presidential trip underscored the importance of this year's "off-year" elections, which will decide whether the 82nd Congress has a real Fair Deal majority, stays in same wavering coalition-bound state the 81st now finds itself occupying, or reverts to the calmly reactionary character of the late unlamented 80th Congress. All 435 House seats and 36 Senate seats are at stake nationally, and there are numberless important state contests as well.

Throughout the trip, the President stressed the fact that the 81st Congress had reversed the trend established by the 80th, and pledged himself to continue fighting for the Fair Deal. He let fly at "backward" legislators from both parties and called for defeat of "obstructionists."

"There are still many backward-looking Senators and Representatives who have tried to defeat every progressive measure they could, and to obstruct and delay those they could not defeat," he said. "I hope that by next January some of the obstructionists will be defeated."

THE PRESIDENT and the platform came out strongly for the Fair Deal—for international cooperation, Taft-Hartley repeal, improved Social Security laws, federal aid to education, low- and middle-income housing, national health insurance legislation, development of national resources, the Brannan farm plan, government insured loans to small business, extension of rent control, and equal rights legislation.

"The honesty, patriotism, and sound judgment of the American people show plainly that our strongest defense against those who rob us of our freedoms is to retain and protect those freedoms," the platform stated. "To this we pledge ourselves once again."

"These tasks are all difficult and expensive," the President said in his Chicago speech, "but we will not shrink away from them . . . The Democratic Party would deserve to be retired from office and hustled off to the ash-heap of history if it ever stopped dreaming of what we can do to make our country better."

THE HAPPY FELLOW on the left is President Truman. The glowering Apostle of Doom on the right is Sen. Taft (R. O.). The photographs have nothing to do with the Democrats' Jefferson Jubilee at Chicago, but they certainly reflect the reactions of the pair to it.

"We have a moral duty to protect the exercise of freedom here and in other lands," he said at Spokane, Wash. "Freedom is a relationship between equals. We believe that men are created equal because we believe that they are all created by God."

Not every one of the more than 5000 delegates to the Chicago conference agreed on every point in the platform. The Southern group objected, openly, to the civil rights plank; a minority of members disagreed with the national health insurance plan. But the majority of delegates agreed with and understood thoroughly the new platform hammered out after three hard-working days.

AMONG THOSE participating in the panel sessions from which emerged the finished platform was Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC, who drew the only applause accorded an individual speech at that session when he said:

"The Democratic Party will not retain its position of leadership by standing pat. If the people of this nation want to stand pat, they will turn to the party that advocates stand-patism as a national policy. The Republicans—and I am speaking of them as a group and not necessarily each one of them—are experts in the field of conservatism. I do not believe the Democratic Party can—or should—attempt to compete with them in this line."

Kroll made these remarks in a speech on full employment in which he called on the majority party to undertake the full responsibility for drawing up national policies which will help expand the employment market and the ability of the people to consume the products of industry.

Also participating in the preliminary sessions were Carlton Werkau, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Communications Workers, who took part in a panel discussion of "The Freedom Budget—Why National Defense and International Cooperation are a Good Investment."

"We can talk all we want to about helping those outside America," he said. "We can give millions in food and services to other countries. But as long as we have economic illness at home our deeds will be unavailing in the long run.

"If here at home 'free enterprise' means the same as 'freedom to exploit', then our carrying the torch of freedom to subjugated and underprivileged countries will be recognized for what it is—a hypocritical pursuit doomed to failure before it begins."

RALPH HELSTEIN, president of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, took part in the civil rights panel and put in a determined plea for enactment of FEPC legislation.

All through his trip, President Truman was followed in a private plane by Victor Johnson, GOP campaign director, and on many an occasion he poked fun at his "little shadow."

"Some Republican politicians don't seem to think the President should visit with the people," Mr. Truman said at Chicago. "I don't know what my little shadow expected to find on this trip. But I'll tell you what he did find. He found that the people like to have their elected officials come out and talk to them face to face. And that is what I propose to keep right on doing."

The trip, the platform and the news of further trips to come, raised the hackles on many a reactionary head, in Congress and outside. In a speech which might have had as background music the popular song "It Isn't Fair," Sen. Taft (R. O.), who faces the political fight of his life this fall, took Mr. Truman to task for daring to go on a trip to report to the people who had elected him.

TAFT'S WAS an amazing speech in several particulars. It seemed to say that the people didn't want what they voted for and would have no part of the Fair Deal, and, in almost the same breath, that the Republicans believed in everything in the Democratic platform and were responsible for whatever portions of the Fair Deal program had been enacted into law. Taft claimed personal credit for inventing several pieces of Fair Deal legislation.

The most ironic portion of Taft's speech, in retrospect, was the part in which he muttered darkly of political immorality and spoke of machine rule in the Democratic party, for at that very moment the voters of Pennsylvania were preparing to rid themselves of the best-entrenched Republican state machine in the country. And the self-purge was at least partially an aftermath of the revolt of Philadelphia voters last year against one of the dirtiest little pools of municipal corruption in the nation—also a GOP situation.

The battle of Pennsylvania took place in the Republican primary contests where the GOP followers—for once—had a choice between candidates indorsed by the fantastically reactionary former Sen. Joseph R. Grundy, who had run Pennsylvania politics for 30 years from the office of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, and those indorsed by present Gov. James H. Duff, whose "revolt" against Grundy's ultra-ultra-conservatism has earned him the hugely exaggerated label of "liberal" in the nation's press. (Duff staunchly opposes most of the Fair Deal, and was first for Vandenberg and then for Taft at the 1948 Republican convention.)

The main questions were, should a Grundy or a Duff follower run against Democratic Sen. Myers this November, and against Richardson Dilworth, the Democrat who cleaned up Philadelphia last fall, for Governor?

Aided enormously by the newspapers' unanimously mistaken belief that he was a liberal, Duff won the Republican Senate nomination against Grundy's man, millionaire Rep. John C. Kunkel, by a three-to-one majority. And Duff's candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, Judge John S. Fine, defeated Grundy-indorsed Jay Cooke by about a seven-to-five majority. Approximately half of Pennsylvania's 2,862,112 registered Republicans voted.

GOP NATIONAL Chairman Guy Gabrielson read into the results of this open split in Pennsylvania Republican ranks a renewed unity of purpose in the Republican Party, or something, and GOP Sen. Martin (R. Pa.), a Grundy man from way back, got worried about his chances for nomination two years hence. Meanwhile the Myers-Dilworth team daily picked up strength.

(A fight of a somewhat similar nature was going on in Oregon as the CIO News went to press, but this one involved a genuine issue of liberalism vs. conservatism in Republican ranks. GOP Sen. Wayne Morse, indorsed by all Oregon labor, was fighting for nomination to succeed himself against Dairy Farmer David I. Hoover, virtually a political unknown, who considers Morse an extreme left-winger. The GOP big money in the state, mainly from lumbermen, was back of Hoover, but GOP politicians were uneasy, for they believed Morse could pull other Republicans into office with him if he did win the primaries and go on to victory in the November campaign. All this takes place against a significant background—for the first time in the state's history, more Democrats than Republicans are registered.)

Defeat of Taft, T-H Repeal, Unity Engross ACW

By FRED ROSS

THE 17TH biennial convention of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, had three recurrent themes—defeat of Sen. Taft, repeal of the law that bears his name, and labor unity.

Time and again speakers lashed out at Taft in his home territory.

ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky accused Taft of "embracing Sen. McCarthy and all he stands for. This must be stopped now."

A round of applause from 1500 delegates representing 375,000 ACW members greeted him when he added: "The place to stop it is on election day."

Departing from his prepared text, Potofsky said that a recently completed Ohio PAC speakers' handbook shows that Taft is "not only anti-labor, but also isolationist and anti-housewife."

(He was referring to a section of the book which details Taft's opposition to rent and price control.)

LIKE POTOFSKY, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said he hoped that the handbook would be widely read in Ohio.

ACW Vice Pres. Jack Kroll is Ohio PAC chairman and natl. PAC director.

Murray said that the Taft-Hartley Act nullifies the Norris-LaGuardia Act which forbade federal courts from issuing injunctions in labor disputes.

He also denounced the act because he said it gives employers "the right to spy on people who are actively engaged in organizing workers.

"Mr. Taft is the defender of this legislation, and Mr. Taft is Mr. Republican, and what Taft has to say about this legislation is in substance said by the Republican Party and its old guard leaders throughout the union."

Applause greeted that statement. The delegates also showed that they were in accord with Murray when he urged them to vote on election day.

Merely voting is not enough, he said. Delegates should discuss the issues with their neighbors and at union meetings and get others to join PAC.

BUT, SAID Murray, the legislative aspirations of labor will not be realized "unless we devise some constructive means by which all labor can join together in this great fight for the protection of people all over the country."

And that, Murray continued, was the reason he made his recent unity proposal to the AFL, the Intl. Association of Machinists, the United Mine Workers and the railroad brotherhoods.

The proposal called for the creation of a joint committee with authority to set up a common legislative, political and economic program and to work on means of achieving a merger of all the groups. The IAM and the UMW have replied affirmatively to the proposal, and the brotherhoods are considering the suggestion.

AFL Pres. William Green replied that the AFL Executive Council has authorized the selection of a committee "to meet a like committee of the CIO to engage in a conference looking toward an early and successful realization of unity upon a permanent and secure basis between our respective organizations."

IN MAKING his plea for unity at the convention, Murray went further than he previously had gone.

"A few weeks ago," he said, "I addressed a communication to the leaders of several labor organizations, including Mr. Green. In that letter I said:

"'I bear no ill will. I have a sincere interest in the people. Let us kick out of the window or out of the door all the animosities that have prevailed and get together self-sacrificingly,' because position does not annoy me; I am not disturbed about that.

"I am disturbed about these conditions, these things about which I have been talking this morning."

(He had just completed talking about welfare legislation, Taft-Hartley repeal and extension of civil rights.)

Murray also said that he hoped to be able to reply to Green "perhaps the latter part of June," and say:

"We are ready, Mr. Green, to meet your committee and proceed forthwith toward an orderly, constructive discussion of the problems at hand, even including organic unity."

AFL's insistence that organic unity precede unity on other matters has blocked earlier peace negotiations.

THE CONVENTION adopted a resolution which not only indorsed Murray's unity proposal but authorized the incoming Amalgamated executive board "to participate, during the period between conventions, in negotiations based on any proposal which in its opinion provides a workable basis for effectuating the purposes of this resolution."

The move for unity was pushed along further by a telegram from the head of another needle trades union—Pres. David Dubinsky of the AFL Intl. Ladies Garment Workers. The wire, which was read by Potofsky before the convention adopted the unity resolution, said in part:

"With the grave situation confronting labor today, economically, politically and internationally, a united labor movement is more imperative than ever before. We, therefore, hope that the efforts on behalf of the united labor movement will be productive as the prospects for labor unity grow real. Please accept for myself and our union best wishes for a successful convention."

TAFT WAS thoroughly roasted by Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin who answered the charge Taft made in a radio address that the Truman Administration's spending policy would lead to inflation and finally depression.

On the contrary, said Tobin, the President's program would create and maintain an economy in which all types of free enterprise would prosper.

Tobin attributed to the Taft-Hartley Act a decline of more than a quarter million union members since 1947, when the measure went into effect. He added that union membership would continue to decline until T-H is replaced by a "fair and just measure."

"Yet Sen. Taft would have you believe that there is nothing in the act which interferes with the rights of American working men to organize as a means of improving their standard of living," he said.

POTOFSKY AND Tobin exchanged felicitations for the part each had played in the legislative struggle for the enactment of the 75c minimum wage.

Tobin declared that he would seek to have the 82nd Congress enact legislation to provide for raising the minimum wage to $1 an hour on the recommendation of industry committees.

Before Tobin spoke, delegates from Massachusetts and the other New England states started a parade to the speakers' platform to greet Tobin who was formerly mayor of Boston and Governor of Massachusetts.

Potofsky presented him with a medallion in commemoration of his part in the "fight for the 75c minimum wage."

VICE-PRES. Barkley told cheering delegates that the administration would never give up the fight to repeal the Taft-Hartley Law.

Barkley followed Sen. Herbert Lehman (D. N. Y.) onto the platform by a few hours in a busy day of major-speechmaking to the convention.

Lehman devoted his address to the economic ills of the nation and the world and requirements to cure them, while Barkley focused his attention on efforts of both the New Deal and Fair Deal to lift the economic stature of the working men and women.

"We do not propose," Barkley said of the Fair Employment Practice Law test now before the Senate, "to relax our efforts until there is a law" for equality of all the people.

"We are living in a tragic age," he said, and went on to detail the hardships of one-third of the people of the world under Communist domination. One-third of the people of the world are free, and the remaining third are in what he called a "no-man's land." He asserted that this nation's efforts are directed toward bringing the latter into the fold of the right to live in freedom.

Barkley reviewed the broad scope of legislation in this country that has helped both the working man and the business man.

LEHMAN TOLD the convention that the role of the administration is "full employment and abolition of unemployment." He warned that each year unemployment is growing, and that legislative steps must be taken to stop this trend.

He proposed creation of Missouri and Columbia river authorities; passage of co-operative housing legislation; expansion of social security, a sound farm program and aid for small businessmen.

Another convention speaker, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, said that America must demonstrate before the world that, with all its great power, it is able to establish a single standard of citizenship in American life.

Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York City, whose appearance set off a parade of the New York City delegation to the rostrum, was another speaker who tore into the Fair Deal opponents, declaring that "if the Taft-Hartleys succeed, it will be because we have permitted them to win."

His attractive wife, who was introduced to the convention, captivated the delegates.

ACW Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg was CIO co-chairman of the United Labor Committee that helped re-elect O'Dwyer last year.

WARM WELCOME: Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers (right) greets CIO Pres. Philip Murray at the union's seventeenth biennial convention at Cleveland.

Clothing Workers Lauded By Truman

Pres. Truman in a letter to the ACW convention said:

"Made up of many racial strains, you have demonstrated that men and women of good will can live in amity, despite their differences of orgins and cultural backgrounds . . .

"You have recognized — far better than many people and organizations — that the most nourishing soil for our democratic way of life will be found in higher standards of living, full employment and extended social benefits to the people as a whole."

Potofsky Asks Labor Voice In State Dept.

A STRONG appeal to the federal government for participation of labor in the handling of foreign affairs was made by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers at the union's convention.

Potofsky, who is chairman of the CIO Committee on International Affairs, said he has "profound respect for Secy. of State Dean Acheson as an honorable, loyal, competent and sincere public official. But the job is one that goes beyond one man."

ACW Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, who was a member of the executive committee of the World Federation of Trade Unions until the CIO withdrew, is a member of the CIO Intl. Committee.

"Labor has a stake," Potofsky said, "in world affairs and should participate in the determination of foreign policy before—not after—it is made. Our ambassadors need not be only men of wealth.

"Our advisers need not be lame ducks repudiated by the people. It would not hurt if our country once in a while sent to a foreign country a representative of labor. Our representatives in the United Nations should include men of labor who understand the hopes and the needs of the people of our land.

"THE ATTITUDE of the architects of our foreign policy has been to suffer labor. Well, we say we've suffered them too long and too patiently. There was a great statesman who once said that war was too serious a business to leave to the generals. Well, we of labor say that peace and the future of our world are far too serious to leave to our conventional diplomats.

"Labor has been kept out of foreign policy far too long—labor, like the rest of the country has been kept in the dark about the facts. That explains in a large measure the sorry mess of our international relations."

Potofsky lambasted former Pres. Herbert Hoover for his proposal to exclude Russia and its satellite nations from the UN, a project, he said, which would serve "only the devil of war."

Forty-Hour Week Called 'Obsolete'

The 40-hour week was called "obsolete" in a resolution adopted by the ACW convention, which urged Congress to limit the work week to 35 hours. The resolution said that since 1938 the average production per worker has increased at the rate of 3% per year and total production has risen over 60%, and added:

"Unless proper steps are taken, however, improved technology can be a curse to workers, rather than a blessing. Thus, we have found that in the past few years, as pent-up demand for the products of American labor was met, and as productivity continued to rise, unemployment has mounted."

Cloture Defeated; FEPC Showdown Blocked

THE SENATE on May 19 refused to bring the controversial Fair Employment Practices Commission bill up for a vote by defeating a motion which would have ended the Dixiecrat filibuster against consideration of the measure.

Administration leaders sought to invoke "cloture," which would have ended debate on the motion to bring FEPC to the floor, but failed by 12 votes to get the necessary 64 which would have ended the preliminary filibuster. The vote was 52 for cloture, 32 against it.

So FEPC is still not officially before the Senate for action. Majority Leader Lucas (D. Ill.) announced he might try again this week.

If cloture is attempted again and succeeds, the real FEPC filibuster will begin and a second cloture motion must pass before the greatest deliberative body in the world can vote directly on the issue. Meanwhile, the Senate goes on arguing FEPC as if it had a motion before it.

One of the highlights of the debate came May 17 when Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), who pushed through the FEPC plank at the Democratic national convention in 1948, was twice "sat down" under Senate rules for using what were called "strong words" which some southerners took personally.

The first blowoff came when he charged in a speech that those seeking to prevent a vote on FEPC were seeking "to delude the American people." Sen. Connally (D. Tex.) called the Minnesotan "to order." The chair ruled that he had to take his seat, but after some discussion a motion by Sen. Russell (D. Ga.) allowed him to proceed "in order."

Humphrey didn't stay long in what was considered "order." The day before Sen. George (D. Ga.) had said the legislation was fathered not by the Democrats or the Republicans, but by the Communists. In commenting on this, Humphrey said:

"To intimate that this legislation by any stretch of the imagination has communistic lineage or communistic background is exactly what I have said—blasphemy."

SEN. HOLLAND (D. Fla.) raised the point of order this time and again Humphrey, one of the Senate's strongest FEPC supporters, was ordered to take his seat. A lot of harsh words were bandied about before cooler heads on both sides got control of the situation and Humphrey was allowed to finish.

Holland insisted, however, on entering into the record what he called "the true charge that the real original source of the suggestion that a government agency be set up to control employment practices was a platform plank of the Communist Party platform in 1928."

Humphrey continued to disagree after he resumed his speech the second time.

"I can assure the members of the Senate, my distinguished colleagues," he said, "that this proposed legislation has its antecedence in the divine characteristics of the Christian faith, of the Judeo-Christian faith, of the teachings of the Catholic and Protestant leadership.

"Therefore, to associate it with everything that is in complete opposition to the moral standards of this country is not what it should be. The argument does not have merit."

Before the Senate shut up shop and went home for the day, Sen. Long (D. La.), whose father, the late Sen. Huey P. Long, was an outstanding success as a filibusterer, promised to carry on the family tradition.

Long pointed out that the southern senators who are running for re-election have only their primary campaigns to worry about, as nomination, for all practical purposes, means election. But those proponents of FEPC seeking new terms have both primary and general elections to consider, and must make vigorous campaigns in most cases. This means, he claimed, that the pro-FEPC forces will not be able to muster enough votes to get their measure through—and that after July 15 the Senate will not even be able to muster a quorum to carry on the FEPC fight or any other business.

Long also warned that a lengthy fight means the Truman administration might just as well forget about some of its other important legislation—even the $40 billion appropriation bill with its July 1 deadline. There just won't be time to get to them, he said.

EARLIER IN the week the fight had been infinitely less spectacular. The southerners held the floor most of the time, with Holland talking through most of a single day. Rumors that refused to be quashed were circulated that the FEPC forces were willing to take a licking after a more or less perfunctory fight in return for southern support for rent control, toward which most of the southern Senators are, at best, cool. Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), the majority leader, issued a categorical denial, but the report persisted.

Peddler Of Hatred Convicted, Fined

Joseph Beauharnais, 53, president of the White Circle League of America, Inc., was convicted of distributing anti-Negro literature in Chicago by an all-white jury which required less than an hour to reach its verdict.

He was fined $200 in Municipal Court and announced he will appeal so he can continue to point out "how Negroes have overstepped their bounds." The Circuit Court is considering a petition to revoke the league's charter in Illinois.

CIO Bias Fighters Meet in Cleveland

The CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination has scheduled a staff conference at the Hollenden Hotel in Cleveland on May 24.

Invited to the session by George L-P Weaver, committee director, are officers and staff directors of the 16 CIO affiliates that maintain civil rights or fair employment practices departments. The meeting will last two days.

Jim Crow Rule Tossed Out At ABC Convention

THE CIO scored another victory in its unrelenting campaign for civil rights when the American Bowling Congress rubbed off its constitution and by-laws a 34-year-old rule limiting membership to white males.

The action was taken at the ABC convention in Chicago as court suits in the various states threatened its leadership over America's most popular participant sport. Litigation had already started in four states—New York, Wisconsin, Ohio and Illinois, where a court decision to lift its charter was help up pending the convention. Additional suits were threatened in Minnesota and Michigan.

The motion to eliminate the lily white clause from the bylaws, was passed with relatively little discussion and a heartening lack of opposition. Only a handful of the 518 delegates balloted against the motion after a scant half-hour of discussion.

Now, said CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the CIO will take on the task of eliminating racial bias in the American Automobile Association, many local branches of which do not accept Negro members. Murray has instructed CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg to determine how widespread and how deep the AAA's anti-Negro discrimination is in anticipation of more legal skirmishing on the civil rights battlefront.

THE CLUB'S argument that Negroes as motorists are "poor insurance risks" was described by Goldberg as "totally without merit." Group insurance policies negotiated by CIO unions for their members, he pointed out, provide the same protection for Negroes as for any other members.

The ABC's elimination of its bar to members other than white becomes effective Aug. 1 along with all other actions taken at the convention.

The vote was taken after a speech in which Michael J. Dunn, of Milwaukee, ABC counsel, told the delegates that the restriction threatened the congress' entire supervisory structure. Already $40,000 has been spent in fighting court actions, he said. He recalled to the delegates that between 1895 and 1916 there was no mention of "white males" in the Congress and "we got along fine." "Now," he said plaintively, "people seem reluctant to have us around." What fight there was against liberalizing the bylaws was led by Secy. Elmer H. Baumgarten. However, after the motion was passed he said that "the vote speaks for itself."

Opposition to the ABC's now discarded restriction is of long standing. Others had sought to get rid of it — notably Rev. Charles Carow of Brooklyn, who led a six-year fight by the Catholic Youth Organization of that city—but it took the CIO to find the path that led to success.

What touched it off was the exclusion from an ABC-sponsored tournament of a team of members of the Steelworkers Union representing the Inland Steel Co., of Indiana Harbor, Ind., because two of the keglers were Negroes.

CIO COMPLAINTS prompted officials in some states to institute suits seeking to bar the ABC from operating in them in defiance of laws prohibiting discrimination. CIO intervention as "amicus curiae," or "friend of the court," laid before judges facts and arguments they might not otherwise have had. Among the places where the CIO intervened was in Illinois, where state authorities acting on a CIO complaint sought not only an injunction restraining it from operating, but demanded that the charter issued in that state be lifted. A $2,500 fine levied against the ABC still stands, though Dunn told the convention an appeal will be filed.

The Ohio State CIO Council has a suit pending at present, instituted by Harold Burt, financial secretary of Steelworkers Local 2173 in Columbus, calling for temporary and permanent injunctions against the congress and asking that the state be stopped from leasing the state-owned Coliseum in Columbus to the ABC for the current tournament. The temporary injunctions were refused and trial is pending on the plea for permanent injunctions.

So—for the first time since 1916—organized bowling is open to all men, and joins other major sports which have ended discrimination.

Women To End Bowling Bias

The Women's International Bowling Congress probably will follow the lead of the American Bowling Congress in throwing out its "whites only" membership restriction, Mrs. Jeanette Knepprath, the president, revealed last week.

She said the issue will likely be taken up in St. Paul, Minn., where the WIBC international tournament will be held.

"I think it very likely that our organization will follow the lead of the ABC," she said. "After all, we are so closely related that it wouldn't work very well for one organization to have a restriction the other one doesn't have."

WIBC has about 500,000 members in 38 states, she said.

Building Facilities Must Be Open To All, CIO Bodies Told

ALL CIO regional directors and state and city CIO industrial union councils have been told by CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg that "no segregation in the use of facilities in building or office space under the control of CIO Councils should be permitted."

Goldberg's memorandum, sent out last week, was based on an opinion that "any statute or ordinance" which requires CIO organizations or bodies to practice segregation in any form is "not only diametrically opposed to CIO policy; they are also void because they violate the Constitution of the U. S."

The CIO has about 30 industrial union councils in Southern states. The new policy would apply to those localities where segregation is required by local or state law.

The CIO legal department, Goldberg said, believes that "any provision" requiring segregation "in leases or other agreements under which property is rented or occupied are unenforceable in court."

Commenting on the memorandum, Goldberg declared:

"The great and overwhelming majority of CIO members, as democratic citizens, are opposed to discrimination and segregation.

"The unions and councils which make up the CIO have always shown, through their support of all responsible programs for strengthening civil liberties, their abhorrence of discriminatory practices.

"In some areas, however, local statutes have been used as a threat against CIO affiliated councils which have endeavored to wipe out forms of segregation. The CIO believes that these statutes are unconstitutional in their goal of seeking to impose segregation practices on groups which do not desire them."

He pointed out that the Supreme Court has before it at the present time three cases in which the validity of government regulations requiring racial segregation is in question.

HE SAID the CIO has filed briefs in all three cases and has taken the firm position that "any statute, regulation or ordinance which compels the practice of segregation is in violation of the Constitution."

"In filing these briefs with the Supreme Court," Goldberg said, "the CIO is carrying out the basic provisions of its own Constitution. The preamble declares that 'racial persecution, intolerance, selfishness and greed have no place in the human family.'

"The CIO Constitution dedicates our organizations 'to bring about the effective organization of the workingmen and women of America regardless of race, creed, color or nationality' and 'to protect and extend our democratic constitutions and civil rights and liberties, and thus to perpetuate the cherished traditions of our democracy.'

"Therefore, no segregation in the use of facilities in building or office space under the control of CIO Industrial Union Councils should be permitted and there should be no signs indicating such segregation. It is also our position that any provision requiring segregation in leases or other agreements under which property is rented or occupied are unenforceable in the courts."

Health Plan Foes Receive Two Setbacks

THE AMERICAN Medical Association's drive against national health insurance suffered two major setbacks last week.

The issue was hotly debated at the Democratic party conference in Chicago, with most of the delegates backing up Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing. Ewing is leading spokesman for President Truman's health program, which proposes an overall medical care plan financed, like social security, by a payroll tax.

Later the resolution on the party's platform reaffirmed indorsement of the health plan to provide for the adoption of a "pay-as-you-go insurance program to put better medical care within the financial reach of all Americans."

THE SECOND setback was administered at the convention in San Francisco of the American Nurses Association and two other nursing organizations, which rejected the AMA's appeal to join in the fight "against the socialization of medicine." The convention tabled a resolution sent in by the AMA which condemned national health insurance as causing "a decline in national health and deterioration of medical standards and facilities."

At the Democratic conference Ewing told the delegates that he knew personally that the health program was very close to President Truman's heart, despite charges to the contrary. Ever since Truman was a county judge in Missouri, Ewing said, "he has been deeply concerned about the fact that too many people cannot afford medical care."

Rep. Biemiller (D. Wis.), a sponsor of the bill now before Congress, also spoke in favor of national health insurance.

DR. R. B. ROBINS, a national committeeman from Arkansas, took the line of the AMA, calling the administration's health program "a pet scheme of a few people" which would cost it the election.

Dr. Theodore M. Sanders, of New York, told the delegates of the AMA's intimidation against doctors who favor national health insurance. He said that it "has succeeded in convincing the average physician that a kind word about the national health insurance program is a mighty risky gesture."

PJNW Urges Repeal of T-H

THE CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers convention in Boston, Mass. last week urged repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, improvement of the minimum wage law and passage of the FEPC bill.

The 250 delegates, representing 50,000 workers in the toy, jewelry and novelty industries, unanimously adopted a resolution calling for more considered administration of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act and condemning mounting imports from "Iron Curtain" countries which undersell domestic products.

The convention asked repeal of the excise taxes on jewelry and other luxury products.

Anthony Esposito and Alex Bail were unanimously reelected president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

TYPICAL OF GOOD CIO members throughout the country who want to make life better in their neighborhoods are two St. Louis workers, Ruth Coy (right), of Local 25, Auto Workers, and Arthur Hebrink (second from right), of Local 136, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers. They are shown receiving certificates upon graduating from a CIO Community Services counseling course from James Pfaffenback (left), president of the St. Louis Industrial Union Council, as H. Hadley Grim, executive director of the Community Chest, looks on.

CIO-CSC Institute Scheduled

THE NATIONAL CIO Community Services Committee will hold its Ninth Annual Training Institute at the Willard Hotel in Washington, D. C., June 5-9.

Union counselling is one of the most important and diversified aspects of the CIO program. It is a service to members on their personal problems which exist beyond the jurisdiction of the collective bargaining machinery.

Through union counsellors, CIO members are referred to community health, welfare and recreation agencies, both public and private, for services which they are already helping to support through taxes and through voluntary contributions to local community chests. The counsellors also supply CIO with information about the need for new or strengthened services in the communities.

FUND-RAISING drives for CARE, labor participation in Community Chest projects, cooperation with existing social agencies, and manifold other projects are undertaken through the CIO Industrial Union Councils under CSC sponsorship. Probably the most dramatic single CSC activity in recent months was the work of the UAW-CIO union counsellors in handling the many personal problems that arose during the 99-day strike of 89,000 Chrysler workers.

The annual training institute is designed as an introduction to community counseling work for union members who have not participated before, and as a refresher for the experts. It is led by Leo Perlis, CSC Director, and Irving Abramson, CSC chairman.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will address the opening session. Other speakers will include Joseph Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers, whose union recently held a series of eight regional CSC conferences; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, and John Brophy, director of Industrial Union Councils.

"Workshop" sessions will cover strike assistance, relationship with other agencies, in-plant health and safety, housing, public assistance, unemployment, fund-raising, etc.

SOCIAL WORK EMPLOYES MEET: Speakers at a meeting of the CIO Community and Social Agency Employes Union at Atlantic City—which is replacing the discredited Office & Professional Workers' Social Service Employes Division—included: Left to right, Miss Ethelyn Christiansen, director of organization of the new union; Dr. John A. Fitch, social work teacher; Arthur Goldberg, general counsel, CIO, and Milton Murray, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee. Here they are looking at literature issued by the CIO Community Service Committee.

New England Organizes For Idle Benefits

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

LEADERS of six New England CIO industrial union councils will meet in Boston this week to map plans to get quick action on passage of President Truman's program for establishment of minimum uniform unemployment compensation standards.

The critical unemployment situation in New England, where thousands of workers have exhausted their unemployment compensation claims and are virtually destitute, led to an earlier meeting at Hartford, Conn., of CIO regional council members and state officials, including Gov. Chester Bowles. A permanent committee was set up.

In Connecticut, Harold Senior, administrative officer of the State CIO Council, said that last year 50,000 workers exhausted their benefits. Of this number, 16,000 were unable to secure work of any kind.

IN MAINE, CIO council Pres. George M. Jabar said things are in a "very critical condition." Of the 38,000 unemployed at present, 20,947 have used up their compensation. Jabar compared the $4 million paid out in claims in 1938 with $11 million distributed last year and says the amount required this year will be even higher. Three years ago the state paid out $350,000 for direct relief—and last year the figure was $1 million.

Vermont had 18,000 compensation claimants last year with 5400 exhausting their claims. State Council Secry.-Treas. James F. Christie pointed out that over $2 million was paid out. The 18,000 figure is significant, he said, because the total labor force of the state is only 150,000.

In Rhode Island the unemployment compensation fund "is in worse shape than any other state in the country," reported TWUA Rep. Seth Gifford. He declared that last year 51,000 workers, or 38% of the unemployed, exhausted their payments.

AT THE BOSTON meeting a date will be set for a Washington conference at which senators, representatives and governors from the New England area will be invited to hear first-hand accounts of unemployment problems.

Meanwhile, seven New England economists were named by Leon H. Keyserling, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, to study and report on the area's economic situation.

CIO Man Elected DFL Chairman

William Nolan, president of CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 167 at South St. Paul, Minn., was unanimously elected chairman of the Democratic-Farmer Labor Party of Dakota County, Minn.

He and Curvin Krum, also a member of the local, were among the six delegates to the state DFL convention elected by the county committee. Nolan, a veteran member of the local who as president led it through the 1948 packinghouse strike, is a former member of the executive board of the Minnesota State Industrial Union Council and was among those who led the fight that ended Communist domination of it in 1947.

Carey Flays UE At Parley Of Mich. IUC

CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey told the recent Michigan State Industrial Union Council convention in Grand Rapids that leaders of the Communist - dominated United Electrical Workers are "reactionary termites."

UE was expelled from the CIO because it no longer represented the workers, he said.

He declared the gains made by the CIO International Union of Electrical Radio and Machine Workers are ending the grip of UE in the electrical industry, and predicted that IUE and CIO will move forward in spite of opposition thrown in their paths by UE and other left-wing CIO-expelled unions.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan, speaking to the 800 delegates, warned that a Republican victory in the fall would "push Michigan law back into the dark ages." Legislative gains for labor are dependent upon a Democratic victory, he said, and urged the delegates to push a vigorous political campaign from now on.

"Any man who says he represents all of Michigan but does not have the support of the CIO is just a liar or a fool," the governor stated.

JOHN BROPHY, CIO director of industrial union councils, called attention to the growing unemployment problem in the country and warned that the jobless total may rise to more than 5,000,000 by fall. He also urged a program for the conservation of the nation's natural resources.

One of the highlights of the convention was the announcement by State IUC Pres. August Scholle that the U. S. Supreme Court had ruled the strike provisions of the notorious Bonine-Tripp Act unconstitutional.

The convention voted to throw its all-out support to the legislative goals of National CIO, especially in regard to the improvement of social security to include extended coverage, increased benefits and improvement of public assistance measures.

Other resolutions adopted in a 15-point program included:

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and re-enactment of the Wagner Act, with modifications.

Enactment into law of the recommendations of Pres. Truman's Committee on Civil Rights.

Extension of rent controls for the duration of the housing shortage.

Raising of the minimum wage to at least $1 per hour.

A unified national health insurance program.

Scholle was elected to his eighth term and Secy.-Treas. Barney Hopkins to his seventh on the closing day of the meeting.

Thirteen incumbent vice presidents were also re-elected. Four incumbents who did not seek re-election were replaced by William Good, Utility Workers; Wayne Cline and Charles Curry, Auto Workers; and Walter Schaar, Communications Workers.

If Your Congressman Acts Shifty, PAC Him Down In 1950!

'Globe-Girdler' Bows to TWA

PICKET LINES LIKE this one at LaGuardia Field, New York, were maintained for only 17 hours—and the CIO Transport Workers had the huge Pan-American Airways so tied up it agreed to arbitrate the union's demands for wage hikes and other contract changes. Some 3000 maintenance members of TWU respected the lines thrown around terminals by 700 striking flight service workers in an effective demonstration of union solidarity.

THE CIO Transport Workers shut down the huge Pan American World Airways for a brief period recently in a display of union strength which found 3000 TWU maintenance members respecting the picket lines of 700 striking flight service workers.

The walkout, which lasted 17 hours, ended when the company agreed to submit to arbitration the union's proposals for a $12-per-month pay raise, system-wide seniority and improved severance pay.

Pan American, which has 140 planes and 14,000 employes, flies routes to 67 foreign countries and U. S. territories. It has no domestic runs but has terminals in New York, New Orleans, Miami, Houston, San Francisco, Seattle and Brownsville, Tex.

William Grogan, TWU vice president, said present wages range from $187 to $282 a month for stewards and stewardesses and $292 to $352 for pursers. They spend 85 hours monthly in the air and perform flight duties on the ground.

In New York, where the company operates from both LaGuardia and Idlewild Airports, 180 stewards and 300 maintenance men were out, according to TWU officials.

At Miami, the company's main base for its big Latin American operations, 280 strikers were supported by 1700 sympathetic maintenance men.

The union's contract expired Oct. 1 but until the strike was called TWU members had remained on the job during negotiations.

TWU members conducted a successful 11-day strike against American Airlines in March. The issues in that instance were inclusion of a job security clause in the contract and elimination of the company's practice of "farming out" work to sub-contractors. The union won on both counts.

Pres. Murray Schedules Eight Talks

CIO PRES. Murray makes a triple - header appearance in Minneapolis this week.

On Friday, May 26, Murray goes to the Minnesota metropolis to:

1. Address the annual convention of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers.

2. Be guest of honor at a banquet climaxing the Minnesota CIO Council's "Philip Murray Day."

3. Address a big CIO Political Action Committee rally at the Minneapolis armory.

Murray may also address a convention of District 33 the United Steelworkers, to be held in St. Paul on May 27.

"Minnesota Labor," the State CIO paper, has voiced hope that Murray may use the state PAC rally to deliver a keynote address for "the nationwide 1950 political action campaign of the CIO."

"Certainly he could choose no better place for it than the state which in 1948 repudiated Joseph H. Ball, one of the prime writers of the odious Taft-Hartley law," the CIO paper said.

MURRAY addressed a big mass meeting of the IUE-CIO at Lynn, Mass., home of one of the biggest of General Electric's plants, on May 21. GE employes will be voting May 25 in a company-wide election contest between the IUE and the "old UE," which was expelled from the CIO last November on grounds of Communist domination.

Murray will make a second trip to New England on June 14 to receive an honorary degree from Boston College and to address the graduating class.

Two days later he will be in Washington for a national CIO-Political Action Committee rally.

And on June 28 the CIO president will address the convention of the American Newspaper Guild in Washington.

Judge Frees Nine Nabbed In Bell Strike

INDICTMENTS against nine of the 23 CIO members on trial for riot and conspiracy at Lockport, N. Y., as an aftermath of the Bell Aircraft strike conducted by Local 501, CIO Auto Workers last year were dismissed by Niagara County Judge John S. Marsh for lack of evidence.

He withheld a ruling on a defense motion for a mistrial in the case of Martin Gerber, director of UAW-CIO Region 9, who was never arraigned.

Under persistent cross-examination by Defense Attorney Charles McDonough of Buffalo, witnesses herded into the court room and coached in the corridors by Bell officials have testified to the following facts:

1 That Bell Aircraft furnished helicopters and horses for use by the sheriff of Niagara County.

2 Blackjacks and bludgeons were manufactured by the salaried engineers and scabs on company time for use against the strikers.

3 The company installed a sound system at the main gate of the Bell plant to jam the union's sound car announcements.

4 That engineers and scabs were hauled to one plant gate in company trucks Sept. 7 and they threw rocks at pickets.

Life Gets Tougher & Tougher For The Little Red Brothers

THE COMMUNISTS have been having a tough time of it lately—in several parts of the world.

In France they dug themselves into two messes.

At a convention in Paris party leaders orated at length against, of all things, high wages. High wages, they told the hacks, threaten the party's struggle for power. But the struggle has been pretty well threatened already, other delegates reported: the party has lost three million members since 1947 and Communist publications are losing readers and money. Besides that, they admitted openly that their propaganda against the Marshall Plan has flopped, and mourned that they just can't seem to get the workers to strike for political purposes.

The convention had its echo in Marseilles. Upon his return the local secretary of the General Confederation of Workers, which the Communists dominate, proposed that union members boycott the two local anti-Communist dailies. The printers, who belong to the CGT, promptly hit the roof, pointing out that the papers gave work to thousands and that the "freedom of the press would no longer exist if certain individuals pretended to have the right to boycott papers they disliked." Printers affiliated with the free Force Ouvriere also blasted the proposal, which they said would "dangerously compromise the freedom of the press and endanger the jobs of printing workers."

IN HOLLAND, where provincial state elections were recently held for the first time since 1946, the Communists lost a total of 27 seats. The lineup: Catholics 189, Socialists 156, Anti-Revolutionaries 77, Christian Historical Party 70, Liberals 49, Communists 31, State Reformed Party 11, and others 7.

In Stockholm, Sweden, all 12 Social Democratic candidates for delegate to the national convention of the Transport Workers Union defeated Communist rivals. Three officers of the local recently resigned from the Communist party in an open letter charging the leadership with bungling and deceit.

In Mexico the Confederation of Labor (CTM) has voted to disaffiliate from the Communist-controlled Latin-American Confederation of Workers (CTAL), of which it had been a bulwark for many years. The CTM is expected to join the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which the CIO and AFL belong.

Murray Calls CIO Veeps To Unity Session

A MEETING OF the CIO vice-presidents has been called in New York for June 6 by Pres. Philip Murray.

The session, to be held at the Hotel Roosevelt, will probably take up the problem of labor unity.

Murray told the United Steelworkers convention at Atlantic City, N. J., earlier this month that he would ask the vice-presidents for approval to name a committee to discuss unity questions with a similar committee of the American Federation of Labor.

Murray, in his original unity letter, had called for the prompt establishment of a joint committee by CIO, AFL, the Machinists, the Miners and the railroad brotherhoods.

AFL Pres. William Green, after a meeting of his organization's executive council, announced he had been authorized to appoint a committee to hold further talks with the CIO on the subject.

Green later named three AFL vice-presidents to discuss the issues with CIO spokesmen: Pres. Dan Tobin of the Teamsters, Pres. Charles J. MacGowan of the Boilermakers; and Pres. Daniel Tracy of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Denham In and/or Out, Say Wishful Thinkers

THE BOYS who say they have the Inside Dope on everything going on backstage in Washington had a field day last week.

The occupant of the inside pipeline they proclaim they have to the Center of Everything was Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Their Hot Stuff ranged all the way from (a) President Truman's gonna kick 'im out but fast, to (b) Denham's in from now on.

The furore followed the Senate execution of the President's Reorganization Plan No. 12, which was aimed at ending Denham's independent status in the NLRB.

The rift between Denham and the board members that had turned the board into a two-headed administrative monster with the mouths snapping at each other widened perceptibly in the wake of the vote.

THE REPUBLICANS who went to Denham's rescue in the Senate—and did a very fine job of rescuing—continued to plump for him. Sen. Taft (R. O.), co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act which created the independent general counsel's office, said the 53-to-30 vote indicates "Congress is against most of these Fair Deal measures." Sen. Wherry (Neb.), Republican floor leader, said substantially the same thing. Republicans generally warned that if the President fires Denham his successor will never be confirmed.

Denham got into the fray on his own account with a slap at the President in an article in the magazine Factory Management and Maintenance, a management publication. He described Truman's proposal to end the independent status of his office as a "flank attack" on the Taft-Hartley Act, a statement calculated to do nothing toward appeasing the President.

He also notified Louis G. Silverberg, NLRB information director, that henceforth he will handle his own public relations. Silverberg, a veteran of 13 years with the Board, has served both the board and Denham since the latter's job was created. Now press inquiries on matters within Denham's jurisdiction will have to be directed to Denham.

(The staff of the CIO NEWS has had many occasions to call upon Silverberg's services and to use his releases in the preparation of news stories. Its experience has been that he has served Denham and the NLRB equally well and with complete impartiality.)

PRESIDENT TRUMAN himself served notice that the defeat of his reorganization proposal does not mean the end of his fight against T-H.

In a speech at Butte, Mont., during his western tour, he declared the act "insidiously undermines the strength of labor unions" and added:

"The Taft-Hartley law hangs over the head of labor, threatening to destroy the gains of 15 years. There it will hang until we are able to replace it with a law that is fair to management and labor alike.

"That is something we must do—not only for the sake of labor, but for the sake of the whole country. I believe profoundly that the Taft-Hartley law is a substantial infringement on the basic freedom to bargain collectively.

"I will not cease to fight for its repeal."

Truman made no reference to possible ouster of Denham, a course that has been urged upon him repeatedly by the CIO and many of its affiliates. In answer to a question at a press conference a few months ago, he said that since he had the power of appointment to the job Denham holds, he felt he also had the power of dismissal.

UAW Aids Community

Local 719 of the CIO Auto Workers at LaGrange, Ill., has laid the cornerstone of a new $300,000 home which will contain recreational facilities to be open to the entire community. Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW was the principal speaker at the ceremonies.

Twelve Leadership Schools Ready For CIO Vacationers

TWELVE one-week leadership training schools for CIO members will be held this summer in various parts of the country under the sponsorship of the National CIO Dept. of Education and Research, in cooperation with CIO state councils and international unions.

This year's program, the fourth to be held, opens with the Rocky Mountain School at Estes Park, Colo., in June and runs to October, when two schools are scheduled for the South.

A new development in the National CIO's expanded program for this summer is the advanced school scheduled for July 9-15 at Kimmswick, Mo., which will underscore Political Action Committee training. It will be open to CIO members who have previously attended a general leadership training session. Enrollment is limited and all students must come as delegates from their local unions or councils.

THE SUMMER school program is under the direction of CIO Associate Education Dir. George Guernsey. It is basically the same for all schools, with such variation from state to state as is necessary to meet special needs of the unions represented.

It includes morning discussion classes on such topics as labor history, full employment, economics and public relations, and afternoon workshops.

The CIO students will interview farmers during "workshop" periods, then meet together and discuss the reaction of farmers to their visits. CIOers will be urged not to "tell" the farmer, but to find out from him what his attitudes are on the questions brought up.

Daily evening sessions will be devoted to discussions of important CIO policies, with visiting CIO and community leaders taking part in the program.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a statement urging CIO locals and councils to take advantage of the school program, said that he hoped "the delegates to CIO schools and conferences will take the things they have learned back to their local unions and local communities to build the strong democratic union movement which is necessary for building a strong democratic America."

HERE IS the list of CIO schools as scheduled to date:

Rocky Mountain (Colorado, Montana, Utah and Wyoming)—Estes Park, Colo., June 18-23.

Missouri — Montebello Vacation Camp, Kimmswick, Mo., July 9-15.

Indiana - Kentucky — Indiana Univ., Bloomington, July 23-29.

New England — Univ. of Connecticut, Storrs, Conn., July 30-Aug. 5.

Wisconsin — Wisconsin School for Workers, Madison, Wis., July 30-Aug. 5.

Kansas - Oklahoma — YWCA Camp, near Wichita, Kans., Aug. 6-12.

Pennsylvania-New Jersey-West Virginia—UAW Camp, Pottstown, Pa., Aug. 13-19.

Maryland - Delaware - Virginia—Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md., Aug. 20-26.

Iowa - Nebraska — YWCA Camp, Boone, Ia., Aug. 27-Sept. 1.

Texas—Austin, Tex., Sept. 8-11.

Louisiana-Mississippi—New Orleans, La., October (exact date not yet set).

The South — Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., Oct. 1-7.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

With Pres. Murray, I attended the convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America in Cleveland. Pres. Murray made a glorious speech which was received with great enthusiasm by the entire delegation. It was a splendid convention and this organization, with its background of tremendous achievement, will go on to even greater achievements under the leadership of such great men as Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and their associates.

Reg. Dir. Francis Carmichael reports that in a representation election at the Judge Leather Co., Inc., Boston, Mass., the workers voted in favor of CIO by a vote of CIO 24, AFL 1.

Dir. of Org. A. T. Stephens, of the United Packinghouse Workers, reports that in a representation election at Hately Brothers, Chicago, Ill., of the 34 eligible to vote, 28 votes were cast for UPWA, 1 against, 1 challenged.

The Newspaper Guild of New York won a union shop election at the Brooklyn Eagle, Brooklyn, N. Y., by the overwhelming vote of 229 to 22.

Lloyd P. Vaughan, United Paperworkers' director of organization for the State of Virginia, reports a representation election at the Virginia Fibre Corp., Petersburg, Va., resulted as follows: UPA-CIO 157, no union 120, challenged 5.

Int. Rep. James Christin, of the United Stone and Allied Products Workers, reports the following union shop elections held in the Barre, Vt., granite quarrying industry: Rock of Ages Corp., 124 yes, 2 no; J. K. Pirie Estate, 46 yes, 0 no; Wetmore & Morse, 44 yes, 8 no; E. L. Smith, 96 yes, 5 no; Wells-Lamson Co., 59 yes, 3 no.

Sub.-Reg. Dir. Ralph Tillotson reports that in a representation election at the Metric Metal Works, Erie, Pa., IUE swept into power with 56 votes to 8 votes for no union in the office and clerical workers unit, and in the production workers unit by a vote of 596 to 20.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports a representation victory for IUE at the Foote Bros. Gear and Machine Co. in Chicago; IUE-CIO 444, UE 165.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to IUE-CIO Chairman Carey, reports the following IUE representation victories: Minneapolis-Moline Co., Moline, Ill., IUE 527, UE 193, no union 11; Sylvania Electric, Salem, Mass., IUE 569, UE 64, no union 10; Toro Mfg. Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 223, no union 2, UE withdrew; Signal Mfg. Co., Lynn, Mass., IUE 78, no union 8, UE withdrew; National Carbon Division, Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., Fostoria, Ohio, IUE 336, no union 194, UE withdrew; Plewes Co., Minneapolis, IUE 23, no union 0; Charles Mundt Co., Jersey City, N. J., IUE 47, no union 1, UE withdrew; Neon Products, Inc., Lima, O., IUE 122, no union 8, UE withdrew; Gondert & Liensch Co., Dayton, O., IUE 52, no union 4, UE withdrew; Burger Iron, Dayton, O., IUE 41, no union 12, UE withdrew; P. R. Mallory Co., Indianapolis, Ind., IUE 2124, no union 25, UE withdrew; Leland Electric, Dayton, O., IUE 497, no union 8, UE withdrew; United Specialties Co., Philadelphia, Pa., IUE 268, UE 13, no union 46; Airtemp Division, Chrysler Corp., Dayton, O., IUE 736, no union 21, UE withdrew; Buckeye Iron & Brass Works, Dayton, O., IUE 113, no union 2, UE withdrew; Brownell Boiler Co., Dayton, O., IUE 26, no union 0, UE withdrew; Ohio Box & Lumber Co., Dayton, O., IUE 17, no union, 4 UE withdrew; Apex Mfg. Co., Sandusky, O., IUE 686, no union 8, UE withdrew; Smith System Heating, Minneapolis, IUE 12, UE 9, no union 0; Phelps Dodge Co., Elizabeth, N. J., IUE 774, UE 191, no union 9.

Dir. of Org. Adolph Germer, International Woodworkers, reports a union shop election at U. S. Plywood Plant, Mapleton, Ore., 156 for, 4 against. Al Wilson and Les Thompson, of the Plywood Works local, were active in the election.

Sub-Reg. Dir. Sylvester Graham reports the following Oil Workers representation election victory at the Continental Oil Co. Billings, Mont.: OWIU 48, AFL 2, independent 28, no union 0.

Sub-Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo reports the following representation elections: Bradt Tanning Co., Gloversville, N. Y., 19 to 0 in favor of CIO; Columbian Rope Co., Auburn, N. Y., Textile Workers 689, no union 71; Bowen's Co., Auburn, N. Y., UAW 115, no union 8.

Field Rep. Ben Stahl reports a representation election at Van Holten Co., New Berlin, Wis., with a vote of Brewery Workers 50, no union 8. Active in the election were Tom Rusch, E. J. McCann and Steve Brody of the Brewery Workers organizing staff, and CIO Field Reps. Ben Stahl and Andrew Evans.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports a representation election at the U. S. Corrugated Box Co., Indianapolis, Ind., gave the United Paperworkers 49, no union 20, challenged 5. This campaign was carried on by CIO Field Rep. George McGrew.

CIO National Rep. George DeNucci reports that after six weeks of negotiations and the threat of a strike, Radio Station WKAQ, owned by the most powerful newspaper in Puerto Rico, El Mundo, agreed to recognize the Radio Operators Union, affiliated with the CGT-CIO, and signed a contract granting a wage increase, vacations with pay, sick leave and transportation expenses. Juan Carlos Vergne, executive secretary of the union, handled the negotiations. He also reports that on May 7, in the presence of 500 people, Pres. Thomas Mendez, of the CGT-CIO, presented a charter to the first independent union that voted to affiliate with the CGT since its affiliation with the CIO. An amalgamated local, it represents about 2500 members working in 11 establishments. The bulk of its membership is in the San Jose Sugar Mill, University of Puerto Rico, the two experimental stations at Rio Piedras and Mayaguez, a rug making plant and coconut processing plant in San Juan, and city workers in Rio Piedras. The charter was received by the secretary general of the Local, Francisco Munoz Dieppa. George DeNucci and Dr. Ernest Schwarz spoke for the National CIO.

Reuther Urges Seaway Project For All Of U.S.

The House Committee on Public Works was urged last week by Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers to recommend immediate authorization of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

Extension of the Atlantic seaboard through the St. Lawrence to the Great Lakes and into the middle west "will multiply the opportunity for economic growth in every part of our nation," the UAW president declared.

"Our indorsement of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project is grounded in the firm conviction that what helps one part of our nation helps all," he said. "We believe that prosperity promotes prosperity. We totally reject the false philosophy that the economic advancement of one part of the country or one industry is achieved only to the detriment of other areas or industries. Increased employment and larger payrolls among any part of our people create better customers for the products of the entire country."

He urged that power in connection with the project be generated and distributed publicly.

"Our capacity to produce, together with our ability to distribute what we produce, is the key to the world's hope of achieving a lasting peace based on human liberty and economic abundance," he said.

Goods, not slogans, will prove the strength of our democracy, both to the freedom-loving nations and to the enemies of freedom, he said.

House Group Votes 'Compromise' Rent Control Bill

GET READY for a 5 to 10% pay cut.

The House Banking Committee, by a 13-4 vote, approved the "compromise" rent control bill on May 18 and ordered it reported to the floor for immediate action.

The bill, which ostensibly continues federal rent control for another year from June 30, when the present law expires, actually ends it automatically on Dec. 31 of this year in every area whose governing body has not, by that time, voted to retain controls.

Efforts of liberal Congressmen to write in a "local option recontrol" provision failed.

"It's this bill or nothing," Chairmain Spence (D. Ky.) of the Banking Committee, told Donald Montgomery, UAW Washington representative, while Montgomery was testifying May 17.

Montgomery had explained CIO's objections to the proposal as follows:

"While it pretends to leave the decision up to the people of each locality, in practical political fact it does no such thing, as any member of Congress knows. The difficulties of pushing the required action through local governments, or of getting a referendum authorized, are perfectly well understood by all of us, both in and out of Congress. . . . There is no justification whatsoever for imposing upon state and local governments the requirement that between now and Dec. 31 they take special action to retain the protection which since April a year ago they could have got rid of, but have chosen not to get rid of.

"The large increases in rents that will take place if federal control is ended will be equivalent to substantial reductions in wages. Such increases as have already taken place in decontrolled areas are equivalent to cuts of 5 to 10% in wages. You can be sure that there will be a vigorous, and a fully justified, demand for wage increases to offset such wage cuts if they take place."

Montgomery reminded the committee that it had recognized the desperate housing shortage for low-income families in the Housing Act of 1949 and for middle-income families in the Housing Act of 1950.

"Despite your (middle-income) recommendation," he said, "Congress refused to do anything about it. But the same real estate industry that persuaded Congress to its course of callous indifference and inaction on middle-income housing is now urging that you inflict the final degree of punishment upon these families by exposing them to the mercy of landlords who will take full advantage of their desperate need for shelter."

Pres. Richard W. Gray of the AFL Building Trades Dept. told the committee that the real estate lobby's own survey of rent increases in cities that have been decontrolled under the present law proves:

"1. Nationwide decontrol would result in rent increases for millions of families."

"2. Rent control is just as much a problem in many small areas as it is in the large cities."

Real estate witnesses, Gray continued, "overlook the fact that last year's volume of housing construction was not very much higher than in 1925, when there were 35 million fewer people in this country. It also overlooks the fact that the overwhelming proportion of the housing built during the last year has been for sale and not for rent . . . The housing shortage is still very much with us."

The Office of the Housing Expediter, which had advocated continuing and strengthening the present law, had no official comment on the committee's action, but one OHE official remarked privately: "Well, I guess an eighth of a loaf is better than none."

Spence told the labor witnesses that full extension had "lost strength" in the House because several states, notably New York and New Jersey, had passed their own rent control laws. There was high irony in this, since the state laws (a) were passed in the expectation that Congress would not extend the federal law, and (b) offer distinctly less protection to tenants than does the federal statute.

(The New York state rent control law went into effect May 1, "freezing" rents as of March 1. But the law did not take into account that certain localities would have been decontrolled before then. The law therefore "froze" some exorbitant rent increases, including those in Columbia County, where units renting for under $30 a month went up an average of $7 a month following decontrol. The CIO Textile Workers succeeding in getting OHE to order controls re-established but the new state law effectively countermanded this order.)

John Edelman, TWUA Washington representative, presented the House committee with some case histories of rent increases and with some pungent comments culled from CIO field representatives. Some samples:

Martinsburg, W. Va.: "When rent ceilings were lifted late in 1949, the average working man in this town paid $15 to $25 for rent. These same families are now paying from $40 to $50 a month."

Richmond, Va.: Notices are being received, warning that rents will go up as soon as controls go off. (Virginia ordered federal controls dropped as of the end of this June.) A quick survey indicates that in the higher brackets, raises of about 15% are to be made, while in the middle and lower brackets the rent raises will be from 20 to 25%. In some apartments where the 15% so-called voluntary increases had jumped $45 rents to $51, landlords are notifying tenants that the new rents will be $65. In places where rents are now $45 to $48 a month, the new scale is to be $60.

Detroit: The Housing Commission listed and followed up on all rentals in the want ad columns of the Detroit News for Nov. 6, 1949. Of the 298 rental units listed, 114 did not permit children. Of the rest, only 109 rented for less than $70 a month, and of those, 40 were too small to accomodate a family with children. Ten were lake cottages, five were temporary, one required six months' rent in advance, 45 had been rented by noon of the next day, and exactly two of the 298 were "below $70 a month, took children, and seemed to be suitable and available for the type of family assumed in the survey."

San Francisco, Calif: "Experience has shown that wherever rents have been decontrolled in this region the increases have been around 100%."

Knoxville, Tenn.: "A member of a CIO local told me the rent on an apartment being rented for $50 before decontrol (which figure included heat and utilities) was raised to $75. The tenant had to take on the light and water bill in addition." Another case was that of a telephone worker who had rented a house with garage for $40; when controls went off, the garage was rented separately and the house went to $57.50 minus garage.

Dallas, Tex: "Our cases showed rent increases ranging up to 380% after the city voted to end controls. More than half the rent raises we reported called for increases of 60% and more. One out of every five exceeded 100%. Along with the increases in rents, an increasing number of tenants drew eviction notices . . . In one group of 13 rent houses, each with only three rooms and no bath, the tenants drew a 188% rent increase."

Boston: A landlord ran an ad offering a unit for rent to a family with children and got 323 answers.

Controls presently are in effect for about 11 million rental units occupied by about 38 million people, according to OHE's latest figures. These are located in 3898 incorporated cities, towns and villages in 43 states. More than one-fourth of these had a 1940 population in excess of 5000: and there are now under federal control 72 cities which in 1940 had a population of over 100,000.

Can't Afford Rental? Start Travelling, Is Advice Given By Landlords' Spokesman

HERE IS THE landlord point of view in a nutshell, and we do mean nuts:

William Schmidt, president of the Natl. Property Owners League, which CIO has asked the House Lobby Committee to investigate, went before the House Banking Committee last week and demanded that landlords be freed from the Unamerican, etc., etc., burden of rent controls.

Asked what he thought the low and middle-income tenants would do then, he replied:

"I hear so often the statement that people cannot afford to pay for this thing or that. Well, there is nothing new in that. For thousands of years people have wanted things, but never have they been able to get any more than the things for which they can afford to pay.

"IF THEY CANNOT afford to pay for a lollipop, they have to do without it. Now, I can hear some of our opponents say 'you cannot do without shelter!' Let me suggest to you that the demand for shelter is more flexible and more easily adjusted than the demand for any other human need."

Anyone trying to get along on one-quarter his normal amount of food would probably starve, Schmidt argued, but "just observe the small amount of space people are satisfied with when they are traveling on shipboard or on airplanes, or on the railroad train."

"If the American people do not like the charges that are being made for rental property," he concluded triumphantly, "not only do they have ample opportunity to provide their own home, almost as easily as rent, but they could voluntarily so reduce their demand for space that rents would drop instead of increasing if they thought what was being offered to them was not worth having."

"If you don't believe it," he insisted, "think back to the Chicago fire and the San Francisco earthquake, and remember how the American people solved their problems in record-breaking time, and without any assistance from a lot of bureaucrats."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 11 million.	Passed House last session. Sen. Finance Comm. has completed action. CIO has asked further improvements.	Ask Senators to accept and strengthen HR 6000.
Rent Control Renewal S 3181 HR 5790	Extends rent control one year to June 30, 1951, allows local option recontrol.	Senate Banking Committee has completed hearings. House Banking Comm. voted "compromise" bill.	Ask members of both Houses to vote full extension, accept no compromise.
ECA Extension HR 7378	Renews Marshall Plan for another year; sets $2,950,000,000 ceiling on funds.	House cut $250 million from authorization, Senate upheld the slash.	Ask members of both Houses to restore cut, pass bill as drafted.
Federal Aid to Education S 246	Provides over $300 million aid to states for schools; gives states broad power to supervise use of funds.	Bill, approved by CIO, has passed Senate. House Labor Comm. deadlocked over religious quarrel involving school buses.	Ask members of House Labor Comm. to approve Senate bill.
School Construction Bill S. 2317 HR 5718	Provides emergency U.S. aid to states to build schools and survey school needs.	Senate passed bill. House bill, in Labor Comm., contains long-range building program not contained in Senate version.	Ask House Labor Committee members to approve.
FEPC S 1728 HR 4453	Senate bill would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	House voted substitute bill without enforcement teeth. Senate filibuster against consideration of bill now being fought.	Ask Senators to vote for S 1728 without weakening amendments, and to fight filibuster.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.
Emergency Unemployment Compensation HR 8374	Gives extra 26 weeks' benefits in areas where unemployment exceeds 9%.	Awaiting hearings before House Ways and Means Comm.	Ask prompt hearings and fast action on this badly needed bill.

MEMORANDUM:

EXECUTIVE 5581

To: Members of the 81st Congress
From: Congress of Industrial Organizations
Re: Rent Control

In a few days, you will vote on an issue of vital importance to about 30 million people in 40 states - the question of whether or not to continue rent controls for another year.

We want to be sure you understand the CIO's position.

The CIO favors extension of the present law, for a full year from June 30, with the addition of a provision making it as easy for a community to put controls back on as to get them lifted.

Failure to pass such a law and support it with adequate appropriations would mean a vote by Congress to CUT WAGES 8 to 10 PER CENT.

We believe the "compromise" bill now before you, which requires governing bodies of each one of the 3400 incorporated cities, towns and villages now under controls to vote this fall to continue controls if they are to remain in effect after December 31 of this year, is an absolute phony, politically inspired. We believe it to be neither sound law nor smart politics.

The present law takes excellent care of the landlords if they will avail themselves of it. The fair net operating income provision adopted last year even guarantees a profit to the landlord who could not make ends meet before the war in the days of "free competition." The law prevents profiteering, not profits.

The Bureau of the Census, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Office of the Housing Expediter, and our own field staff, have collected accurate statistics on what has happened to rents in decontrolled areas. The increases have been astounding!

The average "shelter rental" - not including heat, light or in many cases, water - of units now under control is $33 a month. The average increase for decontrolled units renting at that price has been from 50 to 60 per cent.

HST To Congress: Armed Forces Solving Racial Bias

HOW THE equivalent of a Fair Employment Practices Commission worked out successfully in the largest branch of government service was pointed out to a balky Congress by President Truman last week.

The President made his observations as he issued a report from a special commission working on racial problems in the armed forces.

The body, headed by Associate Justice Charles Fahy, of the U. S. Court of Appeals, was set up by executive order on July 26, 1948, as the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services.

The order set forth the President's policy that racial equality should exist in the armed forces and directed the committee to make it effective "as rapidly as possible, having due regard to the time required to effectuate any necessary changes without impairing efficiency or morale."

The committee was told to look into racial practices in the Army, Navy and Air Force and to recommend any needed changes. The recommendations made, the committee said, have been approved by the President and the Secretary of Defense.

"It is the committee's conviction," said the report, "that the present programs of the three services are designed to accomplish the objectives of the President.

"As the programs are carried out, there will be, within the reasonably near future, equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed forces with a consequent improvement in military efficiency."

SPEAKING of the Navy and Air Force, it also said:

"The range of individual Negro abilities is much wider than the services had assumed prior to the opening of all jobs . . . The services cannot afford to waste these potential Negro skills . . .

"Integration of the two races at work, in schools and in living quarters did not present insurmountable difficulties. As a matter of fact, integration in two of the services had brought a decrease in racial friction.

"The enlisted men were far more ready for integration than the officers had expected."

The committee said it is too early to appraise the effect of the Army's new policy, but it believes that as the Army carries it out, "within a relatively short time Negro soldiers will enjoy complete equality of treatment and opportunity."

The task was not easy, the committee said in retrospect. A number of high-ranking officers were opposed to its recommendations when they were first presented in the belief that a loss in morale would outweigh the gains from greater manpower utilization. Among those who had to be convinced was Gen. Omar N. Bradley, now chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

In a statement accompanying release of the report, President Truman praised Justice Fahy and his committee for the "time and energy they devoted to their mission."

"Every American who believes sincerely in the language of the constitution and the Declaration of Independence owes them a debt of gratitude," he said.

"This report is submitted as the U. S. Senate is considering a motion to take up a Fair Employment Practices bill. The work of the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services shows what can be accomplished by a commission in this difficult field.

"I hope the Senate will take this report into consideration as it debates the merits of FEPC and that, as I urged in my State of the Union message in January, it will permit this important message to come to a vote."

Cost of Groceries Up 95% Since '39

Remember that bag of groceries you paid $1 for back in 1935-39?

You can get the same collection of staples and tidbits now for $1.95—an increase of 95%, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week after striking an average of food costs in 56 cities.

If you live in Knoxville, Tenn., you feel the pinch worse than in any of the other cities studied — you're 1939 buck's worth costs $2.16 now. And if you live in Columbus, O., you're better off than in any of the other cities—it will cost you a mere $1.78 to buy the 1939 dollar's worth.

CIO To Take FEPC Fight 'Back Home'

THE CIO will carry on an unrelenting fight to win adoption of the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill regardless of the way the Senate has ducked the issue, the CIO Staff Conference on Civil Rights declared last week at a meeting in Cleveland.

The session, held May 24 and 25, was called under the auspices of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination. The meeting followed defeat in the Senate May 19 of a cloture motion which would have led to consideration of a motion formally to take up the FEPC bill.

On May 23 Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), the majority leader, announced after a White House conference and a meeting of the Senate Democratic policy committee that moves to consider the controversial measure would be postponed for three weeks. Meantime, he said, the Senate will consider two conference committee reports, a key farm measure and probably the Social Security bill.

The Senate's failure to vote cloture on the FEPC bill, one of the key points in the Truman Administration's civil rights program, was described as "a callous and disgraceful piece of political jockeying" by the Cleveland conference. The delegates, who included representatives of 14 international unions, accused Senate Republicans of giving "lip service to the cause of civil rights all year long."

"THE FAILURE to vote cloture was a defeat for millions of decent Americans," the conference statement said. "It was a victory for nobody.

"It brought dismay to the millions of citizens who feel the weight of bias and discrimination. It brought jubilation to those foes of democracy who have based their anti-democratic propaganda on the thesis that our democratic system cannot cope with the major problems of our society.

"The CIO and the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination pledge themselves to carry on the fight for FEPC and Civil Rights. We will bring the issues and the votes to the people back home. We will demand this week, this month, this year, that the Congress of the United States do the job for which it was elected."

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey is chairman of the committee. Pres. Willard S. Townsend, of the Transport Service Employes, is secretary, and George L-P Weaver director.

Unions represented at the conference included the International Union of Electrical Workers, Steelworkers, Chemical Workers, Paperworkers, Auto Workers, Rubber Workers, Transport Workers, Clothing Workers, Communications Workers, Newspaper Guild, Oil Workers, Maritime Union, Transport Service Employees and Packinghouse Workers.

DEFEAT OF the FEPC cloture motion earlier had brought sharp criticism from CIO. Pres. Philip Murray, who declared the CIO "deeply resents" failure of the Senate to kill the filibuster. The vote, he said, "clearly demonstrates the unworkability" of the cloture rule pushed through as a so-called compromise by the Dixiegops a year ago, and bore out CIO predictions made at that time that it would accomplish nothing.

"This unholy legislative alliance," Murray said, "has fashioned a vehicle for denying the American people an opportunity for a Senate vote on major issues where the people have clearly expressed their views at the polling places.

"We condemn the shortsighted minority in both parties which has obstructed a vote on the issues of FEPC.

"The CIO and the American people want effective FEPC, and demand its enactment."

The cloture motion racked up 52 votes to 32 votes against, but required 64 votes for passage. Thirty-three Republicans and 19 Democrats voted for it. Twenty-six Democrats from the South, West and border states voted against it, along with six GOP members.

Nine Democrats and three Republicans were absent. Seven of them had announced they favored cloture and one—Sen. Withers (D. Ky.)—was opposed, while the others had not made public their positions.

IUE Wins 5-3 at GE, Now Has Most in Big 3

THE UNITED Electrical Workers was decimated further last week as the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers took General Electric by a 5-3 margin to bring their representation total to two-thirds of the UE's previous membership.

Late NLRB election returns showed that IUE-CIO had coupled its earlier wins in the General Motors and Westinghouse chains with decisive victories in units covering more than 55,000 workers. The UE won bargaining rights for 32,000.

IUE-CIO now holds bargaining rights for 220,000, with further elections pending in the industry. The UE had 331,000 members when it was expelled last year from CIO on the grounds of Communist domination.

UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald's home Local 201 at Lynn, Mass.—largest in the industry — joined other GE locals in repudiating the old UE. The most spectacular IUE-CIO win came in Syracuse, N. Y., where the UE was crushed 4390 to 255.

An indication of CIO's future strength in atomic installations was given as hourly workers in the GE Atomic Energy Commission plant at Schenectady voted 284 to 30 for IUE-CIO.

IUE-CIO Administrative Committee Chairman James B. Carey hailed the victory as a "clear indication of electrical workers' determination to rid themselves of the Communist leadership in an outcast union and to remain a part of CIO's militant membership of 6 million."

CAREY WENT on to say that the win was "amazing, in view of the corporation's disgraceful aid to UE through back-door agreements in some of the larger plants." He referred to open company cooperation with the discredited union when UE was conducting card-signing drives to bolster shaky morale.

In addition to the vital Lynn and Syracuse plants, IUE-CIO won major plants in Pittsfield, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Cleveland, Ohio; and the salaried unit at Erie, Pa. UE's two big wins were at Schenectady (excluding the AEC units), and Erie (production workers only).

ON THE night of May 25—after the polls had closed—Acting Chairman Sumner T. Pike of the Atomic Energy Commission said at a Washington meeting, "As long as Matles, Jandreau, and Emspak are in a position, or are elected to a position, where they have any disciplinary powers over workers in our plants, we cannot allow the UE to represent our people."

BOTH SIDES pulled out all stops in the bitter campaigning that preceded the election. Leaflets, radio programs, trucks equipped with public address systems, and even airborne advertising figured in the battle, while countless rallies and meetings kept interest at a high pitch.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray appeared at a rally at Lynn. In a speech there he termed the UE the "hard core of Communism in this country." He recalled that never once had UE leaders successfully completed negotiations with any of the major chains without CIO assistance, and warned of the dangers of independent unionism.

U. S. Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin spoke at the Murray rally. He called upon the Lynn workers to "reject the mantle of Communism that has been laid upon your shoulders." IUE Local Pres. Fred Kelley directed the campaign.

The vote at Lynn: at the main production unit, IUE 1838, UE 1044; at the River works, IUE 6099, UE 5314.

The Pittsfield workers, led by IUE Local 203 Business Agent John Callahan, set back the UE propagandists with a thumping 2553 to 1130 vote for IUE-CIO.

A pre-election visit to Fort Wayne by Pres. John Nelson of UE Local 506 proved a good yardstick to the outcome of the voting there. He drew a crowd of 27 people at a "rally," and after he left, the local voted 4 to 1 against UE. The tally was: IUE-CIO, 4854; UE, 1157.

With the General Electric elections over, IUE-CIO leaders girded themselves for the runoff balloting at Westinghouse in East Pittsburgh. The April 27 election there resulted in a plurality, but not a majority, for IUE-CIO. Confident of victory, IUE-CIO expects to increase its representation in Westinghouse of 41,000 after the voting. UE holds 14,000 in Westinghouse.

"In view of the workers' expressed attitude toward Communsm," said CIO Pres. Philip Murray, "UE ought to give up and leave the IUE-CIO to represent the people at GE in collective bargaining."

CAREY'S STATEMENT follows:

"With IUE's 5-to-3 victory among General Electric's employes throughout the nation, IUE now encompasses a majority in the three big electrical chains—Westinghouse, General Electric and General Motors electrical division.

"This IUE victory is particularly amazing, since IUE, formed less than seven months ago, is pitted against a 15-year old union in this fight.

"This election gives the IUE bargaining rights for the UE's largest local, at Lynn, Mass., where workers gave UE a decisive heave-ho—and with it UE's President Albert J. Fitzgerald. Lynn was Fitzgerald's home local before he was expelled last Fall.

"I want to congratulate all those who participated in this crusade. They have worked long and hard for this victory. Their reward will be the resulting gains in GE workers' living standards and working conditions, and will be climaxed next year when their continued efforts will, we are confident, bring solidarity under the IUE banner to all GE workers."

UAW Wins 19c-An-Hour Package, More Later

THE CIO Auto Workers and the General Motors Corp. on May 23 unexpectedly announced an agreement which the union said provided an immediate "19c-an-hour package."

Three top UAW officials—Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Vice Pres. John W. Livingston, and Dir. T. A. Johnstone of the GM Dept.—said in a joint statement that under the five-year contract the workers are assured eventually of a "35c-per-hour increase in real wages—in actual buying power."

They said that the contract "will give GM workers a total gain of $144 million during the first year . . . and an increase of $32 million a year, making the total gains for the duration of the contract substantially in excess of $1 billion.

"The economic package will add $700 a year to the income of the average GM worker's family in 1955. These figures, it should be noted, represent actual gains in purchasing power, not merely gains in money wages."

Major factors in the contract include:

Pensions: $100 including Social Security payments after 25 years' service, to go up to $117.50 if Congress passes present amendments increasing Social Security. Both Chrysler and Ford have $100 a month including Social Security.

Wage Increase: 4c hourly guaranteed annual wage rise for each year of the contract starting May 29; Chrysler and Ford have none guaranteed; GM formerly had 3c annual rise.

In addition, there will be a 1c wage increase or cut for every rise or fall of 1.14 on the Bureau of Labor Statistics index; GM had same, Chrysler and Ford have no similar provisions.

EVERYBODY'S HAPPY: Top officials of the CIO Auto Workers and of General Motors Corp. shake hands as they reach agreement on a contract which gives GM workers a 19c-an-hour package now. Left to right, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, T. A. Johnstone, head of the union's GM division; Harry W. Anderson, GM vice president in charge of personnel, and Louis G. Seaton, assistant to Anderson. Agreement followed 3 months of negotiations.

Union Security: New employes are required to join for at least a year after 90 days, but present non-union employes may continue to stay out of the union. GM previously had only a dues checkoff; Chrysler has no union shop; Ford has union shop.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray described the pact as "a very good contract."

"The agreement in many respects is a good omen," he said. "The union and the corporation have recognized the need for stability and better, more constructive relations. I am hopeful that it will prove beneficial to the joint interests of the contracted parties."

To reporters who asked if he thought the GM pattern could be applied to other industries, he pointed out that unions have their own bargaining contracts and have to work out their own problems.

Reuther, Livingston and Johnstone hailed the contract as "opening up revolutionary new prospects for collective bargaining. The basic principles involved represent major progress toward the objectives which the UAW-CIO set for itself in 1945-46. The seeds planted then have begun to bear fruit."

The UAW statement said that the union's philosophy was borne out by the contact in three respects:

1 "The cost of living allowances guarantee that economic gains won in this settlement will be worth their full face value at the grocery store. Inflation cannot dissipate them...

"Four years from now GM workers and their families will have additional buying power equal to 35c an hour regardless of what it takes in dollars and cents to make that buying power real power . . .

"If prices decline over the next five years, as we most fervently hope they will, the wage gains of the workers will grow correspondingly in buying power.

"At the same time, the incentives for inflationary price increases are materially weakened. Extension of the cost of living allowance principle would force industry to abandon the practice of recapturing in the market place through higher prices what it yields at the bargaining table in higher wages.

2 "The 4c annual improvement factor guarantees the GM workers a share in the fruits of the nation's technological progress. Thus the GM workers register a major advance in their struggle for progress with the community and not at the expense of the community."

The contract acknowledges "a continuing improvement in the standard of living depends upon technological progress, better tools, methods, processes and equipment, and a cooperative attitude on the part of all parties in such progress. It further recognizes the principle that to produce more with the same amount of human effort is a sound economic and social objective."

3 "The contract settlement brings nearer to balance the distorted wage-price-profit relationship that makes for economic instability and human insecurity. The improved balance is safeguarded for the life of the contract.

"Assured of keeping for five years what they have already won, GM workers from here on can set their sights on the next objectives in labor's historical march toward a better tomorrow."

ICFTU Sponsors Dusseldorf Meet

French proposals for creation of a production pool of German and French steel and coal facilities were expected to be a major item of discussion at an international labor conference on Ruhr industrial problems last week.

The confab, held May 22-23 at Dusseldorf, Germany, was called by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, and Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director, represented their organization at the meetings.

The German Federation of Trade Unions has protested against any move to return the Ruhr's big industrial properties to private owners. German unions have argued that the properties, which were seized by the occupying powers after the war, should be administered by public bodies on which labor would be represented.

The Ruhr district is one of Europe's most concentrated industrial areas, and the owners of its big steel and coal plants were one of the leading groups behind the scenes in Hitler's Nazi government.

Named To Wage Board

Marin Jano, business manager of the New Haven, Conn., local of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, has been named a member of a Connecticut minimum wage board which will make a re-study of wages in the wholesale and retail mercantile industry.

CIO Tannery Workers, Once In IFLWU, Win Raises

Local Industrial Union 1712, CIO Tannery Workers, has signed a contract with eight firms belonging to the Tanners Association of Fulton County, N. Y.

Wage increases of from 5 to 25c hourly were granted to more than 600 workers. In addition the union gained a union shop, insurance benefits, dues checkoff, vacations and seniority provisions.

Six holidays paid at the rate of $10 each were gained instead of two at $8 each as provided under a previous contract.

The association formerly held an agreement with Local 202, Intl. Fur & Leather Workers. The latter was scheduled to be given a hearing June 1 on charges that it is Communist-dominated, but voted in Convention to sever its ties with the CIO.

What GM Workers Get

The immediate 19c-an-hour package won by the CIO Auto Workers from General Motors Corp. is allocated as follows:

1. Pension program.	7c per hour
2. Hospital-Medical-Insurance.	5c per hour
3. Flat wage increase to all workers (Annual improvement factor).	4c per hour
4. Improved vacation pay. (a) Three weeks pay (120 hours) for approximately 64,000 workers who have 15 years' seniority or more. (b) Two eligibility dates, June 30 and December 31, for the purpose of qualifying for vacation pay.	1.5c per hour
5. Five cents per hour wage increase, in addition to the 4c flat increase, to approximately 30,000 skilled trades workers.	.6c per hour
6. Other economic gains, including: (a) Five and one-half cents per hour wage increase for all apprentices. (b) Wage adjustment for tool sharpeners ranging up to 25c an hour in some plants. (c) Five cents per hour for unlicensed drivers in majority of Chevrolet assembly plants. (d) Broader coverage for third shift premium pay. (e) Change in the hiring rate in Fisher incentive plants. (f) Hourly guarantee for idle time in Fisher assembly plants on incentive plan basis. (g) Other economic gains	.9c per hour
Total:	19c per hour

Histadrut Votes To Leave WFTU

Histadrut, the labor federation of the Republic of Israel, has voted to withdraw from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

The action, taken by the union's executive council, included a decision not to affiliate with the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, of which the CIO and most other non-Communist labor groups are members.

Possibility of a split in Histadrut ranks was apparently averted by the decision to stay out of both the WFTU and ICFTU, and to send observers to the next conventions of both organizations to explain the Israeli groups' position.

Zalman Aharonovitz, a member of the Histadrut council, argued that the WFTU is Communist-dominated, an instrument of Cominform politics, and anti-Zionist.

And Pinhas Lubianker, Histadrut's secretary general, commented that "what made the WFTU Communist is immaterial. We must now leave that body."

The vote was 26-16 in favor of severing the ties with the WFTU.

Depression Apple Sale Founder Dies

The man who thought up the idea of street apple stands for the unemployed during the depression is dead at 64. He was Joseph Sicker, a New York City fruit broker, who became chairman of the unemployed relief committee of the Intl. Apple Growers' Association in 1930.

It Started From $10 And An Idea

College President Who Wouldn't Accept Discrimination Order Puts Democracy Into Action At New School

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A FEW WEEKS ago I strolled into a large building on Chicago's famed Michigan Boulevard, lifted a tray from a table, got a cup of coffee, paid the cashier and seated myself at a table.

The room was big, and a bit noisy. Around me were a hundred or more persons—some in their late teens, others approaching the half-century mark.

At the adjoining table a young man picked at the strings of a musical instrument and hummed a silly little tune as two girls watched him admiringly.

Nearby sat a balding man, who drew contentedly at his pipe as he read a thick book.

Some of the occupants of the room were white. Some were Negroes. Some were Orientals. Some were Jews. Some were Gentiles.

All of them, with perhaps a few exceptions, were college students or instructors.

And there was nothing about the seating arrangement or the behavior of the group to indicate all of them had not been "poured" from the same racial and religious mold.

LATER I SAT in the office of Frank McCallister, director of the Labor Extension Division of the college, and discussed what I had seen while drinking coffee downstairs in the Campus Room.

"I wasn't as much impressed by the fact that the students congregated in groups without any regard to race, creed or color as I was by the fact that nobody paid the slightest attention to the complete lack of segregation," I told McCallister.

"Well, it just goes to show you what can be done with $10 and an idea," McCallister replied. And then he related this story:

Back in 1945 Dr. Edward J. Sparling resigned as head of the Central YMCA College at Chicago rather than submit to a quota system which would sharply limit the number of Negroes admitted to the school.

At the same time 92% of the faculty and 97% of the students also resigned.

With an idea for a college which practiced real democracy and with $10 needed to file the necessary legal papers, Dr. Sparling began a campaign to establish a new institution.

THERE IS only one qualification for entrance at the college headed by Dr. Sparling, and it is scholastic.

And this qualification doesn't apply to those who want to enroll in the Labor Extension courses. Any trade unionist who wants to learn more about unions, whether a high school graduate or not, may enroll.

And the equality provision applying to students also applies to the faculty. A Negro man and a Chinese woman occupy top faculty posts.

"We're interested in ability, not color or creed," McCallister said.

And if you think that's unusual, just read what else happened.

MC CALLISTER TOOK me on a tour of inspection and one of the first places visited was the office of the college newspaper.

Jokingly, I said to one of the assistant editors, "How about organizing you fellows into a good union?"

"You can't do that," he replied, "because all of us already belong to the college branch of the CIO Newspaper Guild."

And then McCallister pointed out that college employes have a CIO local industrial union.

"It's a real union—not just a gesture," he said.

Both the printed newspaper of the college and the mimeographed paper put out by the union take pokes at the college and faculty if their editors feel like doing so.

"And we know we're not going to get kicked out of school if we do it," one of the editors said.

THIS IS the first time that an educational institution has been "written up" in this column.

The reason for doing so this time is simple: The college at Chicago, which now has around 5000 students, has provided a fine demonstration that democracy and education can travel safely hand-in-hand and that a college which imposes no racial or religious restrictions can be successful.

This is certainly worth noting as the CIO moves forward on many fronts in its campaign against intolerance and discrimination.

And it was fitting and proper that the educational institution at Chicago should have been named Roosevelt College.

ONLY LIP SERVICE

We used to know a mayor who made fiery speeches against crime and corruption but refused to close down the town's brothels and gambling joints.

It's difficult not to recall the hypocrisy of this character every time we take a look at Capitol Hill and view some of the things that are going on there.

Take civil rights as an example.

Back in 1948, when Dewey was trying to keep Truman from returning to the White House, both major political parties gave the public the impression that civil rights legislation was high on the list of things that should be obtained.

There were some mighty fine speeches about "eliminating second-class citizenship" and providing everybody with an equal economic opoprtunity.

It really sounded good.

But Congress hasn't turned out a single major piece of civil rights legislation since then.

And then take a look at the manner in which the Republicans are kicking Herbert Hoover around.

If we recall correctly, nearly everybody was enthusiastic about the Hoover report on governmental reorganization—or at least liked the idea of making some changes that would bring more efficiency and economy into government.

President Truman has sought to make some of these changes—some recommended by the aging hero of the GOP. But the Republicans—even those who shout about economy—have helped block them.

Sure, the real believers in civil rights and needed reorganization have stood pat—but some of their colleagues act just like that mayor we used to know.

RENTERS SHOULD LET THEM KNOW

An old friend of ours who uses a bit of profanity now and then put it this way: "Any worker who heard that his pay was going to be cut 8 to 10% would raise hell—so I can't understand why folks aren't screaming about the possibility that rent control will end June 30."

Here's what he meant:

The real estate interests are waging quite a campaign to prevent extension of rent control. Experience in areas that have been decontrolled shows that the rent increases which follow have about the same effect as would wage cuts of 5 to 10%.

The CIO feels strongly that rent control should be continued for at least a year beyond June 30, expiration date for the present law. And it wouldn't be satisfied with some "toothless" statute which pretends to control rents but doesn't.

Congress is now clearing the decks for action on rent control extension. The real estate interests are really turning on the pressure.

Tenants should be heard from, too. They should tell members of Congress how they feel about the situation. They should do this immediately.

So, how about sitting down RIGHT NOW and dashing off a letter or postcard—or sending a telegram—to those who represent you in Congress?

Tell them what a rent increase would mean to you and your family.

Pensions Justified -- Victor Reuther

VICTOR REUTHER, director of the UAW-CIO education department, writing about pensions in the May 23 issue of The Reporter Magazine, said that the economic judgment of rank and file workers has been far more sound, historically, than that of the "economic experts."

The economists who are against pensions today, Reuther said, are the same ones who were opposed to such social advances as the eight-hour day, federal social security, bank deposit insurance, price supports for farmers and minimum wage legislation. In each instance they forecast catastrophe and doom, but none of the predicted horrors have materialized. The rank and file worker, on the other hand, has seen all along that the prophecies were false.

Pensions are morally justified and are here to stay, Reuther continued. The main point overlooked by most of those who argue against them is that we are, in one way or another, paying for maintaining older people anyway, and that industrial pensions would simply be an orderly and equitable way of caring for the aged instead of the "cruel and haphazard methods" of the present.

Reuther added that he agreed with one argument put forward by opponents of industrial pension plans—that pensions should ideally be paid for through the federal Social Security program under a uniform system. The UAW's strategy from the beginning, he said, has been to fight for pensions for everybody and not just for its own members, and UAW has purposely geared its pensions to the Social Security system.

Now, he said, the big industrialists are beginning to be "militant crusaders" for an enlarged federal program, because when federal payments go up, company payments go down.

As a final argument, Reuther said there was no reason to think that industrial pensions would enormously increase the fixed costs of industry. Actually, he said, pension cost is a cents-per-hour cost and will provide an incentive for technological advance.

FTC Aide Urges Probe of Oil Monopoly

THE CIO Oil Workers, who recently asked an investigation of monopolistic practices in the oil industry which permitted the Texas Co. to make its gasoline deliveries even when 80% of its capacity was tied up in a strike followed by a lockout, found new support last week.

Federal Trade Commissioner John Carson, thinking along the same lines, told a House Interstate Commerce subcommittee investigating petroleum and federal power that "impressive" complaints are received steadily that "independents are being driven to the wall and that the major companies are following monopolistic practices."

"Some facts which are matters of common knowledge," he added, "appear to support these complaints.

"We think there is need for a definitive study of the nature and trend of concentrations in the industry and of the nature, extent, and economic consequences of the power of the large companies."

Carson pointed up the competitive advantages that big companies, which handle the oil all the way from the well to the filling station or the consumer's oil heater tank, have over smaller, independent outfits.

"Among these advantages," he said, "are cheap means of transportation, by pipe line and by tanker; ready access to supplies of crude oil, assured by ownership of crude and by access through crude oil trunk lines; assured marketing outlets resulting from a highly integrated marketing program, which may involve exclusive dealing contracts and the use of short-term cancellation clauses in leasing and subleasing arrangements; tire, battery and accessory programs which provide a profitable source of income without requiring proportionate investment; and the opportunity to diversify risks, to realize income from various branches of the industry's activities, including crude production, transportation and marketing, and not to be handicapped by a condition in which one or more branches of the industry are temporarily unprofitable.

"This last-mentioned condition, namely, an over-all profitable position while independent branches of the industry are unprofitable, has been particularly important source of complaints during recent months."

He Thought Union Should Get Tough

THE "OLD man," so one version of the story goes, went into business on a shoe-string and made a million or so dollars before he died.

He was a rugged individualist, in a way, but his success didn't keep him from maintaining a soft spot in his heart for the "under dog." He frequently championed the causes of the poor and condemned the actions of the rich.

Everybody who worked for the big organization knew about the "old man." He was quite a character and his fame had reached far and wide.

But few people in the orgnization knew about his grandson—and this story is about him.

THE GRANDSON, whom we shall call Joe, wanted to make a success on his own, and he didn't want to take advantage of his family connections.

So, after completing his formal education, he got a job within the organization which the "old man" had established.

It wasn't a particularly good job—not the kind he could have obtained merely by asking for something better. But it was the kind of job he was capable of handling.

Later on he moved to another division of the organization and to a slightly better job. He didn't tell his co-workers who he was and for some time they didn't know he had any connection with the "old man."

When they found out, some of them were suspicious of the fact that Joe had joined the CIO union at the plant.

"Maybe he's a management spy," some of them said.

JOE ATTENDED union meetings regularly and he didn't act like he was stooging for the employer.

Occasionally he made speeches in which he sharply criticized management practices.

Some of the skepticism regarding him disappeared after he volunteered for a job on the local union's mimeographed newspaper. It was a job that almost nobody wanted because it required considerable work and brought in no extra pay.

Union members scanned the publication carefully to see if they could find any anti-union material creeping in as a result of Joe's activities. They found none.

Joe eventually was accepted as "one of the gang" by almost all of his fellow unionists—but there were still some holdouts.

Then the union and the management clashed head-on during attempts to negotiate a new contract.

MANAGEMENT negotiators, as is often their habit, spent most of their time saying "no" to union requests.

Session after session passed without any headway being made by the union.

Finally talk about a possible strike was heard throughout the plant, and union leaders called a meeting to give members an opportunity to hear a report of the negotiators.

Nearly every member showed up, and after the report was made a group of angry workers began discussing strategy.

They drew up and adopted a sharply-worded resolution condemning management for its tactics.

They decided to send a large delegation to the next contract session to provide negotiators with "moral support."

Many suggestions were made. Some were accepted. Others were rejected.

Finally, as the meeting drew to a close, Joe rose to his feet and said:

"My grandfather founded this organization and I own a lot of stock in it, but an outfit that treats its workers like it's been treating us shouldn't continue to operate. So, if it's in order, I move that we authorize our officers to call a strike whenever they consider it necessary!"

The union got a good contract without striking and around the plant the "boys" still refer to the grandson of the "old man" as a "good Joe." A.L.S.

Problems Of A House-To-House Salesman!

ICFTU Headquarters Welcome At Brussels

SIX YEARS AGO a union card to a Belgian worker would have been a passport to eternity. The bearer, if caught, would have been killed in short order by a German firing squad. Today Brussels is the new world capital of labor, home of the recently-founded Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The Belgian worker who has no union card today is the exception, not the rule. For in this tiny land, one-fourth the size of Pennsylvania and with a population of only 8.5 million, live well over one million militant, card-carrying trade unionists.

Gone are the bleak, unhappy wartime days when Belgian workers found their free unions abolished and supplanted by the generally shunned Union des Travailleurs Manuels et Intellectuels (Manual and Intellectual Workers Union), a company union in its lowest form run by the bloody syndicate headed by A. Hitler.

Leaders of the Belgian labor movement can well appreciate its reborn freedom. First there is Paul Finet, president of the ICFTU who was forced to flee in 1941 to England, where he broadcast to Belgium and other occupied countries for the British Foreign Office. He headed the office of the merchant marine for the Belgian government-in-exile. In England he helped set up a trade union center to keep the Belgian labor movement alive.

THEN THERE IS Auguste Cool, who saw his union crushed by the Nazis, went underground, and despite the harrassment of the Gestapo maintained contact with other labor leaders and prepared for liberation of his country.

Armand Colle, head of the Liberal Trade Unions, was a third Belgian labor leader whom the Germans could not stop. Colle, too, went underground, was captured and rebuilt from scratch after Belgium was liberated. Of this trio, only Colle was not at the London Congress of the ICFTU, but expressed pride and pleasure at the choice of Brussels as ICFTU's permanent home.

Young, dynamic, the new ICFTU is dedicated to the cause of a free labor movement and is democracy's bold answer to the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions, which floundered on the rocks of Russian intrigue after futile attempts by western trade unions to live and work with the Stalinists. As its name implies, ICFTU rejects totalitarianism in all forms and is dedicated to attainment of economic security without loss of individual freedom.

The new confederation was formed when the Red-controlled WFTU gave stubborn opposition to the Marshall Plan, the United States' program for reviving a war-depleted Europe. "Bread, Peace, and Freedom" was the challenging cry of ICFTU at its inception. The Marshall Plan appears likely to attain these tnings for Europe's war-weary millions.

ADMINISTERED BY the Economic Co-operation Administration, the Marshall Plan has been of particular value to Belgium. In normal times, Belgium produces enough manufactured products and food for export to pay for its imports. At the end of the war, there were no buyers able to take Belgium's products. The Marshall Plan and ECA have helped Belgium by unfreezing this trade block and enabling other countries to buy Belgian products. Prime Minister Gaston Eykens recently said:

"Altogether, Marshall Plan aid has created jobs for 100,000 Belgian workers—100,000 workers whose production it has been possible to direct toward the recovery of Belgium and of Europe. In the present difficult period, this help means the salvation of Belgium."

The working men of Belgium enjoy many advantages. Their right to organize is guaranteed by the constitution; legislation provides old age pensions and unemployment compensation. There are guaranteed minimum wages for specific work; the work day is eight hours, the work week 48. Belgium workers enjoy an annual six-day vacation at double pay, plus 10 paid holidays each year; longer vacations are mandatory for workers under 21 years of age, and employment of children under 14 years is outlawed.

The Belgian worker does not take his gains lightly. Listen to Paul Finet:

". . . The choice of Brussels as the permanent home of ICFTU indicates that the free world pays tribute to the serious character of the trade union movement in Belgium . . ." (LPA)

Report of Minority Hits Tidelands Bill

Eight members of the House Judiciary Committee, headed by Chairman Celler (D. N. Y.), have filed a minority report attacking the tidelands bill which would give the states ownership of oil-rich submerged coastal lands.

The report called the bill "a calling card for war" and said "the right of all the people, acting through their national government, to use this oil is like the personal right to breathe the air.

The Supreme Court ruled in a California case that leases on all off-shore properties were under federal control as of June 23, 1947. Subsequently, California and Texas continued to make leases and collect royalties.

Myers, Lucas, CIO Object To Social Security Report

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

AT LONG LAST, final Congressional action on Social Security is approaching.

The Senate Finance Committee late last week reported out formally its version of the House-approved bill improving federal old-age and survivors' benefits under the Social Security laws.

Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D. Ill.) and Majority Whip Francis J. Myers (D. Pa.), in a minority report, dissented strongly to some portions of the committee's report.

Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, immediately issued a statement saying that the improvements, while decidedly better than the present "totally inadequate" law, still fell "woefully" short of the necessary mark.

Rieve listed seven points which he said "we insist is the very least Congress could do" to bring the bill up to fit present-day circumstances.

The seven points listed by Rieve were:

1 Raising the minimum wage base substantially above $3000. Lucas and Myers agreed with Rieve. They said they would offer an amendment from the floor seeking to raise it possibly as high as $4200. "For benefits to be related to the worker's former level of living they should be based . . . on his entire earnings," they said.

"Retention of the $3000 wage base establishes a flat benefit amount for those whose average earnings exceed $250 a month. Clearly, there is no real relation to total earnings when a retired worker who averaged $350 a month receives the same benefit as one whose average monthly earnings were only $250."

2 Restoring the program of permanent and total disability insurance passed by the House and adding funds for rehabilitation. Lucas and Myers seconded this, and said in part:

"Under existing conditions the disabled worker is treated inequitably. If he has contributed toward retirement insurance for a substantial part of his working life, and yet becomes disabled prior to retirement age, he is forced to await retirement age before pension benefits are available.

"Thus, he is deprived of protection when he needs it most—when he is disabled. Moreover the disabled worker, incapable of work, is no longer able to contribute to the insurance system thus reducing his eventual benefits or perhaps causing them to be wiped out altogether."

3 Restoring the annual increment giving higher benefits to workers who have contributed longer. Lucas and Myers said: "Without an increment, the person who contributes to the insurance program for 45 years will get no more in benefits than one who contributes for only a year and a half. We feel this is neither fair nor reasonable."

4 Liberalizing federal grants for public assistance by providing more generous grants to the states with low assistance payments; matching payments to the mother or caretaker of dependent children; matching payments to needy persons of all types not covered by present programs for the aged, dependent children and the blind; granting money for medical care to the needy; and extending federal assistance to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Lucas and Myers did not comment on these points.

5 Extending old-age and survivors' insurance to additional groups such as outside salesmen and farm labor. The House bill extended coverage to approximately 11 million new people, the Senate committee cut the additions to approximately 8½ million. The CIO believes that coverage should be universal if possible.

6 Providing reinsurance grants to states whose unemployment insurance funds have run low. On this point, Lucas and Myers agreed, saying they favored outright grants to the states whose welfare funds run low, rather than loans as proposed in the committee bill, because they felt that states in financial difficulties would hesitate to undertake new loan obligations.

7 Extending unemployment insurance for an additional 26 weeks in areas of high unemployment, with the cost met from the Federal treasury. A separate bill to this effect has been introduced in the House by Rep. Stephen M. Young (D. O.) but neither the House nor the Senate Social Security bill contains any reference to it.

"Congress ought to approach this problem with a view to providing the greatest possible amount of security for our citizens," Rieve declared. "Unfortunately, some members of the Senate and House think the Congress need enact only improvements that, while woefully inadequate, would furnish a pretext for a claim that the Social Security Act has been strengthened to meet the people's requirements.

"The Senate proposal is somewhat better than that of the House in its formula for calculating benefits and in the extent to which it increases coverage. On the other hand, by reducing the maximum wage base to $3000 and wiping out the annual increment, the Senate proposal clamps a low ceiling on all federal pensions.

"The Senate's omission of any provision for the totally and permanently disabled is inexcusable. So is its refusal to make decent provision for dependent children and others who must rely upon public assistance for survival.

"I would like to point out that as the Senate proposal now stands, the private insurance companies can be proud of their influence . . .

"We call on members of the Senate to fight for floor amendments to accomplish these minimum improvements."

The bill will be considered some time in the next week or two, Lucas said, before the Senate resumes debate on the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill.

Insurance Companies Have Great Field Day

The insurance companies ran up a perfect score in the Senate Finance Committee—they got everything they asked for in the way of changes from the House-approved bill.

Study of the record shows that the insurance companies wanted the wage base kept at $3000, which effectively limits the maximum benefit payable to a single worker. The committee obliged.

The companies didn't want any permanent disability benefit included in the measure. The committee obliged.

The companies didn't want any lump-sum death benefit feature written into the bill. The committee took it out.

The companies wanted the old "employe" definition retained in order to hold coverage as low as possible. The committee retained it.

The companies wanted the committee to eliminate all improvements in federal-state public assistance programs. The committee obliged.

Improved social security is getting some (self-serving) support from industry because many industry pensions will go down if government pensions go up. But the insurance companies would just as soon see the government out of the picture entirely.

Many industry pensions are handled through insurance companies. And many people who realize their social security benefits are going to be inadequate to retire on take out, if they can afford it, annuity policies from the insurance companies.

The changes the Senate committee made at the insurance companies' request all tend to guarantee the companies a steady market in sale of policies.

House, Senate Bills Provide Increases

Immediate increases in Social Security benefits will go to approximately 2.9 million people who have already retired, no matter which version Congress adopts.

Sample increases: present benefit $10 a month, benefit under House bill, $25. Present benefit $25 a month, benefit under House bill $44. Present benefit $45 a month, benefit under House bill $64. The increases under the Senate bill would be more except in the case of the $10 beneficiary, who would receive $20.

Oath Ruling Rehearing Asked

A PETITION for a rehearing of the U. S. Supreme Court ruling upholding the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist oath requirement has been filed by the CIO.

The petition points out that the high court decision, which affirmed a ruling of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago, was made by an equally divided court, "and that so far as petitioners are aware, an additional justice would be available to participate in the decision of the case upon rehearing."

Justice William O. Douglas was absent when the case was first argued.

"It is further submitted," said the petition, which was prepared by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and Assistant General Counsel Thomas E. Harris, "that the issues involved in this case are too controversial and are of too great importance to be definitively disposed of by an affirmance by an equally divided court of six justices.

"Such a decision cannot, we submit with all deference, command the general acceptance necessary finally to settle issues so doubtful and so important. It would, of course, be open to the union officers in connection with some future Labor Board proceeding, again to refuse to sign the oath.

"But it would take years for the question again to reach the court—three years have now elapsed since the employer unfair labor practices which gave rise to this case—and, in the meantime, the union would suffer hardship and the status of the oath requirement would remain in doubt."

Fur Workers Quit CIO On Trial Eve

THE INTL. Fur and Leather Workers Union last week voted to disaffiliate from CIO at its 18th biennial convention at Atlantic City, just a few days before Pres. Ben Gold and the union were scheduled to appear before a trial committee which could recommend their expulsion from the CIO.

The CIO charges were based on the union's consistent following of the Communist party line, and Gold, a charter member of the Communist party, had made it clear throughout the convention that the union wasn't going to change its politics.

Before passing the disaffiliation resolution, the 440-odd delegates, who represented a claimed membership of 110,000, were treated to two days of bitter attacks on CIO. Speeches by more than 40 delegates almost without exception backed up the IFLWU executive board's report to the convention which called CIO "this treacherous outfit, which stands united with the whole bankrupt and treacherous AFL leadership."

TO MEET raiding by other CIO unions, which the delegates reported had cost the union members in many places, the convention authorized the executive board to comply with the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit requirements, if it decided this was necessary.

Asked at a press conference whether he would sign an affidavit, Gold assured reporters that "there will be no double talk," that he would resign his union post before he quit the Communist party, and that there are "five or six Ben Golds" who could take over the union presidency if he resigned.

Gold also confirmed that talks have taken place among the Communist line unions, and the IFLWU executive board called on the convention to "unite the strength of our union with all other progressive unions for mutual aid and assistance to resist the raiders and strikebreakers of both AFL and CIO."

Typical of the IFLWU attacks on CIO is this from their executive board report:

"The final act, the expulsions of the progressive trade unions, is nothing but an active demonstration by Phil Murray and his lieutenants of their readiness and willingness to silence the voice of progressive trade unionism and to crush resistance on the part of progressive labor against the efforts of reaction to force upon labor and the people its war program and war preparations.

"That is being done by Murray and his lieutenants with the full knowledge that it weakens labor and strengthens the reactionary offensive.

"It would therefore be an illusion to expect that this treacherous outfit, which stands united with the whole bankrupt and treacherous AFL leadership, will take up the fight . . . for any measure that would serve to protect and promote the well-being of labor and the people."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was called a "master of these vile personal insults." "The chief activities of these CIO leaders are red-baiting, raiding and wrecking other unions," according to IFLWU's board. In two cases, CIO officials and other CIO affiliates were charged with "strikebreaking"—in Gloversville, N. Y., and Luray, Va. (LPA)

22 Complete Course

Twenty-two officers of CIO, AFL and unaffiliated labor unions in the Chicago area have completed an intensive six-months union officer training course at the Univ. of Chicago and will receive certificates at a banquet June 7.

The scholars, in addition to carrying on their regular business, went to school for five hours a week during the course and successfully undertook projects in their locals.

CIO-PAC Reaps Profit

Sen. Taft's election propaganda is taken seriously in some quarters, at any rate.

Carl Apfell, of Cincinnati, a member of the CIO Clothing Workers, worked his way through some Taft literature and promptly kicked in with $10, instead of the usual $1, to the CIO-PAC. He's going to give more, too, he says.

"So I dropped a few thousand—so I'll make it up—I'm gonna raise all my rents next week!"

Sen. Morse Is Renominated, Cal. Primaries To Be June 6

PRIMARY CONTESTS for nomination to run for the House and Senate this fall are attracting more interest with every passing day, and the degree of participation of the nation's voters in the selection of candidates is extraordinary in a so-called "off year."

Most dramatic recent primaries were held in Oregon, where on May 19, PAC-endorsed liberal Republican Senator Wayne Morse won renomination to succeed himself, against old-guard dairy farmer David Hoover, who was backed by big lumber money.

GOP committeemen in Oregon hope Morse can pull some old guard office-holders back in with him in November, but liberal sources in Oregon point to the fact that Morse was indorsed by all labor and liberal organizations whereas the same cannot be said for most Republican hacks.

OREGON total registration was higher for this primary than it was for the 1948 presidential election, and for the first time in the state's political history, Democratic registration exceeded Republican. The tally was: 354,375 Democrats registered, 346,038 Republicans. Registration for the general elections is expected to increase this record.

In Oregon's fourth Congressional district, labor-supported David C. Shaw, former assistant general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, won the Democratic nomination to run against Republican Harris Ellsworth, who is now in his fourth term and has never before had serious opposition.

In the second district, labor-supported Vernon Bull, state senator and member of a railway brotherhood, won the Democratic nomination to oppose Republican Lowell Stockman, a wheat grower now serving his fourth term.

Many labor-supported candidates won nomination for state and local officers as well, in unusually hotly fought campaigns. In Oregon, as in California, the make-up of the state legislature is getting close attention this year because those bodies will have charge of reapportioning the state into new Congressional districts, after the 1950 census, and both states expect to gain Congressmen because of a population increase.

One active unionist to secure nomination for the Oregon legislature is 24-year-old Helen Parks, of Portland, member of the CIO Communications Workers, whose father is active in the CIO Woodworkers. Helen is a member of the Young Democratic Club and Democratic precinct committee-woman, recording secretary of her local, and her local's representative to the Portland IUC. She works for the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co.

SEN. WAYNE MORSE
Wins Renomination

The Iowa primaries are June 5. Interest centers on a seven-way race among Democrats for the honor of opposing Republican Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper, ranking minority member of the Joint Congressional Committee on atomic energy, who is noted chiefly for the sustained and bitter nature of his attacks on former Atomic Energy Commission chairman David E. Lilienthal.

PAC has indorsed Albert Loveland for the Democratic nomination. The two other leading contenders are Otha Wearin, former Iowa Congressman, and Nelson Karschel, who won lasting "fame" in 1936 when, as Governor of Iowa, he personally broke the Maytag strike at Newton, Ia.

On June 6 come the complicated, bitterly contested California primaries, snarled up by California's cross-filing system under which candidates may file for nomination on all tickets.

Leading the California races for excitment and intensity is the race between Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D.), publisher Manchester Boddy of the Los Angeles Daily News (D.), and Rep. Richard Nixon (R.) to see who gets to run for the Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Sheridan Downey (D.). All three candidates and several more have filed on both Republican and Democratic tickets. Mrs. Douglas is backed by most of California labor. Boddy is backed by Downey and Nixon has the backing of the GOP.

For the governorship an equally exciting race is shaping up. James Roosevelt, son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, is seeking nomination against present Gov. Earl Warren, who was Thomas E. Dewey's running mate in 1948.

(In all California races an element of uncertainty is added to the natural difficulties of political prediction by the fact that cross-filing makes it possible for one man to secure the nomination on both Democratic and Republican tickets. This has happened more than once.)

In California's 20th District, now occupied by Rep. Carl Hinshaw (R.), voters will have a choice between Hinshaw, contractor Ralph H. Hilton (D.), PAC-indorsed Albert S. Brown (D.) who is described as a liberal real estate broker, medico Frank Meyers (D.) who is the anti-health-insurance candidate, and realtor Lee E. Cooper (R).

In the 16th district, PAC-endorsed Esther Murray (D.) is running a vigorous campaign for the House seat now occupied by Rep. Donald L. Jackson (R.).

In the 15th, radio news analyst Harry W. Flannery is campaigning against incumbent Gordon MacDonough (R.).

Flannery recently achieved a place of honor among those who have been smeared by Congressional committees, because he made a documentary motion picture of the living conditions and economic difficulties of the "fruit tramps" involved in the AFL National Farm Union's recently concluded two-year strike against the Di Georgio Fruit Corp. near Bakersfield. The hostile committee accused Flannery of prejudice and said the fruit workers' life was really a bed of roses.

The scramble for the House seat to be vacated by Mrs. Douglas is probably the most complicated of all. Four Democrats, three Republicans and one "independent progressive" have filed for nomination on both tickets. PAC has endorsed Sam Yorty, floor leader of the California State Assembly.

GOP Can't Even Win Ball Game

Even if the GOP hasn't elected a President in the past 18 years, a group of GOP members recently scored six times in one day against a team of Democrats. But they still lost.

The occasion was the annual Congressional baseball game between Democrats and Republicans in Washington. The former won 8 to 4. The game was staged to raise money for a summer camp for underprivileged children.

NLRB Upholds CWA In Baltimore Talks

The National Labor Relations Board has dismissed a petition filed by an individual employe of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Baltimore, Md., to decertify Div. 34, CIO Communications Workers, as bargaining agent for engineering assistants.

The board found that the firm's contract with the liquidated Maryland Federation of Telephone Workers is a valid and subsisting agreement concerning Div. 34, CWA. The only change in the character and status of the local union is one of designation and affiliation, it held.

The board also found no merit in the company's contention that the engineering assistants are professional employes.

NLRB Wears Blinkers, Says Textile Union

A COUPLE hundred CIO Textile Workers, their shoes worn thin by pounding the pavement in front of the Keystone Silk Mill at Lebanon, Pa., since Jan. 2, are wondering what CAN be done to prod the Natl. Labor Relations Board into ordering a representation election.

In a lot of communities like Lebanon, strikers are usually a pretty lonesome lot, with nothing but their own company and a sense of shared outrage to sustain and buoy them. But in Lebanon it's different. The Mayor is with them. The City Council is with them. So are the police and so are most of their fellow-citizens.

But they still can't get an election, more than four months after they asked for one. Now they've asked Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) to see if he can pry an answer to their "why?" out of the NLRB.

THE WALKOUT started over the discharge of 18 workers with high seniority. They didn't have a union—they were just burned up at the way their fellow-workers were mistreated. But they asked the Textile Workers to come in and within a few days most of them had signed up.

The company called in an attorney who refused to have any dealings with the union until an election was held. So the union filed a petition signed by about 95% of the group.

The NLRB held a hearing in February. None of the usual technical objections were raised, but the company charged the union with unfair labor practices, alleging that some of the strikers had engaged in "coercion."

"The board invariably holds up an election pending investigation of such charges," John W. Edelman, TWUA Washington representative, wrote Myers in bespeaking his aid.

"What happens is that the board puts on a sort of pair of moral blinkers and makes no distinction between charges that are obviously filed only with the intention of creating delay and those that have some substance."

EDELMAN made it clear the union has no suspicion as to the integrity of NLRB personnel in the area, which is served from the regional office in Philadelphia.

"However," he added, "with the best will in the world we are sure the board has permitted itself to be completely stymied and made to look quite foolish by what are at best blatantly obvious stalling tactics . . .

"Basically we know that this long delay in obtaining an election is due to the way the Taft-Hartley Act was written. Plainly the act is one-sided and unworkable. But even we who are constantly in touch with the operation of the Taft-Hartley Act cannot quite follow the reasons for the unusual length of time it has taken the board in this case, where the facts are so naked and the motives so clear."

Edelman advised Myers that a few of the workers have drifted back in the last few days, but that the great majority "are standing absolutely solid despite any privations they must endure."

If Your Congressman Acts Shifty, PAC Him Down In 1950!

Economic Outlook:

'Labor Monopoly' Theory Proponents Would Turn Clock Back 36 Years

ADVOCATES OF the "labor monopoly" theory are trying to turn the clock back 36 years.

That is the charge made by the current issue of the CIO Economic Outlook.

The Outlook, publication of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, says:

"Sixty years ago, in 1890, Congress passed the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in an effort to restore competition in industry and to break up the growing monopolies in steel, oil, tobacco, sugar and other industries.

"BUT reactionary judges, prodded by the industrial monopolists themselves, turned the law against the unions and sent their leaders to jail for 'restraint of trade.'

"The Sherman Act, which was supposed to help business, was used to harass and persecute labor.

"It took Congress 24 years to get around to clarifying the original intent of its anti-monopoly legislation. In 1914, it passed the Clayton Act which was intended to exclude unions from anti-trust proceedings except where they conspire with management to restrain trade."

The "labor monopoly" theory, said the Outlook, rests on the assumption that labor "is a commodity which is bought and sold in the market" but that "when workers join unions, they become part of a conspiracy to push wages above their free-market levels."

When Congress passed the Clayton Anti-Trust Act it discarded the concept of labor as a commodity, the Outlook said.

THE REASON was, the Outlook continued, "it had become tragically clear that the same rules that establish the market value of a man-made ton of bricks or can of beans cannot determine the fair value of a human being."

The Outlook said that buyers of labor—employers—have "tremendous advantages" over the sellers of labor—workers. Because of these inequities, the CIO said, it is "hypocritical nonsense to talk about the benefits of 'pure competition' which supposedly exist in a 'free labor market' if only the workers' 'monopolistic' unions were ousted . . .

"In a labor market where there is no right to organize and to strike, 'pure' competition can mean only the exploitation of the labor of human beings. We oppose that kind of competition."

The Outlook said that "the combination of workers into unions leads to results far different for the welfare of the nation than the combination of businessmen into monopolies. Corporate monopolies are anti-social conspiracies created only to increase profits to enrich the few at the expense of the consuming public. Labor unions arose to end monopoly in the labor market—the employers' monopoly over wages and working conditions."

NOTING THAT multi-employer collective bargaining arrangements have helped rid many industries of "ruinous, cut-throat, sweat-shop competition," the Outlook charged that the "loudest cries against industry-wide bargaining come from the big business outfits that have never engaged in it."

It added: "Despite all their talk, many employers, those in mass production industries particularly, actually do get together to set industry-wide wage rates—but too often not through collective bargaining with unions . . . As far as Big Business is concerned, the real menace is surely not 'uniformity' of wage rates—if they can be kept low enough.

"What really disturbs Big Business is the existence of national labor unions strong enough to raise wages beyond levels that are pleasing to some corporation executives."

Local 600 Members Collect In Libel Suit

Four members of the CIO Auto Workers Ford Local 600 who were linked with an alleged Communist plot by the Detroit News during the investigation into the shooting of UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther have accepted a substantial out-of-court settlement from the newspaper and agreed to withdraw libel suits in which they asked for $300,000 damages.

The amount of the settlement was not disclosed. Those who filed suit and collected without having their cases go to trial are former Reg. Dir. Percy Llewellyn; Financial Secy. W. G. Grant, a former president of Local 600; Shelton Tappes, former financial secretary, and Nelson Davis, vice president of the Production Foundry unit.

Pacific Shipowners Lock Out ARA Members, But Union Solidarity Changes Their Minds

HOW UNION solidarity in the face of a strike can bring an employer to his senses—if not to his knees—was never better demonstrated than during the recent short-lived walkout of the CIO American Radio Association on the Pacific Coast.

The Pacific Maritime Association, the employer group, figured it had a setup when the Natl. Labor Relations Board declared its contract wtih the ARA illegal because of the hiring hall provision. It promptly posted notices in ships reading:

"We will cease performing or giving effect to our contract, dated December 3, 1948, with the American Radio Association, CIO."

"This is a lockout," bluntly declared ARA Pres. William Steinberg. "There is no contract. And ARA members do not work without a contract."

So it was only a matter of hours before ARA members were picketing association ships in San Francisco, the Pacific Northwest, Boston, New York, Baltimore, Houston and New Orleans.

LESS THAN five hours later on the same day management pulled in its somewhat battered neck and agreed to negotiate—

Because in the meantime rank and file members of the CIO Longshoremen's Union, the Marine Cooks & Stewards, the Engineers, the Marine Firemen and the Masters, Mates and Pilots gave the ARA full backing in its fight to maintain its contract, wages and working conditions.

This was voted at a joint meeting in San Francisco, while in New York Pres. Joseph Curran, of the CIO Maritime Union, sent Steinberg a telegram pledging full support of that organization.

Three PMA representatives had been called into the joint meeting. When confronted with the stark evidence of union solidarity they withdrew their notices of contract termination, agreed to maintain the status quo and promised to negotiate with ARA.

The ARA circulated a victory bulletin after the defeat of "the latest Taft-Hartley attempt to wreck the maritime unions" in which it thanked the other unions and declared that "your support forced the shipowners to back down."

THE ARA LATER reported on the basis of first meetings with the shipowners that full agreement had been reached on temporary continuation of the contract, and that "tentative substitute language regarding preference of employment" had been drafted.

"They'll think not once but a thousand times before they try anything like this again," Steinberg observed.

"Good grief! Do you expect it to have a motor for only $540?"

Niseis Are Called 'Newest Of Exploited'

JAPANESE-American workers constitute the "newest exploited group," CIO and AFL leaders warned recently at a joint luncheon they sponsored for Southern California Japanese-American comunity leaders in Los Angeles. Many of them are Niseis, American citizens by right of birth.

Many employers, the labor spokesmen told their guests, are taking advantage of the lack of awareness of unions among Japanese-Americans and are hiring them at wages and under working conditions far below union standards. The trade union movement, labor leaders said, aims to improve the lot of all workers, including the Japanese.

Virtually every key Japanese-American group in Los Angeles was represented at the luncheon—and the representatives expressed deep concern at the trend toward exploitation of their people. They indicated an active interest in increasing cooperation with unions so that exploitation can be quickly ended.

Presiding at the luncheon was Masamori Kojima, organizer for the AFL Ladies Garment Workers and a former member of the CIO Los Angeles Newspaper Guild.

CIO leaders who attended included Jerome Posner, manager of the Los Angeles Joint Board, CIO Clothing Workers, who told of the influx of Japanese-Americans into the men's clothing industry; Secy.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford, of the Los Angeles CIO Council; Griselda Kuhlman, Ruth Miller and Haru Tagami, Clothing Workers; Herbert Welch, Rubber Workers, and John Broy, Textile Workers.

Japanese leaders attending included Gongoro Nakamura, past president of the Southern California Japanese Chamber of Commerce.

Old Firms Close, 2500 On Street

The CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers union is facing a new kind of unemployment problem.

Within recent months three old, established clothing manufacturing firms—two with headquarters in New York City and one in Baltimore—have closed because the owners wished to retire.

Some 2500 ACW members have been thrown out of work.

"These firms' relations with the union have been friendly," ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky said. "But in liquidating, after being in business for 50 to 60 years, they have left a trail of unemployment and dislocation in many centers, cities and communities."

(The Baltimore firm also had factories in Syracuse, N. Y.; New Bern, N. C., and New York City.)

The closing of these plants "is a sad commentary," Potofsky continued. "Elementary decency requires that there be regard for social and humane responsibility to the workers and the communities where their plants are located."

Less Work in N.Y. State

Manufacturing employment in New York State dropped 31,400 persons to an estimated 1,743,600 workers between March and April, largely because of sharp seasonal cuts in the apparel industry, according to State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi. The 1950 figure was 10,300 less than employment in April 1949.

Canal Workers Report Fertile Field For CIO

THOUSANDS of workers in the Panama Canal Zone, beset by poverty, racial mistrusts and disillusionment, offer a fertile field for organization into a strong CIO union.

That was the conviction of John Yancey, assistant director of the CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee, who last week returned from three work-packed weeks in the Canal Zone.

And they are eager to learn more about the CIO, he said, because most of what they've been told "consists of lies, distortions and misrepresentations carefully thrown around them by the Communist-dominated United Public Workers, which was recently expelled from the CIO."

"EVERYBODY WAS courteous friendly and helpful," said Yancey. "People would come up to me on the street and in restaurants and start talking about the CIO—some of them workers, others not.

"But nearly all of them got down finally to one question: 'How do we know that we can trust you?'

"That was the trouble with the UPW. The people had trusted it—and it let them down. It took the money they paid in dues from their small earnings, and it did little or nothing to increase those earnings.

"They want help, and they're willing to work hard to help themselves—there is an organizing committee of 150 workers set up which is one of the best I've ever come across any place—but they're hesistant. And yet, paradoxically, at the same time they are eager for a good, strong CIO union."

Wages for local rate employes—those not brought out under contract from the United States—average 51c an hour for work on the Panama Canal, and 43c on the Panama Canal Railroad, the two major employers. Several thousand miscellaneous dock workers and warehouse employes are paid only 34c to 46c an hour.

Most of the local rate employes are Panamanians, West Indians, and Panamanians born of migrants from the West Indies.

Significant numbers of men and women from a half-dozen or more other Latin-American nations in both Central and South America also are included, and there is a distinct feeling of distrust among the different national groups.

The U. S. rate employes, those brought from the United States, are U. S. citizens except for a handful of Panamanians, and already are represented by their own unions.

Long before the UPW went into the Canal Zone, Yancey found, the native and migrant workers had their own well-knit organization of about 7000 members which went into the UPW as a body.

UPW Local 713 was established, grew to 17,000 members—and now has vanished. The Zone government served a 90-day notice, which expires June 24, that it would no longer recognize or deal with the UPW because of its Communist domination.

LOCAL 713 disaffiliated from the UPW but is carrying on as an independent with the same tactics it formerly used—lies, misrepresentation and threats, the tempo of which was increased when the CIO, through Special Rep. Gilbert Anaya, who has been on the scene for some months, refused to admit it to the CIO as a body, Yancey said.

Recent CIO organizing meetings brought out 800 workers at Cristobal, on the Atlantic side of the Zone, and 1200 workers two days later at Balboa, on the Pacific side. At both meetings, Yancey said, Local 713 stooges had to be barred from distributing their own leaflets and then shouted a lot of questions which were supposed to be embarrassing, but which were quickly turned against them.

The CIO will present a petition for recognition as bargaining agent for its members to Gov. Francis K. Newcomer of June 25, the day after the notice to the UPW runs out, Yancey said.

Steel Union Wins Pay Hike in Canada

Local 1005 of the CIO Steelworkers and the Steel Co. of Canada have reached an agreement on a new two-year contract upon which 5500 employes of the firm's Hamilton, Ont., plant will vote shortly.

The pact provides for a wage increase of 8c an hour retroactive to April 1, with a cut in hours from 44 to 40 per week. A second pay boost of 5c an hour will be effective April 1, 1951. It also was agreed to set up a joint committee to study pension plans.

UPW Checkoff Ended

The Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, Calif., has voted unanimously to cancel checkoff of insurance premiums and union dues for some 1700 members of the United Public Workers.

The vote followed a recommendation by Wayne Allen, county manager, that the County Auditor end all checkoffs. Allen noted in his report that the UPW had been expelled from the CIO after it was found guilty of charges that it is Communist dominated.

SPEAKS FOR CIO: Joe Ferrarra (right), member of the CIO Textile Workers Union at Kendall Mills, Walpole, Mass., describes the services unions perform for their members to listeners on the CBS Cross-Section program. He was interviewed by Fred Garrigus of Station WEEI, Boston. "We're looking for pensions and security," Ferrarra said.

CIO, AFL Newspaper Unions Form Solid Front In Boston

CIO, AFL and independent unions of newspaper workers in Boston have joined in a solid front to present publishers with a unified demand for a citywide agreement on pensions and health and welfare coverage.

The compact among the unions is the first in U. S. labor history, so far as is known. The 11 locals which compose it represent 4200 of the 5000 employes of all departments in the city's eight newspapers.

John Thompson, president of the CIO Boston Newspaper Guild, is chairman of the joint council. Its demands, he said, include pensions of $175 a month, exclusive of social security, at the age of 65; a $4000 life insurance policy on each worker; sick and disability payments; accidental death and dismemberment insurance up to $8000, and hospitalization insurance. John C. Cort, also a Guildsman, has been selected as chief negotiator.

Unions which joined the joint council, in addition to the Newspaper Guild, are the Typographical Union, Stereotypers, Mailers, Photo-Engravers, three locals of Pressmen and two Teamsters' locals, all AFL; and the Machinists,

CCL Aids Flood Victims

The Canadian Congress of Labour has appealed to unions across Canada to provide financial aid to Winnipeg flood victims.

G. S. Borgford, CCL regional director in the stricken city and treasurer of the Flood Committee set up by the Winnepeg Labour Council, said that the devastion is indescribable and that "every dollar we are able to obtain will be needed." CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

OLDEST MEMBER of CIO-IUE Local 1145 is Paul Eisenhardt, who was 88 years old on May 21 and is shown on the job in the receiving department at the main plant of the Minneapolis-Honeywell Co. in Minneapolis, Minn. A native of Berlin, Germany, he was educated at Berlin and Munich Universities and has been in the U. S. since 1923. How good is he? At the age of 70, in the midst of the depression in 1933, he got his job at Minneapolis-Honeywell! Eisenhardt, whose German background taught him a thing or two, is strong for IUE.

Firm Accused Of Seeking Monopoly

THE LORDS of industry, when they are not wailing about "creeping socialism," or "labor monopoly" or the "unbridled power of labor bosses," moan about "government interference in business." At all their conventions they posture that all they want is a chance for free competition.

But the government keeps coming with anti-trust suits, and the Federal Trade Commission keeps issuing complaints, showing that the very last thing the big boys want is free enterprise and free competition; that they resort to all sorts of skullduggery to stifle competition.

The latest example is the complaint issued by the FTC against the Automatic Voting Machine Corp. of Jamestown, N. Y. Now, a complaint is merely a charge, but the FTC makes no charges, and issues no complaints, without thorough investigation.

And its charges against the Automatic Corp. make very interesting reading, for the Automatic sells 90% of all the voting machines used in this country. Its only competitor provides the other 10%.

Shouldn't Automatic be happy, and let the other guy alone? Well, according to the FTC, Automatic is pulling a lot of neat stunts to take that other 10% of the business away, too.

AUTOMATIC AND its officers and certain employes tell prospective customers, according to the FTC:

That the competitor's product makes fraud possible, because the voting machine can be manipulated.

That the competitor's machine won't last more than five to six years.

That the motor in the competitor's machine is inefficient.

That the competitor's financial stability is questionable, and its manufacturing, selling and servicing experience is inadequate.

How true are these statements of the Automatic? The FTC says that engineers and government officials have studied both types of voting machines, looked into the other charges made by Automatic, and that the charges have no basis in fact.

But that isn't all that Automatic has done, according to FTC. When some misguided community, despite all the propaganda, has decided to buy the competitor's machines, Automatic has instigated and financed "vexatious and groundless law suits" against purchasers or prospective purchasers, and these suits have included taxpayers' suits.

AND NO MATTER where such suits have been filed, said the FTC, "they have generally followed a similar pattern." Thus, whether it was a taxpayer in Bangor, Me., or Tucson, Ariz., who apparently filed such a suit, the charges, by a not-so-strange coincidence, have always been similar.

Such suits, says the FTC, are groundless, and brought in bad faith.

"Disparaging, false, misleading and deceptive," is what the FTC says about Automatic's goings-on, and the result is to suppress competition and create a complete monopoly.

U. S. Projects Are Aiding Point Four

THE FEDERAL government is now conducting four major programs of technical assistance in carrying out President Truman's Point Four program for development of the world's economically backward areas.

Listed in the fourth progress report on the program, published by the Office of Public Affairs in the Dept. of State, they are:

1. The cooperative, scientific and technical programs of the Interdepartmental Committee on Scientific and Cultural Cooperation now conducted under the U. S. Information and Educational Exchange Act.
2. The programs of the Institute of Inter-American Affairs in Latin America in the fields of education, food supply, and health and sanitation.
3. The technical assistance activities of the Economic Cooperation Administration, carried on in the ECA countries and in their dependent overseas territories.
4. A number of smaller or geographically restricted programs such as the Philippine Rehabilitation program, the Latin-American training program of the U. S. Maritime Commission, the Liberian Economic Mission, and the program of the Public Roads Administration developing the Inter-American Highway.

"Under its limited regular budget for Technical Assistance for Economic Development," the report added, "the United Nations now has, for example, exploratory missions for economic development in Bolivia, Chile and other countries and it is continuing with its plans for the establishment of an international center on public administration. The Specialized Agencies are also operating a variety of technical assistance programs in their respective fields."

CIO Auto Workers from Baltimore talked with House members about a wide variety of problems at UAW-CIO's first legislative institute, held May 21-24. Purpose of the Institute was to arouse 100% participation in PAC work. Fifteen delegates from Maryland and Delaware attended; there may be more sessions like it. Left to right, standing, Joseph Biby, committeeman, Local 738; H. W. Ferguson, PAC chairman, Local 678; Howard Rawlings, shop committee chairman, Local 344; seated, Joseph Sanatula, vice president, Local 738; Rep. Edward A. Garmatz (D. Md.) and Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D. N. Y.)

New Synthetic Yarn Contract Talks Begin

NEGOTIATIONS for new contracts in the synthetic yarn industry got under way last week when representatives of the CIO Textile Workers and the American Viscose Corp., largest in the industry, met each other across the bargaining table.

The union spokesmen, headed by Herbert W. Payne, TWUA synthetic yarn director, represent nearly 18,000 of the company's employes at eight plants in Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia.

They presented the company representatives with requests drawn up the previous week at a Washington meeting of the union's Synthetic Yarn Advisory Council, acting for 35,000 employes. A 25c-an-hour across the board wage increase and a pension will be sought.

At American Viscose and the Celanese Corp., which already have pension plans in effect, monthly payments of $125 including social security with the present level of employe contributions will be sought. In other plants, now without pensions, straight non-contributory pensions of $100 will be asked.

Average hourly earnings in the industry are now about $1.40. The last previous increase won by TWUA for synthetic yarn workers was 15c an hour in 1948.

Payne said that in formulating the union program, the advisory council was guided in part by the fact that the industry is operating at full capacity and earning profits of about 30% on sales before taxes, and 20% after taxes.

The conference also discussed at length the question of a shorter work week. While no specific recommendation was made for the current negotiations, the council adopted a resolution pointing to the increasing problems caused by technological change and setting a 30-hour week as an ultimate goal.

Contracts with Celanese, covering 4500 employes at Cumberland, Md., and the Industrial Rayon Corp., with 4000 employes in three plants in Ohio and Virginia, expire during the summer.

Campaign Opens To Install FM On TV Sets; UAW And ILGWU Stations Would Benefit

TELEVISION manufacturers could give consumers greater entertainment value if more of them would equip television sets to receive FM radio broadcasts, according to Edward L. Sellers of the National Association of Broadcasters.

It's a simple engineering matter, Sellers points out. He says the association estimates it would cost a manufacturer only $2 to $3 a set and that the final added cost to the consumer would be no more than $10 including all taxes. He expects independent engineering estimates to confirm association figures.

The Broadcasters Association is putting on a drive among manufacturers in line with a resolution adopted at its April convention.

If the campaign is successful, FM stations owned by the CIO Auto Workers and the AFL Ladies Garment Workers Union will be among the principal beneficiaries. So will other small FM stations which regularly put on top-flight programs.

Sellers, who heads the association's FM department, says that a television set really is a modified FM receiver. In fact the "sound" part of television actually is FM. Only hitch is that most television sets are not equipped to receive the wave lengths assigned to FM radio broadcasts.

In fact, Sellers says, there is an entire section in the middle of the FM "band" which is omitted from most television sets. This is the section which includes the channels assigned to FM radio stations. If the section were included, and if a couple of switches were added, your television set would be an FM radio, too.

Including an AM radio, however, would be another and an expensive matter, Sellers adds.

The resolution at the Broadcasters' Association convention calling for a campaign among manufacturers to include full provision for FM reception was introduced by Morris Novik of New York, radio consultant to both UAW and ILGWU. It is expected that the association will make a strong attempt to enlist the aid of members of the Federal Communciations Commission in its campaign.

The UAW and ILGWU operate FM stations in New York, Cleveland, Detroit, Chattanooga and Los Angeles.

5 Reorganization Plans Killed, One For NLRB

Sixteen of the 21 governmental reorganization plans submitted two months ago by President Truman became effective at midnight May 23. Seven plans survived challenges in the Senate, and five proposals—including the one to transfer the functions of the Natl. Labor Relations Board's independent General Counsel to the board were killed in the Senate. The box score:

Plan Purpose	Final Status
1. Reorganize Treasury.	Killed.
2. Reorganize Justice Dept.	Not questioned.
3. Reorganize Interior Dept.	Not questioned.
4. Reorganize Agriculture Dept.	Killed.
5. Reorganize Commerce Dept.	Challenge defeated.
6. Reorganize Labor Dept.	Not questioned.
7. Interstate Commerce Comm.	Killed.
8. Federal Trade Comm.	Challenge defeated.
9. Federal Power Comm.	Challenge defeated.
10. Securities and Exchange Comm.	Not questioned.
11. Federal Communications Comm.	Killed.
12. National Labor Relations Board.	Killed.
13. Civil Aeronautics Board.	Not questioned.
14. Vesting labor standards enforcement in Labor Dept.	Not questioned.
15. Shifting Public Works in Alaska to Interior Dept.	Not questioned.
16. Transferring school aids to Federal Security Agency.	Challenge defeated.
17. Shifting Public Works planning to Housing and Home Finance Agency.	Challenge defeated.
18. Centering building management in General Services Adm.	Challenge defeated.
19. Shifting Bureau of Employment Compensation to Department of Labor.	Not questioned.
20. Shifting record-keeping to General Services Adm.	Not questioned.
21. Abolishing Maritime Commission; creating new board in Commerce Dept.	Challenge defeated.

Puerto Rico To Get Walsh-Healey Aid

Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin has served notice of elimination of the administrative exemption under which the Walsh-Healey Act has been inapplicable to contracts performed in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

The act sets up labor standards for execution of contracts with the government involving $10,000 or more and applies now to the mainland, Hawaii and Alaska. The exemption for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands has been in effect since 1936.

"Information currently available," said Tobin, "indicates no compelling reason why the exemption for contracts to be performed in the Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands should be retained."

The change will become effective June 15 unless adequate reason to the contrary is forthcoming.

Labor 'Much Concerned' Over Joblessness, Low Farm Prices

"To speak bluntly, labor is very much concerned over the present status of employment. We are equally concerned over the present status of farm prices," PAC Dir. Jack Kroll recently said in a panel discussion at the Democratic Party's Jefferson Jubilee at Chicago. Kroll continued:

"In spite of the fact that we have a record number of people at work, we also have somewhere around four million unemployed now, and I understand the figure may go above five million at the end of the school year next month . . . Unemployment has now hit about 7% of our labor force.

"This growing unemployment comes at a time when our industrial production is pretty close to record highs . . . and it certainly comes at a time when profits are enormous. Last year General Motors, for example, made $1700 clear profit on each worker it employed.

"So we have the picture of rising unemployment, a 20% decline in farm income in the last two years, and huge industrial profits.

"These are symptoms that we had better treat now, before the disease gets to the point where our political and economic system requires major surgery as it did in 1933.

"Now this problem, of course, is primarily the problem of private enterprise. It is up to private enterprise to meet the needs of the people of the country both in terms of production and in terms of providing employment.

"And we feel that it is equally an obligation of government to see to it that industry does provide the expanding facilities to meet the employment and consumption needs of the people.

"If the leaders of industry are too timid or too fearful of the future to continue the expansion of our economy to the limits of its potentialities, then it is not only the function but the duty of the government to do the pushing in this field."

Fishermen, Marine Cooks Get Hearing

HEARINGS ON charges that they are Communist-dominated were accorded two more CIO international unions last week by a three-man trial board in National CIO headquarters in Washington.

The charges were denied by spokesmen for the Marine Cooks and Stewards on May 22 and 23, and by the Intl. Fishermen and Allied Workers on May 25.

The Marine Cooks and Stewards were represented by a delegation headed by Pres. Hugh Bryson and Secy.-Treas. Eddie Tangen. The hearing lasted until 1:20 a. m. on May 24, at their request. Paul Pinsky, research director, spoke for the Fishermen.

The charges against both unions were filed by Pres. William Steinberg of the American Radio Association. Witnesses supporting his allegations against the Cooks and Stewards were George L-P Weaver and Everett Kassalow, of National CIO, while Kassalow alone testified against the Fishermen.

The trial board consisted of Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, chairman; Vice Pres. John Moran of the Communications Workers, and Pres. Joseph Fisher of the Utility Workers.

A hearing on similar charges against the Fur and Leather Workers had been set for June 1. However, on May 25 the IFLWU suddenly withdrew from the CIO entirely. The hearing had originally been set for an earlier date but was postponed at the union's request.

More Bell Cos. Sign With CWA

FOUR MORE Bell System companies signed new agreements with the CIO Communications Workers last week, making a total of 10 now under contract.

Approved by the members affected were pacts between the Southern Bell Telephone Co. and Div. 49; Maryland Bell Telephone Co. plant and Div. 34; Maryland Clerical and Div. 16, and Chesapeake and Potomac Co., Washington, Traffic Department and Div. 50.

The four latest contracts were said by CWA officials to contain town and job classifications as well as schedule reductions from 8 to 6½ years, similar to clauses in agreements signed with other Bell companies.

Rejected last week was a proposed pact between the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. and Div. 45. The company proposal was turned down by Div. 45's executive board, as well as the international office.

Reported signed, subject to international approval, are pacts between Divs. 1 and 56 and the Indiana Bell Co. They are reported to follow the general pattern of other settlements and will likely be signed this week following international approval.

Illinois CIO Editors Form Organization

The CIO Editors' Association of Illinois has been formed with the aim of improving the CIO publications in the area and the press relations of the various unions.

There are almost 40 publications of CIO unions and locals in the Chicago area alone. According to Maida Steinberg, training director of the Community Services Committee of the Greater Chicago CIO Council and secretary of the new group, it is now mostly confined to Cook county publications but it is hoped that editors of other CIO papers throughout Illinois will join the organization.

Curley Lore, publicity director of Region 4, Auto Workers, is chairman. Meetings are held semi-monthly.

Firemen And Guards Not Same, Says NLRB

Firemen and guards are two different classifications of employes, the Natl. Labor Relations Board ruled last week.

The board ordered an election among firefighters at the Argonne National Laboratories, Lemont, Ill., after rejecting a claim of the International Guards Union and the employer that members of the bargaining unit are not necessarily guards merely because they are trained to perform guard duties in emergencies. The CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, which brought the case to the board, and the College, University and Private Schools Employes Union, will appear on the ballot.

Nine Acquitted in Bell Strike; Gerber, 4 Others Convicted

THE EFFORT of the Bell Aircraft Corp. to jail leaders of last year's 19-week strike of Local 501 of the CIO Auto Workers ended in a near-washout at midnight on May 24.

At that hour a jury in Niagara County Court at Lockport, N. Y., after nearly two days of deliberation, returned a verdict that nine of the remaining 14 defendants were not guilty of charges of rioting and conspiracy. The indictments against nine other defendants had been dismissed by Judge John March when the prosecution finished putting in its evidence.

None of the Local 501 leaders was found guilty. However, UAW Reg. Dir. Martin Gerber, of Region 9, and Edward F. Gray, the union's sub-regional director for Western New York, were found guilty of conspiracy. Joseph Elackowicz, a rank-and-file member of Local 501; Joseph Ippolito, a member of Ford Local 425, and Donald Fried, a member of the CIO Steelworkers, were found guilty of rioting.

Charles J. McDonough, the defense attorney, promptly moved to set aside the verdict as contrary to the weight of the evidence and contrary to law. The court agreed to hear his arguments in support of his position at a later date. If the motion is denied an apeal will be carried to the Appellate Division at Rochester.

McDonough based his defense on the fact that armed scabs and strikebreakers had provoked what violence occurred at the plant, in Niagara County near Buffalo, and that the disorder at the gate on Sept. 7, 1949, did not constitute rioting.

Throughout the trial the court overruled McDonough's efforts to tie up Bell strike-breaking with the fracas on Sept. 7, while District Attorney William Miller—who had the help of a battery of Bell attorneys—was permitted to range far and wide in his cross-examination of defense witnesses.

The jury reported it was unable to reach a verdict after a day and a half of debate, but was sent back by Judge Marsh to give further consideration to the testimony. The jury consisted of seven men and five women, none of them union members.

D.A. Is 'Available' For Congress Race

District Attorney William Miller, of Niagara County, N. Y., who turned his prosecution of 23 members of CIO Auto Workers Local 501 and their sympathizers into a political holiday, has become "available" for the Republican nomination for Congress from the 42d New York district.

Even before the Bell trial Miller had established a reputation for himself as a labor-hater and a willing stooge for the aircraft firm. The seat to which he aspires is held by Rep. William L. Pfeiffer (R.), who will retire at the end of his term.

USA Strikers Eat Regularly

THE 12-WEEK-OLD strike of 1200 members of CIO Steelworkers Local 1343 against the Bucyrus-Erie Co., of South Milwaukee, Wis., was still 100% effective last week with donations of food continuing to pour into strike headquarters from other CIO unions in the state.

The strike began Mar. 19 when union proposals for pensions, insurance benefits and a wage increase were turned down by the company.

USA officials charged that before negotiations were broken off, management had "conducted most of its bargaining sessions in the local newspapers." When the company finally made an "either or else" proposal, the men walked out.

About 700 of the 1200 workers have found temporary jobs. Union counselors report that the strikers are determined to "stick it out" until they win.

Since the men have been out, Wisconsin CIO unions have contributed 11,538 articles of food to the strikers and their families.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer along with Pres. Murray attended the United Packinghouse Workers Convention in Minneapolis, Minn. The United Packinghouse Workers is a strong, proven, capable organization that has had to struggle against terrific odds to achieve the benefits and security its members now enjoy. This union has placed itself squarely with the CIO in expelling those forces from our movement who think more of the mandates of the Cominform than they do of trade unionism. There will be more said about this convention next week.

Upon leaving Minneapolis, the writer will continue to Los Angeles, Calif., where he will attend the California State Industrial Union Council Convention, Long Beach, Calif., June 3-5. The CIO membership in the Sunny State through its officers is throwing off the communist yoke, and has largely succeeded in spite of all legal difficulties.

John Yancey, Assistant Chairman of the Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, has returned from the Panama Canal Zone with a favorable report on the workers in this area that is so important to our national defense. The CIO will render every possible assistance to these workers to enable them to realize the wages, benefits, and security they are striving for.

The CIO is preparing for the PAC meeting that is to be held beginning June 16 in Washington. All CIO regional directors, representatives of international unions and a number of council officers will be there. The fight must go on to organize more and more workers into unions in order to bring them greater security and the benefits of life that they deserve. We must intensify our political activity to see to it that our gains are not destroyed but enhanced by the passage of the legislative program based on the President's "Fair Deal," including increased Social Security benefits, unemployment compensation, health, and the FEPC, as well as all other important measures for the country's well being.

The CIO is in the vanguard of our democracy, fighting for democratic principles everywhere.

Adolph Germer, Director of Organization, International Woodworkers of America, reports that in a representation election at the Campbell-McLean Co., Eugene, Ore., the workers voted as follows: Eligible 56; IWA-CIO 32; against 24. In three IWA-CIO union shop elections in Reedsport, Ore., the workers voted as follows: Gardiner Lumber Co., eligible 129, yes 96, no 7; Huntington Shingle Co., eligible 38, yes 27, no 8; and Dornebeck Mfg. Co., eligible 20, yes 18, no 0.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at Union Oil Co. refineries at Wilmington and Oleum, Calif., among the production and maintenance employes, the Oil Workers International Union won a major victory by a vote of 782 for OWIU-CIO, 450 for the Independent Union Petroleum Workers. The cafeteria workers voted 100% for CIO, reports OWIU Intl. Rep. Dave Brymer.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following representation election victories for the IUE: Harris Seybold, Dayton, O., IUE 419, UE withdrew, no union 11; RCA, Pulaski, Va., IUE 358, UE 337, no union 9; RCA, Camden, N. J., IUE 2857, UE 2532, no union 30; Monsanto Chemical Co., Springfield, Mass., IUE 834, UE withdrew, AFL 260, no union 4; Audio Development Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 66, no union 6; Gaertner Scientific Instrument Co., Chicago, IUE 50, UE withdrew, no union 9; Premo Pharmaceutical Co., Passaic, N. J., IUE 34, no union 4; Package Machinery Co., Springfield, Mass., IUE 376, UE withdrew, no union 11; Blair Mfg. Co., Springfield, Mass., IUE 73, UE withdrew, no union 6; Joseph Lerner, Brooklyn, N. Y., IUE 42, UE 3, no union 0; Scranton Battery Co., Archbald, Pa., IUE 16, IAM 3, UE withdrew, no union 3; Dayton Malleable, Dayton, O., IUE 266, UE 54, no union 2; Vernay Laboratories, Dayton, IUE 30, no union 5; Foote Bros. Gear & Machine Corp., Chicago, IUE 444, UE 165, no union 12; Remington-Rand, Inc., Herkimer, N. Y., IUE 107, AFL 6, no union 29.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo reports that in a representation election at the Bradt Tanning Co., Gloversville, N. Y., 19 out of 25 workers voted to have the United Tannery Workers Local 1712 represent them as their bargaining agent.

W. D. Trombley, Director, Oil Workers International Union-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Valvoline Refinery, Freedom, Pa., the workers voted as follows: eligible 208, OWIU-CIO 97, no union 81. District 50 UMWA, unable to get on the ballot, supported position of no union. OWIU Rep. R. T. Taylor handled this campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. F. J. Michel reports that in a representation election at the Leader Card Co., Milwaukee, Wis., the United Paperworkers of America-CIO were victorious by a vote of 58 UPA-CIO, 27 no union, 2 Book Binders, AFL. This election was conducted by UPA-CIO Rep. John Gray.

ACW Extends Label Campaign

Officers of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers are extending the union's campaign to place the Amalgamated label in every man's and boy's suit and overcoat sold in the United States.

The recent 17th biennial convention authorized the Amalgamated General Executive Board "to continue the union label program already so successfully launched and to expend such sums as may seem necessary and desirable to implement the purposes" of the convention resolution.

The convention also voted that, as soon as feasible, the Amalgamated union label campaign should be extended to other men's and boys' apparel, beside suits and overcoats, under Amalgamated jurisdiction. These items include sportswear, shirts, pajamas, gloves and ties.

$48 For 40 Hours

Women in the confectionery industry in New York State earned approximately $48 for a 40-hour week in February at an average hourly rate of 98c, State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi reported last week.

The payrolls of 202 firms employing more than 12,000 people were studied in the survey. The average hourly earning compared with 91c when a previous survey was made in September, 1948, Corsi said.

Sell-Out Is Brewing On Rent Control

THE HOUSE Rules Committee did its part last week to delay Congressional consideration of rent control legislation in order to build up emergency pressure back of the "compromise" bill which for millions of tenants promises a direct sell-out. The present law expires June 30.

The committee, whose only job is to decide when and for how long the House shall consider which bills, held three days of "hearings" on the compromise, voted by the House Banking Committee, then said the House could not consider it before June 12.

This delayed House consideration until the end of controls is only three weeks away—and the Senate will act after that.

REP. JESSE WOLCOTT (R., MICH.), RANKING MINORITY MEMBER OF THE BANKING COMMITTEE, TOLD THE RULES COMMITTEE IT SHOULDN'T LET EVEN THE COMPROMISE BILL GET TO THE FLOOR.

(WE'RE SORRY INDEED WE DON'T HAVE EXACT QUOTES. OUR INFORMANT DOESN'T TAKE SHORTHAND. FROM HIS LONGHAND NOTES, HOWEVER, HERE IS WHAT WOLCOTT SAID:)

"I DON'T BELIEVE THERE IS GOING TO BE ANY TROUBLE—I THINK THERE MAY BE A FEW REASONABLE RENT INCREASES. BUT IF THERE IS GOING TO BE TROUBLE, IT WOULD BE MUCH BETTER TO HAVE ALL THESE EVICTIONS IN SUMMER THAN IN MID-WINTER."

The compromise would end controls Dec. 31, 1950, except in those communities whose governing bodies had voted, before then, to have them continued.

Wolcott also told the Rules Committee that the only reason Congress was being asked to extend rent control that far was to "take the political question beyond the November elections."

Chairman Brent Spence (D. Ky). of the House Banking Committee, author of the compromise, told the Rules group that Congress could figure "it was on the way out with this bill," whatever that meant.

Spence has assured pro-control witnesses that "it's this bill or nothing."

Many pro-rent-control Congressmen will vote for the phony bill on this basis, probably, figuring they have to get re-elected in order to be able to come back and vote for a better bill later.

The Wall St. Journal described the compromise as one designed to "let the Congressmen eat their cake and have it, too." It would make the "keep rent control" voters happy and still appeal to the "let's junk control" constituents, was the way the Journal put it.

There may be some effort to write a "local option recontrol" amendment on the compromise, which would let city councils who had failed to request continuance change their minds and vote themselves back under controls.

Meanwhile the financial axe work on the Office of the Housing Expediter continues unabated. OHE administers the present law, and has suffered all year from inadequate appropriations. Unless it gets more money by June 6 it will have to let its entire staff go.

The President asked for $800,000 to see OHE through till the end of June on a skeleton basis. The House cut it to $600,000 last week and the Senate was showing no signs of acting at all. OHE Administrator Tighe Woods was forced to give provisional layoff notices to all 2800 members of the OHE staff, including himself, on May 24.

Rent Raise Deals New Blow To DPW Clients

FEDERAL RENT CONTROLS go off May 25 in Alabama, because the State legislature wanted it that way. And here is part of the Birmingham News' report on what will happen to one section of Birmingham's population—its 12,700 relief clients.

Rents will go up 60 to 70%, or $3 to $7 a month, for more than half the people on relief, the story goes on to say. Relief payments now range from $22 to $23 a month. The relief appropriation was cut 10% by the same legislature which voted to end controls.

This is no guess-work; it's from a canvass of rent raise notices actually received. Negroes, as a group, have been hit hardest. (One group of "hopeless shacks," renting for $21.50 a month to employed Negroes, will be raised to $45 a month.)

Richard H. Brown, president of the Birmingham Home Builders Association, has been running ads in the paper, saying that now is the time for people to buy homes. "Many of them will be driven from high rent places after June 1," he says.

Half On Rolls Notified Of June 1 Hike

BY IRVING BEIMAN
News Staff Writer

Jefferson County's relief clients—already suffering from higher living costs and lower relief payments—took another blow on the chin today.

"More than half" of the 12,700 cases on rolls of the Jefferson County Department of Public Welfare have been notified their rents will rise June 1, it was disclosed today by A. H. McDanal, DPW administrator.

(Federal rent controls will be removed all over Alabama May 25, under an order of the national housing expediter.)

'Extras' Not Listed On U. S. Rent Charts

Most of the monthly rentals in the under-$30 class are "shelter" rents only, according to the U. S. government statisticians, and the tenants have unavoidable extra expenses every month which do not show on the charts.

For example, Mrs. Impi Campbell of Maynard, Mass., an unemployed textile worker who is the sole support of three children, pays "rent" of $3.50 a week for a three-room, cold-water flat. But heat, light, water and cooking gas are all extra. Mrs. Campbell's actual outgo on the place averages $11 a week.

"And at that," she says, "it's so disgusting that when you wake up in the morning you just want to turn over and sleep it off."

NLRB To Shun Circuit Court Rule On Oaths

THE NATL. Labor Relations Board decided last week to disregard a ruling of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans that cases filed by CIO unions before top CIO officers signed non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act have no standing.

"With due respect for the opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit," the board said, "the board is constrained to adhere to the board's original view until the Supreme Court of the United States has had an opportunity to pass on the question."

The NLRB and the court, which has jurisdiction over the southern states and the Canal Zone, have never seen eye to eye on any phase of labor relations. The Dept. of Justice charged the court with establishing a "pattern of denial" of NLRB enforcement orders and carried two such denials to the Supreme Court, where two weeks ago the Circuit Court was reversed.

The board's decision to pay no attention to the ruling until the Supreme Court acts was made public in its decision May 22 in a case involving the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co.,'s Sparrows Point, Md., shipyard and the CIO Shipbuilders Union. The board on April 12 had ordered the company to bargain with the union.

The Circuit Court on May 5 refused to enforce a board order requiring the Postex Cotton Mills Co. to bargain with the CIO Textile Workers in a similar case.

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 5, 1950 82 No. 23

LONE PICKET faces the paraphernalia of war at Morristown, Tenn., where National Guardsmen were called out to escort the scabs into the plant of the American Enka Corp. Sixty per cent of the 750 male members of the striking local of the CIO Textile Workers are ex-GIs who presumably fought to make the world safe from this sort of thing. Attorney General McGrath and the Senate Labor Committee have been asked to probe the affair. (See Page 3.)

June Conference To Plan PAC's Part In Congress Races

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has summoned an extraordinary conference of top CIO leaders June 16 to review the political situation and lay plans for effective PAC action in the 1950 Congressional campaigns. The conference will be in the Congressional Room of Washington's Willard Hotel.

"The NAM is putting on a no-holds-barred, brass-knuckle campaign," says PAC Director Jack Kroll, "and its purposes are to regain control of Congress and to convince Congressmen that labor has no political power. And the NAM has found new ways to spend money.

"It's not pouring its funds into the party tills. The cash is going directly to the party candidates. It's up to us to show NAM and the decent people of this country that labor does have power at the polls, and that its voice is their voice."

In his call to the conference, Murray noted that it will take more than courage and good will this year to turn the tide against reaction. It'll take work, and cash, he said—and the conference is to plan the work and to get every CIO local, international and council started on fund-raising.

The parley will hear direct reports on the legislative and political situation from Capitol Hill.

Graham 2% Short Of Majority In N. C.

SEN. FRANK Graham was top man in the record-breaking North Carolina Democratic primary vote May 26 but because of the three-way nature of the race he failed, by less than 2%, to get a majority of all votes cast.

Hence he may face a run-off June 24, if the second highest candidate, conservative corporation lawyer Willis Smith, asks for one.

(As of June 2, Smith has not yet requested a run-off, claiming lack of funds, but he has until June 12 to decide. Smith got 40.66% of the vote.)

Low man on the primary totem pole was ex-Sen. Robert Reynolds, who was one of the Senate's leading isolationists in his day and was head of the "Vindicators," disrespectfully known as "a shirt outfit." He got 56,019 votes out of approximately 600,000 cast.

The campaign was violent. Smith campaigned on a white supremacy basis, using the then current Senate debate on the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill as a springboard to try to crucify Graham, in spite of the fact that Graham has not voted on the measure.

ONE CAMPAIGN tactic misfired badly. Every North Carolina voter received a postcard indorsing Graham as a friend of the colored people, signed by "Walter WITE, President of the National Society for the Advancement of Colored People."

The thing bounced, though, because whoever got it up had neglected to check on a few details. The organization's correct title is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Walter White (not Wite) is executive secretary.

White, as soon as this was called to his attention, issued a widely reprinted statement denying that he had sent out any such postcards and stating that NAACP had made no indorsements in the North Carolina race.

A RECENT VISITOR at the White House was Joseph T. Ferguson (right), Democrat opposing Sen. Taft (R. O.), who assured Pres. Truman of his support of the principles of the Fair Deal. They apparently are getting a big "kick" out of a newspaper story.

Unions Ask Bar On Use Of Ruhr For War

USE OF THE heavy industrial resources of the German Ruhr "for aggressive militarist purposes . . . should be forever prevented," union spokesmen from Europe and America have agreed.

More than 40 representatives from unions in eight countries and several trade secretariats met at Dusseldorf, Germany, on May 22-23 to discuss the Ruhr problems. The parley was called by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Representing the CIO were Michael Ross, international affairs director; Stanley Ruttenberg, research director; and Jay Krane, assistant to Elmer Cope, the CIO's representative in Europe.

The AFL was represented by two spokesmen, and unions in Belgium, France, western Germany, Luxembourg, Holland, Sweden, and Great Britain attended.

Noting the plan for a Franco-German steel production organization recently announced by Premier Schuman of France, the Dusseldorf conference recommended that the ICFTU executive board "insist upon adequate representation of the free trade unions in any discussion to be held on the national and international level for the purpose of determining the principles, and for working out details of the plan."

In another resolution, the ICFTU group said that in the "final reorganization of the Ruhr," industrial properties should be in the hands of administrative bodies in which all interests, including those of labor, are represented.

THE RUHR INDUSTRIES are among the most powerful and concentrated in Europe, and their strength and power have been a major factor in European politics and military planning for decades.

In Brussels, Belgium, a few days after the Ruhr conference, the ICFTU's executive board urged close relations with the inter-governmental Council of Europe, with the aim of assuring full voice for labor on planning of international policies.

Taft Likened To McCarthy By St. Louis Post-Dispatch

THE ST. LOUIS Post-Dispatch and the Madison, Wis., Capital Times have joined the ranks of the newspapers which have condemned Sen. Taft's role in the McCarthy smear campaign.

The St. Louis newspaper took sharp issue with his recent statement that "by the pro-Communist policies of our State Dept., we have permitted Russia to take over all China and to threaten to absorb the entire Far East."

"These words are typical of Sen. McCarthy," the newspaper said.

It then said that the United States "supported Chiang's corrupt, ineffectual and finally discredited regime for years."

"Chiang's collapse is not something which came about overnight," it continued. "The scandals of luxury trade over the Burma road, when every square inch of transport was needed for war supplies against the Japanese, came to light early in the war.

"Many thousands of Americans who have not a Communist corpuscle in their bodies reached the State Dept.'s conclusion about Chiang—before the State Dept. declared itself."

AFTER EFFECTIVELY shattering Taft's argument, the Post-Dispatch, considered by newspapermen to be one of America's top-notch newspapers, then looked into the effects of his statement.

"Sen. Taft," the paper said, editorially, "has put himself at the forefront of the political campaign to spread fear, not to say hysteria, for partisan advantage.

"Because of his standing, the son of William Howard Taft may . . . have done a greater disservice (to America's foreign policy) than Sen. McCarthy has managed to pile up in three months."

THE MADISON (Wis.) Capital Times, leading newspaper in the state's capital, said: "It was expected that Sen. Bridges, the utilities champion of New Hampshire, should rush to the side of Sen. McCarthy in his attacks on Secy. of State Dean Acheson.

"Bridges is cut from the same sordid political cloth from which McCarthy was carved.

"There will, however, be thousands of people who have respected Sen. Taft as an honest and honorable conservative who will be shocked by the skulking manner in which he has sought to exploit the McCarthy orgy. Sen. Taft does not even have the courage of Bridges or of those Dixiecrats, Rep. Gene Cox and Rep. John Rankin, who have given McCarthy their blessing."

FROM EVERY CONTINENT: Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has membership on every continent, and its board looks a bit like the United Nations. Here Miss Mariban Kara (right) of Indian trade unions discusses Asiatic problems with Secy. Oldenbroek. At left is Eiler Jensen of Denmark, another ICFTU board member. ICFTU is developing plans for major help to Asiatic unions, as one method of lifting living standards in under-developed nations.

IUE-CIO Victor At Westinghouse

SHORTLY AFTER the CIO's International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers wrapped up a five year pension-pay raise contract with General Motors Corp., it went ahead to beat the dwindling United Electrical and Radio Workers in a run-off election at the giant East Pittsburgh, Pa., Westinghouse plant.

The June 1 run-off election for Local 601 at East Pittsburgh Westinghouse handed a 5964 to 5706 defeat to the Communist-led UE. The run-off was made necessary when IUE-CIO won a plurality but not a majority during the chain-wide representation elections April 27.

With the Local 601 victory, IUE-CIO now represents nearly 75% of all Westinghouse workers.

JAMES B. CAREY, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and chairman of IUE-CIO's Administrative Committee, hailed the triumph as "another piece of evidence that the workers want militant, American unionism."

"We now invite those still in UE," Carey continued, "not to wait for a new NLRB election next year, but to affiliate immediately with IUE-CIO so that they can get results in collective bargaining."

On June 1, the same day as the Westinghouse run-off, IUE-CIO scored other victories in Terry Steam Corp., Hartford, Conn.; Billings-Spencer, Hartford; Ingersoll Rand, Painted Post, N. Y.; Teller-Cooper, New York City; Philco Radio Corp. (two units) Sandusky, O., and the Huffman Corp., Dayton, O.

The IUE-CIO contract at GM provides a 4c per hour pay hike every year for five years, $100 minimum pensions, and better health and insurance benefits. It also yields a wage adjustment every three months to meet changes in the Bureau of Labor Statistics index, so that if the cost of living rises, wages for GM workers will rise also.

Under this provision the workers will receive a 1c per hour increase for every 1.14 point rise in the BLS index. There is no ceiling on the increase in the cost-of-living allowance, but there is a floor under it. Thus, no matter how high the cost of living goes, wages will rise with it. But regardless of how far the index falls, wages can drop no more than 3c.

In this way the 4c annual increase is not only a definite boost in the worker's pay check, but also a hike in purchasing power that cannot be wiped out by any possible change in the cost of living.

Tool and die makers and skilled maintenance men will receive an additional 5c increase, making their total wage gain for this year 9c an hour.

Pensions under the new agreement will provide a minimum $100 per month including primary social security at the age of 65 with 25 years service.

WHEN SOCIAL security benefits are raised, the minimum pensions will gain proportionately. Under pending legislation this would bring the minimum to $117.50 per month.

An employe with 15 years seniority who becomes totally and permanently disabled after the age of 50 will receive a disability pension of $50 to $90 monthly, depending on length of service. The disability pension will continue until he is 65, when he will come under the regular pension. This disability pension is in addition to payments received under the group insurance plan.

Life insurance now in effect will be increased by $500, and sickness and accident weekly payments already in effect will be increased $14 per week in all brackets, with no additional cost to IUE-CIO members.

Sickness and accident benefits will range from $28 to $45 per week for up to 45 weeks. Life insurance will range from $2500 to $5000.

The company will also pay one-half of Blue Cross and Blue Shield hospitalization and health insurance for the employe and his family.

VACATIONS WERE improved to three weeks after 15 years' service, two weeks after five years, one and one-half weeks after three years, and one week after one year.

The contract provides that when a union shop election is held by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, all union members will be required to maintain their membership and new employes must join with option of continuing membership at the end of one year. This modified union shop, which was also gained by the CIO Auto Workers, is considered a significant concession from GM, which traditionally insisted on an open shop.

Other improvements include elimination of inequalities between jobs and a guaranteed hiring rate no more than 10c below the regular job rate.

Ex-GIs Faced By Guardsmen Sent To Break TWUA Strike

By WILLIAM WEISS

MORE THAN 60% of the 750 male workers at the American Enka Corp. plant in Morristown, Tenn., fought in the last war—presumably to make the world safe for democracy and to preserve the American way of life.

A lot of them wondered last week if the struggle had been worth while.

For last week they faced tactics such as were used by the Nazis on the inhabitants of conquered countries. Certainly the ex-GIs did not expect to find such anti-democratic techniques put in use against them by their fellow countrymen.

The ex-servicemen along with other members of the Textile Workers had been on strike at the Enka plant two months. All efforts of the company to break the walkout having failed, they found themselves faced by 300 National Guardsmen called to escort into the plant the handful of scabs who wanted to work and to break the strike.

MANAGEMENT'S strike-breaking techniques began modestly enough with a court order limiting pickets to six at the one gate of the plant.

This was followed by a back-to-work movement which brought 25 workers in the first day and 90 by the end of last week.

Sheriff Robert Medlin appealed to Gov. Gordon Browning for help on May 28 when two dynamite explosions were set off miles from the plant. No one was injured by the blasts, which the union claims were company inspired.

The next day 300 heavily armed National Guardsmen arrived on the scene—complete with one artillery company containing heavy trucks and mounted field equipment.

EARLY MEMORIAL DAY a striker was slugged by a National Guardsman for calling to a group of workers in a car who were driving into the plant, the union said.

In the afternoon, the Sheriff put himself at the head of a posse composed of 28 guardsmen, carrying rifles and fixed bayonets and proceeded to raid the union commissary and the TWUA office, where two women were arrested.

Later the same afternoon 15 other strikers were rounded up by the posse and taken to the county jail, where they were held while other union members tried to find a bondsman.

While in jail, one of the strikers, Lonnie Warwick, was cruelly beaten by a crowd of deputies and Guardsmen to such an extent that he required medical attention, according to TWUA. Taken to a physician's office by a Guard officer, two Guard privates and two local deputies, Warwick's injuries were diagnosed as a concussion, a ruptured spleen and broken ribs, in addition to cuts and bruises.

The doctor urged that he be taken to a hospital at once but the officer roughly replied that he was "going back to jail" and ordered the doctor to "patch him up."

Robert Cahoon, TWUA associate general counsel, and TWUA Rep Silas Switzer said that when they protested as a Guard officer again began beating Warwick, the officer knocked Cahoon unconscious with the butt of his revolver and kicked him while he lay on the floor of the doctor's office.

CIO PRESIDENT Philip Murray called the wave of violence against the strikers a "gross perversion of constitutional and civil rights."

"The action of the State Guard and police in launching provocative and bloody attacks on these strikers cannot be condoned by any democratic standard," Murray said. "Their solicitous regard for the company's efforts to import strikebreakers is a throwback to jungle laws of labor relations.

"It is time for the American Enka Corp. to abandon this resort to police-supported lawlessness and violence, and to undertake sane and peaceful collective bargaining negotiations with the union of its employes.

"Pending such a decision by the company, I call upon the Governor of Tennessee to remove the National Guard and the state police from the scene of the strike."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers termed the affair an "outrageous violation of fundamental American liberties."

"To the best of my knowledge," Rieve said, "this is the first time since the war that troops have been used to help an employer crush an organization of workers."

Rieve said he had asked Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath to investigate the denial of civil liberties to the strikers and had also requested Sen. Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah), Chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, to launch a probe.

(It was learned by the CIO News that two investigators for the Senate Committee left for Morristown Wednesday night.)

Rieve said he had been informed by TWUA Tennessee Dir. Herbert S. Williams that Gov. Gordon Browning was appalled at what had happened.

Rieve said the shocking events at Morristown were a logical outgrowth of the Taft-Hartley Act and the atmosphere it has created and predicted that unless the law is repealed there will be more like it.

During the six weeks of negotiations preceding the strike, the union proposed better grievance procedures, hospital and surgical insurance improvements, increase in shift premiums, paid lunch periods, arbitration of work load disputes, seniority clauses on promotion, pensions, paid holiday restrictions and wage increases.

The company's final proposal on the eve of the expiration date was termed "utterly unacceptable" by the workers and the strike began the next day.

Correction

Returns of the NLRB representation election at the Pittsfield, Mass., plant of General Electric were incorrectly reported in the May 29 issue of the CIO News. The correct results were: Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers — CIO 5170, United Electrical Workers 1898, "no union" 62.

ARA Hails FCC Rule On Radar

Pres. W. R. Steinberg of the CIO American Radio Association, last week hailed a ruling by the Federal Communications Commissions on maintenance of ship radar as "placing a floor under the level of technical competence."

Steinburg said the new rules, which were adopted by FCC after two years of controversial hearings, give deck officers the right to operate radar units as navigation instruments but permit only FCC licensed radio officers to make repairs, adjustments and tests on the devices.

The FCC majority report stated, "With regard to the matter of service and maintenance of ship radar stations, it is clear from the testimony that some services and maintenance duties are of such complex nature that only technically competent persons may perform such duties."

Senate Labor Unit Votes To End T-H Hiring Hall Ban

THE SENATE Labor and Public Welfare Committee has moved to wipe out one of the cruellest sections of the Taft-Hartley Act by voting, 8 to 3, to legalize union hiring halls in the maritime industry.

The measure was given the recommendation after spokesmen for CIO and AFL maritime unions, including the CIO Natl. Maritime Union, gave detailed testimony to show that the end of hiring halls in the industry would mean a return of the old-time "crimp joint," shanghaiing and similar degrading practices largely eliminated by the hiring halls.

The Taft-Hartley Act outlawed union hiring halls through its provision forbidding the closed shops. Anti-union employers hauled the Maritime Union before the Natl. Labor Relations Board and into court, and have won every legal battle to date. The U. S. Supreme Court outlawed the practice in a case involving Great Lakes shippers. Additional cases involving the other coasts are on the way up to the highest tribunal.

Before voting its approval of the measure, the committee killed by a voice vote a substitute proposed by Sen. Taft (R.O.) providing for preferential hiring based on seniority.

The eight Democrats on the committee, which is headed by Sen. Thomas (D. Utah), voted for the bill. Opposed were three Republicans — Taft, Sen. Donnell (Mo.) and Sen. Smith (N.J.). Two other Republicans, Sen. Aiken (Vt.) and Sen. Morse (Ore.) were absent. Donnell, incidentally, is said to have voted against Taft's substitute.

A subcommittee headed by Sen. Murray (D.Mont.) had held extensive hearings on a bill introduced by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.), himself a former deckhand. The bill reported out, based on Magnuson's, was written by the subcommittee.

"The Taft-Hartley Act," said Murray, "by outlawing the hiring methods which have been worked out over years of democratic bargaining, has threatened strife and disorganization in the maritime industry.

"That industry is of great importance to our internal welfare and our foreign relations at this time, and I am happy to see the committee take serious action toward removing the serious and imminent threat to its well-being which the existing law has created."

Cyrus Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, had warned the subcommittee that strikes on all coasts are possible unless something is done about the situation. After the vote was taken Thomas observed that he "could not conceive of" a strike if the bill is not passed, because it would be a strike against Congress' failure to enact the measure rather than a walkout against employers.

Must Be 'Great Increase' In Living Standards

That's What ECA Chief Hoffman Says As He Points To Progress Made Under European Recovery Program

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AIRPLANES WERE puny things, tanks were light and slow and bombs didn't cause great devastation back in the days when the U. S. joined in a war to "make the world safe for democracy."

Yet it took Europe seven years to return, after World War I, to the level of pre-war industrial production and 10 years passed before agriculture was back to normal.

And while Europe was fighting to recover, isolationism was sweeping our own country.

We turned thumbs down on the League of Nations and behaved generally as if we thought we weren't really part of the world.

A fellow named Hitler became powerful in Germany—and in Italy Mussolini threw his weight around.

What followed on the battlefields is still fresh in all our minds.

DURING AND following World War II the United States started assuming a role of leadership in world economic and political affairs.

It took part in the creation of the United Nations and it launched the European Recovery Program—the Marshall Plan.

Despite the great destruction of the war, the Western European picture today shows:

1. Industrial production is now about 23% higher than just before the war.

2. Agricultural production is about back to normal.

Neither of these things would be so had there been no Economic Cooperation Administration.

And there's a good chance that some of the Western European nations which enjoy democracy would have fallen under communist control had ECA not provided a helping hand.

LABOR HAS played an important role in the ECA, both in the U. S. and in the cooperating nations abroad.

That's what ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman told a group of labor editors in Washington recently.

He said that ECA did not have a "give away" program, that it was designed to make an important segment of the world self-supporting and that U. S. funds used in the recovery program were investments in the future.

Then Hoffman said the things which many of us in the labor movement had been waiting for the top ECA official to say:

"Our job is now to pave the way for a great increase in the standard of living of the people of Europe."

ECA's first job, he said, was to provide Europe with food, then with machinery and tools.

But now, he added, the task is to improve the conditions under which the people work and live.

HOFFMAN WAS blunt and frank in his talk with the editors, who asked him quite a few penetrating questions.

ECA wasn't designed as a "cold war weapon," he said, but after Russia "counted herself out" ECA became a major force working against the spread of communism.

"Back in 1938 the standard of living in Western Europe wasn't high enough to isolate the region from communism and the other isms," he said.

Thus, he added, merely restoring pre-war economic conditions won't be good enough.

WESTERN EUROPE'S industrial productivity, Hoffman said, is only about 40% of that of the U. S.

Consequently, ECA has been expending much effort to provide the region with greater electric power, more efficient tools and machines and new techniques.

This has been done, he said, because Europeans must achieve higher wages and lower prices—must be able to enjoy a generally higher standard of living.

This switch in ECA emphasis was good news to the labor movement.

We shouldn't kid ourselves into believing that a few words from Hoffman and his colleagues are going to cause European employers to immediately raise wages and provide their workers with better working conditions.

But the new ECA line will be most helpful to the worker groups abroad when they enter contract negotiations.

And European employers who have benefitted from the ECA program are going to be inclined to take ECA advice, at least to some degree, as long as Uncle Sam is lending them a helping hand.

Can't Afford It

You've been working for 45 years. Your health isn't too good any more and you're tired of the grind at the plant.

You've been able to pay for a little home and you've got a couple of hundred in the bank.

You'd like to retire, as you dreamed of doing back in 1935 when the Social Security Act was passed. But you keep on working.

You simply can't afford to leave your job. You've figured it out time and again and it always comes out the same way.

Your social security payments simply wouldn't cover your expenses—even if you own your home—no matter how economically you lived.

So you continue to work—and there are a lot more like you.

And now you're dreaming again—about the possibility that Congress will bring social security up to date and make it possible for you to retire.

You and others like you are victims of the increase in the cost of living.

You'd like to retire in 1950 on a 1935 pension, but you can't do it. That's because a "dollar ain't a dollar anymore."

Well, Congress is getting ready to tackle the situation and the signs are hopeful. There probably will be some major improvements in the social security set-up.

But there's a group in Congress which doesn't want to go very far. It would like to hold improvements to a bare minimum.

It's time, however, for the law to be given a real overhauling—and it's time for you to tell your lawmakers what you think about the situation.

BACKWARD PROGRESS

The discredited United Electrical Workers provided a fine demonstration in the General Electric NLRB elections of how to make progress backwards—and it wasn't the first demonstration of its kind that UE has provided.

The UE had 331,000 members when it was expelled from the CIO seven months ago on charges that it was Communist dominated.

Today the CIO's Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers holds bargaining rights for 220,000—and more elections in the industry are now pending.

UE has used every trick in the bag to keep IUE from making progress, but has been losing ground steadily—and rapidly.

It has been losing ground because IUE's leaders have been working hard, have been waging real campaigns—and because American workers have been given an opportunity to show how they feel about communism.

While the IUE campaign has been in the forefront, the CIO has been making real progress against Communist-dominated unions in other fields, too.

This means the Reds are losing ground all over the country and that the "boys" in Moscow are getting a lot of excuses and explanations from their lackeys in this country.

The best explanation—one which they probably wouldn't spell out so bluntly—is that workers in this country are becoming more and more fed up with the Stalinist line.

Taft Fails To Block Point 4 Bill

The Senate recently approved a $3,200,000,000 foreign aid bill, including $35,000,000 for Point IV, 47-27, after Republicans led by Taft (R. O.) had tried for three days to knock out the Point IV plan.

The measure was merely authorization, and appropriations committees later must vote the actual sums.

The funds are for six foreign-aid programs, including Marshall Plan aid, which ECA Chief Paul Hoffman later told a Senate Appropriations committee will probably total $3 million under the $18 billion estimate originally made.

Pres. Truman asked the Point IV program in his inaugural speech. He then called the plan "a new and bold venture" looking to world peace. The purpose of the plan, he said, was to aid backward areas through technical assistance and exchange of know-how.

Taft argued for the original Senate version of the Point IV program, declaring that in conferences between the House and Senate, an entirely new version had been written, and the new version committed this nation to permanent economic aid throughout the world when the Marshall Plan ends in 1952.

The charge was denied by Administration spokesmen. Senator Connally said "we are simply declaring a policy."

Nine Republicans joined 38 Democrats to vote for the measure. The Republicans were: Aiken (Vt.), Ives (N.Y.), Knowland (Calif.), Mundt (S.D.), Saltonstall (Mass.), Mrs. Smith (Maine), Smith (N.J.), Thye (Minn.) and Wiley (Wis).

Four Democrats joined the 23 Republicans who voted against. The Democrats were: Byrd (Va.), Fulbright (Ark.), McCarran (Nev.), and Russell (Ga.).

Extension Of 65c Wage Protested

THE CIO SHOE Workers have protested to Wage and Hour Administrator McComb the three months' extension of temporary certificates authorizing the employment of learners at subminimum wage rates in the shoe manufacturing industry.

The certificates, issued by the Wage and Hour Division of the Labor Dept. to some 400 establishments, were to expire May 25. Through an order of Wage and Hour Administrator McComb, the expiration date was extended to August 25.

Pres. William Thornton of the CIO Shoe Workers told McComb last week that when the temporary order was issued last January, he was informed by the Wage and Hour Division that it did not have the personnel or the time to investigate the certificates.

Thornton said that after the certificates have been in effect for four months they had been extended for an additional three-month period without consultation with the union.

A training period of not more than three months was specified and wage rates were to be computed at not less than 65c an hour for the first 240 hours and 70c an hour for the remaining 240. The statutory minimum is 75c an hour.

McComb said he had advised Secy. of Labor Tobin that the extension was ordered because it is still necessary to permit such employment at subminimum wages to prevent curtailment of job opportunities.

Designs For— Or On Unions?

The former head of the nation's biggest big-business group suggested last week that unions ought to be smaller.

H. W. Prentis, Jr., chairman of the board of Armstrong Cork and former president of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, suggested to fellow businessmen in New York that there ought to be three or four unions in place of the prsent United Steelworkers of America, CIO.

He also would like to see the miners union and railway brotherhoods broken up into three or four parts — on grounds that "some of the national unions must be limited so they cannot wield power over our whole economy."

Prentis told his Union League Club audience that the "handout welfare state" must go, and called for the election of Republicans to office.

He Depended Upon His Oratorical Ability

PAY WAS LOW, working conditions were bad and employes of the mill lived in cheap little shacks.

The employer, on the other hand, was a "big shot" and a firm believer in paternalism. He'd served in the State Legislature for quite a few terms and regarded himself as a persuasive orator.

The workers, all Negroes, weren't happy about their situation, but didn't make any move to improve it until confronted with a wage decrease.

Then they began talking about getting a union to represent them.

A CIO organizer arrived on the scene and began signing up members.

THE ORGANIZER said later that he'd never seen anything like the situation which confronted him.

Within a comparatively short time he had signed up every worker at the plant! There wasn't a single hold-out.

And, to his surprise, the mill owner and other officials made no attempt to interfere with the organizing campaign.

The owner had what he considered an ace up his sleeve and he wasn't going to play it prematurely.

He, however, didn't keep his scheme secret and word regarding it reached the organizer.

"H-m-m-m-m," the CIO man told himself, "This calls for a bit of thinking."

And so he did some thinking.

AS THE DATE for a NLRB election among the workers approached, the organizer and the leader of the mill workers got together to plan strategy.

The employer, the organizer said, had an idea that he could defeat the union at the last minute merely by calling all the workers together and making a speech to them.

"The boss is a powerful speaker," the local leader said. "He's been swaying them up at the Legislature for years—and he might talk the boys out of voting for the union.

"I don't think he can, but he might. Anyhow, he'd win over some of the fellows and cut down our margin—and we want a 100% union."

FINALLY THE two men, along with some others, worked up a little stunt designed to counteract the employer's oratorical ability.

They called a meeting for the night preceding the election date, and for this there was a big turnout.

The organizer discussed unionism in detail, then told the workers what to expect the next day.

"The boss will call all of you together in a meeting, tell you how good he's been to you and then tell you not to vote for the union," he said.

"If you want a union as bad as you say you do, then don't even listen to what he has to say."

Then he and the local leader gave each worker a little parcel, told the group what the parcels contained, and then the organizer said, "Don't even open the parcels until the proper time—then use what they contain."

THE EMPLOYER called all the workers together the next morning on company time. Soon he was launched on his speech.

He told them that he had been good to them, that he knew what was best for them and that a union wouldn't help them a bit.

"Why, the daddies of some of you worked for me before you did—and when things got tough I loaned them money," he declared. "Yes, I've been good to my people—and you are my people."

On and on he went. The group sat in silence. The employer really turned on the heat. Still there was no response.

Finally he finished. The workers returned to their posts.

Then they began removing from their ears the wads of cotton which the little parcels had contained.

"I don't know whether they heard what the boss said or not—but that afternoon the workers went to the polls and every one of them voted in favor of the union!" the organizer said.

NOT ENOUGH TO COVER!

Two 'Jailbirds' Hatched New Italian Labor Group

MANY OF THE IDEAS which have changed the course of history have been conceived in jail and nurtured in the strife-torn underworld of political revolution.

The idea of a free trade union movement in Italy came to Giovanni Canini during seven months in a cell.

July 5, 1944, is an important date in the lives of all Romans, because that was the date when Allied troops freed the city from the Germans—rumbling through the Arch of San Sebastiano, down the Via San Sebastiano and across by the Coliseum and the Forum to the Piazza Venezia, and thence down the Corso Umberto to the Piazza Colonna. The date is of even greater importance to Canini because that was the day that Allied authorities released the political prisoners in his jail in the heart of Rome.

For seven months Canini, with a long record of prison terms for opposing the authoritarian regimes of Fascists and Nazis, had brooded in his cell. He passed much of the time chatting with another trade union victim of the police state gendarmes. The latter was Giulio Pastore.

TOGETHER THESE apostles of the cause of working men and women plotted the courses they would like to take to build a strong labor movement dedicated to a higher standard of living and freedom from totalitarian pressures.

Once freed, they did not always follow the same path, although their goal was the same. Not long ago they decided that a common roadway offered the quickest and surest approach to that common goal.

The result was that the Socialist-Republican element of the labor movement—the Federazione Italiana del Lavore (Italian Federation of Labor), of which Canini was secretary—merged with the Libera Confederazione General Italiana dei Lavoratori (Free Italian General Confederation of Workers), composed chiefly of Christian Democrats, of which Pastore was secretary. The merger, which two smaller bodies also joined, became a united front of free, democratic trade unions dedicated to the task of pushing the ever-weakening Communist-dominated Italian General Confederation of Labor (CGIL) still further along the road to oblivion.

Canini was born in 1894. When he was 16 he went to Rome and got a job as a trolley conductor. Before he was 20 he had organized the city's transportation workers into a union. At the same time he began to take an active interest in politics and joined the Socialist Party.

When Mussolini came into power after World War I, Canini began a career of opposition, working steadily in the political underground maintained by the Socialists throughout the Fascist regime. This meant that every once in a while the Fascist police tossed him into jail—how often not even he remembers.

Canini continued to resist when Mussolini capitulated and the Nazis took over in September, 1943—totalitarianism being the same regardless of the label. He went to jail again and had been there seven months when the Allies released him.

He promptly returned to the trade union movement, revitalized the Streetcar, Bus and Shortline Railway Workers Union and became its general secretary. He took the union into the CGIL and became a CGIL vice-secretary and director, and also Rome City Councilman in charge of transportation.

Between liberation and the 1947 economic crisis Canini tried to work out his ideas inside the CGIL framework. It didn't take him long to decide that the Communist leadership of the CGIL was busy turning the labor movement into a partisan political instrument serving Soviet masters and had, in fact, captured a majority of non-Communist workers.

Canini did what he had always done. He fought back. But this time he didn't have to go underground, for the newest totalitarians did not have the police on their side.

He just led his Socialists out of the CGIL and in coalition with the Republicans, set up the rival Italian Federation of Labor.

He and Pastore got together again a few months ago—the conductor and the weaver. They worked things out and established the new union movement which they are confident will eventually replace the CGIL as the dominant labor group in Italy.

They Met In Jail

Giovanni Canini, whose outstanding role in the Italian labor movement is described on this page, is the Socialist counterpart of Giulio Pastore, the leader of Italian Catholic workers whose career was described here a few weeks ago.

Both enemies of Fascism and Nazism as well as of Communism, a few weeks ago they merged the two groups they represent with two smaller unions to form a still more effective united front against the Communist-dominated Italian General Confederation of Labor. The prison where they met was Regina Coeli (Queen of Heaven) in Rome, where many Italian labor leaders were thrown for their opposition to Mussolini and his Fascist state.

Rep. Lesinski, Leader Of Fight To Repeal T-H, Dies

REP. JOHN A. LESINSKI, chairman of the House Committee on Labor and Education and an outstanding friend of the working man, died unexpectedly at his home in Dearborn, Mich., on May 27. He was 65 and a Democrat.

REP. LESINSKI

He went into Congress in 1932 as the first representative of the then newly-created 16th Michigan District, and was its only spokesman in the House until his death.

Although he was pro-labor and an outstanding foe of the Taft-Hartley Act, Lesinski was an employer. He headed lumber companies in Dearborn and Hamtramck and founded a bank in Hamtramck.

At the first session of the 80th Congress he voted "right" on each of the 13 key issues in the CIO Voting Record except the bill to end U. S. regulation of most natural gas, and he was absent upon that occasion.

During the same session he led the House fight for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. With Sen. Thomas (D. Utah) he sponsored the Thomas-Lesinski bill, which not only would have wiped T-H off the statute books, but would have reinstituted the Wagner Act. With the backing of other liberals on the committee he sent it to the floor of the House by a 13-10 vote.

After four days of debate the Dixiegops went to work and produced a bill sponsored by Rep. Wood (D. Ga.) as a substitute Its proponents hailed it as a measure "meeting the major objections of organized labor," but organized labor recognized it only as something that made T-H a little worse.

The Wood bill was passed on May 3, 1949, but the following day the House voted to recommit it to committee. There Lesinski prevented it from ever reaching the floor again.

Lesinski was born in Erie, Pa., but lived in Wayne County, Mich., from the time he was three months old. He was educated at SS. Cyril and Methodius Seminary and the Detroit Business University.

At the age of 18 he went into the building and real estate business in the Detroit area and at the age of 26 he began to build what ultimately totalled 4000 houses which became the nucleus of the city of Hamtramck, many of whose residents are members of the CIO Auto Workers.

Besides his interests in labor and politics, Lesinski also was a fighter for freedom. During World War I, and for 13 years after, he was president of the Polish Citizens Committee of Detroit, a unit in the organization of which the honorary head was Ignace Paderewski, world-famed pianist who became the first president of Poland.

He helped organize the Polish army recruited in the United States and sent to France as the Haller Army, for which the Polish government decorated him.

Besides his service on the House Labor and Education Committee, he was chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions from the 74th to the 79th Congress, and chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization during the 79th Congress.

Lesinski's first wife, Stella, died in 1919, after giving birth to two children, John A. Lesinski, Jr., and Mrs. Joanne Heibenreich. His second wife, Barbara, died in 1937 after becoming the mother of three children, Mrs. Maxine Pityn, Delphine, and Raymond, a cadet at West Point. His third wife, the former Estelle J. Geisinger, survives with two more children, Beverly Jane and Edwin. A brother, Julius, of Hamtramck, also survives.

Funeral services were held May 31. A 17-member committee designated by Acting Speaker McCormack represented the House.

Barden, New Chairman of House Labor Unit, Is Dixiegop, No Friend of Labor, Fair Deal

REP. GRAHAM A. BARDEN, of North Carolina, slated by seniority to become chairman of the House Labor and Education Committee following the death of Rep. John A. Lesinski, is, like his predecessor, a Democrat.

There, the resemblance ends. For as Lesinski was a stalwart New Dealer and Fair Dealer, Barden fulfills all the requirements of a Dixiegop.

Nobody in the House supports the Taft-Hartley Act with more vigor than Barden. When the act was up for repeal a year ago he worked hard with Sen. Taft (R. O.), its co-sponsor, to save it. He also was one of the most consistent backers of the Wood Bill, which was passed and then recommitted, and which would have made matters even worse. In the Labor Committee he voted "present" when the T-H repealer, the Thomas-Lesinski bill, was acted upon.

THE CIO Voting Record shows that Barden voted "wrong" on six of 13 key issues and was paired "wrong" two other times. He voted "right" three times and was absent when the other two were acted upon.

His "wrong" votes were cast in favor of the Wood bill, against its recommittal, in favor of the Lucas 65c minimum wage bill opposed by the CIO, in favor of the Rees amendment outlawing slum clearance, against the supplemental appropriation for the Marshall Plan, and against the North Atlantic pact arms appropriation. He was paired "wrong" in favor of the House equivalent of the Senate's Kerr natural gas bill and against the anti-poll tax bill.

He was "right" on Social Security recommittal, liberalization of House rules limiting the power of the Ways and Means Committee, and the motion to recommit the revised reciprocal trade agreements bill. He was absent when rent control and the Celler anti-monopoly bill were voted upon.

HE ALSO voted for the Republican's tax cut bill and against President Truman's veto of it; against the admission of DPs, and the Brannan farm bill, and for the Mundt-Nixon bill.

What the change in the chairmanship amounts to, briefly, is that an avowed enemy of labor, instead of an avowed and demonstrated friend, will fill the post. The chairman of a House committee has considerable power, much of it negative.

He can stall action on a measure to which he is opposed, or he can turn it over to a subcommittee—and then pack the subcommittee with members who think like he does. He also can use parliamentary devices. Tactics such as these are what labor can expect the next time Taft-Hartley is up for repeal.

BARDEN'S accession to the chairmanship may lead to an attempt to bring to a vote the Federal aid to education bill, now regarded as a hot potato because of the religion angle. Barden sought to amend the Senate bill to prohibit the use of U. S. money for transportation of parochial school students.

Barden, who will be 54 next September, is a native of North Carolina and served in the Navy in World War I. He was graduated from the Univ. of North Carolina with a law degree in 1920, and served as a county judge and a State legislator before coming to Washington to represent the 3d North Carolina district in 1935. He has represented the district since then.

House Group Considers New "Spare The Rich" Tax Bill

WHAT MAY become another "spare the rich" tax bill is still being worked on by the House Ways and Means Committee, which so far has tentatively voted to cut some excise taxes, keep most of the present loopholes whereby corporations escape taxes, and maintain or increase the special tax exemptions for oil, coal and non-metallic minerals producers.

Only important new action at the end of May was a tentative vote to allow corporations to spread business losses over a longer period of time whenever calculating tax returns. Effect of the proposed "carry back" and "carry over" provisions would be to allow a corporation to apply current losses over a six-year period, instead of four years as at present. The best estimate available is that corporations could save themselves about $100 million a year during the next five years by this provision.

Committee members, in their daily secret sessions, are working over proposals to increase the corporation tax rate, as proposed by President Truman. They also will be voting on the proposal by Rep. Mills (D. Ark.) which would require corporations to pay their taxes within six months of the time when they figure their profits, instead of holding onto the money until the next fiscal year before turning it over to the Treasury.

Corporations are fighting both proposals. They're especially opposed to the Mills plan, because they've been using the cash to finance their businesses in the period before the date when they have to turn it in to the Treasury. In effect, this has meant an interest-free grant of funds from the government to the corporations.

The Truman proposal on corporation taxes, on which the committee is reported to be closely divided, represents the last chance to recover a big hunk of the $1,080,000,000 cuts in excise tax revenue already tentatively voted by the House committee. Truman asked the committee to raise the corporation tax rate ceiling from 38 to 42%—which would net the government about $675 million in additional revenue each year.

Fishermen And 'Shoremen, Both Facing Charges, Merge

MERGER OF the Intl. Fishermen & Allied Workers with the west coast Longshoremen's union headed by Harry Bridges was announced May 26.

Both unions have recently been the subjects of hearings by CIO Executive Board sub-committees on charges that they are Communist-dominated and follow the Communist party line rather than the policies of the CIO.

The fishermen's organization has membership in a number of west coast ports. It has been flirting with the merger proposal for many months.

The merger proposal was approved more than a year ago by the Fishermen union's membership, but the group's last convention decided not to carry it through at that time. Instead, the convention arranged for closer cooperation between the two union headquarters and for joint use of some of the Longshoremen's technical staff.

Action by the Fishermen's executive board to complete the merger was voted just a day after the union's appearance at the CIO hearing in Washington.

Recommendations on whether or not the Longshoremen, the Fishermen, the Marine Cooks & Stewards and the American Communications Association should be expelled from the CIO as Communist-controlled will be acted upon at the next CIO board meeting. No date for that session has yet been set.

Another CIO hearing committee, acting more or less for the record, took testimony and documents to back up charges of Communist domination of the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union, at a session on June 1.

The union, headed by Ben Gold, admitted Communist party leader, voted at its Atlantic City convention to withdraw from the CIO.

Fla. Prosecutor Protests Guild Award in Trial Coverage

THE $500 Heywood Broun award given to New York Post reporter Ted Poston by the CIO Newspaper Guild for "outstanding journalistic achievement" in his coverage of a Florida trial, has been protested by J. W. Hunter, state attorney for South Lake County, Fla.

Hunter was the prosecutor at the trial last year which resulted in two Negro youths being sentenced to die and a third sent to prison for life for the alleged rape of a 17-year-old Bay Lake, Fla., farm wife.

Hunter accused the Guild of furthering "ridiculous and malicious falsehoods" in presenting the award to Poston.

THE LATTER had written a series of articles for the N. Y. paper entitled "Horror in Sunny Florida" in which he described how he was chased out of the county, along with defense attorneys and another reporter, by a mob of white men in automobiles.

He also claimed that during the trial he was in fear of his life, that he was forced to register in a Negro hotel, then slip out the back way and stay with friends in order to avoid being molested by white citizens.

When the award was made by a board of judges, the Guild Reporter, official ANG newspaper, characterized his story as "one of the most courageous efforts on the part of any reporter."

The alleged crime last July touched off mob violence in South Lake County, Fla., climaxed by the burning of three Negro homes by an armed gang of white men. National Guard units were called to restore order.

ATTORNEYS for the defense, Alexander Ackerman of Orlando and Frank H. Williams of New York City, contended that a fair trial is impossible in South Lake County because of prejudice on the part of citizens.

The Florida Supreme Court recently upheld the two death sentences and the life term for the third youth.

U.S. Urged To Build R.R. Cars For Defense

THE CIO Steelworkers union has called on the federal government to order the construction of enough freight cars to assure an adequate supply to meet national defense needs if the railroads themselves won't have them built.

The demand was placed before a Senate Commerce subcommitee by Jack Stieber, of the union's research department, on June 1, at one of a series of hearings on the adequacy of the country's transportation in terms of defense.

Stieber recommended on behalf of the union that 85,000 freight cars be built this year and 160,000 a year for each of the three following years in order to give the Class I railroads the 1,920,000 cars recommended recently by Chairman J. Monroe Johnson of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The federal government must be prepared to "take up the slack between railroad orders and accepted goals," he said, with the government-owned cars available for purchase, lease or rental.

HE ALSO urged that the National Security Resources Board within three months complete a survey of passenger car facilities in light of possible defense needs.

The union urged the building program on the ground that "experience indicates that the railroads cannot, alone, be expected to meet even minimum requirements of freight cars for national defense," Stieber said.

Employment in the car building industry has dropped from 53,100 to 27,200 since February, 1949, he added, and some experienced and skilled workers cannot find other jobs in their home communities, where the factories are located.

"If immediate steps are not taken to assure continued orders for needed railroads cars," he said, "the nation's car builders are apt to find themselves beating the bushes for experienced help when orders do start coming in. This is not a happy prospect when the country is faced by a shortage of several hundred thousand cars... urgently needed for national defense."

Negro Paper Links Taft And Dixiecrats

The Ohio State News, prominent Negro newspaper, has linked Sen. Taft to the Dixiecrats and called for the election of Joseph T. Ferguson as Senator. The paper assailed efforts to blame Pres. Truman because the FEPC bill has been bottled up in the Senate and said the failure of civil rights legislation is due to the coalition of northern Republicans and southern Democrats.

Segregation In Schools Legal; But Pay For It, Court Rules

ANY STATE that wants to practice segregation has to pay for it, the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., declared last week in ruling that students in the Negro high school of Arlington County (Va.) are discriminated against because of their race.

The decision reversed a District Court finding that facilities and courses offered at the county's two high schools—one for whites, the other for Negroes—balanced each other out and offered substantially equal treatment. The case was remanded to the lower court for further proceedings.

Circuit Judge Morris A. Soper, who wrote the opinion, held that the lower court ruling was "untenable," because the evidence showed clearly that differences between the schools "constitute unlawful discriminations against pupils of the colored race."

He held that the differences are something beyond the "merely unimportant variations incident to the maintenance of separate establishments."

NOTING THE Virginia law making segregation in education compulsory, he declared:

"The burdens inherent in segregation must be met by the state which maintains the practice."

But cost, he held, is not a factor in determining if discrimination exists.

"Nor can it be said," he added, "that a scholar who is deprived of his due must apply to the administrative authorities and not to the courts for relief.

"An injured person must, of course, show that the state has denied him advantages accorded to others in like situations, but when this is established, his right of access to the court is absolute and complete."

EXAMINATION OF the physical plants showed, he said, that the white school has the best of it, including machine shops, science laboratories, libraries, music rooms, athletic plants, infirmaries and cafeterias. None of the "various extracurricular activities" at the white school are available at the Negro school, he added.

"The failure to provide these opportunities," he went on, "cannot be defended on the ground that their absence is mainly attributed to the size or location of the school."

The appellate court chided school authorities for offering some courses regularly at the white school, but requiring a demand for them before providing them at the Negro school.

"This difference in procedure cannot be sustained," Judge Soper wrote. "It places a burden upon the colored student and deprives him of the opportunity of taking a course of instruction unless he has determined to take it months in advance, whereas the white student may apply at the opening of the session and obtain the desired instruction."

Across the Potomac River from Arlington County, in Washington, the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill last week was still in the Senate's limbo. It is officially scheduled for revival in another two weeks, and in the interim spokesmen for labor and liberal groups, including the CIO, are attempting to persuade Senators to break through the Dixiecrat filibuster and force a vote on the measure on its merits.

Mass. FEPC Strengthened

GOV. Paul A. Dever of Massachusetts has signed a bill changing the name of the State Fair Employment Practices Commission to the State Commission against Discrimination and broadening its powers.

Powers of the SCAD now include enforcement of restrictions against racial and religious discrimination in public housing, hotels, restaurants, resorts and other places of public accommodation, as well as employment.

The new anti-discrimination agency will have authority to intervene for injured parties in instances of alleged discrimination involving places of public accommodation. Under the former law, complainants could seek redress only through court action.

The new commission also is given authority to enter "cease and desist" orders for violation of discrimination or segregation statutes in public housing. Formal orders, however, may be filed only after conciliation efforts fail and a formal hearing is held.

3 Anti-Labor Groups Subpoenaed In Lobby Probe

THREE OF the country's most bitterly anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal, issolationist organizations have been subpoenaed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) to appear before the House lobby investigating committee, of which he is chairman, and explain why they won't disclose their sources of income.

REP. FRANK BUCHANAN (D. Pa.), in the right foreground, is breaking the news to reporters that he has subpoenaed the Committee for Constitutional Government, the Constitutional Educational League and the National Economic Council. Buchanan is chairman of the Housing Lobbying Committee. All three groups refused to give income data.

Peddlers of 'Hate'

Joseph Kamp of the Constitutional Educational League is generally regarded as the nation's No. 1 peddler of "hate" propaganda. One of his pamphlets, used by anti-union employers in the South, charges the CIO is engaged in an attempt to Sovietize the U. S.

Edward A. Rumely of the Committee for Constitutional Government and Merwin K. Hart of the National Economic Council have been attacked frequently by organizations which fight the spread of fascism in this country.

They are the Committee for Constitutional Government, the brain-child of Frank Gannett, reactionary New York State newspaper publisher; the Constitutional Educational League, and the National Economic Council.

Named specifically in the subpoenas were Edward A. Rumley, executive secretary of the Gannett organization and one-time pro-German propagandist; Joseph Kamp, of the Constitutional Education League, who is under sentence to jail for contempt of Congress; and Merwin K. Hart, presiding genius of the NEC and pro-France propagandist.

AT A PRESS conference Buchanan made no bones of his personal distaste for the three organizations, but stressed that he had issued the subpoenas solely because the trio of lobbies refused to answer some of the questions his agents put to them.

Specifically, he said, the three groups denied to his representatives any information which would show who provided financial backing for their activities. Other lobbies probed by the House group have given this information freely, Buchanan said.

Buchanan issued the subpoenas 24 hours after the Committee for Constitutional Government asked the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia to enjoin four employes of the House lobby probe from seeking information about its income.

In the complaint, the CCG pictured itself as a non-profit educational institution deriving most of its income from the sale of books, pamphlets and other literature. It said that the list of purchasers of its publications is a valuable trade secret.

BUCHANAN believes the CCG is the parent of a network of organizations lobbying against labor and the Fair Deal. He thinks the NEC and the Constitutional Educational League are linked to the CCG and believes that investigation of the financial backing of all three will reveal the ties.

All are registered as lobbies. The decision to subpoena them was made a week before the CCG asked for an injunction, it was learned.

"Congress is entitled to know which financial interests are back of attempts to influence public opinion and legislation," Buchanan said.

"These three groups have consistently refused to tell Congress who is behind them. Our committee is going to find out. Edward A. Rumely of the Committee for Constitutional Government, and Joseph Kamp of the Constitutional Educational League have been tried for contempt of Congress in the past for concealing the identity of the money interests back of them.

"Merwin K. Hart of the National Economic Council has joined them in their latest obstruction and defiance of a committee of the Congress. Our committee is going to find out the facts and the people are entitled to know."

Buchanan said that Rumely was convicted after World War I of violating the Trading with the Enemy Act in connection with his purchase of a New York newspaper to spread German propaganda. He was pardoned by President Coolidge after serving only 30 days of his sentence.

In 1938, Buchanan said, Rumely and Sumner Gerard, now also with the CCG, refused to produce records requested by a Senate lobby probe and barely escaped contempt citation.

Six years later Rumely actually was cited for contempt by the House committee on campaign expenditures for failure to produce records, but was acquitted by a jury in 1946 after two trials.

KAMP, BUCHANAN pointed out, is under sentence to serve a prison term for contempt of Congress, having only recently lost his appeal to the Supreme Court.

Buchanan said that only the American Medical Association spent more money lobbying in 1949 than the CCG, which spent $750,000 to the AMA's $1,500,000. However, it makes sure that no single contributions exceed $490 because under the Lobbying Act of 1946, the names of persons contributing $500 or more to a lobby activity must be reported, Buchanan said.

He indicated that the real backers of the CCG would be disclosed only if his committee could learn who purchased CCG literature.

None of the three organizations indorses political candidates, Buchanan observed, but all engage in extensive political activity by "indorsing principles." He said they created straw men such as "state socialism," "socialized medicine," or "socialized housing," then proceeded to knock them down.

He reported that the CCG, at least, was active in the campaign by which Sen. Claude Pepper was defeated in the Florida primary and in the drive against Sen. Frank Graham in the North Carolina primary.

The name of the CCG first came up in the lobby probe several weeks ago when Leo Goodman, director of the CIO housing committee, charged that it financed some of the activities of the real estate lobby. Goodman said the CCG sent out mail and paid for the printing of material attacking rent control and federal housing legislation.

CIO Backs Measure To Aid Some Non-Ferrous Ore Firms

John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Union Councils told the recent Utah state CIO convention at Ogden that unless certain companies of the non-ferrous ore industry get government assistance they will be forced to curtail or suspend operations.

Brophy said the CIO is pressing for passage by Congress of a bill which would stimulate exploration of strategic and critical ores and minerals.

Citing the serious problem of unemployment in these industries, Brophy warned that ghost towns may result in the area if the trend in that direction is not halted.

"The need for ores and metals which would be produced as a result of the proposed legislation is clear," he said. "This is not a matter of subsidizing unneeded plants but a matter of getting out needed production."

Assistant Secy. of Labor John Gibson called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, which he denounced as a disgraceful, prejudiced piece of legislation.

Both Gibson and Brophy extolled Sen. Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah) as a genuine statesman and said he should be reelected in the interests of the entire citizenry.

The convention adopted a resolution urging members of the ousted Intl. Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers to return to the CIO and authorized a telegram to the CIO Community Services Committee asking for immediate assistance for unemployed metal miners in Park City, Utah, and other areas.

Other resolutions passed by the convention:

Urged local CIO unions to send delegates to educational conferences sponsored by the CIO and its affiliated unions.

Called for support of the bill sponsored by Rep. Reva Bosone (D., Utah) which would revive the Civilian Conservation Corps as a means of furnishing employment for young people and protecting land and forest resources.

Directed the council's executive committee to make a study aimed at improving the workmen's compensation and occupational disease act.

Food Chain Sells Less, Earns More

Sales for the first quarter dropped almost $3 million compared with the last quarter of 1949, but net profits went up almost $1 million for the General Foods Corp. and subsidiaries. Profits were $8,317,654 against $7,593,797 last quarter; sales were down from $127,802,860 to $124,106,616.

House Unit To Probe Likely Free Press Curb

THE CHANCES of free, competitive daily newspapers being maintained or established in most American cities depend to a large extent on an ample supply of the paper on which they're printed.

To find out whether or not the production of newsprint is concentrated in a few hands is the aim of the House Monopoly Investigating Committee, in hearings starting June 19.

Much of the ground work for the probe has already been laid in a thorough study financed in 1948 by the CIO Newspaper Guild, which shows that "the newsprint squeeze had direct effect on a free, competitive press," that there is a world shortage of newsprint, that production is often controlled by giant newspapers which own paper mills, and that newsprint producers are reaping huge profits.

"The combination of short supply and high price threatens to drive more newspapers out of business, and prevents the establishment of new papers," according to the Guild's summary of its findings, "thus depriving the public of that divergence of opinion and viewpoint so necessary to the maintenance of a healthy, democratic public opinion."

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N.Y.) is chairman of the monopoly investigation. LPA

$140 Pension Likely

A pension that will come to $140 monthly if Congress passes pending social security legislation was won by 7000 members of CIO United Auto Workers at the Budd Company at Detroit. A similar plan has been adopted at the Budd plants in Philadelphia. Employes must work only 1600 hours a year for each year of pension credit.

Packinghouse Union Seeks 40-Hours' Pay For 30 Hours, Backs CIO's Anti-Red Policy

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE CIO United Packinghouse Workers convention last week straightened out some serious internal problems, voted full support for national CIO policy, and set a course to win sweeping economic gains from the profit-heavy meat packing industry.

The union, which has set a goal of 40 hours' pay for 30 hours' work, voted enthusiastic indorsement of demands for a guarantee of $50 a week minimum—with corresponding raises for more skilled occupations.

Wilson Pact IS Issue

The Packinghouse union's effort to win a fair contract at Wilson & Co. is "the single most important issue facing our union," Pres. Ralph Helstein told the UPWA convention.

The company, he said, has been trying to win the union's consent for "super-seniority" for strikebreakers imported during the 1948 walkout, but the UPWA has refused any such demand.

The "Don't Buy Wilson" campaign is being intensified, Helstein said, and—thanks to cooperation from CIO, other unions and the public—"whole areas on the eastern coast today no longer have Wilson products available."

At the same time, the Packinghouse Workers voted to carry on their "Don't Buy Wilson" campaign until the company agrees to bargain once more with the union in good faith. Wilson, one of the Big Four companies, broke off contract relations with the UPWA after the 1948 strike.

But delegates who poured into the Hotel Nicollet in Minneapolis from all sections of the United States and Canada were equally concerned with internal problems which have been besetting the union for more than a year.

When the convention finally adjourned on May 28, delegates had taken these actions:

1 Re-elected—without opposition—Pres. Ralph Helstein and Secy.-Treas. Lewis Clarke.

2 Voted to seat the delegates of Local 167—at the Swift plant in South St. Paul, Minn. The local had previously been suspended by the UPWA executive board on charges of "disruptive activities against the leadership."

3 Approved a resolution giving wholehearted support to the national CIO and indorsing its program—including the CIO's campaign to expel unions found to be Communist-dominated.

One proposed constitutional amendment that never reached the floor—though it was a subject of conversation in and out of the convention—called for a ban on Communists and Fascists as union officers or members of the staff.

But Pres. Helstein, in the course of a detailed keynote speech, voiced his opposition to the suggested amendment.

He said "there are delegates here who honestly believe that an amendment to our constitution is necessary." But others, he charged, are using a "McCarthy technique" and they "constantly push for repressive constitutional amendments that they know are unnecessary."

Any yielding on the part of his administration, Helstein said, would "reflect a lack of faith in our membership and confidence in its judgment."

THE resolution finally adopted by the delegates in support of CIO policy brought an enthusiastic round of applause. Another convention statement hailed the union's success in defending itself against those who "seek to divide us, either from within or without."

The CIO-policy resolution was sharply criticized by some left-wingers in the convention.

Herbert March, Communist Party member and delegate from the Chicago Armour local, had bitter words for CIO policies, and he denied that unions expelled by the CIO were in fact Communist-dominated.

But the overwhelming majority of the convention showed where they stood when they gave CIO Pres. Philip Murray an enthusiastic reception.

Murray, making his first appearance before a convention of the union, praised the UPWA's "substantial victories" and said it is entitled to "great credit" for its comeback from the 1948 strike.

He said that the "successful trade union is the one that is not subservient to anyone — employers or politicians. It must retain its independence."

But the Communist bloc within the CIO, Murray recalled, had during the post-war years "continued to vote for Russia, for communism—against their own unions and their own country."

He described Communist union leaders as "vicious rascals, a band of international pirates" and a "virus that contaminates the body politic. To hell with them."

IN THE expelled United Electrical Workers, Murray went on, "the hard-bitten hard core" of Communists had "reached their lowest level of deviltry. But the people tore that hard core to shreds."

In contrast, Murray had warm words of praise for Pres. Helstein of the Packinghouse union.

He talked of the "splendid spirit of cooperation your president has afforded me," and mentioned that Helstein had always supported CIO policies as a member of the CIO. "Ralph is deserving of compliments," Murray said.

Two other CIO speakers addressed the convention: Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and PAC Director Jack Kroll.

Haywood added his words to those of Pres. Murray in criticizing Communist tactics and objectives in the American labor movement, and voiced support of the Packinghouse Workers.

KROLL CALLED on the delegates to help defeat the "vicious coalition" of Dixiecrats and Republicans in Congress.

Helstein reported to the convention that the union had substantially recovered from the effects of the bitter 1948 strike and had gone ahead to reach new gains.

He noted that for the first time in the industry's history, the union has won "the principle of severance pay for people thrown out of work as a result of the discontinuance of a unit or a department or company."

The Armour contract, he added, paved the way for demands for a 35-hour work week, since it provides a guarantee of 36 hours of wages in five days for any person called to his job on the first day of a work week.

ADDED protection for packinghouse workers is sorely needed, Helstein said. In October 1949, for instance, the speed-up brought a 4.2% increase in meat production, a 2% cut in average weekly hours of work, and a 2.7% cut in weekly earnings.

"In February, 1950," Helstein reported, "real wages — that is, wages reflecting the change in the cost of living—have gone down a dollar per week as compared with February, 1947."

"Unemployment, either permanent or for many months each year, has become a standing problem of the worker" in the meat packing industry, the convention declared in a resolution. It called for higher unemployment benefit payments, more adequate relief, public works projects, and establishment of the 30-hour week.

In the convention elections, Vice-Presidents Fred Dowling and Russell Lasley were re-elected. A. T. Stephens, director of organization, was elected a vice-president to succeed Frank Ellis, who retired on grounds of health.

CONVENTION GUEST: CIO Pres. Philip Murray gets a warm greeting at the United Packinghouse Workers convention in Minneapolis from Pres. Ralph Helstein (left). Helstein, who was elected without opposition, was warmly praised by Murray for his leadership of the packers union.

PIN A BADGE ON ME: Youngest guest of the United Packinghouse Workers got his guest badge directly from Secy.-Treas. Lewis Clarke. Appropriately enough, junior got the badge in front of an Amalgamated Clothing Workers union label exhibit. Slogan: "Be a Right Guy."

Minnesota's Twin Cities Greet Murray

MINNEAPOLIS and St. Paul were genial, warm-hearted hosts to the president of the CIO during his visit to Minnesota's twin cities on May 25-27.

Mayor Eric Hoyer of Minneapolis and Mayor Edward Delaney of St. Paul issued a joint proclamation extending their welcome to Philip Murray as head of an organization that "strives constantly for the betterment of the lot of all members of all communities, regardless of race, color, creed, religion or national origin."

Murray had a busy time of it during his visit to the twin cities.

He addressed the convention of the Packinghouse Workers; was guest of honor at a Philip Murray Day banquet attended by a thousand CIO members and their friends; was main speaker at a state CIO PAC "Kick-Off Rally" in the Minneapolis Armory, and addressed a district convention of the United Steelworkers in St. Paul.

SANDWICHED in between these four speaking engagements in a 36-hour period, the CIO president met with Minneapolis and St. Paul reporters, and conferred with labor and civic leaders from the area.

Murray's visit came just after announcements of two big union victories—the UAW's new pension-wage increase pact with General Motors, and the IUE's smashing NLRB election victory at General Electric.

He hailed the GM pact as "very good" and said it showed GM recognizes the need for "stability and more constructive labor-management relations."

Speaking of the CIO victory at General Electric, Murray said: "In view of the workers' attitude toward communism, as expressed in that election, the UE ought to give up and leave the IUE-CIO to represent the people at General Electric in collective bargaining."

At the CIO banquet, Murray renewed his plea for labor unity, and for united action by labor with farmers and small businessmen to advance the country's general welfare.

"Union leaders should set aside their animosities and concentrate on serving the common people," Murray said in his discussion of labor unity. Coordinated political action and legislative activities will benefit all workers, he predicted.

AT THE PAC rally, attended by over 1500 persons in the Minneapolis Armory, Murray reminded workers that "a ballot is the most precious heritage a nation gives to its people. . . .

"The Old Guard Republicans are just as greedy in May, 1950, as they were in May, 1932. The CIO-PAC doesn't want these economic despots back in power."

Murray praised Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D.) of Minnesota and Minnesota's liberal Congressmen (Reps. Blatnick, Wier and McCarthy were on the speaker's stand).

He hailed Sen. Humphrey as a "profound thinker, a great statesman . . . who speaks the language of the farmer or the fellow on the iron ore range, who speaks for workers and small businessmen."

Cowan To Unions And Councils:

Letters From Back Home Needed To Save Rent Control

"ONLY BY A deluge of letters from back home will it be possible to offset the influence of the real estate lobby which opposes any further extension of rent control," declared CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan June 1 in a letter to all regional directors, national unions and councils.

Cowan's frank appeal for back-home pressure for rent control extension came as Congress continued to hesitate and delay, and the June 30 date on which the present law expires draws relentlessly nearer.

The House Banking Committee approved an unsatisfactory "compromise" law which the House will not consider till after June 12—and the Senate Banking Committee stalled till June 2 and then voted out the "compromise" 8-5. The Senate may consider the bill this week.

THE BILL, which directly affects the living standards of some 30 million Americans, is heading for the last-minute rush treatment as slowly as the rent control opponents can get it there.

"It is urgent that Senators and Congressmen hear at once from our affiliated units, from our individual members, their families and friends, in support of an outright one-year extension of federal rent control," Cowan said.

Enclosed with the June message was a copy of Cowan's letter of May 29, addressed to Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas (D. Ill.) and House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D. Mass.), which was also sent to every member of Congress.

In that letter, Cowan said that "less than 30 days remain for Congress to provide protection against unwarranted and insupportable increases in rents for millions of families in localities which still need and wish to retain federal rent control.

"COMMITTEES of Congress have investigated and reported the severe scarcity that exists in housing accommodations below the luxury level. Habitable places for rent at rents which ordinary families can pay are not to be had. Families with children are particularly up against it.

"Low-income and middle-income families, especially families with children, will be the chief victims if Congress fails to act. This has been proven by experience in those cities which removed rent control permanently.

"Systematic falsification by real estate interests of the record of evictions and rent gouging in those cities cannot be relied upon by members of Congress as their justification for permitting those interests to increase and intensify their extortions."

The "compromise" bill approved by the House committee ends federal rent control Dec. 31, 1950, except in those areas whose governing bodies vote before that time to continue it. In CIO's opinion this adds an unnecessary sixth way to the five already existing methods by which communities and states can get out from under rent controls.

And, as CIO has repeatedly pointed out, the difficulties of securing legislative action or initiating and completing a referendum about something that has not yet happened are huge, and are well-known to those who propose this law.

Furthermore, CIO says, there is no way presently provided for communities to get themselves back under rent control. The very least Congress can do is to make it a "two-way street."

AT PRESENT, Tighe Woods, head of the Office of the Housing Administrator, can put controls back on his own motion, but only in communities he has decontrolled himself. If the decontrol was by "local option" there is nothing he can do about it.

He has granted six petitions for decontrol and nobody knows how many more would have been presented if the law actually had provided a "two-way street." The "one-way" aspect of the present law makes it easy for anti-control Congressmen, such as Rep. Cole (R. Kans.) to claim that nobody wants recontrol. The truth is that people know that, by and large, they can't get it.

(Asked by Leo Goodman, director of the CIO Housing Committee, whether the national increase in installment debt from $3 billion to $19 billion did not indicate that people were living beyond their means, Cole replied that he believed it indicated that on the contrary, people were "purchasing beyond the necessities of life because many of them are not paying the amount of rent that they should pay." And in a second breath he added that it was unfair to give rent control to some people who "need it" without giving it to everybody.)

If The Break Comes

Dallas' Shocking Story: Complaining Tenants Evicted

DURING THE House Banking Committee hearings on extension of rent control, Rep. Cole (R. Kan.) made the following statement:

"There has been no trouble in decontrolled cities — there have been no complaints."

Tighe Woods, administrator of the rent control program, who was on the stand, said one reason for tenant silence was fear of retaliation. In Texas, for instance, there is a three-day eviction law, he said, under which a landlord can have a family out on the streets in a trumped-up pretext, on just three days' notice.

The family can sue, of course, but in the meantime must find a new home. Woods said that naturally, few Texans would have the courage to complain under those circumstances.

"RETALIATION might be true in the case of one or two or a few," Cole replied. "But I doubt if it would prevent such a powerful organization as the CIO in Dallas bringing out a protest arising from their membership, if it really occurred."

"What good would it do," Woods asked, "for a tenant to complain to the CIO? It can't help him get in off the street. The law says you are out, and you are out forever."

"I am merely saying there is no complaint," said Cole.

Just to set Rep. Cole and others like him straight, the CIO News herewith presents part of the report of the CIO Regional Office in Dallas, of which Cole was well aware when he made that statement. Cole knew about it because a copy of the report had been sent to the Capitol for his personal attention. The Dallas City Council voted local option decontrol last June.

★ ★ ★

THE REPORT:

"The public hearings held by the City Council of Dallas in June, 1949, when it made its finding of facts that no housing shortage existed in Dallas, was a circus, held at 2 p.m. when no tenants were able to attend . . . No investigation of any kind was conducted.

"The ordinance declaring there to be no housing shortage also created a committee to handle any complaints which might arise. This committee consisted of the president of the Mortgage Bankers Association, the president of the Apartment Owners Association, and the chairman of the Dallas Real Estate Board.

"A request by tenants and labor organizations for representation on this committee was ignored.

"THE CHAIRMAN of the committee announced that any complaints received by the group would be presented to the landlord for explanation, but that the landlord now had control over his property and the committee could only advise.

"Tenants were told by the city manager that control of evictions was in the hands of the justices of the peace and the city could have no part in it.

"The sharp increase in the number of eviction suits was given publicity, and complainants who had no other recourse (than newspaper publicity) requested that their names be with-held. When it became apparent that the city committee would do nothing and that no action could be secured from Congress in time to prevent evictions, complainants were cowed into complete silence.

"The City Council of Dallas was elected in April, 1949, securing 15,000 votes out of the 90,000 eligible to vote. The issue of rent control was not discussed with the people . . . The next city election occurs in 1951.

"TENANTS had no way to act to protect their interests after complaints were answered with evictions. The group of citizens on whom decontrol falls heaviest . . . possessed neither the money, the organization or the political power to effectively protest.

"Dallas is a low-wage city in which the average worker makes less than $45 weekly.

"We have stated repeatedly and we now make the charge once more that the many complaints filed by the labor, veterans' and tenants' committees in Dallas charging rent gouging were ignored by the real estate men's committee which the mayor set up to investigate itself . . . Our cases showed rent increases ranging up to 380%.

"More than half the rent raises we reported called for increases of 60% and more. One in five exceeded 100%.

"Along with the rent increases, an increasing number of tenants drew eviction notices. A total of 69 eviction actions reached the four justices of the peace courts in the first week after decontrol.

"One tenant drew an immediate 92% boost ($26 to $50 a month) and an order to vacate in 30 days. Eviction notices fell on a blind Negro woman and a family with six children with the youngest only eight weeks old.

"ALL TYPES OF accommodations were affected by rent increases, An old couple, living on a pension of $82, drew a 122% increase ($13.50 to $30.00). Rents were also raised on apartment units rented for $75.00 and up. The top dollar increase was where a landlord raised the $41.60 legal rent to $200 a month. Rents also went up on run-down tenements, rooms in rooming houses, efficiency apartments and duplexes.

"In one group of 13 rent houses, each with only three rooms and no bath, the Negro tenants drew an 188% increase, from the former legal rent of $4.16 weekly to $12.00 weekly.

"The rent boosts also hit the tenants who had previously paid above-ceiling rents. One tenant had been paying $25 monthly above the legal maximum of $35.00. After decontrol, the landlord jumped the rent to $100. In another case, the tenant had been paying $30 for a place supposed to rent for $20. The new rent is $55."

No complaint, huh, Mr. Cole?

"Ready?"

UAW Tool & Die Workers Win Industry Pensions In Detroit

THE CIO AUTO Workers have signed an area-wide pension pact for more than 4000 workers in 70 tool and die plants in Detroit, setting up a common pension trust fund enabling workers to move between plants while enjoying full protection.

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther called the contract "an answer to those who have falsely charged that it is impossible or unreasonable for the smaller plants to pool their resources and work out an equitable pension plan for the security of their workers."

The contract covers Locals 155 and 157. It includes medical-hospital and insurance benefits, and is the first area-wide plan in the automotive industry. The employers will pay in 8c for each hour worked by each employe. Pensions will be $100 a month, including social security, at 65, but there is no compulsory retirement age.

Other tool and die companies are eligible to join and participate in the plan, which is jointly administered with an impartial chairman.

Service credit is not interrupted if a worker quits or is fired, provided he returns to work within a year. Eligibility for laid-off workers continues for three years. Workers may retire at 60 with the consent of the employer, with proportional benefits. Workers may retire after 25 years, at 55, for permanent disability at $50 a month.

If social security benefits are increased, the union and employers will set up a joint committee to recommend improvements in the pension plan. LPA.

Mich. Legislature Passes Bill To Regulate Auto Financing

Only the signature of Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan is needed to enact into law a bill which will regulate interest rates charged by auto finance companies. The measure was passed during the closing days of the special state legislative session.

Main provisions of the bill are: Auto dealers, finance companies and banks engaged in the auto finance business must be licensed by the State Banking Dept.

Maximum interest rates will be 6, 9 and 12%, depending upon the age of the car.

All hidden finance charges are prohibited and contracts must specify all charges made for the transaction.

The buyer is protected against unreasonable seizure and sale of his car if payments are not met.

Insurance charges must be listed, and the type of coverage must be specified.

A maximum of $30 is placed on rebates by the finance companies to auto dealers.

Installment buyers will receive a rebate in case a contract is paid up in advance of the maturity date. LPA

Ain't Parting Sweet Sorrow?

TWO ANTI-UNIONISTS came to a parting of the ways in Washington last week, amidst some of the most sentimental language yet heard in a city well addicted to the flossy phrase.

The occasion was the resignation of Joseph Wells, Labor Board associate general counsel, who is going into practice in South Carolina.

Wells' letter of resignation to NLRB General Counsel Robert Denham described him "among the select group of pioneers who seek to end chaos in the relations between labor and management.

"A monument to your courage and integrity is the fact that you have applied those principles in the performance of your duties in spite of militant pressures from all sides by individuals who would trade the liberty and welfare of our nation for a momentary advantage."

(Wells was presumably referring to leaders of the host of unions which have called for Denham's removal from office on grounds that he is deeply biased against organized labor.)

Denham, who doesn't get too many compliments, replied in kind to Wells.

He said the retiring government lawyer has a knowledge of the Taft-Hartley Act and its effectiveness which has never "been exceeded by anyone whom I have known during the years I have been working on the business of the Board . . ."

"All of us are going to miss you terribly," said Denham.

Health Security Department Plan Sent Congress By Truman

PRES. TRUMAN sent a brand new, streamlined proposal to Congress May 31 for a new executive Dept. of Health, Education and Security.

The President said it met the principal objections to the one he submitted last year which was disapproved by the Senate, although he did not agree with the objections.

The proposal is offered as Reorganization Plan 27 in line with recommendations of the Hoover Commission. Under it all agencies of the Federal Security Agency, together with their functions, records, property, personnel and unexpended balances, would be transferred to the new department. It would be headed by a secretary of cabinet rank who would assume the functions of the present Federal Security Administrator. There would be an under secretary and an assistant secretary.

The offices of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service and the Commissioner of Education would be transferred intact to the new department, and those holding the posts would report directly to the secretary, as would the Commissioner of Social Security.

At the same time, the Federal Security Administration would be abolished. The plan takes effect automatically in 60 days unless voted down by one house of Congress.

TRUMAN said last year's plan was criticized because it subordinated professional opinion in health and education to non-professional domination. He asserted that providing for direct reports to the Secretary by the Surgeon General and the Education Commissioner would eliminate such criticism.

"It is unnecessary to recite again the considerations which make the creation of such a department desirable," the President told Congress.

"As I pointed out in my message transmitting Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1949, such action has repeatedly been recommended by my predecessors and myself, as well as by others who have studied our government organization. The scope and importance of the functions of the Federal Security Agency plainly warrant departmental status. I feel that there should be no further delay in effecting this essential reorganization." NLRB Upholds Right To Picket Ship Even While In Drydock

IT'S PERFECTLY legal for a seamen's union to picket a shipyard where a ship under repair is the subject of a primary dispute.

Moreover, the fact that the ship flies a foreign flag is no bar to picketing provided the dispute is genuine. There is only one proviso: the ship's crew must be aboard. Otherwise the picketing would constitute a secondary boycott.

That's the way a trial examiner for the Natl. Labor Relations Board ruled May 31 in a case involving the AFL Sailors Union of the Pacific, Moore Drydock Co. and the SS Phopho, a Panamanian flag freighter belonging to the Compania Maritima Samsoc, Ltda., S. A., most of whose stock is owned by Greeks.

If the decision stands, it may greatly strengthen the hand of the American and European unions of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation who are pressing for the return to their original flags of ships transferred to Panamanian registry. The unions planned an around-the-world boycott of Panamanian vessels.

THE "PHOPHO beef" began in 1949 when the Kaiser Gypsum Co. signed a six-year contract with Samsoc for the delivery of gypsum from an island off Mexico to California ports.

The SUP organized the Phopho crew and petitioned the NLRB for a bargaining election. The San Francisco regional director turned down the petition on the ground that the NLRB had no jurisdiction over a foreign ship. The board sustained him.

When the Phopho entered the Moore yard for repairs the SUP, unable to get inside Moore's premises, picketed outside the shipyard. Moore then complained to the NLRB. The office of board General Counsel Robert N. Denham got an injunction against the union and issued charges, contending the SUP violated the secondary boycott ban.

Examiner Arthur Leff said the SUP got as close to the vessel as possible, did not ask Moore's employes to stop work other than on the Phopho itself, and had a legitimate interest in publicizing its demand for recognition and improvements from Samsoc.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Pres. Murray and the writer addressed the Convention of the United Packinghouse Workers which was held May 25-28. Pres. Murray was enthusiastically received and his attack upon the Communists was vigorously applauded. The writer, in addressing the members of the Packinghouse Workers, pointed out the attempts of the Communists to divide the CIO by lies and every other conceivable means. Pres. Ralph Helstein and Sec.-Treas. Lewis Clark were returned to office by the membership who showed their support for this fine leadership in real American trade-unionism.

From Minneapolis, the writer proceeded to Los Angeles, Cal., where preparations have been under way for the California State Industrial Union Council convention to be held June 3-5, in Long Beach, Cal.

The IUE-CIO has been piling victory on top of victory over the discredited UE, the latest being the decisive victory in the General Electric elections. The claim of the UE that it represents the majority of the workers has been thoroughly exploded. In view of that union's repeated defeats the thing for UE to do is withdraw entirely, and let the remaining workers it represents come under the trade union leadership of the IUE. Knowing the UE leadership as I do, however, I doubt if the UE will undertake such a move.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the IUE Administrative Chairman Carey, reports the following IUE-CIO election victories: American Transformer Co., Newark, N. J., IUE 94, UE 19, no union 13; General Instrument Corp., Elizabeth, N. J., IUE 744, no union 26, UE withdrew; P. R. Mallory & Co., Inc., North Tarrytown, N. Y., IUE 207, no union 0, UE withdrew; Unipress, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 35, no union 0, UE withdrew; Champan Valve, Indian Orchard, Mass., IUE 794, UE 298, no union 24.

In a union shop election held at the Conmar Products, Newark, N. J., the workers voted for the IUE by a vote of 644 yes to 52 no, and at Hillburn Electronics, Long Island City, N. Y., 38 yes, 0 no.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a representation election held at the Rockford Brick and Tile Co., Rockford, Iowa, the Federation of Glass Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers of America were victorious by a vote of 35 for FGCSSWA-CIO; 10 for no union. Intl. Rep. Gene Minshall conducted the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that in a representation election held at the Rush Mfg. Co., Ft. Smith, Ark., the workers voted for the United Furniture Workers by the following vote: UFWA-CIO 40; UIU-AFL 22; challenged 22; void 1. This campaign was conducted by Intl. Rep. Walter L. Carson.

CIO Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election held at Valley Forge Cement Co., West Conshohocken, Pa., the Gas, Coke, and Chemical Workers-CIO were victorious by a vote of 136 for GCCW-CIO and 18 for the AFL. Intl. Rep. Joseph Wright conducted this campaign. CIO Local Industrial Union 1711 won a union shop election at the American Preserve Co., Philadelphia, Pa., by a vote of 139 for union shop and 5 against.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following representation election victories in Illinois: Hately Brothers Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible, 34, United Packinghouse Workers-CIO 28, against 1, challenged 1; Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., Lemont, Ill., eligible 29, Oil Workers International Union-CIO 21, against 2, challenged 6; Py-O-My Co., Division Kitchen Arts Foods, Chicago, Ill., Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union-CIO 51, no union 6.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci reports that in a representation election held at the Utah Valley Hospital, Provo, Utah, the Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee-CIO was victorious by a vote of 45 to 2 for no union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Carmichael reports that in a representation election held at the Standard Finish Co., Peabody, Mass., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the CIO over the AFL.

The Newspaper Guild of New York maintained a perfect record in NLRB union security elections by gaining its fourth successive triumph when editorial and commercial employes of the New York Post voted 311 to 9 in favor of the Guild shop.

CIO Natl. Rep. George DeNucci reports that an agreement covering all the employes of the four bakeries of Lajas, Puerto Rico, was signed last week and marked a milestone in organization of these workers. The contract signed is for one year and it gained a 10% wage increase, union shop and check-off, vacations with pay and sick leave. The negotiations was carried through by Ramon Martinez, president of the Bakery Workers Union CGT-CIO.

25 Jobless Units Set Up In Canada

The Canadian National Federation of Unemployed Workers, sponsored by the Canadian Congress of Labour, has units in 25 centers ranging from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Vancouver, B. C., Natl. Dir. J. McKenzie reported at a recent meeting of the administrative committee in Montreal.

The federation's main goal is full employment and its program is directed primarily to efforts to find jobs. Meantime it has provided extensive service to the jobless in obtaining the assistance of various local welfare agencies.

Is 'A Pension For Everybody' New GOP Line?

AS THE time draws near for a Senate vote on the improved Social Security bill, a strange political phenomenon has developed up on Capitol Hill.

Some of the same men who shout most loudly about economy in government, and who are pushing the hardest for appropriations cuts, have suddenly put on Santa Claus costumes and gone to bat for universal, flat-rate, federally-financed old-age pensions for everybody. Of course that would mean scrapping the present system first.

The leader of this school of thought in the Senate is Sen. Harry P. Cain (R. Wash). More cautiously, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.) and Sen. Hugh Butler (R. Neb.) are following along. The only equitable system, they say, is minimum old-age insurance for everybody. Emphasis on minimum.

TAKING advantage of this sentiment, the Townsend-planners, who would give everybody over 60 at least $145 a month and finance it out of taxes, are pushing for all they're worth for their bill, and are within 21 of getting enough signatures on a petition to force House consideration of their measure.

Proposals have been made to the Senate Finance Committee that the present old-age and survivors' program be scrapped in favor of $30 a month for everybody. This is supported in the House by Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.)

Cain has announced he will move to recommit the Senate social security bill when it reaches the floor, probably this week, for "further study," and has indicated he supports the flat-pensions-for-everybody philosophy. There's nothing to do with the present system, Cain and the rest say, except scrap it. No use trying to patch it up.

Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve, head of the CIO Social Security Commitee, commenting to the Senate committee on this approach to the problem said:

"The CIO is also in favor of adequate pensions for all. But we are firmly convinced that the only realistic path to this goal is expanding and improving the present social security system.

"WE RECOGNIZE that millions have reached retirement age without being eligible for federal pensions . . . These are part of the growing pains of social security . . . But they are not an excuse for abandoning the social security program itself . . .

"I have read about testimony before your committee favoring a flat benefit of $25 to $30 a month. That's not a pension, it's a parody. Yet even paying this amount to the 11 million Americans over the age of 65 would cost more than $3 billion a year. (The present program is self-financing.)

"The conservatives who have spoken favorably of flat-rate pensions are not among those who are willing to pump additional billions into the federal system. We suspect their real aim is to break down the whole social security program."

Elizabeth Wickenden, Washington representative of the American Public Welfare Association, had even more pungent comments to make.

"The equity rights which millions of workers built up in good faith through their contributions over the years would be dissipated" by failure to retain the present system, she said.

"In the second place, hope for security through a system of flat-grant, universal pensions for the aged is a cruel delusion which could only lead to a levelling downward of benefits and the ultimate imposition of a means test," she added.

"The present social security system is complex primarily because of the necessity of relating retirement income to previous earnings. A flat pension system is virtually certain to level off somewhere below the country's lowest standard of living.

"The second weakness of a flat pension system is the fact that lacking an equity factor it would inevitably be subject to downward economy pressures implicit in every program involving an annual appropriation . . . Thus in seeking to get away from the present program . . . the country might well end up with a federal old age relief program operating at the lowest level."

The Senate committee bill, reported out a fortnight ago, was weaker in several important respects that HR 6000, the measure approved by the House in the first session of the 81st Congress. Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D. Ill.) and Majority Whip Francis J. Myers (D. Pa.) have announced they will fight for at least four liberalizing amendments on the floor.

CIO Asks FCC To Tune Out Trolley, Bus Radio

THE FREE American people should not be made captives of "forced" radio listening by advertisers or anyone else, the CIO told the government last week.

It asked the Federal Communications Commission to rule that radio receivers on streetcars and buses are "contrary to the public interest" and in violation of FCC rules.

Also called for was a hearing on the application of Station WWDC-FM in Washington for renewal of its broadcasting license. WWDC-FM programs are piped into streetcars and buses in the nation's capital through a mechanism which makes the music soft and the commercials loud.

Several thousand CIO members in Washington are "subjected against their will to transit radio" every time they board a bus or car, the CIO petition charged.

IT WAS FILED by Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Thomas Harris, CIO associate general counsel; and Irving Levy, auto union general counsel.

"If transit radio's sordid exploitation of a captive audience for commercial gain is permitted, it is but a step to forced listening to political propaganda," it said.

A number of CIO local unions in the mid-west, particularly Wisconsin and Illinois, have already complained that union members are being treated as a captive audience while at work, and are being forced to listen, on company time, to thinly disguised attacks on the principles of free unionism and the Fair Deal.

The CIO brief charged that Transit Radio, Inc., an organization owned by a number of radio stations and newspapers, is operating at present, in 14 cities: St. Louis, Washington, Cincinnati, Houston, Kansas City, Tacoma, Wash.; Worcester, Mass.; Des Moines,; Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Huntington, W. Va.; Topeka, Kan.; Covington, Ky.; Evansville, Ind.; Allentown, Pa., and Bradbury Heights, Md.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 11 million.	Passed House last session. Senate to consider soon. CIO has asked further improvements.	Ask Senators to accept and strengthen HR 6000.
Rent Control Renewal S 3181	Extends rent control one year to June 30, 1951, allows local option recontrol.	Senate to act soon, probably this week. House to act on or after June 12.	Ask members of both Houses to vote full extension, accept no compromise.
Federal Aid to Education S 246	Provides over $300 million aid to states for schools; gives states broad power to supervise use of funds.	Bill, approved by CIO, has passed Senate. House Labor Comm. deadlocked over religious quarrel involving school buses.	Ask members of House Labor Comm. to approve Senate bill.
School Construction Bill S. 2317 HR 5718	Provides emergency U.S. aid to states to build schools and survey school needs.	Senate passed bill. House bill, in Labor Comm., contains long-range building program not contained in Senate version.	Ask House Labor Committee members to approve.
FEPC S 1728 HR 4453	Senate bill would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	House voted substitute bill without enforcement teeth. Senate filibuster against consideration of bill will be resumed in June.	Ask Senators to vote for S 1728 without weakening amendments, and to fight filibuster.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.

Protection Is Urged For Alaska Natives

A STRONG protest against eliminating from the tentative draft of the Alaska statehood bill provisions protecting the rights of Indians and other natives has been sent all members of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs by Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

The Indians retain rights in land, timber, minerals and other natural resources under treaties with U. S. In practically every case in the past where a new state has been set up, Congress included in the enabling legislation a clause specifically reserving these rights to the federal government and the Indians and making certain they could not be abrogated by the new state. This is the safeguard that has been stricken from the Alaska bill in its present form.

The Indians, Aleuts, Eskimos and other natives of the territory included within the proposed boundaries of Alaska are about equal in number to the white men—some 30,000. They have important land and timber rights which the CIO feels should be fully protected in view of the long record of exploitation of the original inhabitants of the U. S.

The committee, of which Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) is chairman, is expected to complete its study of the legislation this week and to take action probably June 12. Smith urged it to restore the deleted portion of the draft.

Less Taxation Of Rich Asked By Brookings

THE BROOKINGS Institution, echoing the wishes of the corporations, called last week for a tax reduction program for the wealthy.

It proposed that taxes on corporations and individuals in the higer income brackets be slashed as an incentive to increased capital expenditures—and at the same time branded as "untenable" any sharp cut in sales or excise taxes.

The institution asserted that the government needs the income they produce and they don't have much effect on business anyway. Sales and excise taxes bear heaviest on the lower-income groups.

The institution wants the wealthy to have a slice of the tax cake now and more of it later—a "moderate" cut at present, a bigger one when government finances get better.

SPECIFICALLY, the institution proposes that about 17% of the present 38% corporation tax be earmarked as a tax on dividends upon which stockholders would not have to pay any additional levy; and that the remaining 21% be cut down as rapidly as possible to perhaps 10%. It also was proposed that the present tax on high personal incomes—the maximum is 82%—be cut promptly to 60% and later to no more than 50%.

The report was prepared for the institution by Lewis H. Kimmel, economist, and was based on a questionnaire to businesses. One thing he didn't mention was that corporation holdings of cash and U. S. securities increased by $3 billion in 1949 but despite this hoard capital investment was lower than in 1948.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 12, 1950 No. 24

IT'S THEIR RAILROAD NOW: Members of the Railroad Workers of Puerto Rico, an affiliate of the General Confederation of Workers of Puerto Rico-CIO, celebrate their acquisition of the Puerto Rico Railroad. They obtained ownership of the railroad as a result of nine years of litigation over back pay. The case was carried to the U. S. Supreme Court by Ernest Ramos Antonini, legal adviser to the Puerto Rico Confederation. (See Page 10).

Murray Names Unity Group

Pres. Philip Murray at last week's meeting of the CIO executive officers and vice presidents chose the members of the committee to carry on talks with the AFL on the CIO porposals for labor unity.

The meeting of the top CIO officers also called for a year's extension of rent control and for local option to remove or reinstate controls within the year; for steps to alleviate unemployment, and for enactment of a strong Social Security Bill.

To implement the action on rent control, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan sent a letter to CIO affiliates and regional directors urging them to have letters sent to Senators and Congressmen. (See stories on Page 3.)

DEFIES CONGRESS? Dr. Edward A. Rumely (above), executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, last week refused to give the House Lobby Investigating Committee information it asked. The committee will decide later whether to bring contempt proceedings against Rumely and Joseph P. Kamp, executive vice chairman of the Constitutional Education League, who also refused to turn over information. Both organizations are intensely anti-labor. (See Page 11.)

UFWA Backs CIO Policy

The United Furniture Workers of America, in convention in Chicago last week, voted 25,524 to 6307 to stay in the CIO and be loyal to its policies.

The crucial vote came on resolutions. The winning one was sponsored by Pres. Morris Pizer. The other resolution was backed by the left-wing leaders including Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow and Director of Organization Ernest Marsh, and was an invitation to the CIO to expel the union or let it stay in the CIO on its own terms.

UFWA was one of the unions slated to be given a hearing before a CIO trial board on a charge of following the Communist Party line. It was the only one in which right wingers went to bat —and won easily. (See Page 7.)

Supreme Court Strikes 3 Blows At Segregation

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or the immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

—First paragraph of the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

THE SUPREME Court, in three unanimous decisions, struck blows at segregation of Negroes last week.

In two of the cases involving universities, the court based its decisions on the section of the 14th Amendment quoted above, and in the third case it found that segregation in a railroad dining car violated the Interstate Commerce Act.

The court upheld the position of the CIO in one of the cases. General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg had filed a "friend of the court" brief on the case of G. W. McLaurin.

In that case the court held that Oklahoma could not make McLaurin, a graduate student, sit apart from white students at the Univ. of Oklahoma and be separated in other instances.

He holds a master's degree and sought one as a Doctor of Education. At first he was denied admission, but the Oklahoma Legislature amended the state laws to allow admission on a segregated basis.

McLaurin was forced to sit apart from white students in classes and at designated tables in the library and at the cafeteria.

Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson, who wrote the opinion in this case, said: "Such restrictions impair and inhibit his ability to study, to engage in discussions and exchange views with other students, and in general, to learn his profession.

IT COULD BE argued, said the Chief Justice, that McLaurin even with the restrictions removed might be set apart by his fellow students.

"This we think is irrelevant," Vinson wrote. "There is a vast difference—a Constitutional difference — between restrictions imposed by the state which prohibits the intellectual commingling of students and the refusal of individuals to commingle where the state presents no such bar."

The court held that McLaurin was deprived of his "personal and present right" to equal protection of the laws.

"We hold," the opinion continued, "that under these circumstances the 14th Amendment precludes differences in treatment by the state based on race. (He) having been admitted to a state-supported graduate school, must receive the same treatment at the hands of the state as the students of other races."

Legality of the restrictions in the light of the amendment was the issue which, Goldberg said in his brief, the court would have to decide.

The CIO also had sought to intervene in another case involving the Univ. of Texas Law School, but was barred from filing a "friend of the court" brief in that state by the objections of the Texas attorney general.

In that case Vinson held that Texas must admit Heman Marion Sweatt, a Negro, to the law school instead of requiring him to attend a new Negro law school.

Vinson made this ruling despite the fact that a new law school had been opened, since the trial of the case, at the Texas Univ. for Negroes. Sweatt brought the case after he had been refused admission to the Univ. of Texas Law School at Austin, and after he refused to attend a Negro law school at Houston.

The Chief Justice found that the Negro law school excludes 85% of the population of Texas.

"With such a substantial and significant segment of society excluded," the court said, "we cannot conclude that the education offered is substantially equal to that which he would receive if admitted to the Univ. of Texas Law School."

AGAIN THE court cited the 14th Amendment, this time holding that it required that Sweatt be admitted to the Univ. of Texas Law School.

In neither case did the court, as it was asked to do by the Federal Government and the appellants, upset its 54-year-old precedent that "separate but equal" facilities for Negroes did not violate the equal protection clause of the amendment.

The dining car case began eight years ago when Elmer W. Henderson, then a field representative for the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, was refused a seat in the white section of the dining car of a Southern Railway train while going through Virginia. The seats conditionally held for Negroes were occupied.

The Interstate Commerce Commission considered the case a "casual incident" brought about by the "bad judgment" of an employe. The Southern Railway later reserved 10 tables for whites, and one table with four seats for Negroes, but this was curtained off.

Justice Harold H. Burton, who wrote the opinion in this case, said that "curtains, partitions and signs emphasize the artificiality of a difference in treatment which serves only to call attention to a racial classification of passengers holding identical tickets and using the same public dining facility."

He said that the Interstate Commerce Act made it illegal for a railroad to subject anyone to "undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage."

A Step Forward

Rep. Arthur G. Klein (D. N. Y.) announced June 7 that the National Selective Service System will drop all reference to race in the registrant's questionnaire after the present stock of questionnaires has been used up. Selective Service officials acted after Klein complained.

ELMER W. HENDERSON (seated), Washington, D. C., Negro, loses no time in demonstrating the victory he won in the U. S. Supreme Court, which held that the Southern Railway had illegally prevented him from being served a meal in a dining car. Here Henderson is ordering a meal in a dining car which he boarded at the Union Station, Washington, following the court decision outlawing such segregation.

G. W. MCLAURIN

The U. S. Supreme Court has ordered the Univ. of Oklahoma Law School to cease its segregation practices against McLaurin.

CIO Hails High Court Ruling Against Prejudices And Bias

"THE CIO hails the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Henderson, Sweatt and McLaurin cases as significant advance in the democratic struggle against prejudice and discrimination," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said last week.

"Compulsory segregation has always been a mask for discrimination and a method of preserving prejudice against the ever-widening realization by the peoples of America that distinctions based on race or color are odious to the American democratic tradition."

"In finding a lack of equality in the segregation practices of the Southern Railway and the states of Texas and Oklahoma, the Court in effect repudiated the 'separate but equal' doctrine against which the CIO had directed its attack in its briefs in all three cases."

"The Court did not repudiate the 'separate but equal' doctrine directly but by holding that the practice of segregation itself created inequality in the Oklahoma case the Court effectively killed any effect the doctrine might have in the future.

"Particularly significant to the CIO is the clear recognition by the Supreme Court in the McLaurin case that there is a vital difference between voluntary and involuntary separation."

"The court conceded that individual students in the Univ. of Oklahoma had a right not to mingle with members of different races, if they desired not to do so, but it stated that the state had no power to deprive Negroes of the right to secure voluntary acceptance by their fellow students."

"This means that although individuals can practice prejudice if they so wish, the state cannot force them to do so.

"It has been our firm position that such statutes, ordinances and regulations are unconstitutional. Governmental bodies have no power, we believe, to compel our people to practice prejudices which they abhor. The Supreme Court decisions in the Negro education cases fully support that position."

Helen Parks, 24, (above) Portland, Ore., is Democratic candidate for the legislature of her state. She is recording secretary of her local of the CIO Communications Workers.

FTC Makes Charges

The Federal Trade Commission has issued a complaint against the Pruvo Pharmacal Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., charging it falsely advertised that a medicinal preparation, Pruvo, quickly and completely relieves all pain of arthritis, rheumatism and neuritis.

The complaint states that the "aches, pains and discomforts incident to these ailments may be of such a nature that they will be in no way alleviated by the use of Pruvo, however taken."

Cal. Democrats Nominate Roosevelt, Douglas

JAMES ROOSEVELT, son of the late President, and Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, both with CIO support, won the Democratic nominations for governor and U. S. senator, respectively, in California's primary elections last week.

Their Republican rivals will be Gov. Earl Warren, first Californian to seek a third term, and Rep. Richard Nixon.

Under California's cross-filing primary system, which lets a candidate file for the nominations of both parties, Roosevelt's chief rival in the Democratic race was Warren, who was the Republican candidate for vice president in 1948.

Warren, however, was unable to repeat his feat of capturing the nominations of both parties as he did four years ago, as Roosevelt steadily forged ahead of him in the count. Warren piled up enough votes, especially in the farm and mountain country and in San Francisco, to assure the Democrats they have a fight ahead of them in spite of their overwhelming bulge in registration. Roosevelt's greatest strength was in Los Angeles, where he ran far ahead of Warren.

The governor won the Republican nomination by defeating Roosevelt easily.

Rep. Douglas, one of the outstanding liberals in the House and a firm supporter of New Deal policies though not always a strict supporter of President Truman, defeated Manchester Boddy, publisher of the Los Angeles Daily News, and Nixon in the Democratic primary.

Rep. Douglas did not cast a single "wrong" vote on the 13 key issues listed in the CIO Voting Record.

Nixon, an ardent supporter of the Taft-Hartley Act, one of the House's rising young reactionaries, and closely allied with Publisher Frank Gannet's tory Committee for Constitutional Government, now under investigation by the House Lobby Investigating Committee, was "wrong" on 10 issues and "right" on the military aid program, adoption of the conference report on ECA funds and on the anti-poll tax bill. His opponents in the Republican primary were Boddy and Rep. Douglas.

In New Mexico Rep. John E. Miles defeated former U. S. Judge David Chavez, Jr., for the Democratic nomination for governor. Chavez is a brother of U. S. Sen. Dennis Chavez, who has been a consistent liberal and friend of labor. In the house, Miles was "right" on eight key issues, "wrong" on three and absent when two others were determined, according to the CIO Voting Record.

U. S. Sen. Chan Gurney, seeking his third term, was defeated by Rep. Francis Case for the Republican nomination for Senator from South Dakota. John A. Engel, a lawyer, won the Democratic nomination. Gurney had three "right" votes out of the 13 in the CIO Voting Record, Case two.

Act Now To Extend Rent Control A Year

THE RENT control issue got to the Senate floor June 7. So did Sen. Cain (R. Wash.).

Cain did not want extension of controls even until the end of the year with authority for local communities to extend them for six months. That's how the bill was reported out by the Senate Banking Committee.

Cain, arch-foe of better housing, talked for three hours. Munching chocolate or sipping coffee, he would have talked longer, but sat down after he was assured he could continue the filibuster when consideration of the bill is resumed.

Cain did not carry on the talk-athon the next day because the Senate devoted its attention to a number of minor bills.

HIS OBJECTIVE was to keep the Senate from considering the measure until the House, he hoped, killed the bill.

Senate Majority Leader Lucas interrupted him to say that although the House had originally planned to vote on rent control June 13, but it decided June 7 to postpone action.

Despite Cain, the Senate may have acted by the time this issue of the CIO News is distributed. Meanwhile, Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., sent out an urgent appeal to CIO affiliates and regional directors to make phone calls, and send telegrams, letters and post cards to Senators and Congressmen to ask for extension of rent control for a year beyond June 30 plus an amendment.

The amendment would provide for the removal or reinstatement of rent control by cities, towns and villages through local option within the year.

THOSE RECEIVING this issue of the CIO News should direct their attention to Congressmen, if the Senate has acted.

Cowan's letter, in which was enclosed portions of the statement on rent control by the CIO executive officers and vice presidents, (See story on this page), concluded:

"Wrap up every possible bit of possible community support immediately in this effort to offset the activities of the real estate lobby which has swarmed into Washington on this issue."

The letter also warned of the chaos that would follow rent control removal—a warning well made in view of figures issued by the Senate Banking Commission.

These figures which were based on the experiences of 14 decontrolled cities showed that of all increases, the highest were demanded of tenants paying less than $30 a month. For example: Dallas, Tex., average increase for all ranges, 35.4%; average increase under $30 a month, 55.8%; Oklahoma City, average increase for all ranges, 26.2%; under $30 a month, 39.8%; Wichita, Kans., average increase for all ranges, 18.2%; under $30 a month, 52.1%.

In 8 Months IUE Wins Union Rights For Over 225,000

REPRESENTATION rights for 225,479 workers have been won by the CIO International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers in the eight months since its inception, IUE Chairman James B. Carey revealed at the June 6 meeting of CIO executive officers vice-presidents in New York City.

In representation elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, IUE-CIO has won certification for 183,916 persons. An additional 41,563 workers are covered by IUE-CIO agreements where the new union was recognized by companies without the necessity of an NLRB election.

The recent victory by IUE in the General Electric chain secured IUE's position as the major union in the electrical manufacturing industry. Representation rights were secured by IUE for 53,970 GE workers to 36,683 for the United Electrical workers. The General Electric chain had previously been regarded as the stronghold of the red-tinged UE.

Earlier NLRB elections had given the IUE a clean sweep of the approximately 30,000 workers in General Motors' electrical division. The run-off election in the East Pittsburgh plant, largest local of the Westinghouse chain, secured IUE certification for 41,837 Westinghouse employes as compared to 14,000 for the discredited UE.

Chairman Carey reported that in addition to the GE and Westinghouse elections, IUE has participated in 146 NLRB contests of which it has won 126, the UE 15, various American Federation of Labor unions four, and the International Association of Machinists one.

During the same eight-month period, IUE-CIO issued charters to 207 local unions, in many of which elections are still to be held.

Pres. Philip Murray again expressed his enthusiasm for the success with which IUE is accomplishing the job of bringing the workers of the electrical industry a sound functioning trade union in the CIO tradition.

B. C. Lumber Workers To Take Strike Vote

The International Woodworkers has rejected a conciliation board award for its British Columbia District 1 and is preparing to hold a vote on striking June 15. Affected are 32,000 lumber workers and 160 companies.

The board proposed an increase of 9c an hour; a maintenance of membership clause; a 48-hour week for loggers in the summer; a night shift differential for mill workers.

The union asked a boost of 17c, a union shop, and continuance of the standard 40-hour five-day week, with overtime for Saturday. The board's recommended wage boost would bring the basic hourly wage in logging camps and mills to $1.17.

James Fadling, IWA president, and Virgil Burtz, research director, appeared before the board for the union.

CIO Group Named To Discuss Unity Proposal With AFL

CIO'S PROPOSAL for labor unity was advanced another step by Pres. Philip Murray with the appointment of a committee to discuss the subject with a similar committee from the AFL.

Names of the committee were announced at a meeting of the CIO executive officers and vice presidents in New York City and were contained in a letter sent by Murray to AFL Pres. William Green. They are:

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers, Administrative Chairman James B. Carey of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union; Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers and Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

At a press conference Murray said that the CIO committee is ready to meet with its AFL counterpart any time but suggested that the middle of July would be very convenient.

THE UNITY proposal was first made by Murray at the April 4 meeting of the CIO vice presidents, who gave their approval.

The letter which was not only addressed to the AFL but also to the United Mine Workers, the Intl. Association of Machinists and the railroad brotherhoods called for the establishment of a joint committee of the various union groups.

Objectives are "to coordinate our efforts in the economic, legislative and political spheres" and to "seek to achieve the organic unity of all American labor."

The IAM and UMW have replied favorably to the proposal, and the brotherhoods are considering the suggestion.

Murray's letter to Green was in reply to one written by the AFL president telling Murray that the AFL was prepared to name a unity committee.

The vice presidents in three other actions also:

1 Called for the extension of federal rent control for a period of one year beyond June 30, with local option in cities, towns and villages to remove or reinstate rent controls.

2 Faced the problem of unemployment by urging four specific and immediate actions.

3 Asked enactment of an improved Social Security measure stronger than the bill passed by the House and recommended by the Senate Finance Committee.

The resolution on rent control cited the false propaganda leveled against the extension of control by real estate interests, and the skyrocketing of rents in cities where controls have been removed. It predicted that the end of controls would be equivalent to a general wage cut of from 5 to 10%.

PAC was directed "to record and to report the vote, or the failure to vote, on rent control by each member of Congress who is a candidate for re-election and to bring the record to the attention of the voters in each State and Congressional District during the current campaign."

The statement on unemployment called attention to the continued seriousness of joblessness. It was noted that "some 39 communities in the United States, according to the Dept. of Labor, still face a critical economic situation, with over 12% of their labor force unemployed.

The problem, it was stated, "will shortly be intensified by the influx of nearly one million new, young workers who will be graduating from school in June and July" and by "the thousands of workers who are being displaced by tremendous technological advances taking place in nearly every industry."

At the same time, the statement continued, reports of the Securities and Exchange Commission show that "capital of American corporations is at an all-time high of $66.7 billion. These enormous reserves and profits reflect the high-profit and monopoly price policies of great sections of American business."

This situation remains a threat to an expanding economy. Prosperity should be aided, the vice presidents and executive officers said, by the following policies:

- A more public-spirited price policy on the part of the corporations, wihch will result in their sharing with workers and consumers the greater gains in productivity now occurring.
- Strengthening and extension of collective bargaining.
- Revision of the tax system with higher exemptions in the lower brackets and steps to prevent corporations from having large accumulations of idle cash.
- A farm support price program similar to the Brannan plan.
- A middle-income housing program.
- "New social security legislation, including improved old age pensions, survivors and disability insurance, unemployment compensation benefits and health insurance."

In addition to these policies, the statement called for four immediate steps:

A Passage of the Young Bill, H. R. 8374, which would provide for unemployment benefits for an additional 27 weeks.

B Passage of the Emergency Public Works Bill, H. R. 7444, to establish a reserve fund of $1.8 billion to be used by the President for a public works program in depressed areas and to furnish state and local communities with funds for their own work programs.

C Establishment of a Civilian ConservationCorps as provided in S. 3144 and H. R. 7463.

D Less disregard for communities by large corporations such as occurs when plants are shifted haphazardly or when new ones are established without sufficient consideration.

The meeting took to task the majority of the Senate Finance Committee for:

"Placement of a low ceiling on benefits through the retention of the $3000 wage base ceiling and the elimination of the annual increment, the complete omission of permanent and total disability insurance, and the refusal of nearly all improvements in public assistance voted by the House."

Liberal Senators were praised for their intention to carry on a floor fight to restore and improve the bill.

Improvement included a number of recommendations which have been extensively reported in the CIO News and which were recommended by the CIO Committee on Social Security.

OWIU Pres. Blasts Denham As 'Subservient' To Texas Co.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers charged last week that National Labor Relations Board General Counsel Robert N. Denham has "violated the trust placed in him by the government and the people" and "has been completely subservient" to the Texas Oil Co. at Port Neches, Tex., where the OWIU has been on strike since last April.

Knight's blast at Denham followed the discharge of Pres. J. E. Sanderson, of OWIU Local 228, and R. A. Hitt, chairman of the local's office group at Port Neches, for what Knight termed "no other reason than that they had been active in union affairs."

He said the company had taken disciplinary action against 11 other members of the local, giving them layoffs ranging from three weeks to 90 days and arbitrarily demoting one.

Pointing out that such actions against employes because of union activity are clearly a violation of the Taft-Hartley Law, Knight declared that the Texas Co. believes it can violate the labor laws with impunity "because of a very close tie between the company and Denham."

Knight called attention to the fact that the chief labor attorney for the Texas Co. is Charles M. Brooks, who until a year ago was chief assistant to Denham.

"Since Brooks stepped from his NLRB job into a high paying post with the Texas Co.," Knight said, "our union has been unable to secure one act of justice from Denham's office involving the Texas Co.

"Immediately after Brooks was hired, several unfair labor practices cases we had pending against the company in California were arbitrarily dismissed by Denham. Since that time we have been unable to secure prosecution of a single case against the Texas Co."

Knight said that since Brooks was rewarded by receiving a good job with Texaco, "Denham's decisions have always been against our union." "There is no appeal from his one-man decisions," he added.

Rehearing Refused On Oath Signing

The Supreme Court has again upheld the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley Act provision requiring union officers to sign non-Communist oaths. The vote was 4 to 4, thus affirming lower court decisions. The decision was on an appeal by Local 65, Wholesale & Warehouse Workers, unaffiliated, New York. Justices Vinson, Minton, Reed and Burton upheld validity of the oath. Justices Douglas, Jackson, Frankfurter and Black dissented.

The court had ruled similarly, 3-3, on May 8, on appeals filed by the CIO Steelworkers and American Communications Association. Both subsequently filed briefs urging a rehearing. The court, in a separate order June 5, refused to reconsider.

Too Many Feel Too Insecure

Sure, We In The U. S. Are Much Better Off Than Most, But There Are Many Things That Should Be Done

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU'RE in France, talking to a group of coal miners—and after learning how they work and live you do your best not to brag about the United States.

But you brag a bit, anyhow. You just can't help it. And you wonder whether they believe what you're telling them about conditions back on home.

And it's the same way when you talk with dock workers in Holland, bricklayers in Italy or machinists in Great Britain.

You bite your tongue just a little to keep from sounding like the loud-mouthed foreigner who can see nothing good except his own back yard.

When you get back home you feel pretty good. Here there's everything you could want to eat. The streets are jammed by cars. Nearly everybody looks prosperous. There is no trace of bomb damage.

AFTER YOU'RE HOME for a while you do a lot of thinking and you ask yourself a lot of questions. Why is there such a difference between the U. S. and Europe? What is it over there that people are searching for? What makes the continent a breeding ground for war and strange isms?

You ask the questions and out of your knowledge and experience you provide some of the answers. But you can't supply them all.

There's one thing that keeps hammering away in your mind. The people of Europe—individually and collectively—feel insecure.

Insecure. Yes, that's it. Insecure.

There was the Kaiser. Then there was Hitler and Mussolini. And now there's Stalin.

But long before them there were others who wanted to rule the world—others who wanted to enslave their fellowmen.

WHEN YOU start digging for the causes of insecurity abroad you find many things—lack of natural resources, trading restrictions, monetary difficulties, undeveloped sources of power. On and on you go.

And it's likely that you end up by saying that in Europe, as in many other parts of the world, there is simply too little for too many.

Too little food. Too little clothing. Too little good shelter.

And too much fear.

Everywhere you see outmoded production machinery and outdated techniques. Men and women work hard but they don't produce nearly as much as their American counterparts. They can't unless they change their ways and substitute more horsepower for manpower.

So it's not hard to understand the greatness of the contribution our country is making through the European Recovery Program.

AT THE POINT where you start getting a bit smug about the United States and its accomplishments you jerk yourself up short.

How's our security? How many people do we have in slums? What about the sharecroppers? Is it really true that millions have substandard living conditions?

What about our older people—those cast aside by a fast-moving industrial system that puts emphasis on youth? Are they being adequately cared for? Will their pensions, through social security and otherwise, support them?

How about the treatment accorded some of our minority groups? Do they have any real sense of security?

And what about our educational system? Why hasn't it kept pace with some of our other advances?

Is our unemployment compensation system adequate? Why do so many of our people have inedequate medical care?

On and on you go. You know some of the answers. Some of them you don't.

And it's likely that you end up by saying to yourself that our people, too, feel insecure, are fearful of the future, and that too many of them have too little.

You know they're better off than people elsewhere, but you know there's much to be done.

And you simply can't understand those who fight every program designed to provide the people with more security and with more reasons for feeling secure.

Jim Crowism Hit

Those black-robed men who make up the U. S. Supreme Court last week plucked three big, important feathers from the tail of old Jim Crow.

And Jim's supporters let out yells of protest when the high tribunal knocked into a cocked hat the old "separate but equal" doctrine insofar as the operation of colleges and universities is concerned.

It was to be expected that the loudest cries of anguish would come from a state which is usually regarded as "headquarters" for those white-robed men who make up the Ku Klux Klan. And it did.

Herman Talmadge said the court's ruling wouldn't apply to Georgia as long as he was governor of the state.

Be that as it may, the court struck a real blow at the old practice of segregation in colleges and universities.

It held that the University of Texas Law School and the University of Oklahoma Graduate School violated the 14th Amendment by not providing two Negro students the full facilities and privileges of the institutions.

And the Southern Railway, the court held, acted improperly when it denied a Negro the dining car privileges accorded white passengers.

Those who believe in expansion of civil liberties were greatly encouraged by the court's actions, but there is still a long battle ahead.

Segregation is not only permitted but is required by law in too many states. These laws should be challenged and tested whenever possible.

We'll go along with those who say that much education will be required before our racial problems can be solved.

But we won't go along with those who say we've got to keep on flouting our Constitution and continue observing laws which create second-class citizenship for part of our population.

DID THE SENATOR REALLY SAY IT?

Senator Robert A. Taft has become involved in another controversy, which isn't unusual for the Ohio Republican who helped sire the obnoxious Taft-Hartley Act. Some of the newspapers are beginning to give the affair considerable attention.

The story, as we get it, is that he was quoted by the New York Times many weeks ago as having lent encouragement to Senator McCarthy in his smear campaign against the State Dept.

McCarthy should roll out one of his "Communist" cases, then try another if the first one backfired, and keep right on doing so, the Ohio senator is supposed to have said.

Now Taft is making like he didn't do any such thing.

Maybe he did. Maybe he didn't.

But one thing seems obvious: Taft waited an awfully long time to start denying something which many newspapers—including the Times—said that he said.

It seems to us Mr. Taft has behaved in this manner before.

CIO Summer Schools Begin June 18

FIVE GERMAN women trade union leaders will be among the students at the National CIO's first summer school for 1950 which will be held June 18-23 at Estes Park, Colo.

The Rocky Mountain school is one of a series of 12 regional summer schools being run this summer by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research under the direction of George Guernsey, asociate director of education.

Plans are under way to have a group of foreign trade unionists attend all the schools, following a successful experiment started last summer when the CIO brought three German and Austrian unionists to the United States under its own auspices.

The German women who will attend the CIO's Rocky Mountain School compose one of the groups being brought to the U. S. under various government-sponsored programs which have been going on for some time. The plans to have foreign unionists at all CIO summer schools this year are being worked out in cooperation with Michael Ross, CIO's international relations director, and the U. S. Dept. of Labor, Guernsey said.

THE FIVE women who are all active members and officials of German unions, have been in the country for several weeks visiting unions and industrial plants. Before the school opens they will spend two days in Pueblo, Colo., as the guests of the CIO Steelworkers, and three days in Denver, where they will visit the CIO Oil Workers and other union groups, AFL and CIO.

Klaus Schuetz, formerly chairman of a Social Democratic youth organization in Berlin, will assist the staff of the CIO school in making classes and discussions helpful to the German women. During the past winter, Schuetz studied labor economics at Harvard University.

The German women and the unions they belong to:

Miss Hedwig Eckhart, Stuttgart-Zazenhausen, shoe and leather workers; Mrs. Irene Martin, Frankfurt am Main, chemistry paper and ceramics; Miss Babbette Roegner, Kornwestheim, leather workers; Miss Else Schlotterer, Stuttgart, office workers; Mrs. Frida G. Walter, Frankfurt am Main, chief of women's affairs division, Hesse Trade Union Federation.

Tobin Lauds Murray At Safety Meet

ORGANIZED LABOR has made a major contribution to the movement to reduce industrial accidents from the 1948 high of 2,000,000, Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin told the President's Conference on Industrial Safety.

The meeting at Washington was attended by more than 150 representatives of CIO and AFL unions, along with management representatives, safety engineers and government safety personnel.

"Organized labor can look back proudly on a long struggle for better safety and health legislation," Tobin said.

Tobin cited the pioneering efforts of "men like William Green of the AFL who won in Ohio one of the earliest victories in labor's fight to improve the lot of the workers" and "Phil Murray under whose leadership the CIO has done a major job of working for more adequate protection for the worker."

Earlier the Conference heard President Truman set a goal of a 50% reduction in industrial accidents by 1952 and point to the 7% decline in total work accident rate in large and small manufacturing plants.

Union delegates on the whole said the conference had done a good job in cutting down the tragedy and waste resulting from unnecessary work accidents but indicated that a number of improvements should be made in the over-all picture.

A representative of the CIO Woodworkers, Manley J. Wilson, said he objected to closing the door on Federal intervention in safety programs if the individual states failed to do an acceptable job.

He was supported in his position by representatives of the CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Rubber Workers. (LPA)

N. J. CIO To Hold $25-A-Plate Dinner

Labor Day this year will be marked by the New Jersey CIO with a $25-a-plate dinner, to raise funds for the congressional campaigns. The decision was made at the third annual conference of the state CIO-PAC, attended by 500 delegates, who represented 12 international unions and 112 locals. The parley was held in Newark.

He Apparently Did Not Want To Be Hero

THIS IS A STORY about a fellow named Joe who had a flair for two things—playing baseball and organizing unions.

Joe's name isn't mentioned on the sports pages these days—but it is mentioned by a lot of workers in the Southern state where he lives.

He made the decision which brought this condition about—a decision made quickly—a decision which closed the door tightly on possible fame.

Here's what happened—and how it happened:

BACK IN 1946 the CIO launched a membership drive in a dozen Southern states, and one of the first big tasks encountered was getting a competent staff together.

One of the state directors was scurrying around here and there, hunting for men and women "natives" who might become good organizers in short order.

Somebody told the director about Joe, "a fellow who did a swell job organizing his own local union."

The director filed Joe's name away for future reference. After all he didn't really know anything about the fellow—and Joe lived about 100 miles from the director's office.

The director kept asking questions about possible organizers and people kept mentioning Joe.

Joe, they said, wasn't only a good union man; he was a darn good baseball player, too.

AT ABOUT THE TIME the director decided that Joe was one man he needed for his staff he learned that a big baseball team was angling for Joe's services.

Joe, he learned, had gained quite a reputation as a semi-pro, and a lot of his fans thought he was headed for the big leagues.

Then the director was informed that a scout from one of the big teams was going to look Joe over at a game the next day.

And he had a hunch that if the scout got to Joe first the CIO would lose a good man.

The director decided to act quickly as he could, but he ran into a couple of delays.

Finally he arrived at Joe's town and drove to the baseball park—after the game had started.

JOE WAS REALLY having a good day on the diamond and to the director he looked like big league material.

He also looked like good trade union material.

The director pondered the matter for a while and then decided to act.

As Joe returned from the diamond to the bench, the director jumped over a fence and headed in Joe's direction.

He quickly introduced himself and said, "I've got a job for you as an organizer. Do you want to go to work for me?"

At this point the director was ordered by a policeman to get back in the grandstand, but as he headed in that direction Joe said, "I'll see you after the game."

THE DIRECTOR headed for the dressing room after the last inning ended—and so did the baseball scout.

There both of them made their pitch for Joe's services.

One offered the posibility of fame and fortune, bright lights, publicity and all that goes along with big league baseball.

The other offered a hard, thankless job at a comparatively small salary.

Joe listened as they talked, at the same time shucking off his sweaty clothes.

They kept talking as he stood under a shower.

Finally Joe had heard what he wanted to hear. He thanked the scout for his kind offer, then turned to the director and said:

"I'd rather go to work for the CIO."

PLUCKED!

'Practically No Way' To Control Me—Denham

QUESTION: We take it you don't regard the Taft-Hartley Act as a slave-labor act?

ANSWER: No. I think as a matter of fact, it can be made one of the most valuable things that labor has if they will just take hold of it and try to use it.

WHO SAID THAT?

The individual who made that statement during a recent interview, published in U. S. News & World Report, is Robert N. Denham, chief counsel of the National Labor Relations Board.

Denham said a lot of other things in the interview, none of which would indicate that he is contemplating an about face in his anti-union attitude.

Here are some more Denham answers to questions:

Q. How is the Taft-Hartley Act working, Mr. Denham? What is your over-all feeling about it?

A. My feeling about it is that it is really performing a function and is doing something that is worth while . . .

Q. There is an impression that a general counsel can be as biased in one direction as another, and that he has a good deal of authority, is that right?

A. Very definitely. There is practically no way in which you can control it.

Q. What are your basic differences with the Board? Do you differ with the way they are interpreting the law?

A. I've taken this position—and it may be purely personal philosophy—that the law was put on the books by the 80th Congress as something of a repudiation of the operation of the Wagner Act . . . They wanted to put the employers on the same level with the employe organizations.

Q. You think they (the members of the Board) are not in sympathy with the law?

A. The Board seems to have a yardstick for the application of the law which is quite different from the one I use. Whether the Board is right or Denham is right, I don't know.

Later on in the interview Denham asserted that some of the board's decisions seem aimed at repealing the Taft-Hartley law through "decisional attrition"—whatever that may mean.

An editor's note, accompanying the article says that Denham has spent most of his life as a specialist in straightening out business tangles.

Basing Point Bill Aimed At Free Competition

CIO is asking President Truman to veto the "basing point" bill passed by the Senate on June 2 with strong Republican backing.

House approval of the bill in March found Democrats lined up against it by a margin to two to one, but the Republicans put it over with a seven to one margin of votes in favor of it. Senate Democrats also polled two to one against the bill, but the Republicans cast 30 votes for it and only two against it.

Less publicized than the notorious Kerr Bill to hike gas prices, S. 1008 carries an even more deadly wallop for the consuming public. Highly technical in its language, the simple fact of the bill is that it amends the anti-trust laws so as to put effective clubs into the hands of the big boys of industry.

It provides a loophole through which the basing-point system of pricing will be able to get by the anti-trust laws. Used in many basic industries, basing points are a device which makes it extremely unhealthy, if not lethal, for a small competitor to undersell the leaders of his industry. Result is that all competitors' prices usually turn out to be identical on each variety of product at each point of delivery.

Giant steel and cement corporations launched this monopoly sleighride two years ago when the Supreme Court held the basing point system in the cement industry unlawful. Claiming that the court's decision left industry in a quandary, they ganged up on Congress through their customers and even their workers to demand "clarification" of the anti-trust laws. Like the railroads when caught violating the anti-trust laws, they figured to fix the law so they could continue their price-fixing practices without fear of prosecution.

On its way through Congress the bill was amended to provide two other loopholes for big business. These cut the heart out of the Robinson-Putman Act which protects small competitiors from predatory price discriminations by big competitors.

CIO opposed this bill from the beginning. Early in 1949 Otis Brubaker, research director of the Steelworkers, presented facts and figures before the Senate Judiciary Committee to demolish the big-business arguments for "clarification" of the anti-trust laws.

December Conference Planned

Another 'Try' To Be Made At Protecting Working Children

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

"For every child protection against labor that stunts growth, either physical or mental, that limits education, that deprives children of the right of comradeship, of play and of joy—

"For every child these rights, regardless of race, or color, or situation, wherever he may live, under the protection of the American flag."

THESE FINE words are from a Children's Charter, drawn up 20 years ago at a White House Conference on Children called by Pres. Herbert Hoover. The conference is said to have produced "the most comprehensive statement of the needs of children ever assembled in one set of documents."

Since 1909, when the first one was called by Pres. Theodore Roosevelt, four such White House Conferences on Children have been held—one every decade. The second was called by Pres. Woodrow Wilson in 1919, the third by Pres. Hoover in 1930, and the fourth by Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1940.

The fifth one, called by Pres. Harry Truman, will be held in Washington next December. It will be known as the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth.

IF THESE GIRLS packing peas are working during school vacations or after school hours, and they are 14 or over, their labor is not in violation of the Federal wage-hour law—provided their hours of work are within the required limits. The law places a maximum of three hours on any school day and eight on any non-school day. All work must be performed between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. However, enforcement of the law is inadequate.

MANY SPLENDID plans for improving the welfare of America's children came out of all four of the past conferences. The one for 1950, speaking in the name of the nation's children under 18 years of age who now number 46 million, is set to outdo them all.

Elaborate preparations for it have been under way since 1946, when a National Commission on Children and Youth, with members from 67 organizations concerned with child welfare, first started plans for the fifth White House Conference.

Preliminary conferences held in '47, '48 and '49 have collected the suggestions and advice of social service, health, recreation, farm, labor, education, civic and church groups, as well as individual experts in these various fields.

CIO representatives on committees, include CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, a member of the executive committee, and United Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther, member of the national committee.

A number of CIO representatives, along with other labor groups, will take part in the various activities of the Midcentury conference.

John Brophy, director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, has requested all state councils, wherever possible, to get representatives on committees set up by governors of the various states.

"The Governor's State Committees should not be figureheads," Brophy told the state councils. "They should gather the facts covering the health, welfare and educational needs of children in each state and propose measures to meet them in preparation for the conference."

A special staff for the Federal Security Administration's Children's Bureau, working closely with other Federal Agencies, will assist the committee.

From the reports and recommendations made at preliminary meetings, a program has been drawn up with these seven main objectives for the 1950 conference:

1 Focus attention on our concern for children and youth in conformity with the belief that "the diginity and worth of the individual are of first importance."

2 Bring together in usuable form, all present knowledge about the physical, mental, emotional and moral development of children.

3 Point up the needs of parents in providing adequately for their children and suggest ways of helping them do a better job.

4 Look at the physical, social, economic and moral environment in which children are growing up and recommend ways of improving it.

5 Size up present services for children and youth and show how they can be improved.

6 Develop ideas for more effective teamwork for working together for children.

7 Initiate steps for the achievement of conference recommendations in the coming decade.

In a leaflet announcing the White House Conference on Children, Chairman Oscar Ewing asks: "Are we the richest nation in the world, doing all we should to give our children a fair deal?" Answers to this question, he says, will be forthcoming at the 1950 conference.

Just how big are the problems affecting children that the 1950 White House Conference will confront? To what extent have evils discussed at previous conferences been eliminated?

The National Child Labor Committee, an independent organization which has been devoting itself to the problems of working kids since its formation in 1904, has just published a Child Labor Fact Book, covering the years 1900-1950. This survey indicates the status of American children during the past half-century, and measures, to a certain degree, in what spheres and to what extent the lot of the nation's youngsters has been improved.

Although progress has definitely been made, the overall picture is still nothing to cheer about.

RATHER THE facts tend to show that the lot of children rises and falls along with that of adults.

That's why the CIO emphasizes that child labor and general child labor programs should be considered together with its overall economic program for improving wages and working conditions of industrial workers.

For example, as the Child Labor Fact Book shows, it was the forced unemployment of the 30's and the economic disaster facing the country that brought down the figures on child labor and set the states off on a sudden rush to ratify the Child Labor Amendment, in order to keep children from competing with adults for jobs.

Between 1925 and 1931 a total of six states had ratified it, but in 1933 alone 14 states ratified the amendment. In the next four years, eight more took favorable action, bringing the total to 28 states, or eight short of the 36 needed for ratification.

That's where the matter rests today. After the U. S. supreme ruling in 1941, permitting child labor regulations in the Wage-Hour law, agitation for passage of the Child Labor Amendment died down, although it still could be passed any time that eight more states ratify it. The amendment if passed, would be merely an enabling act, giving Congress power to pass federal child labor legislation.

In 1936-37, the U. S. Supreme Court, which in 1918 had declared unconstitutional a Federal law regulating child labor, broadened its interpretation of interstate commerce, thus permitting child labor regulations to be included in the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act (Wage-Hour Law). In 1941 the Supreme Court ruled that these child labor provisions were constitutional.

But in 1945, the Supreme Court declared that interstate commerce firms which did not produce or ship goods were not subject to the provisions.

TO GET OVER this hurdle, Congress in 1949 amended the Wage-Hour Law (for the first time) changing the wording to apply the provisions to all interstate commerce industries, regardless of whether goods are produced or shipped. This brought such industries as communications, public utilities, transportation, construction, warehousing and storage under the law.

Another important amendment to the law, passed at the same time, forbids employment of children under 16 in commercial agriculture while schools are in session. The amendments became effective Jan. 25, 1950.

Although this still leaves millions of youngsters who could be employed in industries or on farms not affected by provisions of the federal law, covered only by spotty and insufficient state child labor laws, it does mark a forward step—provided the law is properly enforced and that there are sufficient school facilities. At present both of these are woefully inadequate.

Standards laid down by the federal Wage-Hour Law governing industries in interstate commerce, in general set an age limit of 16 for employment during school hours, with a 14-year limit outside of school hours and during school vacations. A 16-year limit is set for employment in manufacturing, mining or processing occupations—at any time, with an 18-year limit in occupations declared to be hazardous.

These include jobs in explosives plants, coal mining, logging and sawmilling (with certain specified exceptions); operations of power-driven woodworking machines; jobs involving exposure to radioactive substances; motor vehicle drivers and helpers; operation of power-driven hoisting apparatus, including elevators; and operation of certain power-driven metal working machines.

In addition to the Wage-Hour Act, there are two other Federal laws which contain provisions affecting child labor:

1 The Walsh-Healey Act of 1936 sets a minimum age of 16 (18 for females) for employment in the production of goods made under contract for the Federal government.

2 The Sugar Act of 1937, later renewed, stipulates that to qualify for benefit payments, growers of sugar beets and sugar cane must not employ children under 14 years of age, nor children 14 to 16 for more than 8 hours a day.

Legislation to regulate child labor was exclusively up to the various states until the passage of the Wage-Hour Law in 1938. The fight waged by unions and other organizations for state laws to curb child labor was an uphill battle that made progress slowly.

In 1904, only two states limited the working time of children under 16, to eight hours a day, and only five prohibited their employment in factories on night work—after 7 p.m. A 14-year age limit was in effect in only 17 states.

By 1924, 27 states had adopted the 14-year age minimum for factories without exemptions, and 26 states prohibited factory night work between 7 p.m. and 6 a.m. The 8-hour day, 48-hour week for those under 16 has been adopted by 27 states.

Up to the present year, a total of 20 states only have passed legislation to prohibit employment of children under 16 during school hours. Only six of these include agriculture and domestic service, and only 14 have compulsory education laws which prohibit exemptions for youngsters under 16, except for high school graduates.

The National Child Labor Committee feels that while substantial progress in curbing the evils perpetrated on working children has been made in the past half-century, the big lack today lies in the weaknesses of the state laws.

Apparently it is not known just how many children under 14 are working today. The U. S. Census dropped the listing of employed workers in the 10 to 13 age group in 1940, but showed 209,347 in the 14 to 15 group, and 662,967 in the 16 to 17 age group.

The Census Bureau estimate in October, 1949, gave a total of 2,071,000 as the number of children 14-17 years of age who were working. Of these, 870,000 were not enrolled in school.

The latest U. S. Census estimate (April 1950) shows a total of 1.9 million children in the 14 through 17 age group, and a total of 2.1 million young people 18 and 19 are working either full or part time.

The Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth will mark a little more than a century since the first child labor law was passed. In 1848 Pennsylvania enacted this first law which prohibited employment of children under 12—in textile mills only.

Our ideas of child labor and the rights of children to get an education have advanced greatly since then, but there are still too many people who believe that we have already reached the ultimate goal and do not recognize that many evils still exist.

Furniture Workers Vote 4 To 1 For CIO Policy

By GERVASE N. LOVE

From the Atlantic and the Pacific they came, from the chair and bed and desk factories of the sprawling Middle West and the Deep South.

They laid down their tools and turned off their machines, and they headed for the sixth biennial convention of the United Furniture Workers of America last week at the Congress Hotel in Chicago—bent on keeping themselves and their union in the CIO.

They read the reports and they attended committee meetings and caucus sessions. They listened without heckling as the speeches bounced off the gaudily decorated ceiling of the meeting room.

But what they did and what they heard had only passing effect. Their minds were made up and when the time came for the vote, they did what they had gone to the convention to do: they voted to stay in the CIO.

★ ★ ★

LAST NOVEMBER, at the CIO national convention in Cleveland, Pres. Philip Murray said:

"There is enough room within the CIO movement to differ about many subjects, many ideas, questions of reform within the CIO, economic, social and trade union policy—yes, plenty of room, but there is no room within CIO for Communism."

The rest is history.

The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers stalked out of the convention and the CIO (the bulk of its members stayed in, as events since then have proved). The Farm Equipment Workers union was expelled.

Nine board members and 10 international unions were cited for trial as Communist-dominated, with expulsion the penalty if found guilty.

Good Prayer

Delegates of all faiths answered with a heartfelt if silent "Amen" when the Rev. John J. Egan, paster of St. Carthage's Catholic Church, Chicago, gave the invocation that opened the Furniture Workers' convention.

Not only did Father Egan ask for Divine guidance for the sessions and social justice for the union's members, but he prayed for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and unity among all workers. Many of his parishioners are members of the CIO Steelworkers.

Five international unions were tried, found guilty and have been expelled.

Four others have been tried and are awaiting decisions.

In only one did a hard core of hard-fighting, hard-working right wingers get themselves organized and carry a militant fight into the shops to show the members that they were cutting their own throats if they stuck by the left-wing leadership and provoked expulsion from the CIO.

They did an effective job, too, under the leadership of Pres. Morris Pizer, nine other minority members of the general executive board, and William L. Gilbert, who was ousted as midwest organization director (then hired back by the Midwest District Council) by Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow and Organization Director Ernest Marsh, leaders of the left-wing faction.

ONE LOCAL AFTER another, indignant at the fact they had been misled by the left to the verge of expulsion from the CIO, voted at membership meetings to support the right wing and to send delegates to the convention instructed to vote to stay in the CIO.

In the general executive board Pizer and his followers offered a resolution last December calling upon members to stick to the CIO, to follow its policy and to fight off all attempts to force the union's expulsion. It was defeated, 10 to 14.

The GEB majority passed its own resolution, 14 to 10, an open invitation to the CIO either to expel it or to let it stay in the CIO on its own terms. Then it withdrew its approval and voted to send both resolutions to the convention—spurning Pizer's motion for an immediate referendum of the membership.

The choice of the resolutions was the key issue as the convention got under way. Debate was opened after the right wing, by a vote of 23,534 to 8127, had seated a right-wing delegation from Local 34, Jamestown, N. Y.

DISCUSSION BEGAN the afternoon of June 6. It continued through a short morning session the following day, was resumed when the 150 delegates and alternates reconvened late in the afternoon, and was not resolved until nearly 8 p.m., with no stop for supper.

The discussion was surprisingly orderly in view of the bitterness generated by the difference. The speakers were allowed to talk without interruption, order was almost perfect and on the few occasions when someone sought to break in from the floor he was quickly squelched by indignant glares. The delegates attended every session faithfully and the absentees were few and far between.

EVEN THE voting was orderly. As the delegates waited for the ballots to be counted Perlow, Marsh and most of their followers walked out of the hall.

"You left wingers!" Pizer called after them, "I'd like you to stay in the United Furniture Workers of America. I invite you to be loyal to the United Furniture Workers of America just as the right wingers were loyal when they were in the minority."

There was no reply, but they were all back when the June 8 session opened.

The tellers finally completed their count and gave the word to the patient — and by this time hungry—delegates:

For Pizer's resolution: 25,524.

For the GEB resolution: 6307.

The GEB in making convention plans had decided not to invite any outside speakers. But before recessing after hearing the vote, the jubilant delegates voted unanimously to ask a CIO speaker to address the meeting. The following morning CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood was given a loud welcome as he was escorted to the speakers' table, and more cheers when he congratulated the union on the way the vote had gone.

"I'M GOING DOWN the line with you to build up this union," he promised. "We in the CIO are going to keep on organizing in the South and everywhere else."

Sheriffs Meet, Too

Large numbers of large men, many of them with large hats and but few with the traditionally cold blue eyes, stalked around the Congress Hotel in Chicago while the Furniture Workers' convention was going on.

They were attending a convention, too — of the National Sheriffs' Association. The organization is composed of sheriffs and their top deputies from counties in all parts of the country and most of them were there.

He ridiculed left-wing allegations that any union which stays in the CIO loses its autonomy, as left-wing speakers had stressed during debate.

"When we object to the Communist Party putting its nose into our unions," he declared, "they say the CIO is taking away their autonomy. What they call 'autonomy' is nothing but individualism run rampant."

He noted that it is virtually impossible to buy goods of rubber and steel that are not made by a union member.

"We want to get it," he added, "so that you won't be able to buy a piece of furniture without it being made by a union furniture worker."

THE WINNING resolution pledged the convention in support of the following statement of policy:

"We support the program and policies of the CIO adopted at its 11th constitutional convention in the city of Cleveland.

"It was under the banner of the CIO that our workers were organized in the United Furniture Workers of America. It was the CIO which gave birth to our international union.

"It was the CIO that organized the mass production industries of America. Only under the banner of the CIO can we continue to fight for improved working conditions and advance our program of organizing the unorganized furniture workers.

"Any attempt to divide our union or force its expulsion from the CIO would be a serious threat to our contracts and working conditions established through long years of struggle. We will and must resist any attempt to split our union.

"The furniture workers, together with all other American workers, are faced with immediate and future economic problems. We need a strong and united union to defend and improve our wage standards and working conditions.

"We call upon our membership to rally behind the CIO in unity and to resist and fight against any attempts to force our expulsion from the CIO."

SOME EXCERPTS from a few of the speeches:

Pizer: "It is not the issues of Communism, wages, autonomy that worry them (the left). The CIO doesn't take autonomy away from anyone.

"The issue is that there must be a left-wing federation of labor unions in the United States. All their actions of the last few years have been to provoke expulsion so such a federation could be set up. You can see it coming in the 'committees' the expelled unions have set up to work with each other . . .

"If I hadn't put up a fight for seven months to stay in the CIO I'd never be able to look at my face in a mirror again. I'd be a coward if I hadn't fought so I could come here and explain the issues to you delegates.

"Let the people see, and judge for themselves. I am asking you to ratify the stand that I and many other board members took, along with a majority of our membership. This resolution symbolizes the fight for a stronger union and a better America."

Perlow: "Autonomy is the issue. The CIO convention resolution gave too much power to the top leaders and gave them the power to take away the rights of our union . . . it gave the CIO the power to dictate . . . The CIO is killing the fighting spirit of the labor movement . . . CIO leaders are agents of the employers and the Truman Administration . . . The best UFWA contracts were achieved under left-wing leadership.

"The struggle in our union is on principles, basic issues, not personalities . . .

"Can Philip Murray be sincere when he speaks of unity on the one hand and on the other, splits?"

Jack Schwartz, Local 76, New York: Ridiculed Perlow's talk of lack of democracy in the CIO and cited what the GEB majority did "when the left wing had the majority."

Michael Tyson, Baltimore: "The Truman Administration is doing the employers' job on the false issue of Communism. Not only is the left wing called red . . . but McCarthy says everybody in the State Dept. is a Communist . . . You won't be saved from that label regardless of the outcome of this issue."

Gilbert: "It is the duty of labor leaders to take all steps and make all affiliations, etc., which will strengthen his union, and likewise it is his duty not to take steps that will weaken his union.

"The very name and affiliation of the CIO has been an important factor in our wages and working conditions . . .

"We've lost thousands of members on this (communism) and related issues. Pres. Pizer came out with this fight and they saw some hope, and some of them have come back to us. More will come when we pass his resolution.

Big Biz

Furniture is the country's second largest durable consumer's goods industry. A $2 billion a year business, it is exceeded in its field only by automobiles.

It gives employment to about 350,000 men and women in all parts of the country. Wood furniture workers average $1.10 an hour and upholsterers $1.31. The Furniture Workers, with some 40,000 members, constitute the second largest union in the industry despite a loss of 8600 members since the fifth biennial convention in 1948.

I'd sooner see 60,000 members represented at our next convention than see Brother Perlow returned as secretary-treasurer . . . (The union now has approximately 40,000 members.)

"When is a union free? When is a man free? A union or a man is free not only when he has the desire for freedom but has the strength to build that freedom. Let's build a bigger and better and stronger union and we'll all be free.

"What they are asking us to do is to take our affiliation from the CIO and give it to the UE."

Mildred McArody, Local 140, New York: "I detect a 'lynch atmosphere' here like I used to see when I lived in Birmingham . . . We should have unity on a basis of workers, regardless of color or politics, instead of on a basis of policy made up somewhere else."

Lubert Taylor, Gardner, Mass.: "Let's have rank and file control."

Pension Pacts Signed For More Thousands

SEVERAL thousand more CIO members were added recently to those eligible for union-negotiated pensions and other benefits through the signing of agreements by two unions with five companies.

Fifteen thousand workers alone will be eligible under the pacts signed by the Textile Workers with three major carpet manufacturing companies—Bigelow Sanford, Thompsonville, Conn., and Amsterdam, N. Y.; Alexander Smith & Sons, Yonkers, N. Y., and A. M. Karagheusian, Inc., Freehold and Roselle, N. J.

Agreement in principle was reached last March in negotiations between the union and these companies, but formal agreement was made recently.

Thousands of other workers will benefit under agreements signed by the United Rubber Workers with the Republic Rubber Co., Youngstown, O., and the Dunlop Rubber Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

UNDER THE TWUA contracts, the companies will begin paying benefits Jan. 1, 1951, with the firms making up the difference between social security benefits and the $100-a-month figure for all workers retiring voluntarily at age 65 with 30 years' service.

Full cost will be paid by the companies. Retirement is not compulsory until the age of 72. At the age of 68, the company may retire a worker if the union agrees.

The agreements provide that workers shall receive credit in computing past service for all time previously worked regardless of breaks in continuity of such service.

The union has a voice in the administration of the pension programs which provide for arbitration in cases of disputes.

THE DUNLOP pact, hailed by URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster as "one of the most liberal insurance and welfare programs negotiated up to the present time," features $100 company-paid monthly pensions, including Social Security, to workers with 25 years of service who retire at age 65.

In addition, an early retirement clause is included. It pays a 60-year-old worker with 15 years' service a minimum of $50 monthly until age 65, after which he receives a normal pension.

Should Social Security benefits be increased, Buckmaster said, the $100 figure will be increased by half the boost given by the government.

THE COMPANY will also furnish group life insurance that expands with years of service and continues after retirement, he explained.

Coverage begins at $1000 for a new employe, is hiked to $2000 after three years of service and to $4000 after six years.

Buckmaster said the program will be administered by a board of trustees which will include representatives of the company and the union.

The insurance and welfare agreement will remain in effect for five years, he said.

THE REPUBLIC contract contains provisions that employes may retire at the age of 65 with 15 years' service under certain conditions and receive a proportionate amount of the company's contribution to the $100 basic pension. Like the Dunlop pact, the agreement provides that if social security benefits are expanded, the $100 pension will be increased by one-half of the federal boost.

A worker who retires with 15 years' service will receive a $50 monthly pension plus a dollar additional for each year of service exceeding 15. The $50 minimum with the dollar a year for service after 15 years holds true also for those forced to retire because of disability.

The agreement calls for the company to furnish $1000 accidental and dismemberment insurance, sickness and accident benefits of $25 a week for 13 weeks, up to $200 in surgical benefits and a 70-day hospitalization plan that pays up to $9 a day plus a maximum $90 for other related expenses.

Severance pay clauses provide one week's wages for each worker after five years service; one and one-half weeks' pay for each year after 10 years; and two weeks' wages for each year after 20 years of service.

Agree On DP Measure

A joint Senate-House conference agreed on a compromise Displaced Persons bill May 31 just 30 days before the deadline for passage of DP legislation. The bill will admit 340,000 DP's by June 30, 1951, including 150,000 who are already here.

WELFARE UPPERMOST: These representatives of various welfare agencies and the CIO Community Services Committee, which aids in raising money for private charity, met last week in Washington in connection with the five-day CSC conference. At the head of the table are Assistant Secy. of Labor Gibson (left) and CSC Dir. Leo Perlis. Others in the picture include representatives of the Red Cross, Boys Clubs of America, Family Service Association, Girl Scouts of America, National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, National Urban League, N. Y. State Citizens Commission, YWCA, the National Health League, Salvation Army, YMCA, and the Natl. Council of Jewish Women. A hundred delegates attended the parley.

CSC Institute Considers Way To Aid Unemployed, Strikers

THE 100 delegates to the CIO Community Service Committee's ninth annual five-day training institute in Washington, D. C., last week discussed ways and means of organizing services for the nation's unemployed and of developing effective machinery to serve the welfare needs of the CIO members on strike.

Local CIO-CSC staff representatives from more than 40 cities, in addition to representatives of various CIO unions and Industrial Union Councils attended the sessions.

Leo Perlis, CSC national director, said that representatives of more than 15 national public and social welfare agencies participated. Included were the Community Chests and Councils of America, U. S. Public Health Service, National Health Council, YMCA, YWCA, Red Cross, U. S. Dept. of Labor, Girl Scouts and the Urban League.

Everett Kassalow, director of the CIO Full Employment Committee, told the delegates that "unemployment is, and will continue to be, a continuing problem in the U. S. for years to come unless something is done about it through legislation."

William Batt, special assistant to Secy. of Labor Tobin, told the conference that he felt that the Board of Economic Advisers and the Labor Dept. had worked out the beginning of a program to end the continuing problem of unemployment.

Batt placed special emphasis on setting up state and local committees composed of management, labor and public officials who would pool their knowledge and resources to meet the problem. Committees such as these, he declared, had been able to attract and develop new industries.

Many delegates to the conference took issue with Batt. They said that management representatives on such committees frequently tried to use labor as a rubber stamp in bringing in anti-labor industries into the community.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey praised the work of CSC particularly that done on a world-wide basis. (CSC cooperates with such organizations as CARE.)

"The work you people in CSC are doing is essential work to the trade union movement. You are definitely a part of that movement," Carey said.

Carey declared that the foremost task of the CIO and CSC is to "make democracy work."

He sharply criticized the actions of Communists in the American trade union movement and charged that they had exploited the workers in the electrical industry for years.

THE DELEGATES discussed the problems of getting more labor representation on boards and committees of community organizations.

Perlis reported: 1. From 1942 through 1949, CIO contributions to community health and welfare organizations amounted to $250 million. 2. From 1942 through 1949 there has been an increase in CIO representatives serving on boards and committees of community organizations from 90 to 8000. 3. Since 1944, when the union counseling program was initiated, 10,000 union counselors have been trained in Steel, Auto, Textile, Amalgamated and other CIO unions. 4. The CSC field staff has been increased from 16 in 1946 to 42 at present.

Pensions Negotiated

An agreement on a company-financed pension plan has been reached between the Detroit Guild-CIO and the weekly Michigan Catholic, official organ of the Detroit archdiocese, for 20 employes. Eligible will be employes at 65 after 20 years' service, who will then have a choice between pensions and severance pay, which now runs to 30 weeks.

Steelworkers Rout MMSU In Michigan

LOST! by the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Union—2800 members in upper Michigan.

GAINED! by the CIO Steelworkers—the same 2800 members in upper Michigan.

That's the story and MMSU is stuck with it. The members took a powder from five separate MMSU Locals and are now affiliated with USA District 33, as a result of National Labor Relations Board elections.

Leading the parade out of MMSU were 350 workers of the Inland Lime & Stone Co., Manistique, Mich. They voted to leave shortly after MMSU was given the heave-ho by the CIO for following the party line. They are now members of USA Local 4302.

Following the Manistique example in rapid succession were MMSU members at the Copper Range Railroad Co. in Houghton, Mich.; miners at the Quincy Copper Co. in Mason, Mich., and workers at the Atlas Powder Co. in Senter, Mich.

Approximately 2000 copper workers at the Calumet-Hecla Copper Co. in Calumet, Mich. completed the picture by voting for USA-CIO in a National Labor Relations Board election.

At Calumet-Hecla the copper workers voted for the Steelworkers by a 908 to 869 margin despite the fact that MMSU has had a contract there for eight years. USA representatives say that the Calumet-Hecla defeat crushed the last remaining MMSU outpost in the Copper country.

At Morristown, Tenn.

Union Leader Beaten As Guardsmen Watch

THERE ARE ways in which Blackie Warwick is an unusual figure in the Morristown, Tenn., local of the CIO Textile Workers. For one thing, this isn't his first strike.

This is his country — in the parochial sense that the mountain people talk about their country; he was born 15 miles from here over in Anderson County 47 years ago.

But he wandered—to Detroit in the twenties, and the Chrysler sitdown in 1936, to Oak Ridge during the war, and to General Electric at Erie a little while afterwards.

When he came to the big new American Enka plant in Lowlands (near Morristown) two years ago, he joined the CIO. Wherever he had been since Chrysler, he had been in the union.

WHEN THE CIO walked out of American Enka last March 28, it was Blackie Warwick who went out last to encourage the stragglers. From then on, he was to the strike what Eddie Stanky is supposed to be to an infield.

He is not large. His combed hair is very black and his whole body is swarthy. There is no beef on him. He wears black shell glasses and the lines in his face go deep; it is a worn, sad face, but I do not suppose it looked quite so fagged out a week ago.

I do not suppose either that his voice was quite so low and slow and shot with pain as it was on the rainy night he told his story in a car outside a union meeting.

★ ★ ★

THE SHERIFF'S deputies and the highway patrolmen had come to know the old Warwick voice very well on the American Enka picket line. Blackie had learned a few unusual epithets in Detroit and he used to stand and pour it on when the non-strikers came out the gates.

When the pickets thought they were being pushed around, it was Blackie who handled the troopers. "They all knew me," he says now.

This sort of thing, long continued, was a violation of the anti-picketing injunction a Tennessee court had issued to American Enka. And so at 1:30 in the afternoon of Memorial Day, shortly after the National Guard had landed, they came to get Blackie Warwick and 14 other CIO members for contempt of the injunction.

They had found him and six others in the union hall. A National Guardsman, deputized for the occasion, served the paper and a State Highway patrolman, Tommy Sams, led them away. When they reached the Hamblen County jail, a bulky, dark-haired highway sergeant, Carl Gilbert, took charge of the prisoners.

The jail is a homey enough spot; they book you in a spare front office and then they lead you through a room with a double bed and down a set of stairs to the cells.

There is no dispute about what happened to Blackie Warwick before he reached the head of those stairs. Sheriff Bob Medlin, a very pleasant fellow with graying hair, sun glasses and a gabardine suit, says that at that point Blackie attacked one of his escort.

It was necessary the sheriff said, for the defenders of the peace to protect their own people.

In the ensuing scuffle, Blackie Warwick, by the sheriff's account, "fell down stairs"—an explanation of the misfortunes that sometimes happen to people in bucolic Bastilles so common that you get to copying it down as "f.d.s."

BLACKIE WARWICK has sworn by affidavit that it happened like this:

He took his first step down and then Carl Gilbert, apparently an old f.d.s. man himself, stuck out his foot to trip him. Blackie caught the guard rail with his arm and then it happened.

Carl Gilbert hit the right side of his head with a black-jack. Patrolman Bill Chapman hit him on the left. As Blackie went down those stairs rolling, the jailer, a white-haired and feeble old dodderer named Haskins, was sufficiently inflamed by the sight of blood to begin beating him with the jail keys.

As Blackie lay there, Tommy Sams pistol-whipped his kidneys and his back and his ribs. Blackie Warwick remembers it all because he says, "Hell, they couldn't knock me unconscious."

And at the bottom of the stairs, in his blood, they booted him 35 feet to the cell and they opened the door and they kicked him in.

No one else saw all this—except maybe 15 National Guardsmen, called in by the Governor to suppress violence, who stood and watched at the top of the stairs as it was going on.

★ ★ ★

BUT THIS MUCH is true beyond any doubt. Blackie Warwick lay and slowly bled on a bunk in that cell for almost an hour and a half. He got a doctor only because Bob Cahoon, the union's lawyer, and Silas Switzer, its business agent, went down to the jail and insisted on it.

The doctor was allowed into the cell at last. Haskins let him in, announcing by the way that Blackie had hit his head on the cell door. The doctor came out at last to say that Warwick would have to go to the hospital.

He went there accompanied by a group of Guard MPs and Switzer and Cahoon. What happened at the hospital is another story. I will add only this:

Blackie Warwick's hospital diagnosis showed that he had been hit five times on the right side of his head with a blunt instrument, he had five cracked ribs, and that, when the blood washed off, his body down to the crotch was blue with bruises. All this happened while the Tennessee Guard was keeping the peace. Some of them saw it and none of them made a move to help.

But for the five days he was in the hospital, a Guard MP was always at Blackie Warwick's side. The union paid his hospital bill.

THE DAY AFTER Memorial Day Highway Patrolman Carl Gilbert and Tommy Sams came to see him.

Tommy Sams, who lives here in this county, hung his head a little and said, "I'm sorry this happened, Blackie."

But Gilbert just looked at him. "Well," he said at last, "I see you're still alive."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD (center), CIO vice president and director of organization, has just presented the charter of the new California Industrial Union Council to Richard T. Leonard, council administrator. Left to right, James Drury, CIO field representative; Leonard; Haywood; Secy.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council and Harold Shapiro, West Coast director of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

New California Council Pledges Its Loyalty To CIO Policy

FIVE MONTHS ago, the members and leaders of California CIO unions got a job to do. Their assignment came from CIO Pres. Philip Murray: Organize and build a new State CIO Council and get it rolling on the economic, legislative and political action problems of California workers.

That assignment was carried out last week end by 702 delegates from 151 local unions representing 150,000 workers.

Meeting in Long Beach, Calif., in the founding constitutional convention of the new CIO California Industrial Union Council, delegates ironed out the organizational problems of the new council, elected officers, took a strong stand in support of CIO trade union policies.

They also adopted a civil rights-legislative-political action program that will serve as a fighting liberal guidepost for California CIO in the year ahead.

THE CONVENTION, focusing attention on the biggest CIO organizing drive now under way in the state, pledged full backing to employes in vegetable packingsheds who are fighting for "a union run from the bottom up, not from the top down."

And the council demanded congressional investigation of collaboration between the Food and Tobacco Workers, grower-shipper employer groups, and regional National Labor Relation Board officials which has stalled demands for an immediate bargaining election demanded by 4000 CIO packinghouse workers.

The convention also:

Condemned the Mundt-Nixon bill and the regents' oath at the Univ. of California, and supported Fair Employment Practices legislation, created a working Civil Rights Committee.

Set as an "immediate objective the alleviation of unemployment."

Condemned anti-labor operations of the State Dept. of Employment; attacked moves to kill rent controls nationally and, through a state initiative, to block new public housing units.

Gave all-out support to the CIO Clothing Workers union label campaign.

THE POLICY and organizational decisions of the State CIO Council were backed up by election—unanimously and without contest—of officers and executive board members pledged "to work together to build a fighting CIO team."

Manuel Dias, nominated as "a real rank and file trade unionist," was elected president. A member of the United Auto Workers since 1936, he recently was reelected as financial secretary of the big Local 76 in Oakland.

John A. Despol, member of the CIO Steelworkers since 1937, was elected to the full time administrative post of secretary-treasurer. Despol for the past two years has served in a similar post in the California National CIO-PAC, interim organization of pro-CIO local unions during the period before chartering of the new State Council.

TWENTY-THREE Executive Board members were elected by allocation, with the five largest unions affiliated with the council—Steel, Auto, Oil, Rubber and Telephone — allocated two board posts. Board members are:

Auto: DeWitt Stone and E. J. Franklin, of Los Angeles.

Clothing: Jerome Posner, of Los Angeles.

Telephone: Ralph Hern, Los Angeles; Manny Silva, Oakland.

Furniture: Anthony Scardaci, San Francisco.

Government Workers: Frank White, San Francisco.

Lithographers: Ted Brandt, Los Angeles.

Shipbuilding: Vic Colbary, San Pedro.

National Maritime Union: Max McLarin, San Pedro.

Newpaper Guild: Sam Eubanks, Oakland.

Oil: Court Meyers, Long Beach; A. A. Marcos, Rodeo.

Packinghouse: John Slevin, Los Angeles.

American Radio Association: Philip O'Rourke.

Rubber: S. W. Pratt, Oakland; H. H. Wilson, Los Angeles.

Steel: Joseph Angelo, Oakland; R. R. Clark, Los Angeles.

Textile: James McKenna, Oakland.

Utility: Everett Scott, Los Angeles.

Woodworkers: Joseph Clark, Oroville.

Local Industrial Unions: Lum Moorehead, Watsonville, of LIU 78, packingshed workers.

The ILWU and Transport Workers declined to nominate board members.

The three-day Long Beach convention was primarily a working convention, marked by vigorous, free and open debate on major resolutions—for example, support of CIO workers in the vegetable packingsheds, and a vigorous condemnation of the Mundt-Nixon-Ferguson bills, which a few party-liners tried to twist into defense of the Communist Party.

DELEGATES MADE emphatic their repudiation of those who claim civil liberties for themselves in order to destroy the freedom of those who would oppose them. While denouncing the totalitarians of the left, the convention in equally strong language denounced totalitarians of the right who advocate the same dictatorial regimes as the party-liners.

Keynote speaker was Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, who reviewed the whole scope of problems before CIO, was optimistic on the possibility of future unification of the U. S. labor movement, and called on the California IUC to "adopt a vigorous policy" and "set up a Council that will serve your unions and advance the interests of every member of CIO of every color and creed."

170 Falsely Arrested—TWUA

THE CIO Textile Workers Union is suing for false arrest of more than 170 workers on strike at the Enka Corp. plant near Morristown, Tenn.

An injunction limiting pickets to six at the plant gate was issued by Chancellor Ben Robertson on May 24. The judge rides the circuit in that part of Tennessee, including Hamblem county, where the Lowlands plant of Enka is located.

A few days after he issued the order, and had moved on to another town, the clerk of the court added an amendment to it (drawn up by the company attorney) stating that no one could picket anywhere near the plant, according to the union.

It was on the basis of this second order, of which most of the community was unaware, that charges were brought against 170-odd pickets who had taken their turns at what they thought was legal picketing in front of the plant.

The judge returned to Hamblem county June 6. When he heard what had happened the sulphurous mountain profanity he used against the company made the rafters ring. He then had the entire injunction withdrawn.—LPA

Puerto Rico Union Owns Railroad Where Members Work

THE FORMER owners of the Puerto Rico Railroad Co. have found out to their sorrow that refusal to pay minimum wages is "A h—— of a way to run a railroad."

They must be very sorry, indeed. For they no longer own the railroad.

As a result of the failure of the company to pay minimum wages, all the railroad's property will shortly be in the hands of the employes, who are members of the Confederacion General de Trabajadores (CGT)—the General Confederation of Workers of Puerto Rico.

Their specific union is the Railroad Workers of Puerto Rico.

(CGT last February received a CIO industrial union council charter at a ceremony in which a number of CIO and CGT leaders participated.)

THE RAILROAD never believed in the Wage and Hour Act and defied it ever since it went into effect on the island in October, 1938—even though the minimum wage there and on the Virgin Islands was only 25c an hour.

The railroad paid some of its employes only 3c an hour for as long as three years!

The litigation that terminated in the acquisition of the railroad by the workers extended over a period of nine years.

Apparently the railroad realized that it would have to come to terms with its workers. Management sold the workers a "bill of goods," whereby the claims for back wages were settled out of court for $700,000, which was only 45% of the amount due them.

IN RETURN the workers signed "releases," absolving the company of all obligation. Wiser heads prevailed among the railroad employes. They consulted with Ernesto Ramos Antonini, secretary of foreign relations and legal adviser of CGT.

(Ramos Antonini is also speaker of the Puerto Rico House of Representatives.)

The CGT legal adviser sued the company in the U. S. District Court for Puerto Rico. He not only sought nullification of the settlement but also claimed that the company owed the workers a total of about $3 million, which would include the additional 55% on back wages and 100% indemnification.

THE COURT, however, ruled for the company. Not one to give up easily, Ramos Antonini carried the case to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston, which found for the union.

The company also was determined to win—if possible—and carried the case to the U. S. Supreme Court, which upheld the appellate court.

The company went into bankruptcy. The workers saw the fruits of their hard-fought legal battle slipping away, because there was a possibility that under bankruptcy proceedings they would receive a sum considerably less than the court judgment.

At the request of Ramos Antonini and leaders of the Railroad Workers, Puerto Rico's Gov. Luis Munos Marin conducted an investigation of the railroad with the aim of turning it over to the employes.

One day last month was a happy day for the members of the Puerto Rico railroad union because the documents conveying the railroad to the workers were signed.

The workers have 40 years to complete the purchase of the railroad, which they will operate through a cooperative, which they have already set up. In a few weeks all the railroad's property will be in their possession.

A few days later was another red letter day in the history of the rail union. That was the day $712,714—in checks and in shares of stock of the cooperative—were distributed to the union members at San Juan, Ponce and Mayaguez.

Ramos Antonini spoke at the ceremony at which the first checks and securities were distributed. Others present included George De Nucci, CIO representative in Puerto Rico; Ernest Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs, and Fernando Zegri, receiver of the bankrupt railroad.

So, if you travel in Puerto Rico, your train will be operated by workers who also own the railroad.

ERNESTO RAMOS ANTONINI (right), adviser to the General Confederation of Workers of Puerto Rico (CIO), begins distribution to workers on the Puerto Rico Railroad of more than $712,000 in back wages and shares of stock in the cooperative which will operate the railroad.

House Ups Fines Of Anti-Trust Act

After hearing Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.) observe that "the cost of sinning should at least keep up with the cost of living," the House voted June 5 to increase tenfold the maximum criminal penalty for violating the Sherman anti-trust act.

Instead of $5000, a judge could fine an offender $50,000 for each transgression of the anti-monopoly law. The $5000 fine, Keating said, was all right in the "gay nineties" when the Sherman act was originally passed, but today constitutes only a "slap on the wrist" to a giant corporation.

The House Judiciary committee, in its report urging passage of the bill, observed that enforcement of the anti-trust laws can't be based "upon some whimsical hope that powerful companies will selflessly confine their economic behavior."

The bill now goes to the Senate Judiciary committee, which has just reported favorably on a bill to plug a loophole in the anti-trust laws which allows corporations to gain control over a competitor by acquiring its physical assets. This bill, which also originated with the House Judiciary committee, has been passed by the House.

ANNOUNCEMENT of the CIO Transport Workers $14-million package victory was made by New York City's Mayor William O'Dwyer last week, following a conference with CIO Pres. Murray, TWU leaders and commissioners of the Board of Transportation. Left to right, seated, Michael J. Quill, TWU president; O'Dwyer, and Murray; standing, Louis A. Hollander, New York State CIO president; Matthew Guinan, president of TWU Local 100, embracing 50,000 New York transit workers; Francis X. Sullivan and G. Joseph Minetti, transit commissioners. The possibility of a 5-day, 40-hour week will be studied.

City-Employed TWU Members Win 11c Pay Boost in New York

SOME 42,000 workers, most of them members of the CIO Transport Workers employed by New York City's municipally-owned bus and trolley system, will get an 11c hourly boost in pay and other improvements recommended by a Fact-Finding Board appointed by Mayor William O'Dwyer last January.

The Mayor announced his acceptance of the recommendations made in the board's report, issued on May 31, at a press conference last week attended by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, TWU Pres. Michael Quill and other CIO officials.

Murray and Quill joined the mayor in acclaiming the board's proposal for overhauling the labor relations machinery of the city Board of Transportation to provide more effective handling of grievances and generally improve inefficient operation of the city-owned transit facilities.

Murray praised the mayor for his foresightedness in appointing the fact-finding board and accepting its recommendations. He called the new labor machinery "the most outstanding aspect" of the report and expressed hope that it would be successful in eliminating chaotic conditions and preventing interruptions of service.

Quill said representatives of his union would be willing to sit down with the Board of Transportation and work out a memoranda of understanding that would be in effect for two years. The union's formal acceptance of the recommendations will not be given until members affected vote on it by secret ballot on June 16, but union officials were confident that the response would be overwhelmingly favorable.

The 11c increase will cover some 25,000 hourly paid workers and raise basic pay rates to $1.55 an hour.

Additional increases recommended include a boost of $300 a year for 3400 annually paid workers, and an 11c hourly raise for transit police, or the same pay they would get if they were part of the City Police Dept., whichever is less.

Other recommendations call for three weeks' paid vacation after 10 or more years of service; accumulated sick leave to a maximum of 96 days a year, and the addition of Armistice Day to the list of holidays.

The board's report recommended that a study be made with the advice and assistance of independent industrial engineers to develop a plan for achieving a five-day, 40-hour week. The union had asked a cut from 48 to 40 hours weekly.

Dutch Wage Cuts O.K. If Aid To Integration

Members of the Dutch Socialist Labor Federation, largest in Holland, are willing to accept wage cuts and other hardships to achieve an integrated western Europe economy, according to Ad Vermeulen, secretary of the Nederlands Verbond Van Bakverenigingen.

Only by holding to this goal can the final aim of full employment in the Marshall Plan countries be achieved, he told the other two main Dutch labor federations, the Protestant labor union and the Catholic union.

"Integration of Europe," he said, "will not mean anything except words until it begins to hurt at home. We in Dutch labor are willing to accept our share of the hurt in order to win, in the end, the gains we must have."

Rumely, Kamp May Be Cited For Contempt

THERE IS strong possibility that Dr. Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, and Joseph P. Kamp, executive vice chairman of the Constitutional Educational League, will be cited for contempt of Congress.

Both organizations are intensely anti-labor.

Rumely on June 6 flatly refused to tell the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities the names of individuals, corporations and institutions which place bulk orders for such CCG publications as John T. Flynn's anti-Fair Deal "The Road Ahead."

On the same day Kamp declined to supply corresponding information about his organization. Kamp, having lost an appeal to the Supreme Court, is already under sentence to serve a prison term for declining to produce records for an earlier investigating committee.

MERWIN K. HART, president of the Natl. Economic Council, and long a spokesman for Spanish Dictator Francisco Franco, did produce the records of his group, however. Hart, Kamp and Rumely had been subpoenaed to appear by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), chairman of the lobby probe, after they balked at identifying their financial backers voluntarily.

When he announced May 26 that he was issuing the subpoenas, Buchanan voiced his belief that the Committee for Constitutional Government is the parent organization of a lobby network which is trying to destroy the Fair Deal and smother organized labor.

At that time, the Pennsylvania liberal said he thought that information about their financial support would reveal that Kamp's and Hart's groups are directly linked to the CCG. He indicated that other organizations probably would be involved and apparently he hoped to prove the existence of the network.

The hearing June 6 was a Donnybrook Fair, with Democratic members of the lobbying committee arrayed against the Republican minority and the witnesses. First off, the Republicans didn't show up.

Buchanan deliberately delayed opening the proceedings because he wanted a four-man quorum present in case a contempt situation developed. The Supreme Court has ruled that a quorum must be present for contempt to be upheld.

SINCE ONE OF the four Democratic members was absent for the California primaries, Buchanan needed at least one Republican. Finally Republicans Brown of Ohio and O'Hara of Minnesota showed up 50 minutes late.

Brown immediately threw the meeting into an uproar by questioning Buchanan's right to subpoena the three witnesses. Afterwards, Buchanan said Brown was raising a smokescreen.

Rumely, who appeared with his counsel, told the comittee he had brought part of the information demanded in the subpoena. But he said he would not produce the names of those who purchased the CCG's literature or who loaned the CCG money to promote Flynn's book or Fighters for Freedom, a CCG subsidiary.

Rumely, who was acquitted of contempt of Congress four years ago after two trials, blandly maintained that the CCG is in the publishing business and claimed that Buchanan was violating the freedom of the press by probing its activities. He was not allowed to read a statement because he had defied the subpoena.

Although he admits the CCG sells literature below cost, Rumely in the past has fallen back on the contention that his organization is just a publishing house. He told Buchanan that he and the CCG had registered as lobbyists "under protest." Rep. Henderson Lanham (D. Ga.), reminded him sharply that the committee was not interfering with the content of CCG literature but only inquiring into his methods.

DURING Rumely's testimony, there were frequent hot exchanges among Buchanan, Lanham, Brown, Rep. Carl Albert (D. Okla), and the witness, with Brown taking Rumely's side. In fact, hot exchanges marked the appearance of all three witnesses.

Hart tried to read a statement before handing in his financial records, but was forced to convey the records first. In his prepared statement, Hart denied that he or his organization is either Fascist or anti-Semitic, although he has been described as both on many occasions.

Whether Hart's financial statements are complete or satisfactory will not be known until the committee has examined them. Buchanan did not reveal the names of Hart's backers, those who have contributed more then $100 to his organization. Hart said he had registered as a lobbyist.

JOSEPH P. KAMP

Kamp, who is executive vice-chairman of the Constitutional Educational League, may face a citation for contempt of Congress.

KAMP, WHO is not a registered lobbyist, produced nothing for the committee. He said his organization, the Constitutional Educational League, is not a lobby, and that he appeared in response to the subpoena to explain his position. Under questioning from Brown, he declared that if the organization could be proved to be a lobby, he would produce the records or face the consequences.

Whether the committee will take contempt action against Kamp and Rumely will not be known until after Buchanan calls a meeting in executive session. Meanwhile, Rep. Cox (D. Ga.) was reported planning to introduce a resolution in the House disbanding the committee.

Spy Tells Of Getting Dope On Tanker Crews

A FORMER Coast Guard intelligence officer told a trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board that he operated a labor spy service for the Cities Service Oil Co. in 1948-49 during a union organizing campaign in its tanker fleet.

The ex-officer, John Irwin Dugan, testified at New York City during hearings on charges by the Atlantic and Gulf district of the Seafarers International Union —AFL, of unfair labor practices.

Dugan, an attorney specializing in maritime affairs, testified he had been retained by the company's lawyers to report on:

1. The activities of SIU members aboard Cities Service ships.

2. Ascertain the strength of the union in the fleet.

3. "Other pertinent information."

"They employed me to get information and supplied me with funds to pay the individuals," Dugan admitted. Utilizing his wartime experience in the Coast Guard, Dugan said, he "approached my former associates" in the Coast Guard, got the names of three men, and hired two.

He said that between June, 1948, and September, 1949, he paid Anthony Lawrence Hennessey $2100 and John Basciano $4100. (The cancelled checks were offered in evidence at the hearing.)

He instructed the two, Dugan testified, "to report on all activities of the SIU"; gave them passes to board all company vessels; that they sailed on CS ships, made periodic reports, and after each trip were assigned to other ships "to follow the same routine." Dugan said for his services he got "several hundred dollars a month."

The SIU had been certified as collective bargaining agent for the company's 16 tankers as the result of victories in two NLRB elections. An interim agreement on wage gains was reached March 10, 1950, but the company has been stalling in negotiations.

The current hearings are being held on charges by the NLRB that the company warned its employes they would be fired if they joined the union; that the company engaged in labor spying; that the company fired 160 union members in 1949.

The union seeks reinstatement of the 160, payment of $150,000 they would have earned, and an order directing the company to bargain and to disestablish the Citco Tanker Men's Association, so-called "independent" union.

Dugan testified at the hearing that the company's lawyers not only wanted labor spying but also looked into the possibility of restricting radio communications between the union members aboard ships and the SIU headquarters.

His testimony followed that of Joseph A. Jenkins, representing the NLRB, who charged that a company official made it impossible for crew members to send or receive messages after Feb. 17, 1949, in an effort to interfere with an NLRB election set for three days later. (LPA)

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The victory by IUE-CIO in the Westinghouse run-off election in East Pittsburgh, Pa., was due in large part to President Murray's personal direction, the assistance of CIO Regional Dir. Federoff, and the assistance extended by both the Steelworkers and CIO Staff. Thanks to all for a job well done.

The day that many CIO workers in California had been waiting for arrived June 3, when the California State Industrial Union Council held its convention in Long Beach Cal. The writer had the pleasure of presenting the charter to the council and at the same time addressed the gathering. This was a new day for the workers in California, something they had not had in a long time due to the Communist Party control.

Manuel Dias of the UAW-CIO was elected president and John Despol was elected secretary-treasurer. Congratulations are extended to Richard Leonard for his excellent handling of this situation. Brother Leonard had splendid cooperation from CIO Regional Dirs. Tim Flynn and Irwin DeShetler.

The writer also attended the United Furniture Workers Convention in Chicago, Ill., that convened on June 5. The Reds were thoroughly routed by a vote of 25,524 to 6307 in a vote in support of CIO policy down the line despite the vicious report of Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow and Director of Organization Ernest Marsh.

As this column was written the real trade unionists were expected to be swept into office. President Morris Pizer and Jack Hochstadt, and the members of the Rank and File Committee deserve a great deal of credit for their fine support of trade unionism. There will be more to report on this convention in next week's column.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci and USA-CIO Intl. Rep. Nick Zonarich report that the United Steelworkers were again victorious over the discredited Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in a representation election held among the Bingham Canyon, Utah, underground miners of the United States Smelting, Mining & Refining Co. The vote was as follows: Eligible 338; USA-CIO 207; Mine, Mill 94; void 3.

This brings the entire three integrated operations of the United States Smelting, Mining & Refining Co. into the bargaining unit of USA-CIO, which consists of 1200 employes. Two of the locals came into the USA-CIO by a vote of the membership a few weeks ago, making a labor board election unnecessary. Intl. Rep. Zonarich also reports in another representation election held at the American Smelting & Refining Co., Garfield, Utah, the USA-CIO was victorious by a huge margin. The workers voted USA-CIO 431; Mine, Mill 5.

Field Rep. Frank Deutsch reports that in a representation election held at the Philco Corp., Sandusky, O., the IUE won two units as follows: IUE 912, no union 9; IUE 105, no union 2. The discredited UE withdrew from both elections.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a representation election held at the Singer Co., South Bend, Ind., the workers voted in favor of the IUE-CIO by a vote of 1079 for IUE-CIO, 196 for UE and 12 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports two IUE-CIO representation election victories in Hartford, Conn.: Terry Steam Turbine Co., IUE-CIO 103, no union, 2; Billings & Spencer Co., IUE 151, no union 2. The UE withdrew from both elections.

Al Hartnett, assistant to Chairman Carey of IUE-CIO reports the following IUE-CIO representation election victories: Westinghouse, East Pittsburgh, Pa., IUE 5964, UE 5706; American Bosch Corp., Springfield, Mass., IUE 964, UE 724, no union 18; Bassick Co., Bridgeport, Conn., IUE 684, no union 21, UE withdrew; Stremel Mfg. Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 48, no union 0, UE withdrew; 20th Century Brass Works, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 31, UE 15, no union 0; Ingersoll-Rand, Painted Post, N. Y., IUE 824, UE 275, no union 29; Teller-Cooper, New York, N. Y., IUE 43, UE 13, no union 0; Huffman Mfg. Co., Dayton, Ohio, IUE 244, no union 8, UE withdrew.

Dist. Dir. W. J. Trombley of the Oil Workers International Union-CIO reports that in a representation election held at the Jacob Stern & Sons Chemical Co., Philadelphia, Pa., the workers voted in favor of OWIU-CIO by a vote of 33 for OWIU to 9 for no union. OWIU Rep. E. J. Steiger was in charge of the campaign.

Steel Strike In 14th Week

NOT ALL THE ice picks in South Milwaukee, Wis., where the CIO Steelworkers are in the 14th week of their strike against the Bucyrus-Erie plant, are being used to chip ice these days.

Recently somebody used one to "ice pick" all four tires on the car of Steelworker Field Representative Emerson F. Miller. The process consists of almost but not quite puncturing the inner tubes of an automobile tire.

Heat, generated especially at high speeds, makes all four tires blow out, wrecking the car.

Fortunately for Miller, he was driving slowly when he noticed his tires were giving off a "burning smell." He investigated and discovered the tiny holes which might have cause his death.

The company is continuing its stalling tactics and the 1200 strikers have dug in for a long siege. Only one meeting has been held with management since the strike began.

Two-thirds of the Steelworkers have found jobs to date, according to Claude Smith, local president. Strikers who have found work make a weekly contribution to the strike fund, he said.

Financial and food contributions from state CIO locals continue to pour into strike headquarters. The latest gifts reported were $1000 from Local 9 of the Brewery Workers and $500 from Local 1173, Steelworkers.

Lobby Turns To Grass Roots To Lick Housing

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

CONGRESS last year passed a bill providing for 810,000 units of low-rent public housing to be built over a six-year period in cities that requested funds.

Only a relative handful of people are now aware that the real estate lobby is still fighting the bill and is having a significant degree of success.

When the National Association of Real Estate Boards and the National Association of Home Builders lost the fight on Capitol Hill they moved it out into the field, where it would attract less attention. And it is a no-holds barred, brass-knuckles fight.

The technique is to use democratic processes to thwart the bill, proceeding on the cynical, and too often correct, theory that one of the best ways to deprive people of what they want and need is to give them a chance to vote on it.

The campaign is the brain-child of Herbert U. ("Democracy stinks") Nelson, NAREB's executive vice president, who believes that cities (where the low-rent projects would be built) are populated by "the mass-man, devoid of intelligence, devoid of civic responsibility." (See full-length quotation elsewhere on this page.)

On NAREB's advice, and with a bulging "kit" of NAHB's ideas to draw upon, including prepared advertising copy, the local landlords go before their city councils and demand that the council turn down the federal funds and leave low-rent housing to private enterprise. So far, 22 city councils have followed their advice.

IF THE CITY council goes ahead and votes to accept funds, as 554 of them have done, then the real estate orchestra really tunes up, and blares for "democratic" referendum. Why foist this on the public when we don't know whether the public wants it? is the slogan.

So far, 12 such referenda have been held, and NAREM has won eight of them—in Racine, Wis., Grand Rapids, Mich., South Haven, Mich., Seattle, Wash., Yakima, Wash., Portland, Ore., Astoria, Ore., and St. Petersburg, Fla.

NAREB lost in Little Rock, Ark., Beaumont, Tex., Seagoville, Tex., and Waco, Tex., but it wasn't for lack of effort.

The techniques outlined in the NAHB "kit" are simple. The basic idea is that if you tell loud, easily understood lies over and over again, you will be believed.

The referendum campaign is pitched at the lowest level—and the pro-public housing forces are having to pick up a trick or two from NAHB in order to undo the damage. A high-minded, factual campaign for public housing is almost bound to fail.

The "kit" bristles with arguments and phony statistics, which have been picked up and used verbatim in "spontaneous outbursts of public sentiment" all over the country. The "kit" also supplies sample advertisements, also widely used.

(In California, NAREB is really getting optimistic—it is trying to get a state-wide referendum on a proposed amendment to the state constitution which would provide that no city can accept public housing funds without a referendum, in which a majority of all eligible voters, not just those voting, must favor public housing.

Some 204,000 signatures are required on the petition to get this proposal onto the November ballot, and a paid signature-getter, Joe Robinson, is enriching himself in a hurry, selling the proposition as one that simply "gives the people of each city and town the right through local referendum to approve or reject housing projects in their own community.")

NAREB's Nelson Doesn't Think Much Of City Dwellers

Here is another quote from Herbert U. ("Democracy stinks") Nelson, $25,000-a-year executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. This one is from an editorial in "Headlines," the NAREB publication.

"Today the great threat to our democratic institutions, to the republican form of government, and ultimately to freedom itself, lies in our big cities.

"They are populated, for the most part, with the mass-man, devoid of intelligence, devoid of civic responsibility. He talks only about rights and has no conception of responsiblities. He will vote for anyone who offers him something for nothing, whether it be subway fares at half price or public housing at one-third price. . .

"Our one hope of survival as a free country is that rural and semi-rural areas still dominate most of our state legislatures through their representatives, and still dominate the House of Representatives in Washington. Our best hope for the future is to keep it that way."

IN PORTLAND, ORE., the referendum brought out 60% of the city's registered voters, and public housing was licked 62,000 to 53,000. The supporters of public housing included 17 organizations and a score of Portland's most prominent citizens. The opponents were just three groups—the Portland Realty Board, the Home Builders' Association, and the Oregon Savings and Loan League.

The proponents campaigned on a high and reasonable level. With limited funds, they bought newspaper space to point out the housing shortage, the prevailing wage level, and the fact that no extra taxes would be levied to support the new project. In the last two weeks they went a little further, and made careful fun of the "faceless man" (NAREB) behind the anti-housing campaign.

But they were up against tactics such as an advertisement which came straight out of NAHB's "kit." "Can You Afford to Pay Someone Else's Rent?", the ad screamed, on billboards in the papers, on the radio. The "explanation" was that since the housing act "forbids" local governments to tax the projects, the money to build and maintain them must come from local taxpayers.

(The truth is that while cities are forbidden to tax the projects, they may collect a certain amount in lieu of taxes, and that no city that has built a housing project in the 13 years since the government first sponsored the program has ever suffered a tax loss because of it. In fact, many cities report increased revenues. The housing is built with federal funds, and the rentals pay for upkeep and a little over. The total amount per federal taxpayer for the entire program is estimated at approximately 14 cents a month.)

The NAREB boys pulled out all the "stops." They called public housing "political housing," implying that only those that voted right would get in. They said no relief clients would be housed, which is a downright lie. They fanned race prejudice in a series of ads headed "Do You Want a Housing Project in Your Neighborhood?"

Of course, they called it "socialism." They said public housing penalized people who practiced thrift. They said it did nothing to clear slums. They said it would destroy property values.

"It stinks!" said one of the ads, referring to the "waste, corruption, inefficiency, incompetence, bureaucracy" of the "conniving fat-salaried gimme boys."

IN LITTLE ROCK, Ark., where public housing won the referendum, the campaign was even nastier. The "Taxpayers' Defense Council," set up according to the NAHB "kit" suggestion, hired a corps of young men to pose as "city appraisers." They went around calling on home owners all over the city, announcing solemnly that the city had condemned the land for a public housing project and would buy the home and tear it down. They worked in pairs, and commented to each other about what a shame it was to pay only $1600 or so for a home that would obviously bring $10,000 on the open market. Fortunately this boomeranged because they tried it on some of the wrong people. And the pro-housing campaigners had a good deal of political savvy themselves.

In the next few months, referenda are scheduled in Miami, Fla. (June 27), Houston, Tex. (July 9), Jackson City, Mich. (Nov. 8), Flint, Mich. (Nov. 8), and Tucson, Ariz. (Sept. 26).

IUE Wins Three More

The Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers-CIO last week won three more National Labor Relations Board elections, defeating the discredited United Electrical Workers in two of them. In the third poll UE was not on the ballot. Results were:

White Sewing Machine Co., Cleveland, Ohio, IUE 1295, no union 30.

Ingraham Clock Co., Bristol, Conn., IUE 1049, UE 779. This was a runoff.

Sylvania Electric Co., Huntington, W. Va., IUE 184, UE 122.

Another Clash Over T-H

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board will not go along with General Counsel Robert M. Denham's policy exempting the building trades unions from the union-shop provisions of the Taft-Hartley act.

In a statement of policy issued June 6, the NLRB members declared that if the law is unworkable in the building trades (as everyone agrees) it is up to them to report the fact to Congress, rather than to change the law themselves by administrative exemption of a single industry. This is the first time that the board has declared its stand on the matter, but is not the first time it differed with Denham.

Both the Taft and the Administration bills to amend the T-H act, voted down by Congress last year, would have eliminated all union-shop elections, which have turned out to be a costly proof of the fact that workers really want their unions.

Last December, Denham said he would waive union-shop elections in the construction industry because the nature of the industry in some areas would make such elections impossible. Denham has not been sending the board any unfair labor practice cases involving the construction industry.

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 19, 1950 82 No. 25

"THEY'VE GOT GOLD on their side but we've got people on our side, and that gold won't buy those people!" Thus Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, keynoted a one-day special PAC conference in Washington on June 16 to kick off the 1950 Congressional campaigns. Special guest was Joseph Keenan, director of the AFL Labor's League for Political Education. Photo: the crowd of top-rank CIO officials attending the conference. Inset: Keenan (left) and Kroll. CIO Lauds Furniture Union For Ending CP Control

TWO MORE unions found to have been Communist-dominated were expelled last week by the CIO Executive Board during the course of a heavy-schedule one-day meeting.

But a third union—the United Furniture Workers—which was accused last November along with 11 others of following Communist policies rather than those of the CIO, was praised for throwing off party-line controls.

The Board dismissed the charges against the Furniture Workers after hearing a report on the union's convention early this month in Chicago. At that time pro-CIO forces led by Pres. Morris Pizer scored a 4-1 victory over Communist-led officers and threw them out of positions of control.

The two unions which were expelled were the American Communications Association, headed by Pres. Joseph Selly; and the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union, headed by Pres. Ben Gold. The IFLW had voted to secede from the CIO last month.

WITH THOSE internal problems handled, the Board moved through a series of policy actions and statements (see other stories in this issue):

1. Voted full "moral and financial support" to the CIO Newspaper Guild of New York in its strike which has shut down the Scripps-Howard New York World Telegram & Sun.

The board gave enthusiastic endorsement to the strike after hearing brief reports from Pres. Jay Nelson Tuck of the New York Guild; Vice-Pres. Sam Eubanks of the American Newspaper Guild; and Morris Iueshewitz of the New York City CIO Council.

2. Voted support for the CIO Oil Workers' strike against the Texas Co. The big oil firm is accused of refusing to bargain in good faith on the union's demand for pensions.

3. Called on the U. S. Senate to improve HR 6000, the new social security bill which comes up for vote early this week. Although the House-passed measure "embodies many long-overdue improvements," the Board said the Senate version "falls far short of the adequate program which the CIO advocates and the nation can afford."

4. Demanded action on a real Fair Employment Practices Commission, and called on the Senate to limit debate on the FEPC motion as a first step toward carrying out pledges made by both political parties in the 1948 elections.

5. Called on state and city CIO councils to start a campaign to insure federal rent control programs after Jan. 1 in the various parts of the country, under terms of the bill about to be passed by Congress.

The Board also "expressed regret" that Congress had failed to provide a straight extension of federal rent controls, and announced the CIO will "press for such an extension next January when the 82nd Congress convenes."

6. Gave support to suggestions for democratic international control of heavy industries in the German Ruhr and throughout Europe, and urged full labor participation in any planning or permanent bodies created to carry out such programs for an integrated Europe.

PLAUDITS FOR PIZER: Pres. Morris Pizer of the United Furniture Workers of America (left) gets congratulations from CIO Pres. Philip Murray for his victory over anti-CIO groups in the union. Pro-CIO forces led by Pizer carried recent UFWA convention by a 4-1 majority. With Pizer are Michael De Cicco, Sam Sloan and Jack Hochstadt, who helped.

ACA, Fur Workers Expelled

JUNE 15 was "E-Day"—Expulsion Day— for two more CIO unions accused of following Communist Party policies and objectives rather than those of the CIO.

- By a 35-2 vote, the little American Communications Association was ushered out of the CIO.
- Without a dissenting vote, the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers was formally expelled.

The Fur & Leather union had voted at its convention late in May to leave the CIO. Neither Pres. Ben Gold, who is a high official of the Communist Party, nor any other Fur & Leather Union representative appeared either at the CIO's hearing on June 1 or at the Board meeting itself.

The two expulsions brought to eight the number of unions whose affiliation certificates have been revoked on grounds of Communist domination.

Two organizations—the United Electrical Workers and the Farm Equipment Workers—were expelled at the last CIO convention, and large numbers of their members have already returned to the CIO.

Four unions were found guilty of Communist domination by the executive board last February and expelled at that time. They are the United Office & Professional Workers; United Public Workers; Mine Mill & Smelter Workers; and Food Tobacco & Agricultural Workers.

Hearings have been held, but no reports have yet been made by the CIO committees in the cases of the Marine Cooks & Stewards; the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, headed by Harry Bridges; and the Fishermen & Allied Workers, which has just merged with the ILWU.

THE CHANGE in the expulsion pattern came in the case of the United Furniture Workers, where a group headed by Pres. Morris Pizer won a clear-cut 4-1 victory over the Communist bloc at the union's recent convention.

The CIO hearing committee headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers reported that charges should be dismissed against the Furniture Union.

Board Asks Action On Strong FEPC

"Another failure to secure cloture (in the Senate) can only be interpreted as a defeat for millions of decent Americans," th CIO Executive Board declared in a resolution urging the Senate to pass a strong FEPC bill.

The Democratic leadership has announced that another attempt to enact the FEPC bill will be made in the Senate July 12.

The resolution noted that despite the pledges of both major parties to enact an FEPC measure, the House-passed version was "a weak and unsatisfactory substitute for the Powell bill, which was indorsed by the supporters of FEPC."

"The Committee wishes to congratulate the membership of the United Furniture Workers for its splendid convention resolution (in support of democratic CIO policies," the report said.

"The Committee likewise wishes to congratulate and compliment Pres. Pizer and those of his associates who conducted the victorious fight for CIO trade union concepts and against Communist control of this union.

"The Committee is confident that it speaks for the entire CIO when it pledges to the United Furniture Workers wholehearted support of the CIO in building this union on American trade union lines, in accordance with the constitutional objectives of the CIO.

"We know that the CIO will lend the United Furniture Workers of America every assistance in organizing the unorganized workers in its industry, in meeting the economic problems, and in improving the wage standards and working conditions of the workers employed in the industry."

THE REPORT on the American Communications Association (not to be confused with the big non-Communist Communications Workers of America), carried a quite different tone.

The committee, headed by Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, said "only one conclusion is possible" in the ACA case:

"The ACA has followed the tortuous paths of the Communist Party for years. Over the years it has been interventionist, isolationist, interventionist and then isolationist again.

"It has been pro-Roosevelt, then anti-Roosevelt, then pro-Roosevelt again.

". . . ACA's contradictory positions cannot possibly have resulted from any honest estimation of the interests of its membership. They can only have resulted from subservience to the interests of the Communist Party, and through that Party, to the Soviet Union."

NOR DID THE CIO committee have difficulty finding evidence of Communist Party domination of the Fur & Leather Workers.

The committee said its members "were of course aware" that Pres. Ben Gold and Irving Potash, head of the Fur Workers Joint Board, were leading members of the Communist Party.

"These facts would not, if they stood alone, sustain the charges against the IFLWU," the Committee said. But, it added, a survey of the union's paper and policy statements shows that the "policies and activities of the IFLWU have been, and are today, directed toward the achievement of the program and purposes of the Communist Party."

The Fur Union's paper, the committee indicated, offered some amusing reading material to "prove" that Soviet Russia is a worker's "paradise."

The paper, for instance, carried a report from Moscow in August 1949 describing life as few Americans have ever seen fit to report it in the Soviet Union. The news report said, among other things:

"There are no police watching me . . . There is no anti-Semitism . . . The peasants today ride in automobiles . . . They are wealthy and educated . . . They own original paintings by the top Soviet artists, among other luxuries."

Partial Okay Is Given On Schuman Plan

THE CIO last week threw its support behind programs to reorganize the heavy industries of the German Ruhr in the interests of peace and to create an Inter-European Authority to control the heavy industries.

In a detailed statement, the CIO Executive Board gave at least partial endorsement to the Franco-German coal-and-steel plan offered recently by French Premier Schuman. The executive board said that Schuman's proposal "looks toward . . . a rational organization of European industry.

"It is imperative for world peace that the productive power of the Ruhr shall never again be used for aggressive military purposes, and that the re-establishment of the old Ruhr combines or any other private cartels, national or international, be prevented forever," the Board said.

The question of whether the heavy Ruhr industries, which have always served as a base of power for reactionary political groups in Germany, should be "publicly owned or kept in private hands, is one that the German people must have the right to decide," the CIO Board statement said.

DECISIONS made at a Ruhr conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions—at which both CIO and AFL spokesmen were present—were endorsed by the CIO. The conference was held in Germany late in May.

The ICFTU confab called for creation of an "Inter-European Authority for the heavy industries of western Europe, open to all European nations, and having full power to decide questions of policy and management in those industries."

There should be firm representation for labor, not only in the suggested Intl. Ruhr Authority but also in negotiations to work out detailed plans for the Inter-European Authority suggested by French Premier Schuman.

Union participation, the CIO said, would help insure that Europe's industry would function for the people, not for private cartels; that it will expand production, raise wages and lower prices; that it will prevent hardships for workers if high-cost plants are shut down; and that it will be focused on raising living standards for the common people of Europe.

THE CIO statement pointed out that questions of private vs. public ownership need not be a stumbling block to plans for integrating the European economy for more effective operations.

"The essential question," the CIO added, "is the control of policy and management; these matters must be dealt with on an international and public basis, and cannot be allowed to fall into the hands of nationalistic forces or monopolistic private interests."

A "voting trust"—such as is used in the U.S. for corporate reorganizations—might be adopted to the use of Europe's international industry, the CIO suggested.

Under such a plan, all "voting and policy-making rights in stock, securities and other interests in the pooled industries" would be vested in representatives of members of the Inter-European Authority, the CIO suggested.

PAC Rally Maps Campaign; AFL's Keenan Speaks

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

TOP OFFICERS of every CIO union, representing several million members—and potential votes — attended a special one-day conference on political action in Washington June 16 to "consider the political picture and plan for the 1950 campaigns."

The conference, called by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and chaired by CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll, was unprecedented. Never before had the appeal been made so bluntly for top-to-bottom cooperation with PAC's program and policies.

The conference set a goal of $1 million in contributions and the expression at the polls of the political opinions of every CIO member and his family.

MURRAY told the cheering delegates that politics is "bread and butter. It is carpets on the floor and music in the home. It means a higher standard of living, or it doesn't—a decent education for your children, or it doesn't . . . You have the instrument, you have the machinery—it's right here in this room.

"Our people are going to get a bigger lesson in the art of politics than they ever got before, because this year all of organized labor is working together . . ."

"The challenge has been thrust at you. The die has been cast. The decision as to what happens in November is substantially yours. Your success or failure in the campaign depends directly on the amount of effort you put into it.

"I bespeak for Jack Kroll your complete support. . . . There is no reason why this group, in this room, can't collect $1 million in voluntary contributions between now and next October. Roll up your sleeves. Get in this thing. Get them registered and get them to vote. Work with the AFL and all other legitimate unions."

Highlighting and underscoring the importance of the occasion, Joseph Keenan, director of the AFL's Labor's League for Political Education, appeared and made a fighting speech. He received a standing ovation. There was no mention of unity. None was needed. His presence was enough.

"I AM SURE everyone sitting here is aware of the kind of fight we are going to have this year," Keenan told the intently listening audience. "They're out to get us. They're going to use everything in the book."

He added that labor had started the job of electing a liberal Congress in 1948, and said that "what we do in 1950 will make the difference between a win and a lose." Reminding the conference that in 1934—an "off year"—liberal forces had strengthened their position in Congress, Keenan said it could be done again.

"Let's do the job," he said, and was greeted with prolonged applause.

Kroll, who opened the conference, said that the country, and labor particularly, is in a dangerous situation.

"There is one consistent element in the picture this time," he said. "The forces of reaction have money—unlimited money—and they are spending it.

"Every hate organization has more money than ever before, and instead of pouring their funds into the coffers of political parties they are giving it directly to the candidates, directly to their campaign workers. In North Carolina our own people are being offered $70 a day to work for Willis Smith against Frank Graham. That's what we're up against."

BUT, HE said, "I have no fear of what the outcome will be. They've got gold on their side but we've got people on our side, and that gold won't buy those people."

He said that United Labor Committees had been set up in 35 states and hundreds of cities.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, said the time had come to "translate resolutions into action," and announced he had called a meeting of all CIO regional directors for June 17 and 18 to plan PAC work in detail, setting up the framework for all-out cooperation with PAC and with the AFL. We have learned through bitter experience, he said, that organization cannot proceed successfully, particularly in the South, until the Taft-Hartley law is removed from the books.

The conference also heard reports on several legislative fronts, and on the political situation in nearly a score of states. Late in the afternoon, the conference was scheduled to go to the White House for an informal address by President Truman.

CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg cited the effects of T-H on organizing. In the first full year of the law, he said, there was a 60% drop in the number of persons voting in NLRB elections.

"This is not propaganda," he said, "these are facts. . . ."

Goldberg added that last year, under Taft-Hartley, the number of man-days lost in strikes was second highest in U. S. history.

"The national emergency provision is bankrupt," he said . . . "Taft-Hartley is a political issue. We didn't make it so. But now it's up to the CIO, the AFL and the American people to get this vicious law removed."

PRES. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, chairman of the CIO Committee on International Affairs, outlined labor's participation—small but growing— in the formation of U. S. foreign policy.

"The time has come for labor to have its voice and its constructive viewpoint heard," he said. "We are determined to have a say in the foreign policy of the land we love. . . ."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, described the legislative history of the social security improvements and the White House unemployment compensation proposals, and accused Sen. Taft (R. O.) and others of indulging in "demagogic appeals for votes" by pretending to support social security improvements while actually undermining them.

T. J. McCormick, secretary-treasurer of the Oil Workers, presented a statement on behalf of O. A. Knight, OWIU president and chairman of the CIO Tax Committee, outlining CIO's tax program and deriding Congress.

"Each step taken by the Congress in the field of taxation in the post-war period has been a step backward and not a step forward," he said.

DONALD MONTGOMERY, CIO Auto Worker's legislative representative, said that the housing and rent control situation is "what brings PAC home to the people." The 81st Congress, he said, "applied the pincers to the people" by first refusing to do anything about the housing shortage and then refusing to give a decent extension of rent control.

George Weaver, secretary of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, said that civil rights is "the ghost in politics." He termed Senate shenanigans on FEPC a "tragic, disheartening and disgusting spectacle." As for the House-passed bill, he said, "when the Dixiecrats support an FEPC bill, you can be sure it's a bill that has no meaning."

"The overwhelming majority of the people of the world," Weaver concluded, "whom we are attempting to influence, are members of the so-called darker races. Till we practice what we preach, we won't win their loyalty. Every time we show the world the disgusting spectacle of our government halted in its tracks by a few wilful men advancing arguments that were archaic 50 years ago, we put peace off a little further."

'We Pledge Our Resources, Efforts To Bring Out The Maximum Vote'

The following statement was issued by the National CIO Political Action Conference at Washington:

We in the CIO have an abiding faith in the destiny of our country. We reaffirm our belief in the progressive traditions of our democracy. America has always been a land of unlimited opportunity and advancement. We are determined that it remain so.

The issue in the 1950 election is whether we continue toward our goal of the more abundant and secure America or whether we slide backward to depression, fear and insecurity. This was the issue of the 1948 election of President Harry S. Truman and of every election which has taken place since Franklin D. Roosevelt was first elevated to the presidency.

We are confident that the American people want liberal government. They have voted for forward-looking policies in every presidential election since 1932. But, experience teaches us that a mandate given in a presidential election must be repeated and indorsed in the off-year congressional elections if the people's will is not to be frustrated.

Failure to vote at any time is an absence without leave from good citizenship.

Those who fear progress and foster reaction rely upon a low vote and the power of money this year. They comfort themselves with precedents from the past. They are beneficiaries of government-by-minority.

Authoritative newspaper accounts place the amount they will spend in the congressional elections of 1950 in the tens of millions of dollars. Additional million of dollars are being expended through big business fronts which have arrogantly defied requests by a congressional committee for an accounting.

The constitutional principle that government is created to promote the general welfare is threatened with destruction by reactionaries who have proclaimed and proved their disbelief in that principle.

We must turn back this threat. We must preserve America as a land in which the legitimate operations of all people are attainable.

The CIO Political Action Committee is determined that the will of the majority shall prevail in the 1950 elections. To this end we pledge our resources and our efforts to bring out the maximum vote.

To those candidates for public office—local, state, and national—whether Democrats or Republicans—who share our belief in a truly liberal America, we offer our unstinting support. To those candidates for public office—local, state, and national—Democratic or Republican—who, in the service of selfish economic interests would block our national progress, we pledge our unalterable opposition.

A decisive victory for liberal candidates in 1950 will hasten the achievement of the Fair Deal program so vital to the well-being of every American.

A defeat in 1950 will retard our advance and jeopardize our hard-won gains. Every American citizen has a vital stake in this decisive campaign. His welfare and that of his family depends upon the outcome.

Unfortunately, each election year, a vast number of Americans fail to register their judgment of the issues and candidates at the ballot box. We cannot have government for the people if we do not have government by the people.

The most urgent task of each of our affiliated unions during the next five months is to make certain that all eligible Americans register and vote. We call upon each of our affiliates to launch immediately a registration drive that will continue until the final day of registration in the various states.

We call upon them to continue and intensify their block and precinct organizations so that every voter will go to the polls informed as to the issues and the records of the candidates.

We further call upon every CIO member to make his contribution to PAC. These voluntary dollars are urgently needed to meet the challenge of the present campaign.

Together with other labor, farm, and liberal groups, we won a victory for representative government in the 1948 campaign. We can and must preserve and extend this victory in the 1950 elections.

Murray Asks Firms To Aid Unemployed

CIO Pres. Murray said the CIO should use its political influence not only in the elections but across the bargaining table.

Unemployment is mounting at the rate of one million per year, he said, in spite of unprecendented levels of production and business activity. The CIO started the drive toward improving social security laws by bargaining for pensions, Murray added.

"Isn't it reasonable to require employers in collective bargaining again to meet a portion of their social responsibility" on the unemployment insurance front, he asked.

Bridges Stripped Of Citizenship

Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, was stripped of his citizenship by Federal Judge George B. Harris at San Francisco on June 16.

Bridges was convicted of perjury and conspiracy for lying about his membership in the Communist Party at his naturalization hearing in 1945. He was sentenced to five years in prison, but has filed an appeal.

CIO Battle Against Commies Far From Ended

Much Progress Made In Eight Months, But Much Work Still Necessary To Clean Up Mess Created By Reds

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A CIO MEMBER says in a letter to the CIO News: "I am not a Communist or a sympathizer, but I want to suggest that you devote less space in your paper to the Reds.

"I realize that it was necessary to expose their activities in preparation for the CIO convention, which ordered last November that they be kicked out of our organization.

"But now, it seems to me, you could turn more of your attention to other activities. Frankly, I'm tired of reading so much about them."

And we on the CIO News staff are tired of writing about them. We certainly are, but—

You don't quit firing your gun in the middle of a battle—and the fight against the Reds is far from being over.

PERHAPS IT'S TIME to review what's happened and to take a look at the portion of the job that's still ahead.

Last November the CIO convention expelled two unions—the United Electrical Workers and the Farm Equipment Workers—on charges that they were Communist dominated.

The same charge was made against 10 other unions and a hearing committee procedure established to "process" such charges.

During the early part of this year the CIO Executive Board expelled four unions—Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, Food & Tobacco Workers, Office & Professional Workers and Public Workers.

In early June the Fur & Leather Workers voted to withdraw from the CIO, and a short time later the Furniture Workers convention voted to adhere strictly to CIO policy.

Last week the CIO Executive Board expelled the American Communications Association and the Fur and Leather Workers. It is expected to rule soon in the cases of three other unions—Longshoremen & Warehousemen, Fishermen, and Marine Cooks & Stewards.

And while this was going on, the CIO was busy winding up the job of cleaning up its industrial union council situation.

Yes, it can be said that much has been done during the past eight months to rid the CIO of the influences of communism.

The International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, battling what Philip Murray has termed the "hard core of communism," has won barganing rights for about 225,000 workers since it was established last November.

STEADY PROGRESS is being made in other fields in which the CIO is moving against unions which it expelled.

But there is a long, hard road ahead. Expelling a union is one thing. Establishing a real, American trade union in its place is something else. Time, money and a lot of energy are required.

The Commies fight every inch of the way. They employ nearly all of the delaying tactics that have ever been designed. They use the courts and the Taft-Hartley Act to slow down the housecleaning job.

The "smear CIO" campaign which they launched last year continues unabated. Each week or so they dip down into the sewer for new ammunition.

AT ITS CONVENTION last year the CIO set out not merely to expell Communist-dominated unions. Its decision was to strike a real, lasting blow at the Reds and at the same time provide democratic trade unions for workers unwillingly under Red domination.

The battle is not one which can be won by the officers of the CIO alone. It is a battle in which every democratic CIO affiliate and its members should participate to the full extent of their ability.

It is a battle which requires close cooperation and coordination. It is a battle which must be waged in the shops, mills, factories and councils as well as on the Executive Board level.

Everybody who believes the Commies should be kicked in the seat of the pants so hard they'll never recover should pitch in. They should do so now, working with those directing the campaign.

There's no question about who's going to win. The question is: "How long will it take?"

Nobody can supply the answer just now. But the job can be speeded up greatly if everybody will pitch in.

FURNITURE DID IT!

When the votes were taken the United Furniture Workers Union usually lined up with the crowd which placed communism ahead of democratic trade unionism.

Then, last November, UFW was charged at the national CIO convention with being Communist dominated.

What followed was interesting to watch. Nine other unions charged with Communist domination continued on their merry Kremlin-like way. But the Furniture Workers didn't.

Morris Pizer, UFW president, announced he was going to lead a fight to clean up his union and keep it within the CIO. He was taking on a tough job and he knew it.

The union's executive board was stacked against Pizer and his operations were seriously impeded by the Commie majority. But Pizer had a hunch that if the matter could be placed squarely before the membership throughout the country it would take the correct action.

That's what Pizer did. And the members responded as he had expected.

The climax of his activities—and of the group which worked closely with him—came at the recent UFW convention. The pro-CIO forces gave the pro-Communist forces a sound beating.

Pizer undoubtedly will be given the recognition he deserves for a hard job well done—and we'd like right here to give recognition to his close associates and to UFW members throughout the nation who gave the Reds a firm kick in the seat of their collectivist pants.

The UFW case provides another demonstration that the Moscow type of totalitarianism is on the wane.

AN EXAMPLE OF UNITY

For some time now the CIO has been beating the drums for closer cooperation and greater unity among all branches of organized labor. Because of this, an event which took place last week in New York City was of particular interest to us.

The CIO Newspaper Guild went on strike at the New York World-Telegram and Sun, one of the largest Scripps-Howard newspapers.

The paper, unlike some which the Guild and other unions have struck, ceased publication. It had to—because members of the AFL and independent craft unions refused, as individuals, to go through the Guild's picket lines.

The Taft-Hartley Act, so we've been told, makes it illegal for unions to stage sympathy strikes and this could easily have been used as an excuse for crossing the Guild's picket line.

But the printers, pressmen and other mechanical workers decided to show how they felt about the situation by refusing individually to help break the Guild strike as it began.

As this is written we don't know what kind of legal maneuvers will be attempted by the Scripps-Howard organization to break up the cooperation that existed as the strike began.

Regardless of what may happen, however, the men and women who put out the World-Telegram and Sun have provided a good example that labor unity can really mean something.

What is needed is more unity on a much wider scale. It's a goal really worth working for.

Murray Honored By Boston College

CIO PRES. MURRAY last week became "Doctor Murray" as the result of an honorary doctor of laws degree bestowed upon him by Boston College at Boston, Mass.

The CIO leader also delivered the principal address to the graduating class of the college, which is New England's largest Catholic institution of higher learning.

The honorary degree was the third awarded to Murray. He received a doctorate of laws from Howard Univ. of Washington in 1945, and a doctor of science degree from Duquesne Univ. at Pittsburgh during the same year.

Murray told the Boston College graduates that he wouldn't "attempt to give them any advice—except to encourage them most sincerely to throw themselves wholeheartedly into the all-important work of social justice."

"Goodness knows our own generation hasn't done too good a job," he commented.

"Perhaps your generation, in the Providence of God, will be able to bring about a greater measure of justice for all our people without distinction or discrimination — for Negro and white, for Jew and Gentile—and a greater measure of international peace, which is the fruit of justice. I sincerely hope so."

FOR THE THEME of his address, Murray quoted the words "I belong here," spoken by Archbishop Cushing to the CIO convention at Boston in 1947.

"The working people of America 'belong here'—on the college campuses," Murray commented, "and if I myself belong here, it is only as one of their elected representatives."

There are other, "more important" reasons why the "CIO and the American labor movement in general 'belong here,'" Murray added. "We have a very important work to do in common—we of the labor movement and you, the representatives of higher education."

Government, labor and the colleges and other voluntary groups have an "unescapable responsibility" to work together for attaining social justice at home and abroad, he said.

IN THE PAST, Murray recalled, union members were "suspicious of our colleges and universities" because they felt that "our institutions of higher learning for the most part were either unfriendly to the cause of organized labor or, if not unfriendly, somewhat apathetic and aloof. . . .

"I am extremely happy to say, however, that the situation is radically different today. Many of our institutions of higher learning are doing everything possible to bridge the gap between the classroom and the union hall, and are offering a variety of services to our members."

Murray particularly praised Boston College and its sister school, Holy Cross, for their cooperative labor education programs.

He voiced hope that the nation's colleges will "help to create a climate of informed opinion favorable to the basic purposes of trade unionism" and to the objectives of democratic labor groups.

NAACP Sights The End Of Segregation

"THE COMPLETE destruction of all enforced segregation is now in sight," said Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, after an analytic study of the opinions handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court in the Sweatt, McLaurin and Henderson cases.

In three unanimous decisions, the high court abolished segregation at the Univ. of Oklahoma, ordered the admission of Heman Marion Sweatt to the Univ. of Texas law school, and struck down segregation in railway dining cars.

Marshall said that although the Plessy v. Ferguson decision of 1896, which set up the "separate but equal" doctrine, was not specifically overruled, "its effectiveness in graduate and professional education has been destroyed. Segregation no longer has the stamp of legality in any public education."

"In the step by step battle to outlaw enforced racial segregation," the NAACP legal chief asserted, "these decisions are the most far-reaching yet attained." Noting that the ultimate end of segregation looms on the horizon, he emphasized the fact that "legal battles have to be carried on through regular legal channels. Each case must be limited to the facts in that case."

Organizing Seldom Is Just Like This!

OLD-TIMERS will tell you that organizing is a rough and tumble game—that it isn't for the faint of heart and weak of back.

Many of them can exhibit scars to prove their point and some can tell hair-raising stories about the weeks they spent in hospitals because of beatings suffered during membership drives.

There are some hard-fast "rules" for organizers and one of them is "Don't depend on the police for help when you move into new territory."

This "rule" stems from the fact that too many cops have backed employers in their union-busting drives.

But, despite this, you occasionally run across a tale like the following.

THE COMMUNICATIONS Workers of America has been engaged for some time in an organizing campaign in New England, where company unionism still exists in portions of the telephone industry.

Many of the telephone workers assigned to the area had had little organizing experience when they arrived on the scene.

Consequently, some unusual things have been happening—and one of the most unusual involves two "green" organizers who were assigned to work with a veteran unionist.

The veteran explained it this way:

"I went house-calling with two of the CWA organizers, who looked like clubwomen going out to lunch or afternoon tea—pleasant, neatly and smartly dressed and in all other respects not at all like organizers are popularly supposed to look.

"A police station would be the last place a seasoned organizer would go for assistance and information on his organizing contacts, remembering the many times the police had run him out of town, socked him over the head or broken up picket lines."

THE TWO women, however, weren't seasoned organizers and they figured a good place to get information was at police stations.

So they walked right in and asked for what they wanted.

"When we stopped at one police station I expressed surprise and asked if they told the police that they were CWA-CIO organizers. They said that they did and that the police were sympathetic and cooperative," the veteran relates.

"It would have been hard to believe if I had not witnessed the warm welcome these gals received.

"They were asked what progress they were making, given suggestions on whom to visit—and while I stood there one policeman went through the organizers' cards and marked directions for them!

"In this New England town the policemen expressed the opinion that it was about time that the operators were organized by the CIO."

IT WAS hard to convince the veteran that the two inexperienced organizers weren't stretching it a bit when they told about how helpful the police had been.

"But then one young policeman told the girls to drop in and see his wife because he was sure she could be of help. It so happened that we had no mailing list in the neighboring town where she used to work—and she furnished the organizers with a number of contacts. She also called up a number of former buddies in the telephone office.

"To express their appreciation, the organizers bought a box of candy for the policeman and his wife and a little gift for their baby."

And that isn't all.

"Mothers of telephone operators often invite the organizers to tea, assuring them that they will use their influence to get their daughters to vote for CWA-CIO.

"Believe me, organizing is seldom like this!" A.L.S.

REUPHOLSTERING!

Russia Talks Peace 'Except At Peace Table'—Martin

"IT IS AN indisputable fact of world life today and a nauseating fact at that, that Russia talks peace everywhere on the globe EXCEPT at the peace table," Harry Martin, Labor Information Director of the Economic Cooperation Administration, said in a recent speech.

Martin, who also is president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was speaking at the first convention of the newly-chartered California CIO Council at Long Beach.

"This is the situation we must face," he continued. "It may go on for years—perish that thought—though even if the cold war continues for a generation, I say to you that it is better for it to continue than for a real war to come upon us with all the horrors of Hell that it would turn loose on a doomed humanity."

MARTIN TOLD how ECA had saved Eastern Europe from starvation and had thus prevented that region from becoming Communist-dominated.

"Ironically, the rout of communism in Western Europe was not set forth as one of the original aims of the Marshall Plan," Martin said. "In the beginning, Secretary of State Marshall made his generous proposal of help to all of the devastated countries of Europe, Russia included.

"But the Kremlin chose to refuse, to turn away from the helping hand—even before the actual nature of the help had been shaped by Congress."

He then told how the Communist Party suffered "defeat after defeat the past year" at the polls. Summarized, these defeats included:

Norway, loss of all of the 11 seats in the Stroting, the Norwegian Congress; Denmark, loss of 52 of the 76 seats; Holland, loss of 56 provincial council memberships; Belgium, seats in the National Assembly dropped from 23 in 1946 to 12 today and in the Senate from 17 in 1946 to seven today.

He noted that in the British elections last April "not a solitary one of the entire 105" Communist candidates for Parliament was elected. Martin said that in Vienna "under the very guns of the occupying army," the Communists were only able to win 5% of the total vote and elect five representatives among the 165 to the National Congress. In Germany, the Communists "ran a poor fourth in the final count, electing but 15 representatives to the 405-seat Bundestag."

IN FINLAND, Martin said, the Finnish Federation of Labor voted solidly to withdraw from the Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions.

"It is only in France and Italy today, among all of the free countries of Europe, that the Communists still pose a threat to liberty," Martin continued.

He said that the old Communist-controlled Italian General Confederation of Labor (CGIL) has fallen from six million members early in 1948 to a claimed membership of three-and-a-half million today. Martin said he thought the actual number was nearer "two million than four million."

Think Before You Call Names

The stupidity of using derogatory terms directed at any racial or religious group is exposed in the CIO Express, publication of the members of Packinghouse Workers Local 167, who are employed at the South St. Paul, Minn., plant of Swift & Co. The paper states:

"In our efforts to better the relationship between the various races and nationalities of our country we usually plan a long-range program of education that through the years will enable us to develop a better understanding of our mutual problems.

"While our long range plans have merit, there is something that we can do immediately that would be a long step toward our goal of better understanding.

"It is simply this: When speaking of a Negro remember that intelligent white people do not use such terms as 'Nigger,' 'Snowball,' 'Eightball,' 'Jigg,' or any of the other countless names thought up by the simpletons of the white race.

"The Negro should forget to refer to white people as 'White Trash,' 'Red Necks,' 'Cracker,' or any of the other names members of their race use to indicate their feelings against the white people.

"In most cases these names are used in jest, however they serve no valuable purpose. To describe people of other nationalities we could all well drop the use of such terms as 'Wop,' 'Spic,' 'Kike,' 'Frog,' 'Mick,' 'Bohunk,' 'Dago' and the other terms that have been used in an uncomplimentary manner.

"The use of such terms by a speaker actually indicates a high degree of stupidity, a lack of sane reasoning, and a definite lack of common sense one would expect from an American. While we can not settle the race problem overnight, we can eliminate the hard feelings caused by the use of these stupid terms."

KILL POLITICAL HOUSING!

VOTE NO ON REFERENDUM NO. 3

THIS IS THE KIND of phony argument that defeats public housing in local referenda. It's a canned ad, supplied by the National Association of Home Builders, intended to appear "spontaneously" in the local press, signed by "indignant taxpayers." This particular one has run in four West Coast cities, including Portland, Ore., where it was a major factor in defeating public housing. Similar ones are appearing elsewhere from time to time.

Real Estate Lobby Triumphant As Rent Bill Nears Passage

IN A STRICTLY political atmosphere, both houses of Congress last week passed bills which pretended to extend rent controls for a full year from June 30 but actually would end them, for millions of tenants, a good deal earlier.

The Senate bill, adopted 36-28, extends the law to June 30, 1951, but ends control Dec. 31, 1950, except in those areas that vote to keep them after that. The House bill adopts the same principle but extends the time limit to Jan. 31, 1951. Vote on the House bill was 202-163.

The Senate refused to accept the House version and the measure went to conference. The conferees were scheduled to meet today.

The CIO Executive Board, at its June 15 meeting, recognized that the battle for full extension was lost and adopted the following resolution:

"In view of the fact that 44 State legislatures will meet next January, the CIO Executive Board urges the conferees to adopt the House provision so that State legislatures which meet may have an opportunity to adopt state programs for the continuation of controls.

"State and local industrial union councils are also urged to secure extension to June 30, 1951, by the adoption of a resolution of the local governing body or by local referendum."

BOTH BILLS give every aid and comfort to state and local forces seeking decontrol, and throw every road block in the path of state and local elements that want to keep controls. Efforts to make decontrol a "two-way street"—i.e., to let a community get back under controls as easily as it can out from under—met with failure in the two committees and were not even made on the floor. In fact, in neither house was even an attempt made to get a vote on full one-year extension.

So, as matters stand, under whichever version is adopted, tenants who want controls kept on will have to persuade not only their local governments but possibly their state legislatures as well to vote their way. Even if a city votes to keep controls, the state legislature can undo its wishes if it chooses. It doesn't work the other way, though—if the legislature votes to keep controls in the state, any city or town can get decontrolled on its own motion without even the approval of the governor, which is required in the present law.

(CIO's reason for supporting the January date is that it sincerely believes there is more chance for keeping controls for tenants who need them if the state legislature can meet on the question, than if the 3400 municipalities presently under control each has to take a separate vote. Many legislatures meet in January.)

SEN. CAIN (R. WASH.)
His filibuster fizzled

PASSAGE of the bill will throw a tremendous responsibility on tenants in every community where controls are presently in effect. If they want controls kept on longer than sometime around the end of this year, they have to act fast.

The proposal to make local communities vote to keep controls if they want them was originated by Chairman Spence (D. Ky.) of the House Banking Committee. The measure was characterized by the Wall Street Journal as a "please-everybody" political measure.

Sen. Cain (R. Wash.), whose 12-hour filibuster held up Senate action, reached new heights of nonsense when he claimed that in decontrolled areas, "nothing but things which were good and things which were free and things which were American have resulted." Ask the tenants of $30-a-month shelters whose rents have jumped around 50%.

Meanwhile, the employes of the Office of the Housing Expediter, who are in charge of administering the present law, are taking one-week leaves of absence without pay on a staggered schedule, because Congress won't give them the $800,000 they need to carry on till June 30.

Whose Democracy?

When a city council approves a local housing program and applies for its share of federal funds under the Housing Act of 1949, the real estate boys shriek "unfair!" and demand a referendum, hoping to defeat the proposal with the use of thundering falsehoods.

They've done this in 13 cities so far, and have been victorious nine times.

But in Miami, the situation was reversed. There, the city council voted against using any federal funds for low-rent housing and slum clearance, and a group of citizens initiated a petition for referendum and got 25,000 signatures.

Did the realtors agree that a referendum was necessary? No. they filed a suit to stop the referendum. The suit was dismissed. The referendum will be held June 27. It's a hot fight.

Brophy On Mission For ICFTU To Far East

Representatives of the CIO and the AFL sailed from New York City for Brussels June 12 to join a group of trade unionists on a mission to Asia.

John Brophy, CIO councils' director, and Gordon Chapman of the AFL are the two American members of a five-man commission being sent on an Eastern tour by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The group will meet at ICFTU headquarters in Brussels to arrange their trip.

They will confer with the free trade union elements in the Asian countries, advise them about their problems, find out what is happening there, and report to the ICFTU.

House Poll On Rent Control Compromise Bill

The House voting record on the bill to extend rent control for seven months, passed June 13 by a 202 to 163 count, is printed here. It is now in conference with the Senate, which the day before had approved a six-months extension by a 36 to 28 vote. Voting in favor (R) of the bill were 171 Democrats, 30 Republicans and one ALP. Forty-five Democrats and 118 Republicans voted against (W) it. PR means paired right; PW means paired wrong; NV means not voting.

How Senate Voted On Rent Control Compromise Measure

Here's a record of the Senate's decision, on June 12, to accept a compromise six-month extension of rent control. The vote was 36-28 to keep rent control until Dec. 31, with a six months additional period for communities which vote for it. Thirty Democrats and six Republicans voted for the bill (R); 23 Republicans and five Democrats voted against (W). PR means paired right; PW means paired wrong; NV means not voting.

22½c Package Won By IUE In New Pact

A PACKAGE increase which even the most conservative estimates place at 22½ cents an hour has been negotiated by IUE-CIO Local 452 at the Liquidometer Corp., Long Island City, N. Y.

The contract, signed June 1, includes a flat 7c an hour across the board increase retroactive to Jan. 22, 1950, when the old contract expired. An additional 7c increase, making a total 14c wage hike, will go into effect June 1, 1951.

An innovation in the contract is a provision for five days paid sick leave each year. If a worker is not absent those five days he receives the extra pay. This year an additional day's sick leave retroactive to Jan. 21 is added for a total of six, to cover the period between expiration of the previous contract and the present signing.

The minimum rate is boosted from 80c to $1 an hour by the new agreement. A reclassification of an assembly department job from second to first class will bring a 25c an hour raise for those affected.

A new vacation schedule calls for one day's vacation for each two months of employment up to 20 months when the worker will get two full weeks. Beginning next year those with 15 years' service will receive three weeks vacation.

Marcantonio Backers Beaten Down At United Labor Parley In N. Y. City

THE UNITED Labor Committee of New York City held its first meeting last week, with 3000 representatives of CIO and AFL unions attending.

The committee was formed last year to work together politically and on other matters of general labor interest. The meeting last week was the first held for the delegates from the affiliated locals.

The meeting laid first plans for unified support of liberal and progressive candidates in the forthcoming elections.

AS IT CALLED upon the major parties to name a Fair Deal candidate to oppose Rep. Marcantonio (ALP) in the fall balloting, Democratic, Republican and Liberal leaders were agreeing upon former State Sen. James G. Donovan as a "tripartisan" nominee. The committee took no action on approving or disapproving his selection.

Delegates apparently from left-wing unions tried to defend Marcantonio, but were held to strict parliamentary rules by Martin T. Lacey, president of the AFL Central Trades and Labor Council, who acted as co-chairman with Michael Quill, president of the CIO Council and of the Transport Workers.

LACEY WAS applauded by many delegates when he observed that he did not think New York State labor would accept former Postmaster-General James A. Farley as a candidate for governor to succeed Thomas E. Dewey.

Continued harmonious relations were stressed by Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, and Joseph Keenan, head of the AFL Labor's League for Political Education.

Resolutions urged Congress to pass the FEPC asked by President Truman; demanded labor political action which would demonstrate that unions "will not serve as a tail to the kite of any political party," and asked CIO and AFL to continue joint action in municipal politics.

Bias In Toronto

The instructor at a vocational school at Toronto, Canada, wrote to 50 firms to get copies of their job application blanks. The students tabulated the questions asked. They found 82% asked place of birth; 71 asked religious denomination; 51 asked nationality.

Auto Workers Win Pensions At Studebaker

THE CIO Auto Workers signed an agreement with the Studebaker Corp. last week for a five-year non-contributory pension plan covering 23,000 production workers.

The agreement, similar to the General Motors pact, guarantees $100 monthly pensions, including social security, to 65-year-old workers with at least 25 years' service. Employes with 10 to 25 years' service will get a minimum of $4 monthly for each year they worked.

Normal retirement would be at 65 but employes may continue work until they reach 68.

The company guarantees to pay at least $1.50 per month for each year of service up to 30 years in the case of "normal retirement." The plan will go into effect no later than Nov. 1, 1950, but no retirements will be effected, except at the employe's option, until Jan. 1, 1952.

Pizer Re-elected As Right Wing Routs UFWA Leftists

By BOB SENSER

THE NEW but powerful right-wing bloc in the CIO United Furniture Workers completed its self-proclaimed task of driving the left wingers who formerly dominated it from office by re-electing Morris Pizer to another term as president and choosing Fred W. Fulford of South Bend, Ind., as secretary-treasurer.

The job was completed as delegates representing 40,000 members wound up their sixth biennial convention in Chicago's Congress Hotel after voting full support for National CIO policy.

Pizer, president since 1944 and leader of the right wingers, defeated Ernest Marsh by a vote of 24,108 to 7234. Marsh, one of the leftist leaders who had helped guide the UFWA along Communist Party lines, had been director of organization since 1941. His job was pulled out from under him, as the convention also voted for a constitutional change abolishing it and adding the duties to those of the president.

Fulford, a member of Local 155 and for seven years also a member of the general executive board, won over Secy.-Treas. Max Perlow, another left wing leader, 19,476 to 7043. The vote was smaller than for president because Local 76-B, New York, Perlow's home local—which had consistently voted against him on matters of policy—abstained from balloting.

MOST RIGHT wingers had no opposition for the executive board and filled 23 of the 26 posts. The others, left for minority representation, remained vacant when two candidates refused to run. A third, Joseph Magliacano, Newark, N. J., elected by a vote of about 20 to 0 on a show of hands, indignantly refused to accept the office and charged that the convention "made a mockery of democracy."

Right wingers claimed privately that the minority was not interested in GEB representation.

"They want to go back to their locals as martyrs," they explained, "and say 'Look how we're being persecuted.'"

THE UFWA was one of the 10 international unions cited at the 1949 CIO national convention for trial on charges of following the Communist Party line in opposition to CIO policy and is the only one salvaged by virtue of an anti-Communist uprising among the rank and file.

WILLIAM GILBERT
Gets Old Post Back

Whether the left-wing minority intends to remain in the union was a matter of conjecture. Reports were current around the convention that some locals might be taken by their leaders into the Fur & Leather Workers.

However, a left-wing constitutional amendment which would have made it easier for locals to secede was defeated by 23,421 to 9035. And after Pizer was re-elected he told the delegates:

"I want to be president of not only the majority but also of the minority in this union."

He repeated an earlier plea that the losers stay in the union and cooperate in building it up.

Perlow, in accepting re-nomination to the post he had held since 1943, said he knew he would be defeated but that he was not ashamed to "dissociate" himself from what he called the forces of reaction. Perlow resigned from the Communist Party about a year ago in order to be able to sign the Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist affidavit.

THE CONVENTION passed two other important resolutions without the qualifications the losers sought to add. Delegates pledged support to the CIO Political Action Committee on local, district and national levels after voting down the leftists' "provision for independent political action," which could have meant support for candidates like the Progressive Party's Henry A. Wallace.

They also voted to congratulate CIO Pres. Philip Murray for his move toward labor unity without the left-wing suggestion that he "broaden his invitation to include all unions," including those recently expelled by the CIO.

They likewise set a policy of working for industrywide employer-paid pensions and reaffirmed the union's traditional opposition to Jim Crowism and racial and religious discrimination of any sort.

At a GEB meeting the day after the convention closed some of the heads that had been "chopped off" by the previous left-wing board were restored. Among those who got their old jobs back were William L. Gilbert, of Chicago, who had been fired as midwest regional director because of his role as a leader in the fight for CIO, and George Stewart, of New York, ousted as administrative assistant to the president for the same reason. Four left-wing organizers were dismissed.

The new leaders made plans for an intensified organizing campaign which will be concentrated first on Illinois, Michigan, North and South Carolina and Virginia.

World-Telegram Closed As Craft Members Back Guild

FIVE HUNDRED members of the CIO Newspaper Guild, backed solidly by 1000 members of other newspaper unions, closed down the New York World-Telegram and Sun on June 13 in a strike called after more than three months of fruitless negotiations for a new contract.

Management retaliated, soon after it became apparent the paper could not be printed, with an implied threat that it would not really negotiate for two months.

The newspaper is one of the largest in the country, with a daily circulation of more than 600,000. It is owned by the Scripps-Howard chain, a warm admirer of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The walkout started at 5:30 a.m. Members of the AFL Typographical, Pressmen's, Stereotypers', Mailers', Paper Handlers and Electrical Workers unions and the unaffiliated Machinists and Newspaper Handlers and Deliverers refused to go through the CIO picket line and in many cases joined the editorial and commercial office employes marching before the building.

The following day the AFL Photo-Engravers also refused to go through the line and made the demonstration of unity and solidarity both impressive and complete.

THE GUILD was asking increases of $4 to $10 a week in minimums, with a top minimum for reporters of $120; that nine out of 10 employes in the jurisdiction be covered by a modified union shop clause; night differential of $1 per shift; arbitration of all grievances, including the need for economy layoffs, and other concessions.

Management's last-minute offer included raises ranging from $2 for those earning less than $60 a week to $5 for those earning $175; increases of $1 to $3.50 in minimums, with top minimum of $113.50 for reporters; 35-hour week; 75c per shift night differential; vacations up to four weeks after 15 years, maintenance of membership, and arbitration of disputes arising out of the contract only.

CIO Board Supports Walkout

The Scripps-Howard newspaper chain "is now leading an organized effort by the American Newspaper Publishers Association to destroy union security, imperil the jobs of Guildsmen and block the effords of newspaper employes to win better wages and working conditions," the CIO Executive Board said June 15 in a resolution supporting the Newspaper Guild strike on the New York World--Telegram and Sun morally and financially.

"The CIO recognizes the significance and justice of the strike," it added. "The CIO also hails the splendid cooperation of the AFL and independent unions in the newspaper industry whose members have respected the picket line of their fellow workers affiliated with the CIO . . .

"Such support and cooperation by all of organized labor will help overcome the threats of Scripps-Howard management to keep the strike going for six months or longer and will hasten a swift and effective settlement."

Ed Easton, World-Telegram and Sun Guild unit chairman, denied management's claim that its proposal was beyond "anything offered by any other major New York paper."

"The Post has higher minimums and higher night differentials," he said. "Wages are still in negotiations with other publishers. Management says its offer on job security is in line with that accepted by the Times. This is not true.

"The Times grievance procedure and job security provisions are far better. On union security, its offer is far below other papers in the city except the Times. The Times contract also includes a pension plan, unlimited severance pay and group insurance."

Federal conciliators called both sides together on the afternoon of June 13. After the meeting Ezra Bryan, company attorney, said:

"We told the union that there were very real possibilities that this might run for a month, six weeks or two months."

"They showed no more willingness to negotiate than they ever did," observed Jay Nelson Tuck, New York Guild president.

The Guild, AFL and independent unions in the industry in New York recently agreed to a mutual assistance pact. The solid front in the strike meant that for the first time in history labor trouble forced a New York paper to close.

THE N. Y. WORLD TELEGRAM AND SUN suspended publication June 13 when the Newspaper Guild of New York-CIO went on strike. Effectiveness of the strike was the first fruit of the decision of the newspaper industry unions in that city to take joint action against recalcitrant publishers. The rank and file of all unions in the industry, AFL and independent, refused to go through the Guild members' picket line.

Warning Sounded On Joblessness

The CIO Economic Outlook warned last week that "underneath the bright surface" of current production and employment figures "are festering sores from which infection is spreading."

The Outlook, published by the CIO Department of Research and Education, said the "unemployment is serious today—and it could be disastrous tomorrow unless action is taken now to stop the tide.

"The people who now cannot find jobs must be taken care of at once, and the entire level of jobs and production must be progressively raised," it said. "American democracy will not last unless it avoids the evils of mass unemployment."

The Outlook cited the CIO's 4-point program to combat unemployment as deserving of speedy action in the national interest.

The program calls for: emergency public works, re-establishment of the Civilian Conservation Corps, improved unemployment compensation, and greater attention by the nation's "larger corporations" to the "needs of many chronically depressed industrial communities of America when they come to plan their new investments over the next few years."

Memo To Boss: Before The Typewriter Starts Smoking Lemme Tell You All About The Committee For Constitutional Government

MEMO TO THE EDITOR: When you were in Europe last year, maybe when you got to Rome you went into the Vatican and saw the Laocoon.

That's the statue, you know, that shows a man and a couple of kids being crushed to death by a pair of king-size snakes. It's one of the most famous statues in the world and used to remind GIs of Army red tape.

(You've probably forgotten — I had until I looked it up—who old Laocoon was. He was a priest of Apollo, handsomest of the ancient gods, at Troy when the Trojans were defending their city against the Greeks about 1200 B. C. He was mad at the Greeks and he tossed a spear at the wooden horse that eventually won the war for them. That burned up Athena, goddess of the arts of peace and war and at that time no particular admirer of Apollo. So she caused a couple of huge serpents to come out of the sea and destroy Laocoon and his two sons.)

WELL, I LOOKED into the ultra-right, Fascist-type organizations that are bedevilling the U. S. today, like you told me to, and man—do I feel like Loacoon! I never got into a worse mess in my life.

Their directors interlock worse than J. P. Morgan's and they log-roll for each other so you can hardly tell where one leaves off and another begins. They have split personalities and dual personalities, hysterics, high blood pressure, fixations, frustrations, emotional imbalance, chronic dyspepsia, mean dispositions, and heavy bankrolls, and the stuff they peddle is phonier than a twelve-buck all-wool suit.

So I figure the best thing I can do is just keep on writing until the slow burn they give me overheats the typewriter and it stops working. Then I'll do the same until I, like the typewriter, get back to normal. In other words, they'll be more than one of these memos — how many isn't clear right now.

How many of these outfits are in business at a given moment is anyone's guess. They come and go. The organizations, that is. The evil geniuses who preside over the raising and especially over the dispensing of funds last a lot longer.

Apparently once a fellow gets a toehold in a nice, juicy racket like one of these he can always find enough well-heeled suckers with pet hates to keep him a member of the lunatic fringe in good standing from then on.

Before getting down to specific cases there are a few generalities you might be interested in.

All of these outfits seem to have their roots in opposition to President Roosevelt and the New Deal, and specifically in the Liberty League and the America First Committee. They scream so to high heaven about how patriotic they are and what terrific defending of the Constitution they do that you can't help but remember Samuel Johnson's gag: "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

THEY ALL CLAIM to be Democrats or Republicans as well as Americans, but the shocking part of it is that they follow the Communist Party and/or Nazi line a whale of a lot more often than they followed the leadership of President Roosevelt or follow that of President Truman.

They all hate the people, the great mass of Americans. They all hate organized labor, because orgnized labor is in the forefront of the fight to get the common people the things they deserve, need and have a right to. They're all isolationists and hate foreigners, though sometimes some of them soft-peddle it. They hate democracy.

Then they have what you might call subsidiary hates that they sort of concentrate on. Some hate Jews. Some hate Negroes. Some hate Catholics. Some hate people who live in cities, especially New Yorkers.

Sometimes, when they run out of material, they hate themselves —Negroes will join with Negro-haters to hate Catholics, Catholics will join with Catholic-haters to hate Jews, etc.

Most of them bawl about God and Christianity ad nauseam, but they sort of overlook the injunction, "Love they neighbor as thyself."

They're a great bunch of—I almost said people.

THREE OF these unsavory outfits are involved at the moment with the Special House Lobby Committee and its chairman, Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.). They are the Committee for Constitutional Government, the Constitutional Educational League and the National Economic Council, along with their respective front men, Edward A. (for Aloysius) Rumely, Joseph P. Kamp and Merwin K. Hart. A choice collection, no fooling.

The committee subopenaed the three leaders and told them to appear with records showing where their money comes from. Hart complied, albeit reluctantly, and the committee is studying his material now. Rumely brought part of his records, but not enough to satisfy the committee, and Kamp brought none. The House may cite them for contempt.

Let's take a look at the Committee for Constitutional Government first. It's the biggest of them all and has spawned two offspring it acknowledges, America's Future, Inc., and Fighters for Freedom. Buchanan and his committee suspect there may be more and that it acts as sort of a holding company for some of the other operations.

THE COMMITTEE for Constitutional Government thrives in an aura of the utmost respect. None of its publications or speakers damns the Jews, Negroes or Catholics—nothing so crude as that. It doesn't indorse candidates for office, even if it does flood voters with propaganda aimed at getting them to vote for or against a specific candidate; this is what is known as discussing the "issues." It spent $620,632 to influence national legislation in Washington last year; this is what's known as "lobbying." Only one other organization, the American Medical Association, spent more. For comparison, the CIO spent $42,035 exclusive of salaries, and all of organized labor a total of $257,301.

The CCG doesn't like the "lobby" tag. It tries to pose as an "educational" society in the bookselling business, and honest, Boss, it would knock the buttons off your spats to see how easily it gets away with it. It has enormous influence with people in a position to direct the thinking of others—they're the ones it aims at—and it would be silly of us to try and write it off as just another crackpot outfit.

Its basic thesis is that the U. S. has been going down the long, long trail to the dogs and socialism ever since—well, here's how Prof. H. L. Lutz of Princeton, tax expert for the National Association of Manufacturers, put it in a pamphlet the CCG distributed:

"When a future Edward Gibbon writes a history of the decline and fall of the American Republic, the date he will use to mark the beginning of the decline will be March 1, 1913. On that day the people sanctioned Federal taxation of income."

OTHER CCG literature seems to put the date at about the time of the Roosevelt inauguration. But at any rate, the CCG proclaims that with the country on the road to socialism, positive action must be taken to "stop" it. This it does by whooping it up, and very effectively, for a return to the economic, social and political thinking of about the McKinley era.

Rumely's name, surprising as it may seem, is not even carried on the CCG letterhead. Maybe this is because he's an ex-convict and has been in jams with Congress before this. The letterhead carries the names of Dr. Willford I. King as chairman and Sumner Gerard as treasurer, along with a partial list of the advisory board.

I guess before we get too deeply into this we'd take a look at Mr. Rumely. He was born in La Porte, Ind., in 1882 and says he was educated at Notre Dame, Oxford in England, and Heidelberg and Freiberg in Germany.

APPARENTLY THE German part of his education made such an impression on him it hasn't rubbed off yet. At any rate, when he returned to this country early in the century, according to Rep. Patman (D. Tex.), he started the Interlaken School to foist on American boys "the soundest ideas of German education."

For, he wrote in a bulletin, "It is almost solely by the power of this new type of education that Germany has forged to the front in the last 25 years." That the same type of education may have had something to do with Germany's starting two world wars is something else again.

Rumely's predeliction for things Germans caused him, despite his American citizenship, to go to her aid in World War I. Army intelligence officers testified that he was meeting with German spies and saboteurs late in 1914. Early in 1915 he bought the New York Evening Mail and made it an organ for German propaganda.

LATER THE U. S. government charged that the money was supplied by the German government. Rumely was indicted on a charge of violating the Trading With the Enemy Act by "wilful failure" to report the debt to the Alien Property Custodian. He was convicted in December, 1920. The Circuit Court of Appeals upheld his conviction in July, 1923, and the U. S. Supreme Court refused to review the case.

He was sentenced to a year and a day in prison. President Coolidge, on recommendation of the prosecuting officials, commuted the sentence to one month, which Rumely served in the Westchester County Penitentiary at White Plains, N. Y., in 1924, and restored his civil rights through a pardon the following year. The recommendation for commutation of sentence was based at least in part on Rumely's contention that he understood the money for purchase of the newspaper came from Herman Sielcken, an American living in Germany, and perhaps some from Mrs. Adolphus Busch, of St. Louis.

Intelligence officers testified before a Senate Committee that he also spent $200,000 for the Germans for foreign newspaper advertising against sending munitions to the Allies. A 100% American, no doubt.

Rumely's pro-German sentiments were made pretty clear. The intermediary for the loan, Heinrich Albert, was identified both as the German "fiscal agent" in the U. S. and as a commercial attache representing German banks. In 1919 he signed a deposition that on the authorization of the German Embassy he had furnished Rumely with the money to buy the paper. Rumely insisted that during his ownership the paper was a mouthpiece of former President Theodore Roosevelt and that it was intended to represent "American interests." However, when asked in 1938 about his conviction, he said that he had "fought on an unpopular side."

He stayed pretty much of sight, doing lobbying part of the time, until the middle 1930's, when he hooked up with Frank Gannett, reactionary Rochester, N. Y., publisher who took an elephant to the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia in 1936 to help him win the nomination for president. He should have taken some delegates—Wendell Wilkie won.

Boss—please pardon handwriting. Typewriter smoked, then stopped. More later.

GERVASE N. LOVE

House Unit Will Summon Rumely And Hart Again

Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, and Merwin K. Hart, president of the National Economic Council, are due to play return engagements before the House Special Lobby Committee.

The committee last week was still focussing its attention on well-financed reactionary groups fighting the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

It decided to recall the pair at an executive meeting on June 14. However, the probers took no action on possible citations for contempt of Rumely, Hart and Joseph P. Kamp, executive vice president of the Constitutional Educational League. Rumely and Kamp failed to produce enough financial records to satisfy Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), chairman of the committee, when they first appeared.

First of the three scheduled to appear before the committe for a second time was Hart, who is due to begin several days of testimony on June 20.

Buchanan told the House on June 15 that most lobbyists are now working on the people at home rather than on members of Congress.

HERE IS A PHOTOSTATIC COPY of the check for $1000 which Drew Pearson said in his newspaper column was collected by Rep. Wood (D. Ga.) after passage of a bill he had introduced in Congress to pay $10,000 damages for injuries by an Army truck to Ralph Stanfield, of Tate, Ga. The check is signed by the boy's father and is made out to D. Carl Tallant, described by Pearson as Wood's law partner and a government-paid employe of his office. Wood flatly denied accepting a fee for introducing the bill.

Rep. Wood Accused In 'Unjust Fee' Case

DREW PEARSON, nationally known newspaper columnist, charged in his column last week that the law firm of Rep. Wood (D. Ga.), chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, took a $1000 "unjust fee" from a constituent for whom he introduced a compensation bill in Congress.

Wood flatly denied the charge and accused Pearson of using "smear tactics."

Pearson said he had a photostatic copy of a check covering the payment, which the CIO News is reproducing with this article.

He said the payment was made by Mack Stanfield of Tate, Ga., on behalf of his son, Ralph Stanfield, who was struck and seriously injured by a runaway Army truck on Jan. 23, 1944. Wood introduced a bill authorizing the government to pay $10,000 damages to the boy.

According to Pearson, the bill was still pending when Wood's then secretary, Charles Holcomb, suggested to the elder Stanfield that part of the $10,000 should be paid back to Wood.

After the bill was passed, he went on, Carl Tallant, Wood's law partner and also on the congressional payroll at $7022 a year, working in Wood's office, suggested that it was "customary" to pay 10% of compensation bills. When he made out a check for $1000, Pearson said, Mack Stanfield signed it.

"It is, of course, the job of every Congressman to introduce bills in which his constituents are interested," Pearson wrote. "He is paid a regular salary by the U.S. Treasury for this, and it is outside the law for him to accept such fees. In fact such fees, if they go into his pocket, are a penitentiary offense."

Pearson quoted the elder Stanfield as saying that after the payment was made, Wood asked him to keep it quiet. He also said that Herman Pilyaw, injured in the same accident, was given $10,000 under a bill introduced by Sen. Russell (D. Ga.) "as part of his routine job of being a Senator."

WOOD SAID his first knowledge of the case came when Tallant "sent me certain affidavits from witnesses to an accident in which an Army truck struck and severely injured this boy." He then introduced the bill to obtain the $10,000 payment, he added.

Tallant also represented the Stanfields in a guardianship proceeding, Wood said, "and he charged a fee of 10% for his services."

"The entire transaction seems to have been perfectly regular and above board," he observed.

In the last session of Congress, Wood sponsored a bill which would have made the Taft-Hartley Act worse than it is and which the CIO opposed. The House passed it, then reversed itself and sent it back to committee, where it died.

Hot Eggs, Cold Facts For Solons

SCRAMBLED EGGS and cold, hard facts on the growing problem of unemployment were served up to New England Congressmen at a CIO-sponsored breakfast in Washington last week.

Seven senators and 13 representatives who attended heard delegates from the six New England State CIO Councils warn that the area will become "nothing but a vacationland and a series of landmarks" unless industry is revitalized with federal help.

Pres. Emil Rieve, of the Textile Workers, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, welcomed the delegates and Congressmen. He urged immediate legislation because nearly 350,000 unemployed have already exhausted their compensation benefits.

J. William Belanger, Massachusetts Council president, told legislators that he "doesn't want to be alarming, but the facts demand it." He said that there are 50,000 fewer jobs in Bay State textile mills today than in 1948 and that more than a quarter of a million jobs in all trades have been eliminated in the same period. Compared to the 1943 wartime peak of employment, 441,000 fewer people are now employed.

SEN. McMAHON (D. Conn.) told the group it was significant that the move to bolster New England's industry came from labor leaders rather than Chambers of Commerce and business.

John Bello, of the Rhode Island CIO, said that 45,000 are unemployed in his state and that 25,000 of them have run through their unemployment benefits.

"You've got to form a New England bloc," he said. "That may sound like I'm saying 'the heck with the rest of the country,' but there are other blocs for other things. What's wrong with a bloc to save New England?"

The Congressmen were told by Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, CIO assistant director of research, that unless the federal legislators do something at this session of Congress, many unemployed will be without hope and money until state legislative bodies meet in the fall or some time next year.

SCRAMBLED EGGS and cold facts on unemployment were served by CIO to 20 New England Senators and Representatives at a breakfast in Washington last week. Shown working up an appetite over very unpalatable statistics are (l. to r.) Joseph Fiascone, Boston director for the Clothing Workers; Philip Coombs, economic advisor to Gov. Chester Bowles, of Connecticut; Rep. Furcolo (D. Mass.); J. William Belanger, Massachusetts CIO regional director; Cy O'Brien, of Boston, and Frank Carmichael, New England CIO regional director.

Texaco Strikers Parade—But Not To Work As Plant Reopens

By RAY DAVIDSON

IN TEXAS, everybody loves a parade. And they really had one in Port Neches, Tex., during the early hours of June 12.

The Texas Co., which has been involved in a strike-lockout with the CIO Oil Workers Union since April 4, had announced a few days earlier that it was going to reopen its big asphalt plant adjacent to Port Neches at the begining of the day shift on June 12.

When the appointed hour came, there was a big parade. Hundreds of cars, mostly bearing Oil Workers from the Port Neches local and the nearby Port Arthur locals, paraded slowly along all roads leading to the plant.

Sheriff Charles Myers had his crew there to keep peace and order. But he found no work to do. Oil Workers had taken over traffic police duties. They kept the traffic from jamming up, and they made openings for employes on their way to work in plants adjacent to the Texaco works.

The parade continued for two hours. Three people went into the Texaco plant—all of them nonunion laboratory technicians who can't manufacture asphalt.

The parade broke up and the men returned to their hall. The sheriff came to the hall and said it was a nice parade. The union, he said, was to be highly complimented.

They still aren't making asphalt in Texaco's Port Neches Works.

Strike-Lockout 12 Weeks Old

The bitter, all-out fight between CIO Oil Workers and The Texas Co., one of the world's largest oil companies, is entering its 12th week.

Texas Co., backed by the entire oil industry, is fighting demands of the unionists for security conditions enjoyed in contracts with most other oil companies.

Eight thousand workers, four-fifths of Texaco's refining capacity, and five big refineries in three states are involved. Negotiating progress has been small. A long, bitter fight lies ahead.

The dispute began with a strike of the five refineries April 4. Since then, the strike has been converted to a lockout in some of the plants.

Do You Really Get Quaker State Oil?

WHEN YOU buy that famous Quaker State Motor Oil these days you can't be sure what you are getting.

Maybe the oil in the green and white Quaker State cans was refined of Pennsylvania crude in a Quaker State refinery—and maybe it was made of some other crude in some other company's refinery.

That's what the CIO Oil Workers Union charges—and it says it has definite evidence that at least one other company—Valvoline Refining of Freedom, Pa.—is canning its oil in Quaker State cans these days, then sending the oil to Quaker State sales stations. Indications are strong that several other companies likewise are putting oil in Quaker State cans, the union reports.

NLRB Eases Need To Take Back Pay, Waive Old Job

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board on June 13 unanimously adopted two policies governing calculation of back pay for employes illegally discharged under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The policies, put in effect by decisions on three cases, are:

1 Establishment of a new method of computing back pay on a quarterly basis. This policy will bring no comfort to union-hating employers.

2 Continuation of the NLRB wartime rule that to be eligible for back pay, an illegally discharged employe must register for employment with state or federal employment offices or make some other "reasonable efforts to secure desirable new employment."

The board also reaffirmed earlier rulings that illegally discharged employes are not eligible for back pay, if during the period of illegal discharge they are willfully idle, ill or on vacation.

The new method of computing back pay was announced in a case involving a Woolworth store in Cincinnati and the AFL Retail Clerks; and in a case involving the Cen-Tennial Cotton Gin Co., Columbus, Ga., and the International Association of Machinists.

The ruling on registration of illegally discharged workers came in a case involving the Harvest Queen Mill & Elevator Co. of Plainview, Tex., and the AFL. In this case, the board ordered the company to pay 14 employes $13,894.99 in net back pay.

Under the old system, in effect for 15 years, the NLRB calculated back pay as a lump sum from discharge to reemployment. The board changed the method to compute by quarterly periods so that:

- Such an employe will not lose old-age pension credits for that period, the computing periods corresponding to those used by the Social Security Administration.
- An employe's later earnings at a higher rate will not cut down the remedial back pay due him.
- Eliminate the need for an employe to waive reinstatement to his old job in order to preserve his back pay when he takes another job at higher pay while waiting for the board's decision on his case.

Under the old system, an employe illegally discharged might lose all back pay due him if, after being jobless for a time, he found a job at higher pay and worked at it long enough before being reinstated to his old job.

That was because the only way he could assure himself of receiving any back pay for the period of unemployment was to waive his right to reinstatement. Then his back pay was figured just to the date he waived reinstatement.

This was bad, the board declared, because employers deliberately refrained from offering reinstatement, knowing that the greater the delay, the greater would be the reduction in back pay liability.

"Thus, a recalcitrant employer may continue to profit by excluding union adherents from his enterprise," the board noted.

On the other hand, the board pointed out, a worker, faced with the prospect of steadily diminishing back pay, has frequently waived his right to reinstatement in order to preserve the amount then owing to him.

In the Woolworth case the board also ordered the company, on request, to make available to NLRB agents all company records "necessary to the proper determination of the amounts of back pay due and the rights of reinstatement."

The board noted that "in numerous cases" the NLRB has been hampered in its efforts to secure compliance "by refusal of some employers to permit access to their payroll and other records."

GOP Fails To Halt Probe Of Tennessee Walkout

By WILLIAM WEISS

A SENATE Labor subcommittee went to Morristown, Tenn., June 15, to investigate the three-month-old strike of the CIO Textile Workers against the American Enka Corp., near Morristown.

Sen. Murray, (D. Mont.), subcommittee chairman, said the probe was ordered by the full committee over the protests of Republican committee members, notably Sen. Taft (R. O.).

The hearing was conducted by Murray and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). (Details will appear in the next issue of the CIO News.)

Murray expressed the belief that it was a "legitimate activity" of his group to find out the actual facts in the case.

TAFT COMPLAINED that "neither this committee or its predecessor had previously injected itself into current disputes."

"There is no special feature about this," he said. "It's an ordinary case of a strike.

TWUA earlier had asked a Justice Dept. investigation to determine whether the strikers' civil rights have been abridged by the militia and state police.

When Gov. Browning was informed of the decision to hold the hearings, he declared that the subcommittee could not "intimidate" him.

"There are still states in the union," he said. "I think the people in Washington might assume we know what our duties are under oath of office down here. I will not be intimidated in doing my duty and I will be the judge of what is my duty when I know the facts."

The state's chief executive on May 29 sent 300 members of the National Guard to Morristown to put down the "wave of terror" Sheriff Robert Medlin claimed existed after two dynamite explosions occurred miles from the plant. No one was injured by the blasts.

SHORTLY AFTER the arrival of the troops, who have since been withdrawn, representatives of the United Textile Workers—AFL, who have the Asheville, N. C., plant of the company under contract, put in an appearance.

Its representatives claimed to represent a majority of the workers despite the fact that UTW had been defeated by TWUA by a considerable majority in a National Labor Relations Board election shortly after the plant opened about 18 months ago.

One of the more bizarre phases of the case came to light recently with the revelation by a roving county judge that the original injunction issued by him limiting pickets to six at the one gate of the plant had been altered by the local court clerk to read that no one could picket anywhere near the mill.

TWUA OFFICIALS said the judge has now denied that he said the injunction had been changed but the union is reportedly ready to produce evidence to the contrary.

One hundred and seventy TWUA members were arrested under terms of the injunction.

A number of union members were allegedly assaulted by National Guardsmen or state troopers. One of them, Blackie Warwick, was hospitalized for injuries.

Robert Cahoon, TWUA associate counsel, was knocked unconscious by a pistol butt wielded by a guardsman when Cahoon attempted to intercede on Warwick's behalf while the latter was being beaten in a doctor's office, according to TWUA.

Meanwhile in New York City, TWUA members picketed the Madison Ave. offices of the company and distributed leaflets telling the story of the strike.

Both leaflets and picket signs accused the Dutch-owned company of attempting to saddle foreign working conditions on its 750 American employes in Morristown.

Does Policy Stem From Feudalism?

John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, recently told a Senate subcommittee investigating the strike at the American Enka Corp. plant near Morristown, Tenn., that the firm has an American "front" but its policies stem from European feudalism.

Edelman told the subcommittee that:

The Enka Corp. is a subsidiary of a Dutch corporation. A few years ago it was part of a Nazi-dominated cartel.

Today Enka has an American "front," but the resemblance between the policy of some foreign manufacturers and that of native southern management is so striking "as to be well worth the attention of any group having to do with the problem of labor relations in the United States."

Organizationally Speaking

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Following a motion to adopt CIO policy all the way down the line, which was passed overwhelmingly, the writer was officially invited to address the convention of the United Furniture Workers of America-CIO, despite the opposition of the former left-wing executive board, which wanted no one to speak. The writer told the story of the treachery of the "left-wingers" following the Boston CIO convention.

The delegates elected officers fully in support of the CIO and its policies. Morris Pizer was reelected president 24,108 to 7234 for former Director of Organization Ernest Marsh. The real test, however, came in the election of the secretary-treasurer. Max Perlow, one of those who along with Marsh condemned and criticized the CIO, and one of those who violated the pledge on policy following the Boston convention, was defeated for the office he has held for years by Fred Fulford. The vote was 19,476 for Fulford to 7043 for Perlow. The newly elected executive board and regional representatives were chosen by an overwhelming vote. President Pizer and the United Furniture Workers are entitled to and should receive the support of every sincere trade-unionist for the gallant fight won.

The IUE-CIO continues to roll up victories. CIO Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that in a representation election at the Sylvania Co., Huntington, W. Va., the tally was 184 IUE, UE 122, no union 4. There were 324 eligible. CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in an NLRB run-off election at the Ingraham Clock Co., Bristol, Conn., the vote was eligible 2014, IUE-CIO 1049, UE 779, void 35. CIO Rep. Frank Deutsch reports that in a representation election at the White Sewing Machine Co., Cleveland, O., the workers voted 1295 IUE, no union 30, UE withdrew. Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports the following victories: Bendix Aviation Corp., Red Bank, N. J., IUE 263, UE 8; Faspray Corp., Red Bank, IUE 19, UE 2; Lennox Mfg. Co., Chicago, IUE 62, UE 21, no union 7; Foster Wheeler Corp., Carteret, N. J., (production), IUE 496, UE withdrew, no union 9; Foster Wheeler Corp. (salary) IUE 19, UE withdrew, no union 0.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, IWA-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Tufts Bros. Lumber Co., Inc., Chehalis, Wash., the workers voted 10 IWA, 3 AFL. W. W. Crawford, president, and Michael McMahan, vice-president, of Southern Washington District Council No. 3 worked on this election. The IWA won the following seven union shop elections among plywood plants in Olympia, Wash.: Buchanan Lumber, eligible 43, yes 37, no 2; Washington Veneer Sawmill, eligible 56, yes 54, no 2; Olympia Oil & Wood Co., eligible 5, yes 4, no 0; Olympia Harbor, eligible 71, yes 62, no 5; St. Paul & Tacoma, eligible 347, yes 305, no 9; Hardel Plywood, eligible 69, yes 59, no 2; and Washington Veneer Co., eligible 492, yes 462, no 13. Bus. Agents Floyd Carr and Wilbur Hendershott of Plywood, Box Shook & Door District Council No. 9, Olympia, Wash., worked on these elections. The IWA was successful in signing up the A. V. Logsdon Log Co., Sutherlin, Ore., without an NLRB election, as the company agreed to a card check.

Harry Sayre, president of the United Paperworkers of America-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Logan-Long Co., Chicago, Ill., the UPA-CIO was victorious by a vote of 40 to 2 for no union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that in a representation election at the Hinde & Dauch Co., Cleveland, O., the workers voted in favor of the United Paperworkers by 73 to 2 for no union. C. C. Smith was in charge of this campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that in a representation election at the Modine Mfg. Co., Paducah, Ky., the workers voted 172 CIO, 155 Intl. Association of Machinists. In a union authorization election at the Ray-O-Vac Battery Co., Paducah, the workers voted 84 to 13 in favor of the UAW-CIO.

CIO Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst reports that in NLRB elections at two plants of the International Shoe Co., Poplar Bluff, Mo., the Merva plant voted 115 for affiliation with the Shoe Workers and 92 voted no. At the Cedar Factory plant workers voted 102 yes and 53 no. USW-CIO Dist. Dir. Dave Wilson and Intl. Rep. Ellis Baker were active in this campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports that in a representation election at the Eagle Picher Mining & Smelting Co., Henryetta, Okla., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Steelworkers by 527 USA, 2 no union. This campaign was conducted by Sub-Dist. Dir. Charles E. Smith, USA-CIO.

CIO Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn reports that the Oil Workers Intl. Union won a representation election at the Standard Oil Co. of California Richmond, Calif., refinery by the following vote: eligible 2040, OWIU 955, Independent Union of Petroleum Workers 904, challenged 18, void 3. Intl. Rep. James R. Thornbury, aided by other international representatives and active local union members in the Bay Area, directed this organizing and election campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Walter Harris reports that in a representation election at the Armstrong Furnace Co., Columbus, O., the United Steelworkers won by a vote of 252 USA, Independent Union 97, 3 neither, 6 challenged. USA-CIO Rep. Ernest Mitchell was in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the United Steelworkers have won three NLRB elections. They were: United Iron Works, Pittsburg, Kan., union security, for 72, against 2; Manley Popcorn, Inc., Kansas City, Mo., union security for 36, against 12, and Dickey Clay Co., Pittsburgh, representation, USA-CIO 182, no union 0. Organizational work at these plants was in charge of Harold Edwards, sub-district director of District 34, USA-CIO. In a representation election at the Blick Mfg. Co., Kansas City, Mo., the workers voted for the USA-CIO by 17 to 3 for no union.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

Senate To Vote This Week On Social Security Bill

THE SENATE will vote Tuesday on a major piece of Fair Deal legislation—the bill, HR 6000, which is designed to improve the federal old-age and survivors' insurance program under the Social Security law.

The version before the Senate would increase old-age benefits by an average of 90% and bring another 8½ million people into the program. The House bill, passed last year, would increase benefits by 70%, cover an additional 10 million people, and allow totally disabled workers to receive their benefits before the age of 65.

Senate majority leaders have announced they will attempt to get approval of at least four liberalizing amendments from the floor. The bill as drawn clearly has enough support to pass, but there is considerable doubt whether the upper chamber will liberalize it further.

CIO HAS taken the position that both Senate and House bills are inadequate, although they are good as far as they go. The CIO Executive Board, in a resolution passed June 15, commented:

"We commend these Senators and the other liberals who are planning to carry on a floor fight to improve the bill . . . We condemn efforts that are being made to weaken instead of strengthen the social insurance system. We favor covering all Americans under adequate insurance provisions but we suspect that many of those who talk about universal coverage would allow miserably low levels or would impose a means test."

Die-hard Republican opposition to federal old-age insurance in any form has come mainly from Sen. Butler (R. Neb.), who frankly stated he would scrap the present system and substitute a pay-as-you-go plan based on income taxes, which would make a political pawn out of the amount of pensions paid each year to millions of aged Americans.

SEN. MILLIKIN (R. Colo.), however, told the Senate that while he believed the present system needed improvement, he would not vote to scrap it.

The nature of modern economic life, "where security is found in the pay envelope and not in the food in the cellar," Millikin observed, "may prove too much for even the most rugged individualists."

MORE AND more, responsibility for the individual's security rests with the federal government, the Colorado Republican told his colleagues. "I wish it were otherwise," he said, and it may be possible to reverse the trend, but no one "would allow the people to starve while we are waiting to do it."

HR 6000, he went on, "rectifies a considerable number of faults in the present system, while leaving others untouched, and because it is an improvement over the present system I give it my support."

Sen. Taft (R. O.), also supporting the bill, added that "it seemed to us absolutely impossible to make decisive changes in the system now." He said: "All the changes are in the right direction. We ought to look forward to further substantial changes."

Sens. Lucas (D. Ill.) and Myers (D. Pa.) would add the House-approved program of insurance to cover cases where wage earners are permanently disabled before the age of 65. They would increase the top wage on which payroll taxes are collected and benefit scales calculated from $3000 to $4200. And they would make it possible for workers to collect larger benefits if they've been paying into the insurance fund for a longer period of time. They would also change a section of the bill to make it possible for federal funds more adequately to supplement state unemployment insurance funds in states like Rhode Island and Massachusetts, where unemployment is so great that it has exhausted state money.

Dear Sir,

The Social Security Comm. ittee, finaly after Nearly 3½ mos. okd a Bill telling we older folks that they have taken Care of us. by increasing S.S. by 90% that Committe should be congratulated. but with a good stiff Kick in the pants I Just wonder how many of them could live on such an allowance. does this 49.00 mean all that we unemployed will get!? or is this 90% on our present allowance, for Instance say a person is now getting 20.00 S.S. does that mean 90% plus or 38.00. a very very meger allowance. Can there not something be done about this matter yet, I hope so.

Thanking you for any thing that can be done.

I Remain

THE WRITER of the above letter is justifiably not satisfied with the $49 a month that would be paid him in old age benefits under the version of the Social Security Bill as reported out by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Heard Of FWPAC? Spell It Hartley

Former Rep. Fred A. Hartley, Jr., of New Jersey, who knows a good (for him) thing when he sees it, has quit his $28,000 a year job (not good enough?) as head of the Tool Owners Union to organize his own political action committee.

He's calling it the "Free Workers Political Action Committee." Any resemblance between its name and that of the CIO Political Action Committee appears to be intentional.

The former Republican Congressman who ducked out on the voters of his district by not standing again for re-election after helping to sire the Taft-Hartley Act says it will give a voice "to millions of Americans whose political thinking is right of center." The FWPAC is expected by most political observers to move so far to the right Hartley will have to spend $8 to mail a postcard to center.

NMU Signs Hiring Pact

AN AGREEMENT was signed June 13 by the CIO National Martime Union and Atlantic and Gulf Coast steamship owners providing that the union shall operate "employment offices" within the terms of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The NMU and other maritime unions have been seeking to have Congress enact the Magnuson bill which would legalize hiring halls. The halls years ago replaced the chaotic shape-up on the waterfront as a means of job placement for most marine workers.

The National Labor Relations Board has held that the hiring halls are illegal under Taft-Hartley. The U. S. Supreme Court has sustained it.

The ship owners agreed in the new pact to use the "employment offices," but retained the right of selecting personnel.

Both NMU Pres. Joseph Curran and Frank J. Taylor, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute and chairman of the employers committee, said that the agreement would "prevent chaos on the waterfront."

CIO Invitation Upsets Medics

SPEAKERS FOR the American Medical Association are Johnnies-on-the-spot whenever they get a chance to spiel against national health insurance (socialized medicine, they call it) before any gathering, big or small.

But it's a one-sided business with them. Judging by a recent instance noted by the Connecticut CIO Council, AMA nabobs don't want anybody from the other side of the fence speaking at their affairs if they can help it.

The council offered to send a CIO speaker to explain to the convention of the Connecticut State Medical Society why the CIO regards health insurance legislation as a vital national need. To make the proposal entirely fair, it also invited the society to send a representative to appear before the CIO and explain why the AMA opposes health insurance.

Dr. Creighton Barker, the Medical Society's public relations chief, used a lot of words in answering the proposal, reported Harold Senior, council administrative officer, but they all added up to a plain "no" plus some vague talk about the future, when a forum such as the CIO proposed might be arranged. The Medical Society meets again in a year, Dr. Barker said.

General Tire Co. To Pay Pension

Two locals of the CIO Rubber Workers signed contracts last week with the General Tire & Rubber Co. providing $100 minimum company-paid pensions, liberal insurance benefits and a positive wage re-opening clause.

Terms of the agreement, which will cover employes at General plants in Akron, Ohio, and Waco, Tex., were revealed by URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

The funded pension program is provided at no cost to the workers. The $100 minimum will apply to all employes 65 years of age who have had 25 years' service.

Buckmaster said that a formula for figuring the company's contribution had been agreed upon whereby an amount equal to 1% of the worker's total earnings is set aside and paid into the fund in 12 monthly payments. The pension includes social security benefits.

HST Greets PAC

Negroes Shun Taft

Basing-Point Bill Vetoed By Pres. Truman

PRES. TRUMAN struck a sharp blow against monopoly on June 16 when he vetoed the basing point bill.

The bill provided a loophole through which the basing-point system of pricing would have been able to get by the anti-trust laws.

Used in many basic industries, basing points are a device which makes it particularly suicidal for a small competitor to undersell the "big boys" in the country.

The net result has been that all competitors' prices have usually turned out to be identical on each variety of product at each point of delivery.

TRUMAN SAID he vetoed the bill because if it became law there would be the risk of long court fights over the anti-trust laws.

"There would have been no justification for taking such risks unless the existing legal situation were so confused as to appreciably hamper business operations and there were no alternative methods for resolving these difficulties," the President said. "At the present time, this clearly is not the case."

The presidential veto marked the second time this year Truman has spiked the guns of monopolistic interests. Earlier he vetoed the Kerr natural gas bill, another intricate, innocent - appearing measure which could have mulcted the users of gas for heating and cooking and industrial purposes of millions of dollars annually.

The bill of which the President disapproved had its inception in Congress shortly after the U. S. Supreme Court, in deciding the now famous Cement Institute case in 1948, outlawed the industry's multiple basing point system.

FOLLOWING THE veto, the National Federation of Independent Businessmen sent a message to the White House, congratulating the President on his action. C. Wilson Harder, president of the group, said the veto decision proved the President's sincerity in his expressed interest in the welfare of independent enterprises.

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce in a formal statement issued by its general counsel, Milton Smith, called the veto "a great disappointment."

David Lawrence, newspaper columnist and publisher of the magazine, U. S. News & World Report, was critical of the Truman veto. In his column Lawrence declared: "The proponents of the veto are claiming that monopoly has been defeated. Quite the reverse is the truth. Local monopolies have been encouraged . . ."

The CIO opposed the bill from the beginning. Early in 1949 Otis Brubaker, research director of the Steelworkers, presented facts and figures before the Senate Judiciary Committee in an effort to demolish the big-business arguments for "clarification" of the anti-trust laws.

Organize In Greece

About 700 Greek employes of the various American aid missions in Greece have formed a union, which has been recognized by the missions, the courts and the government. The union is "Association of Greek Employes of the American Mission For Aid."

200,000 More Offered Haven As Truman Signs DP Measure

THE WELCOMING arms of the new world were held open to thousands of additional victims of war in the old when President Truman signed the Displaced Persons bill on June 16.

The measure was one of the few pieces of Fair Deal legislation to be passed by Congress in substantially the form proposed and had the vigorous support of the CIO as it inched its way through House and Senate.

It amends the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 by extending it to June 30, 1951, increasing the number of refugees who may be admitted to the United States from 205,000 to 400,744 or more, and eliminating discrimination against thousands of Jews and Catholics who after the war fled from behind the Iron Curtain into western Europe.

The bill was sponsored by Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) and won support as well as opposition from legislators in both parties.

"It is especially gratifying to me," the President said in a formal statement, "that this expression of American fairness and generosity has been brought about by groups and organizations broadly representative of all parts of our country . . .

"It is a splendid example of the way in which joint action can strengthen and unify our country."

HE EXPRESSED confidence that refugees eligible under the new law, but not the old, will make good Americans.

"The countrymen of these displaced persons," he said, "have brought to us in the past the best of their labor, their hatred of tyranny and their love of freedom. They have helped our country grow in strength and moral leadership. I have every confidence that the new Americans who will come to our country under the provisions of the present bill will also make a substantial contribution to our national well-being."

He issued an executive order, required by the bill, which designated the Displaced Persons Commission to investigate the character and eligibility of refugees and persons of German ethnic origin so as to eliminate the possibility of subversives gaining entry to the U. S.

The old bill denied U. S. admission to refugees who arrived in DP camps in Western Europe after Dec. 22, 1945. This determining date becomes Jan. 1, 1949, under the new law.

PRIMARILY, the new act offers shelter in this country to 341,000 actual displaced persons, including:

More than 172,000 for whom visas had been issued up to May 31:

About 18,000 Polish Exile Army veterans now in England and Czechoslovakia.

Ten thousand persons made homeless by the guerilla warfare in Northern Greece, including 7500 destitute.

The "Shanghai group" of about 4000, now mostly on the island of Samar, in the Southern Philippines, who fled from Germany across Siberia to Shanghai early in the war, then fled from Shanghai to escape the Russians.

Five thousand war orphans mostly under the care of the Intl. Refugee Organization.

Five hundred eastern Europeans who have aided U. S. intelligence and are certified by the Secretaries of State and Defense.

Two thousand persons who fled to Trieste or Italy when Venezia Giulia territory was given to Yugoslavia under the Italian peace treaty.

In addition, it provides for the admission of 54,744 Volksdeutsch refugees and expellees from behind the Iron Curtain; up to 15,000 people now in this country under temporary passports who face death or persecution if they return to their own lands, and 5000 adopted refugee orphans.

"When President Truman asked for continued expansion, he didn't mean of the waistline."

Rep. Mitchell Is Named To Labor Unit

LIBERAL REP. Howard Mitchell last week was named by House Democrats to the vacant seat on the 25-member House Labor Committee.

The vacancy was created by the sudden death last month of Rep. Lesinski of Michigan, who was the victim of a heart attack.

Rep. Barden (D. N. C.), whose voting record has been consistently anti-labor, then moved up through the seniority process to chairmanship of the committee.

Mitchell, a resident of Seattle, has had a strong liberal record. The 1949 CIO News voting tally showed that he voted "right" on every listed issue.

Forty-three years old, Mitchell received an appointment to fill

REP. MITCHELL (D. WASH.)
On Labor Committee

a vacancy in the Senate during the 79th Congress. He was elected a representative in 1948. Mitchell has been a leading advocate for creation of a Columbia Valley Authority along the lines of the TVA.

Membership of the House Labor Committee is now as follows:

Democrats — Barden (N. C.), chairman; Kelley (Pa.), Powell (N. Y.), Wood (Ga.), Kennedy (Mass.), Lucas (Tex.), Bailey (W. Va.), Irving (Mo.), Perkins (Ky.), Howell (N. J.), Sims (S. C.), Jacobs (Ind.), Burke (O.), Steed (Okla.), Wier (Minn.).

Republicans McConnell (Pa.), Gwinn (N. Y.), Brehm (O.), Smith (Kans.), Kearns (Pa.), Nixon (Calif.), Morton (Ky.), Werdel (Calif.), Velde (Ill.).

Citizenship Revocation Appealed By Bridges

Harry Bridges, head of the west coast longshoremen's union, will keep his American citizenship pending appeal of the revocation order signed by a federal judge.

Judge George Harris signed an order taking away Bridges' citizenship on the basis of his conviction for perjury when he applied for citizenship in 1945. Bridges, Australian-born, is appealing both the court case and the judge's order.

The CIO has held hearings on whether to expel the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union on grounds of Communist domination, and a final decision is expected at the next CIO board meeting.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

CIO Aide Says:

McCarthy Sold Booklet Done By U. S. Unit

LEO GOODMAN, director of the CIO Housing Committee, charged last week that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) did not write the housing pamphlet for which he admits having received $10,000 of what was in effect the government's money.

The pamphlet was published in 1948 by the Lustron Corp., government-financed manufacturer of pre-fabricated homes, which has since been forced into bankruptcy. It was sold for 35c a copy; McCarthy received 10c a copy for the first 100,000 in advance. (No figures are available on the number of copies actually sold: it is possible that McCarthy owes his publisher part of his advance.)

Goodman says the material for the pamphlet was prepared by the press section of the Housing and Home Finance Agency

McCarthy may have rewritten the material somewhat, Goodman says, but there is no question of where it originated or of who did most of the original spadework.

The agency, according to Goodman, first drafted a book, at McCarthy's request. It was titled "How to Buy a Home." McCarthy then attempted unsuccessfully to get it published. One of the unwilling publishers advised McCarthy to try to work with magazines.

McCarthy returned to the agency and asked for material for the magazines. HHFA drafted three magazine articles, all on the same theme, for publication under McCarthy's signature. Then came the Lustron deal.

"I have been advised by HHFA," Goodman says, "that a great deal of the work in preparation of the McCarthy pamphlet was done by the agency . . .

"It is my feeling that members of Congress, sitting on committees investigating the social problems of the American people, should make available free of charge to their constituents and others involved—in this case, thousands of veterans—the advice and information they received from government agencies free of charge."

McCarthy's defense of his action in taking $10,000 for the pamphlet rests largely on the fact that other Senators have sources of outside income.

Compromise Puts Continued Controls In Laps Of Tenants

THE "COMPROMISE" rent control bill, satisfactory to the real estate lobby and to very few others, has passed Congress, and the rest is squarely up to the tenants themselves. President Truman is expected to sign the bill.

Under the bill, federal controls expire Dec. 31 of this year. The only way a community that now has control can keep them after that date is to vote BEFORE then to continue controls.

And there is no way that a decontrolled community can get back under federal controls after Dec. 31 (or before then either, for that matter, except if the Office of the Housing Expediter has issued the decontrol order itself.)

Furthermore, even if a community does vote—through its governing body or by referendum—to keep controls, its work can be undone by its own state legislature.

THERE ARE over 3400 communities still under federal controls—over eight million rental units are involved, and over 29 million people live in those eight million controlled dwellings. The average rental for the controlled properties is $33 a month

The nearest the OHE can come to an accurate figure on all rent increases in all the areas that have been decontrolled is this: about half of all previously controlled units had rent increases after the lid went off, and the increase averaged 26.1%.

Individual communities have been completely studied, and there, the rental increase for persons now paying around $30 a month has averaged around 50%—a really staggering figure.

The House had voted to extend controls to Jan. 31, 1951, which would have allowed the 44 state legislatures that meet in January to pass stand-by legislation—but the Senate turned even this loophole down.

The rest of the story is strictly up to the people concerned—in the villages, towns, and cities: and they have to watch two fronts, local and state.

No States Are Scheduled To Act On Rents; Four Have Some Curbs

WHAT is the situation on state rent control legislation, now that federal control is rapidly running out?

No state legislatures are scheduled to meet in regular session before Dec. 31, when the federal law expires in all those communities which have not voted before then to keep controls. Therefore only by summoning special sessions can any states keep federal controls. Illinois may hold such a session, according to present reports.

Three states—Connecticut, New Jersey and Maryland — have "standby" legislation, which takes effect on expiration of Federal controls—but in no case is the state law as strong as even the present weakened Federal statute.

Only one state—New York—has its own rent control law operating now.

Wisconsin decontrolled itself and then passed its own law, which expired May 31, so all tenants in Wisconsin are without protection right now and will remain so unless the legislature passes another one.

ONE MAJOR city—Philadelphia—has its own eviction control law.

Seven state legislatures have voted to decontrol themselves entirely or partially, leaving city tenants in those states no recourse. These are: Alabama, Nebraska, Florida (partial), Mississippi (partial), Virginia, Texas, and Utah. The Utah action actually did not go through the legislature but was taken by all major Utah cities at the direct request of the Governor.

THE OFFICE of the Housing Expediter decontrolled Arizona on its own motion after all major communities in the state had removed themselves from controls.

The Florida and Nebraska decontrol motions were passed over the two governors' vetoes.

Forty-four State legislatures meet in January. They will be powerless to bring their states back under Federal controls, but can get Federal controls removed if they still exist anywhere in the state. Or they can—if pushed—pass state rent control laws.

Woodworkers Win Pact In Canada

Six hours before a strike deadline on June 14, the CIO Woodworkers worked out an agreement with British Columbia (Canada) lumber operators that yielded a pay boost of 12½c an hour to 32,000 union members.

The union, which had sought a wage boost of 17c an hour, also won the union shop and the 40-hour week. The contract covers the employes of 163 operators.

Progress Report:

Senate Licks Move For Bias In Services

A DIXIECRAT move to saddle the armed forces with racial segregation policies has been defeated, 42-29, by the Senate.

The Russell Amendment to the draft extension bill would have permitted draftees and new enlistees to signify their willingness to serve only in segregated units.

The armed services, spurred on by labor and liberal forces and by directives from President Truman have taken a number of successful steps to break down discrimination practices within the army, navy and air forces.

The bias amendment, sponsored by Sen. Russell (D. Ga.), had been sharply opposed in a letter sent to members of the Senate by CIO Sec-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey charged that its passage would "not only reverse the present policy in the armed services, but would demonstrate to the world the hypocrisy of our democratic pronouncements."

The CIO officer hailed Pres. Truman's patient efforts to end armed services segregation practices. He added that the public has come to realize that segregation policies "not only affected the efficiency of our armed services, but represented a serious blight on the democratic goals that we all profess."

Wages Boosted In P. R.

Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb on June 20 raised minimum wages in the Puerto Rican shipping industry from the 40c an hour set more than a decade ago to 75c.

At the same time he boosted the baking industry minimum from 20c to 35c an hour. Both orders are effective July 24.

McCombs also proposed new minimums in the island's button, buckle and jewelry industry of 30 to 46c an hour (compared to the present 20c to 40c); and a 30c minimum in the vegetable, fruit and nut packing and processing industry instead of existing bottoms of 15c, 16c and 18c.

Political Action Given Priority

Job Of Changing Complexion Of Congress Is No. 1 On CIO List—And It's A Big And Important Job

By ALLAN L. SWIM

POLITICS IS "bread and butter." It's carpets on the floor and music in the home.

"It means a higher standard of living, or it doesn't—a decent education for your children, or it doesn't.

"You have the instrument; you have the machinery. It's right here in this room."

That's what CIO Pres. Philip Murray recently told cheering delegates to a national CIO political action conference in Washington.

Jack Kroll, PAC director, said, "They've got gold on their side but we've got people on our side—and that gold won't buy these people."

And together they set the stage for an all-out campaign designed to help change the complexion of Congress.

The story of the CIO president and the PAC director was a simple one that needs to be told again and again.

Murray pointed out that the conditions under which people work and live are closely connected with political decisions.

Kroll's point was that those who oppose labor have much money but that labor has great manpower.

And this manpower, delegates to the conference agreed, should be fully mobilized for the 1950 elections.

THAT MEANS that every CIO member—and every member of every other labor organization in the country—should pitch in and should kick in.

The "kicking in" of at least $1 each to labor's political committees is something which should be done immediately.

The enemies of labor, as Kroll said, may have the "gold," but labor can't operate with effectiveness in the political field unless it, too, has money to spend.

And the "pitching in" should be unstinted.

A lot of us thought that the 1948 elections would be regarded by Congress as a mandate from the people.

Quite a few members of the House and Senate took the mandate seriously, but there weren't enough of them.

A coalition of Republicans and Dixiecrats blocked repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and a lot more Fair Deal legislation.

This coalition's activities have greatly affected the welfare of millions of people, including some 15,000,000 trade unionists.

The group has attempted to turn the clock back on social progress. It has espoused the causes of conservatism and reaction.

There's a way to handle this group—and it's at the polls on election day.

And the handling should be decisive!

UNDOUBTEDLY IT sounds "corny" to say so, but the only things which wins election is votes—and the more votes the better.

Well, there are a lot of people in our country who don't take the trouble to vote. This is particularly true in the "off-year" elections.

But many more than usual will vote if they're made fully aware of how the outcome of elections can affect their daily lives.

SPELLING THIS story out is the job of national, state and local political action leaders.

It's not a job which can be done successfully during the last half of October. It's not a job which can be done successfully by half of those appointed to PAC posts.

Right now it's the No. 1 job of CIO; And right now is the time to give it No. 1 status!

It's possible to complete in 1950 the job that was started in 1948—but, frankly, it won't be completed unless labor works like the very dickens!

JUST ISN'T SO

Thanks to pressure from the real estate lobby, Congress recently handed the nation's tenants a pair of loaded dice.

Now, for the information of those who are not familiar with galloping dominos, loaded dice are used by those who believe in the theory that you "shouldn't give a sucker an even break."

Let's take a quick look at what happened.

Rent control could easily have become a major political issue—and this is a "political" year. So it was deemed to be wise by some of the wise boys of Congress and the real estate lobby not to kill rent control before the November elections.

The battle over extension of controls beyond June 30 was joined on Capitol Hill. When it was over, some of the strongest enemies of protections for tenants solemnly reported that rent control had been extended for one year.

But the newspapers, generally, didn't report the event that way. They said controls had been extended to Dec. 31, 1950, and not to next June. And the papers, for all practical purposes, were right.

Here's what Congress actually did:

It said in effect that rent controls COULD be extended to June 30, 1951, but didn't actually extend them that far.

It provided a series of loopholes through which the real estate lobby can drive a convoy of trucks—unless the "people back home" work fast and furiously.

The maneuver was designed to remove rent contral as a campaign issue and to shift responsibility for control beyond Dec. 31 from the shoulders of representatives and senators.

REALLY LOADED We weren't merely jesting earlier when we said that the dice tossed into the real estate game by Congress are loaded. They're REALLY loaded—and those who fought in the Senate and House for a real measure are pretty burned up by what happened.

Here's why:

The measure will extend controls until Dec. 31 and permit extension of controls by communities to next June. But here are the jokers:

1. Controls automatically end Dec. 31 in communities which have not voted—either by their governing bodies or referenda—for extension prior to that date.

2. State legislatures—none of which meet in regular session until after Dec. 31—can vote to decontrol entire states. regardless of any action taken previously by communities.

3. There is no provision for recontrol by communities or states—so no action can be taken on the matter if automatic decontrol is permitted to become effective.

Well, that's the set-up and it's a bad one. Whether controls end on Dec. 31 or continue until next June is now directly in the laps of people throughout the country.

It's possible for the people to throw the loaded dice handed them by Congress and still win, but to do so they'll have to get to work soon—and they'll have to work hard.

And they'll have to fight the real estate interests every step of the way.

Camp To Teach Democracy To Children

A CHANCE TO learn what democracy means by practicing it will be given 750 children of CIO members and their friends who will attend the five-week summer camp to be held July 1-Aug. 5 at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, near Port Huron, Mich.

The camp is sponsored jointly by the CIO Auto Workers and the Wayne County and Greater Detroit CIO Councils.

Boys and girls between 8 and 14, with enrollment limited to 150 children a week, will attend. Under the supervision of a trained camp director and qualified counselors, the children will run their own affairs through an elected government body.

Daily activities will include arts and crafts, nature study, atheltics, swimming, hikes, group singing, story-telling, dramatics, camp government and picnics, with each phase of camp life carefully supervised by counselors. One counselor is assigned to each eight children.

Meals at the FDR-CIO camp are prepared under the direction of a trained dietician in a state-approved camp kitchen. A trained nurse will be on daily duty to watch after the children's health and a doctor will be on call at all times.

The camp operates on a non-profit basis which enables it to offer a week's camping for $13. The fee covers the cost of room, board and activities program. An additional $2 fee covers cost of transportation to and from the camp.

During the four weeks the camp was in session last summer, 600 children attended. This summer another week has been added to permit 150 more youngsters to have a week there.

Optical Firm Must Pay Tax On 'Kickback'

IT'S A PRETTY little racket, this business of an eye doctor charging you $15 to $25 for a prescription for eyeglasses, then referring you to a certain optical company to have the glasses made and fitted—and getting part of that dough too.

Nothing can be done about that, but the U. S. Tax Court has just put a kink in the other end of the deal—deduction by the optical company, for income tax purposes, of the "kickback" as a legitimate business expense.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue nicked Thomas B. Lilly and his wife, Helen, for tax deficiencies for 1943 and 1944. They huffed and puffed, but the U. S. Tax Court said such a "kickback" is contrary to the public interest, and in such cases the "kickback" cannot be deducted when toting up what you owe Uncle Samuel.

Mr. and Mrs. Lilly, operating the City Optical Co. in North Carolina and the Richmond Optical Co. in Virginia, had an oral deal to kick back a third of their fee to the oculists. On their books Mr. and Mrs. Lilly entered the deal as "trade discounts."

The court took a dim view of the plea that the optician was the agent of the doctor, or that the "kickback" was added compensation to the doctor. Such a deal, said the court, undermines the traditional trust and confidence of patients in their doctors, and an oculist who makes such a deal has a divided allegiance. (LPA)

Archbishop Defeats Measure To End Louisiana Controls

Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans is widely credited for the defeat, 20-17, of a rent decontrol bill in the Louisiana State Legislature.

The bill was all set to go, after some of the fanciest real estate lobbying seen anywhere. The landlords had whooped up a motorcade of buses, bought radio time and newspaper space, packed the Senate galleries, and were already licking their chops over an easy victory, when Sen. Joseph O'Connor of New Orleans rose and read a letter from the Catholic Archbishop.

He noted that 25% of New Orleans' population earns less than $1000 a year and a third of the people are in the $2000 to $3000 bracket. "It is notorious that the construction of low-priced homes has not kept pace with demand," he said. "Unfortunately, it is equally notorious that the owners of rental property have a tendency, whether justified or not, to take advantage of decontrol . . . Thus a large percentage of the population would be exposed by the elimination of rent controls to exactions which they would be virtually incapable of meeting."

Vol. XIII June 26, 1950 No. 26

The Accuser Left Town In A Hurry

BACK IN 1945 Vick was sent to a Southwestern town to organize a union at a war production plant.

Within two months, more than half the 2000 workers in the plant had joined the CIO. Then Vick opened an office nearby and began holding regular union meetings.

A petition for certification was filed with the NLRB and the organizing drive was intensified.

On the surface, everything looked good—but Vick was worried. He knew the company was anti-union, yet it was not openly opposing the membership campaign. And then there was bitter racial tensions, which Vick suspected the company of fostering.

Vick repeatedly warned members to watch for a "last-minute trick on the part of the company."

And then it happened!

THE NLRB ELECTION was only three days away and 90% of the workers were in the union when the company, as Vick put it, "started to lower the boom."

A millwright who had signed a CIO card and expressed keen interest in the union began circulating a vicious story around the plant.

He charged that he had seen a Negro member of the CIO plant committee slap and otherwise abuse a white woman worker.

The story "caught on" rapidly. It was repeated over and over. Tempers ran hot—and resentment was about equally directed toward the Negro and the CIO.

The millwright stormed into Vick's office with a large delegation of white union members, a number of whom had come to the plant from "Jim Crow" states.

He blurted out his story about the Negro and then issued an ultimatum: The Negro had to be thrown out of the CIO and discharged by the company "or every white worker will vote against the union."

VICK LISTENED patiently to the delegation, then promised to look into the matter quickly and carefully.

Vick first checked with the most dependable union members in the plant. They said that "feeling is running high" and that there was some talk of organizing a lynching party.

Next, Vick called on the man who had been accused of slapping the woman. The latter flatly denied the accusation.

The woman, he said, came up to him while he was sweeping an aisle in her department, started to say something to him and then—without provocation—slapped his face.

Then the millwright rushed up, he said, accused him of "taking liberties" with the woman and threatened to "get" him.

Vick believed the Negro janitor's story.

THE UNION HALL was jammed at a meeting which had been previously scheduled for the following day.

Soon several white men gained the floor and demanded that the janitor be ousted from the union.

Vick let the discussion continue. Nobody rose to defend the janitor. Then Vick charged the incident was company inspired and that it was designed to defeat the union in the election.

He then told the group they belonged to a democratic organization which had a constitution which provided for a method of ousting members.

"Article X says charges against a member must be signed and that a trial committee selected by the members must conduct a hearing to find out if the charges are true," he said.

The janitor said he'd be willing to undergo a trial—but there was nobody in the meeting hall willing to sign charges against him.

The millwright wasn't at the meeting—and on the following day he and the woman involved in the incident suddenly left town!

The union won the election by an overwhelming majority.

Meaning of UNESCO: Peace Through Understanding

By STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG
CIO Education and Research Director

UNESCO HAS JUST completed its Fifth International Conference in Florence, Italy.

Many people ask what this organization is, what is it trying to do and what is it accomplishing. On first thought the answers may be rather hard to find. But upon further reflection, it becomes very clear that this is one of the most important international organizations created in the postwar period.

UNESCO stands for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. It was created in 1945 as one of the specialized agencies of the United Nations. In structure and relationship to the UN, it is similar to the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization and similar other international bodies. The WHO's responsibility is to improve the world's health conditions. The FAO's responsibility is to improve food and agricultural production, distribution and consumption throughout the world. UNESCO's role is to promote peace and security through international understanding and cooperation.

Educators, scientists and cultural leaders throughout the world have joined together to promote the concept of peace through international understanding.

IT IS MUCH easier to improve the health of people and to improve food and agricultural production and distribution of foodstuffs than it is to promote the indefinite, intangible concept of peace and security. Yet, UNESCO is engaged in this very difficult and most important task of attempting to influence people to carry on peaceful relations with each other.

The UNESCO constitution states that "Inasmuch as wars are made in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed."

What are the steps that can be taken to construct in the minds of men the defenses of people? The Director General, Mr. Torres-Bodet, upon assuming his post, said there were two basic objectives in his mind that over the long run must be fulfilled if we are to promote peace and security. These are very simple: (1) To teach people to read and write. (Many hundreds of thousands of millions of people throughout the world are illiterate, unable to read and write.) (2) To improve living standards of people.

These objectives really amount to saying, teach people to read and write and enable them to improve their living standards and there will be less drive toward wars and catastrophe!

OVER THE PAST five years UNESCO has developed programs of action designed to carry out its objectives in many fields. They have worked in education, natural and social sciences, cultural affairs, mass communications, exchange of persons and reconstruction of education, scientific and cultural materials. I would like to discuss briefly some of these activities in a series of articles. The remainder of this article will deal with education.

UNESCO has spent considerable money in the past five years to promote and encourage the teaching of what it calls fundamental education. This is really a campaign against illiteracy. Educational missions have been sent by UNESCO to various parts of the world in an attempt to improve their educational facilities and to enable greater numbers of people to derive the benefits that come with a knowledge of reading and writing.

In addition to UNESCO's work in the field of illiteracy and fundamental education, it has been working closely with educational institutions in many countries to improve the teaching of international understanding through primary and secondary schools and universities. There has been less attention devoted to improving education through adult and workers' education media. However, in the past year or two, with the presence of labor people from both CIO and AFL on the U. S. delegation to UNESCO conferences, emphasis has been placed upon the need for not only educating the youth and children, but for making educational facilities and techniques available to the adult workers.

I FOR ONE, believe that UNESCO in order to be completely successful in accomplishing its objectives of promoting peace and security, must engage more extensively in the promotion of adult and workers' education programs.

It remains to be seen if UNESCO will really pursue this approach in reaching the great masses of people. Recently it appointed a new director of this department, Lionel Elvin, former dean of Ruskin College in England. Ruskin College is really a workers' college.

For UNESCO to have hired the dean of this college to become its new director of education is an encouraging step.

Additional stories on the work of UNESCO will appear in future issues of the CIO News.

THE CIO IS the proud parent of the fastest-growing baby ever to hit the American labor movement.

It was born in November, but already it is walking with the strides of a Gulliver. It never crept.

It's still wearing the clothes they gave it at birth, but the sleeves end long before the hands begin and the seams are giving way thread by thread. How they'll fit by the time it gets new clothes in September is hard to figure out.

Its feet, which never waved in mid-air like those of so many babes, are planted firmly on the ground. Its muscles aren't soft and rolling; they bulge and they're hard—very hard. It never had to prattle; from the cradle it had the voice of experience. It was born with wisdom but has never stopped learning, and it doesn't expect to.

It's the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, born Nov. 2, 1949, in the hurly-burly of one of CIO's most tumultuous conventions.

THAT SESSION on the morning of last Nov. 2 was a long one. It lacked but five minutes of 2 P. M. when the first hungry delegate made for the door as Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers and acting chairman, banged down his gavel. It was an important session, too. The delegates did more than expel the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers because of its blatant following of the Communist Party line and authorize the new IUE.

They had heard an inspiring invocation by Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner of Cleveland, and important speeches by Ambassador W. Averell Harriman, head of the Economic Cooperation Administration in Europe, and U. S. Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin. They had voted to raise the per capita dues from 8c to 10c a month and renew the pledge to fight against government by injunction when Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and chairman of the Resolutions Committee, stepped to the microphone and said:

"You have before you the special resolution on the expulsion of the UE."

THE DELEGATES talked of all these things as they left the hall for their belated lunches, but most of all they talked about the expulsion of the UE and the CIO's proposed new union in the industry.

A new union had to have a place to live. So Richard E. Bauer, then business manager of the CIO News and now comptroller of IUE-CIO, set out to find it a home. He knew what he wanted—some place not too far from CIO headquarters, in the neighborhood of the White House in Washington.

By 10 A. M. the next day he had found it, the recently vacated 10th floor of the Walker building at 734 15th St., N. W., a block and a half from CIO headquarters, which can be sighted across historic Lafayette Square.

BACK IN CLEVELAND on Nov. 3, the CIO Executive Board met in a brief session and issued a charter to the new IUE. It placed its affairs in the hands of an administrative committee headed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, founder and first president of UE, who was kicked out by the lefties when they completed their seizure of it in 1941.

On the committee were men who, like Carey, had long carried the banner for CIO within the UE and had been kicked from pillar to post by the Commies—but had never stopped fighting. Men like Harry Block, secretary of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, who for years, as a UE district president, had sounded the lone anti-Communist voice on the UE executive board.

In addition to Carey and Block, they were William Snoots, who was elected secretary; Albin Hartnett, now administrative assistant; Fred Kelley, Michael Fitzpatrick, John E. Dillon, Anthony Cimino, John Callahan, E. J. Kraft, Joseph Hawkins, Robert Elsner and Dallas Smith. Later Robert I. Wisha James Click, Jack Morton and Frank Murr were added.

THE FIRST thing the administrative co mittee did was to send night lette to more than 1300 companies under contra with the UE advising them that the fledgi CIO union now claimed jurisdiction, a also claiming all rights for the worke under the contracts.

It wasn't as simple as all that, of cours

Some UE locals had bolted long befo the convention—and they jumped at t chance to get back into the CIO. Othe followed suit as soon as they got the wo from Cleveland. But still others had to shown that they were just being used as Communist recruiting ground and soundi board.

That required organizers. One by o they joined the staff—recommended in eve instance by administrative board membe and formally appointed by Carey—and th went to work with a fury they didn't thi they owned. Many took sharp pay cuts order to help build a union.

THE WASHINGTON office, meantime, actually in business.

Desks and chairs—sturdy, attractive met ones of moderate price—trickled in for t weeks while union carpenters and painte who never DID like the Communis worked beyond the call of duty to thr up partitions around space blocked out offices and make them presentable.

The growing staff worked in a frenzy pounding hammers and furniture in moti and strident calls to answer one of two telephones (whoever was wanted WAYS happened to be at the other end the building).

In two weeks, however, a switchbo was installed and something bearing a f resemblance to order began to emerge fr the chaos.

As the staff grew, the pitch of administ tive tempo increased. The lights we seldom out in the Washington office, and for the staff the eight-hour day was strictly something they'd heard about. Every call from a local was answered. Organizers jumped hither, thither and yon — often getting their best rest in Pullman berths en route from one assignment to another.

The publicity staff, under the direction of Arthur Riordan, on leave from the CIO News, began publishing a 12-page tabloid newspaper, with two issues a month, that grew and grew until now nearly 350,000 copies of each issue are printed. It turned out leaflets—each geared to the specific needs of a local situation explained over the long distance telephone — that total well into the millions.

The headquarters staff wasn't departmentalized for the first few months. Everybody knew how to do everybody else's job. Now, however, it is broken down into departments like any other union—administration, finance, organization, charter, publicity, legal and pensions.

Late in November everybody took time out for an organizational convention in Philadelphia. The 400-odd delegates, representing 221,000 members in 133 locals, laid plans for keeping the union busy for the following few months, which certainly worked out the way they were intended to.

THEY ADOPTED A temporary constitution, and held off setting up a formal union structure until the main jobs of driving the Communists from the industry, winning National Labor Relations Board elections and negotiating contracts were completed, and at least a start made on organizing the unorganized. The first constitutional convention will be held in Milwaukee beginning Sept. 11.

The Philadelphia sessions were in marked contrast to UE conventions. If a delegate disagreed with something Carey or one of the other members of the administrative committee said, he got up and said so and Carey and the others listened to him. Any delegate who wanted the floor got it, with due regard for parliamentary procedure—some of them for the first time in years.

After the convention, and even before it, the first over-all job was pushing representation cases through the NLRB. Employers purported to be concerned about the legality of their contracts so they all (or so it seemed) asked the NLRB for elections.

THE UE PULLED every dirty trick in the Commies' well-thumbed book to delay and stall, and most of the elections had to go to hearings. IUE General Counsel Ben Sigal and his aide since early this year, Bert Diamond, lived in a welter of petitions, complaints and hearings.

Seven weeks each were required for the hearings on the two big chains, General Electric and Westinghouse, with the UE refusing even to admit—or to stipulate, to use the formal term—that these industrial behemoths are engaged in interstate commerce. The companies themselves were not particularly helpful. Many sought to take advantage of the situation by carving the bargaining units into bits, and the IUE-CIO had to fight that, too.

Now much of that work is behind. The union has won board certification, or is in the process of obtaining it, as bargaining representative of about 194,000 workers, and it represents some 41,000 others without the need of elections. It also has 70,000 additional members—for a total of 305,000—for whom it is seeking representation rights.

It has won bargaining rights for most of the workers in each of the three big chains —General Electrical, Westinghouse and General Motors. Already it has concluded a contract with General Motors similar to that negotiated by its sister union, the CIO Auto Workers, but with slightly larger wage increases made necessary by UE's failure over the years. Negotiations have just started with General Electric.

THE GENERAL MOTORS situation points up one of the main problems confronting the IUE-CIO. That's the job of bringing wages in the electrical and radio industry up to the levels of those in other fields. The UE did a lot of breasting-beating about the strides it was making and it bellowed impressively aboust such phantasmagorias as the "$500 package" it dreamed up early this year. But the fact remains that last year the average wage in the industry was $1.44 an hour, compared with $1.70 in automobiles, $1.64 in steel, $1.66 in transportation equipment and $1.54 in aircraft.

With the rush of elections out of the way, things haven't settled down one bit. The administrative force and the organizers are busy as ever, but now they've concentrating on negotiations and the training of local leadership.

For many locals have had no one capable of doing the routine things that local leaders always do in other unions. Under the UE, the locals were taught to look to the international for every service, instead of standing on their own feet. This the IUE-CIO is determined to correct, so that the union can truly belong to its members and can operate in the same democratic fashion as other CIO unions.

That means men and women must be taught the techniques of organizing, negotiating, processing grievances, keeping financial and other records, and the other million-and-one things that are essential to the day-by-day existence of a local. Things will look a lot different in another few months, when this new leadership gets its feet on the ground and its teeth into its problems.

THEN WILL COME organization of the unorganized—a vast field left untouched by the UE. The Commie-line union never even completed organization of New England, where more than 100,000 workers in the industry are unorganized.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray admits he's impressed.

"This is a union set up by the members themselves," he says with mingled respect and awe. "Every one of them came from the industry. Nobody from another, like steel or auto, had to go on the administrative committee to help get 'em started."

T-H Union-Busting Role Revealed In Enka Strike

By WILLIAM WEISS

THE WEATHER WAS HOT in Morristown when this picture of Theodore R. Iserman, lawyer for American Enka, testifying before the Senate Labor sub-committee on labor-management relations, was taken. Later on in the hearing, Iserman lost his look of composure under questioning by committee members. Left to right around table: Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the subcommittee; Thomas M. Cooley, subcommittee counsel; Max Kampelman, Sen. Humphrey's secretary; Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.); Thomas E. Shroyer, minority counsel of the subcommittee, and Iserman, who helped draft T-H.

THE SENATE labor-management sub-committee hearing in Morristown, Tenn., June 16, showed American Enka Corp. using every available provision of the Taft-Hartley Act to break the 13-week strike of the CIO Textile Workers.

Theodore R. Iserman, general counsel of the company, squirmed uncomfortably as TWUA witnesses testified before Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), the committee chairman, and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Isadore Katz

Time after time, as Sen. Humphrey questioned Iserman's role in the union-busting tactics of the company, the New York attorney gave either an evasive answer or pleaded ignorance of the particular instance.

The one-day, 14½-hour hearing, held in the town's high school auditorium, was attended by a crowd of 450 persons, most of them strikers and sympathizers.

TWUA GENERAL Counsel Isadore Katz delivered a scathing denunciation of the "archaic" labor-management relations of the company and accused the corporation, through Iserman, of "seizing upon every available excuse provided by the Taft-Hartley Act to delay a contract settlement so that under cover of the law it can break the strike and smash the union."

Katz termed the actions of the company in trying to destroy the union "immoral and inhuman" and accused management of taking refuge in Taft-Hartley legalisms. He declared that bargaining was made difficult because the union was forced to deal with Iserman, one of the architects of Taft-Hartley, rather than with local management.

Katz also leveled a blast at Gov. Gordon Browning for sending over 300 National Guardsmen to Morristown for use as strikebreakers.

Holland Union Action Is Asked

The American Enka strike took on an international aspect last week with the revelation by J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, that he has urged trade unions in the Netherlands to take "all necessary action . . . including strike action" to assist the CIO Textile Workers in their struggle at Morristown, Tenn.

Oldenbroek pointed out that American Enka is a Dutch-owned firm, part of an international cartel, and that the same owners have plants in the Netherlands.

He asked that the Netherlands trade union center "bring this matter to the attention of the Netherlands government, so that the government may intervene with the Dutch Enka Co."

He called the use of the National Guard "clear violation of the constitution of the State of Tennessee." He pointed out, and cited previous court decisions to back his claim, that the state constitution provides that "the National Guard shall not be called out except in cases of rebellion or insurrection, and then only if the General Assembly declares it necessary."

"It can hardly be said that the 'violence' which was precipitated by the company's back-to-work movement, instituted under cover of an injunction secured without notice or hearing, amounted to rebellion or insurrection," Katz declared.

Robert Cahoon

"Not only was the direction of the governor to the National Guard to enter the strike a cynical breach of the state's constitution, but the conduct of the guards at the scene was a running assault on the Bill of Rights."

Katz reviewed in detail brutal attacks by national guardsmen and state highway patrolmen on union members L. A. Warwick, Silas Switzer, E. H. Ball and Robert S. Cahoon, TWUA's assistant general counsel.

Despite affidavits submitted by these and other union members accusing guardsmen of unprovoked attacks, Brig. Gen. Dwight L. McReynolds, who commanded the troops at the strike scene, said he had investigated all charges and found them "without basis."

A sworn affidavit by one of the strikers, Mrs. Mary B. Hatmaker, caused a mild sensation when it was read to the hearing committee.

Mrs. Hatmaker, a blue-eyed, blonde, petite mother, was arrested at the union commissary on May 30 by 28 guardsmen, four state highway patrolmen and the Hamblen County sheriff. She was charged with violation of one of the three injunctions issued against the strikers.

HER TESTIMONY declared she was taken to a Morristown hotel by the posse of 33, marched through the lobby with submachine guns pointed at her back to the union headquarters and from there escorted to the county jail and imprisoned. She was later released on a $500 bond provided by the union.

L. A. (Blackie) Warwick, another striker who is still unable to walk without a cane as a result of a beating he suffered at the hands of members of the highway patrol on Memorial Day, testified that he was kicked down a flight of stairs in the jail, slugged with blackjacks and a pistol butt. He was then kicked 35 feet along the floor into a cell, he said. Fifteen National Guardsmen watched the whole proceedings and made no attempt to interfere, he said.

The same day, Cahoon and Silas Switzer, the local's business agent, were beaten with blackjacks by six National Guardsmen and thrown in jail.

Katz recounted the chain of events which transpired from the time the strike was called to the present. He said that on several occasions, before negotiations were broken off, Iserman stated that "the employes of the plant in Lowlands are not civilized." Iserman is also reported to have stated that the Enka workers are "inefficient, low-grade labor" and that "they are not entitled to first-class workers' pay."

COMMITTEE members expressed interest in the appearance in Morristown of United Textile Workers-AFL organizers simultaneously with the receipt by the company of a telegram by UTW claiming bargaining rights in the plant on May 31.

This also was the same day Gov. Browning issued a statement in which he said that unless the company bargained in good faith and settled the strike by the end of the week, he would withdraw the National Guard.

Katz asked whether it was "pure coincidence" that the three events had taken place on the same day and said the succession of "coincidental" actions by the company and the UTW-AFL "raises more than a suspicion that there is an alliance between them to break the strike and drive out TWUA from the Lowlands plant."

UTW circulated but did not file a petition for an NLRB election. Such a petition would require the signatures of 30% of the employes, which TWUA official said the AFL union was unable to obtain. Instead, the company filed the petition for an election as it may do under Taft-Hartley, but which it would not have been able to do under the Wagner Act before it was amended.

"Why did the company file a petition for an election?" Katz asked. "The Enka Corp. preferred that its strike-breaking strategy proceed under cover of a UTW-AFL petition.

"At one stroke, the company has kept UTW-AFL in the picture; saved it from revealing its lack of substantial interest and had gained time to carry on its own campaign of attrition.

"The National Guard and the Tennessee highway patrol continue to police the community for the company. Under this protective shield, assigned by the governor in the name of law and order, the company is running strikebreakers and scabs into the plant."

Finally, according to Katz, the company "uncovered the big howitzer supplied it by the Taft-Hartley Act for use against the strikers."

In a newspaper advertisement, the Enka Corp. gave notice that the right to vote in the coming election by those strikers who had been replaced by new workers would be challenged.

THE PLOT further unfolded at a meeting in Knoxville June 12, called by NLRB officials to seek agreement on a consent election. TWUA proposed an immediate election at which all employes would be allowed to vote.

The company and the UTW-AFL rejected this proposal and insisted that only those who were presently on the payroll, had not been "replaced" or had not been arrested for acts of "violence" should be able to cast ballots. The meeting adjourned shortly afterwards.

"The strike at the Enka plant in Lowlands," Katz said, "is the end-product brought on by ruthless and brutal men, enabled by law to play upon the hungers, passions and frustrations of strikers." The conduct of the employer in this case, he continued, "will serve, until repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, as a model of union-busting.

"From their actions, it is not unreasonable to conclude that the American Enka Corp. represents the modern Marxists in reverse. They are determined to fight the class struggle and if the struggle does not exist they will create it.

"They see in trade unions a challenge to managerial autocracy. They have the funds, the ingenuity and the base from which to operate. They propose to change the American system of collective bargaining to a facsimile of 20 years ago—except that they now smugly claim that their procedure has been sanctified and blessed by the Taft-Hartley Act."

L. A. WARWICK

Warwick, active member of the Textile Workers, told the subcommittee of being beaten by Tennessee state police. He suffered six fractured ribs, a ruptured spleen and concussion of the brain. Note the cane Warwick has to use as a result of the injuries he received.

The company devoted most of the time allotted it to exhibiting huge blown-up photographs and elaborate charts designed to show the audience and the committee that it was the best employer in the community.

Iserman said the charts showed gross earnings averaged $1.35 an hour at Enka before the strike, which compared with the next highest average wage in the district of $1.15 an hour. Humphrey appeared skeptical of the accuracy of the figures.

The photographs were largely group pictures of smiling employes at work in the spic and span plant. There were also pictures of overturned automobiles said to have been taken at the mill gates. Other "violence" shots showed damage done to two barns and one house belonging to strikebreakers. The damage in all instances was negligible.

During the questioning of Iserman, Humphrey asked: "With your knowledge that injunctions and back-to-work movements lead to violence, why did you go ahead with the injunctions?"

Iserman's reply could not be heard.

Enka Accused In New Outbreak

Gunfire blazed at the American Enka plant June 22 and three strikebreakers, one who was wounded critically, and a striker, wound up in a local hospital.

John McCarthy of the CIO Textile Workers accused the Enka company of starting the battle "to bring more troops and police here."

Following the altercation, State highway patrolmen raided the union hall. Carloads of TWUA members were hauled to the Hamblen County jail, fingerprinted, denied bond and questioned individually.

UTSE Conclave Says Equality Basic To True Unity

By ROBERT SENSER

EDDIE CUMMINGS is 62. He has seven children, and he's sent all of them through college. He owns a 10-acre farm with a comfortable home on it.

It's been a hard uphill climb for Cummings. When he started working at the Union Station in Portland, Me., as a redcap in 1911, his hours ran from 6:30 a.m. till 9:30 p.m. In those days redcaps received no pay; they made only tips.

Sometimes during the slow winter months he'd get only 20 or 30c a day. To make a go of it, he had to do odd jobs between train times.

BACK IN 1938, thanks to legal action by the CIO United Trnsport Service Employees, Cummings and other redcaps throughout the country were put on a salary for the first time. Then they got 25c an hour and a 48-hour week. Now they're up to a $1.16 an hour (plus some tips) and a 40-hour week. That's one of the biggest percentage increases in wages received in the American labor movement.

Redcap Local 603 in Portland sent Cummings to the seventh UTSE convention in Chicago last week. Like the other delegates, Cummings applauded the union's past wage gains, and asked his international officers to help him get another hike soon.

Union drives for fair wages, UTSE Pres. Williard Townsend told the convention, do more than add money to workers' wallets. "By adding to the purchasing power of the American workers," Townsend said, "we are playing an extremely important part in maintaining a degree of soundness in our economy."

BUT THE UTSE convention didn't think and talk just about wages. The three-day event, attended by about 75 delegates, was chuck full of discussion and action on problems social, political, and economic.

In his keynote address Townsend urged the delegates: "Don't be active just in your union. Take part in civic affairs of all kinds. We've got to make our influence felt beyond our little circles."

Townsend reported that the UTSE has about 15,000 members and represents 25,000 workers—redcaps, dining car waiters, train porters, Pullman laundry workers, airline "sky" caps, and tobacco workers. Most of the membership is Negro, but some locals (including one in Dixie) are interracial.

The delegates praised the trend toward unity in the labor movement—but they also had their worries about it. Remembering the discrimination they've met in unions outside the CIO, the delegates passed a resolution saying:

"True organic unity can be achieved only if it is built on the firm foundation of guaranteeing equality of admission, protection and equal opportunity to all workers in all unions regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin."

Cecil Patrick, Local 314, Chicago, told the convention: "I'm all for unity with the AFL and the railroad brotherhoods. But I don't want it at the price of being subjected to discrimination. The CIO was born to erase that."

In his opening talk Townsend made clear that the CIO would continue to use all its resources in fighting for civil rights.

"Twelve years ago when we joined the CIO this union helped point up the importance of fighting discrimination," he said. "We stimulated other unions to do likewise, both inside and outside of their ranks."

FROM OPPOSITE POINTS of the compass came these delegates to the convention of the United Transport Service Employes at Chicago. Left to right: Clarence E. Ivey and Oscar Haynes, Jr., both of Portland, Ore., and Edward Cummings, Portland, Me. The picture was snapped while the delegates were looking over the convention program, in front of the Clothing Workers' union label exhibit.

TOWNSEND pointed out that some people look to Communism as the Negro's salvation from discrimination.

"I disagree emphatically," he said, "that the Kremlin can chart a course in Moscow that will eliminate the problems of America's minority people. We in America eventually will find the answers to the problems of discrimination and other problems."

In discussing the labor unity resolution Townsend said, "We say to the committee appointed by Philip Murray that there can be no unity in the labor movement as long as the unions of the AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods come to the conference table with their hands soiled by discrimination."

Tilford Dudley, assistant CIO-PAC director, urged the delegates to get busy immediately on an intense political action campaign.

"You cannot imagine the pressure that anti-labor legislators are putting on government commissions, bureaus and other agencies to make decisions in their favor," he said.

CIO VICE PRES. Allan S. Haywood briefed the delegates on what has happened in the "left-right" fight in the CIO. He accused Communists and Communist sympathizers of "stabbing the labor movement in the back."

Haywood praised the UTSE for providing the CIO with not only President Townsend but also three other "outstanding leaders"—John L. Yancey, Vice Chairman of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee; George L-P Weaver, Director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; and Ed. K. Welsh, national CIO representative in New York.

Haywood said the CIO "brings together men of all creeds, all races, all nationalities. It battles depressions. It fights for economic security for all. It champions freedom everywhere."

THE CONVENTION dealt in detail with three matters that mean much to the future of UTSE: (1) a health and welfare program; (2) a union shop on the railroads; (3) organizing the unorganized in its jurisdiction.

The hottest issue of the convention was the executive board's proposal for group life insurance covering each member. Some delegates objected to the fact that the insurance would be tied to membership dues, and would cause an increase in dues. But the insurance proposal won by a rollcall of 37 to 20.

Plans were made to give $1000 death benefits which would cost each member $1.12 monthly. All premium money not required for life insurance will be put into a "funded reserve for the development of our health and welfare program."

Another approved resolution called for an immediate "study of the pension, medical care, and hospital needs of our members."

The delegates indorsed the railroad unions' drive for the legal right to bargain for union shops, barred by the Railway Labor Act. The UTSE, with its scattered railroad locals, has an especially hard job in keeping dues paid up and in discouraging "free riders."

But, insisted the convention, the law shouldn't allow union shops to any unions which exclude workers (whether by constitution, ritual, or any other means) because of color, creed, or national origin.

One of UTSE's biggest jobs was described to the convention by William J. Smith, CIO regional director in North Carolina, who has been working closely with UTSE in signing up tobacco workers.

"THOSE OF YOU who've organized in the North," Smith said, "think you've had a tough time in signing up members. But, brothers, you haven't seen anything until you try it down South, you just haven't seen anything.

"You can't understand the humiliation that you've got to put up with. Public officials are often against you. The employers are against you. And even some of the workers you're trying to sign up are against you."

Smith reported that the UTSE had won 19 out of 20 NLRB elections in North Carolina.

The convention voted to renew its organizing campaigns in the tobacco fields of the South. It also changed its constitution to make possible year-around membership in locals where the work is seasonal (as it is in the tobacco industry).

In talking on the organization's problems, Townsend answered critics who wondered why the UTSE executive board didn't meet oftener. "It's simply impossible for this organization to pay for traveling and other expenses of the union's present large executive board—23 members." Later, the delegates by constitutional amendment changed the UTSE top structure to five officers (president, executive president, two administrative vice presidents, and secretary-treasurer) and seven other board members.

Townsend, head of UTSE since it started, was unanimously re-elected president. Also re-elected were Yancey as executive vice president, and Eugene E. Frazier, secretary-treasurer.

By constitutional amendment, the delegates barred from UTSE membership anyone who belongs to the Communist party or "organizations following the policies of the Communist party."

Resolutions passed at the convention praised CIO Pres. Philip Murray as "the greatest leader the American labor movement has yet known;" urged each local to "revitalize its political action committee," and paid tribute to the late Charles H. Houston, prominent Negro attorney and champion of civil rights.

Other resolutions asked for quick action by government, industry, and labor to stem unemployment; called for state and federal FEPC laws with teeth in them and supported the United Nations, the Atlantic Pact, and the European Recovery Program.

A resolution on the conditions in the Panama Canal Zone was especially crisp. "These workers," the resolution said, "are employes of the U. S. government. They deserve the same consideration as all other employes of our government. We deplore the fact that they do not receive the same treatment.

"Discrimination is rampant in employment, job opportunities, rates of pay, housing, and in fact everything which makes for a good life. Canal Zone workers have the same high cost of living as workers in the States, and yet their hourly wage rate is as low as 30c an hour."

Absent Delegate Takes Bar Exam

Livingston Winegate, "sky cap" at LaGuardia Field in New York City, wired the convention that he couldn't attend. He was busy taking a state bar exam to practice as a lawyer.

More than half of the convention delegates have had at least one year at college. The reason for this high proportion is that job discrimination has kept many Negroes from the jobs for which they were trained. Chances are about one in three that the man carrying your bags to a train is a college graduate.

Some Papers Bury 'Cold Cure' Ruling

FIVE manufacturers have agreed to stop advertising that their anti-histamine preparations will cure colds, the Federal Trade Commission announced.

The New York Times ran a long story—on its financial page. The New York Herald Tribune used the story—also on its financial page. The Washington Post carried three inches—on its financial page. The Washington Star carried four inches. The Washington Times-Herald carried nothing.

The five products are Resistab, Anahist, Kriptin, Inhiston, and Antamine. The agreement with FTC was by "stipulation", which averted lengthy litigation. The makers agreed that they will stop saying in their advertisements, directly, or by implication, that their products "will cure, prevent, abort, eliminate, stop or shorten the duration of, the common cold."

The "cold cure" business blossomed suddenly, became a multi-million dollar industry overnight, and millions of cold-sufferers rushed to buy. The FTC announcement said the five companies "agree to discontinue misrepresentations concerning the effectiveness of their antihistamine preparations in the treatment of common colds."

Murray At PAC Rally:

'Elect A Congress That Will Meet Responsibilities'

(Lack of space in last week's issue prevented full coverage of the highly significant speeches made to the June 16 PAC conference in Washington. Following are some lengthier excerpts from some of the speeches:)

CIO PRES. Philip Murray: "PAC has come to be regarded as the political arm of our great organization . . . I doubt if there ever has been a political instrumentality brought into being that has rendered a more outstanding and constructive service to the people of the United States than CIO-PAC. You people take the work seriously . . . I liken it to a great organizing crusade.

"My actual topic today is unemployment. The trend since 1947 has been for unemployment to increase at the rate of one million a year. And it evidently continues despite an unprecedented era of so-called prosperity.

"Last year, the CIO engaged in a series of struggles involving pensions . . . The great steel strike culminated in the basic steel agreement. And the employers, who for years had been opposing any increases in federal old-age insurance, suddenly started asking Congress for improvements. Again, this was an unprecedented action. The great CIO movement led that fight.

"NOW JUST how do you get Congress to recognize the need of the people who are unemployed? The present system of unemployment insurance is inadequate. Industry isn't interested in improving it. Industry has more interest in the machine than the man.

"In Pittsburgh, there are now over 70,000 unemployed, walking the streets. There are 385,000 employed. Yet the great steel industry is 101% at work. The mines are pouring out coal at a staggering rate.

"In electrical manufacturing they are producing more goods than ever in their history. Their sales are at record highs, their profits and production are all higher than ever before. And yet many of these 70,000 men and women have been unemployed for over six months . . .

"You go up the Hill and you plead the case of the weary, the tired, the unemployed, the aged, and you plead in vain. There are few in Congress who will lead the fight.

"Perhaps the answer is to organize for political action until our political strength is such that we will elect a Congress which will meet its responsibilities.

"But isn't it reasonable to require employers in collective bargaining to again meet a portion of their social responsibilities? They should be discussed not only in the legislative halls but across the bargaining table.

"We face an extraordinary political situation . . . Politics, I have been convinced for many years, is simply bread and butter. It is carpets on the floor and music in the home."

EMIL RIEVE, Pres. of the CIO Textile Workers and chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee:

"The government agencies say it is good for our economy to have a pool of unemployed. They ask you what percentage of unemployment is proper. We haven't been trapped in this argument . . .

"President Truman has proposed measures for the relief of unemployment, without much avail . . .

"Some say we can't have full employment and liberty too . . . social security and freedom. I say just the reverse. We can't protect our liberties and freedom without these things. Look what would happen to things if we have 8 to 10 million unemployed. There would be no Marshall Plan, no Point Four Program, isolation would prevail, and we would be inviting anti-democratic forces to take over . . ."

GEORGE WEAVER, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination:

"This subject is probably the ghost in politics . . . Congress is far behind the people in most things, and in this instance particularly. And yet there are very few issues on the Hill where the question of race is not involved, in the background if not in the foreground.

"It's going to be a big campaign issue. The Republicans and Dixiecrats have played a shrewd game. The history of civil rights legislation has been a tragic, disheartening and disgusting spectacle in this Congress, particularly the phony shadowboxing in the Senate on FEPC . . .

"Taft had issued a slick pamphlet addressed to the Ohio voters attempting to portray himself as an ardent advocate of civil rights. It won't work if we correctly interpret his actions . . . Both parties have played hide and seek on civil rights. The record will be hard to find. But remember that the critical vote in the House was on substituting the toothless McConnell bill for the Powell bill, which we supported. The McConnell bill was supported by the Dixiecrats. And when a Rankin supports an FEPC bill, you can be sure it's a bill that has no meaning . . .

"On July 12 comes the next Senate attempt at cloture. Sixty-four Senators have to be present and vote for the motion if FEPC is even to get to the floor. Just remember that an absence is a vote against cloture, and look at the list of who's absent . . .

"THE Republicans intend to make civil rights a prime political issue.

"There isn't an organization in the United States that realizes more keenly the necessity for this legislation than the CIO. Sixteen of our international unions have committees working on the entire problem, with one or more full-time staff members assigned to nothing else . . .

"Until this is resolved, we won't be able to work out a just and lasting peace. There is some progress—the armed services, with constant prodding by President Truman, have made great improvements in their policies, and the recent decisions of the Supreme Court are another example . . . But the overwhelming majority of the people of the world, whom we are attempting to influence, are members of the so-called darker races. Until we practice what we preach we won't win their loyalty."

A UNITED Vermont Labor Committee for Political Action was organized by more than 100 delegates from CIO and AFL unions at a recent meeting in Burlington. Shown during the session are, seated (l. to r.), Frank Dumas, first vice president of the Vermont CIO Council and field representative of the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union; Henry F. Murray, eastern regional director of CIO-PAC; John C. Lawson, president of the State CIO Council and secretary-treasurer of the CIO United Stone Workers; Sydney Edward, president of the AFL State Federation of Labor; Frederick Dykeman, state director of the AFL Labor's League for Political Education, and Alfred Pennock, AFL Teamsters' Union. Standing, Anthony Jenkins, of the CIO Clothing Workers' staff; Mrs. Ruth Daigneault, second vice president of the State CIO Council and a Clothing Workers' shop steward; Harold Daoust, president of the New Hampshire CIO Council and CIO Textile Workers executive board member, and Thomas Williams, treasurer of the TWUA Joint Board.

Registration Open In All But 11 States

Registration for the November elections is now open in all states EXCEPT:

Arkansas, Connecticut, (Fulton Co.) Georgia, Idaho, Kentucky, Maine, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma and Wyoming.

Bet They Don't End In Dead Letter Box

A couple of letters addressed to Ex-Rep. Fred A. Hartley's Free Workers Political Action Committee drifted into the CIO-PAC office the other day.

PAC forwarded them to: Fred A. Hartley, c/o Sen. Robert A. Taft, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Didn't even read them first.

"Soon as I spotted those bonuses last week I knew somethin' was screwy."

Kroll Sees CIO Set For Much Hard Work

CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll expressed great satisfaction at the close of the special PAC conference which last week brought over 400 top-ranking CIO officials to Washington to map plans for the 1950 campaigns.

Kroll said he got the impression that there was going to be more hard and productive work done in the 1950 "off-year" elections than in any previous year, including the rip-roaring 1948 campaign. "The conference really started them thinking," he said, "and gave them a sense that they were engaged in a great crusade."

The meeting heard reports from the legislative and political front, and spent a brief time with President Truman, who congratulated the PAC workers and urged them to work hard.

Next day, Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice pres. and director of organization, held an all-day meeting with the CIO regional directors on the subject of all-out cooperation with PAC in their regions.

Kamp, En Route To Jail 5½ Years, Finally There

Joseph P. Kamp, admirer of the Nazis, labor-baiter, professional hate-monger and proprietor of the noisome Constitutional Educational League, is in pokey—at last.

He is spending four months at the expense of his greatest admirers, as well as those who think he should stay where he is for the rest of his life, in the District of Columbia jail.

He had been en route since December, 1944, when he was indicted by a federal grand jury for refusing to provide the House Campaign Expenditures Committee with a list of officers and contributors to his league. For more than three years he managed to avoid trial, but late in March, 1948, he was found guilty of contempt of Congress and sentenced. In December, 1948, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld his conviction and the U. S. Supreme Court, a few weeks ago, refused to hear his appeal. He surrendered on June 16.

Kemp is scheduled for questioning by the House Lobby Investigation Committee headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.)—and maybe another contempt citation. He failed to provide records the committee subpoened a fortnight before he went to jail.

House Unit Is Told:

du Ponts Escape Taxes With Pro-Fascist 'Subscriptions'

THE long-suffering American people are being pushed to the thin edge of bankruptcy by the very elements which are trying to take away their democratic rights, destroy their unions, isolate them from the rest of the world, empty their pockets through high prices and turn the United States into a free-wheeling paradise for the financial and industrial aristocracy.

That was "made clear" on June 21 when Merwin K. Hart, president of the National Economic Council, an organization often described as "Fascist," appeared before the House Lobby Investigating Committee and was forced to bare some of his trade secrets.

The gimmick is this: Well-heeled reactionaries like Lammot and Irenee du Pont, who apparently think they can buy back the so-called good old days, don't make contributions to "educational" organizations like the NEC. They "subscribe" for copies of the outfit's publication which are sent free to schools, libraries, etc., at no expense to the recipient.

THIS MEANS the donors can knock the "subscriptions" off their income taxes, as the alleged "beneficiaries" are legitimate educational institutions. So that money, which Uncle Sam might use to keep the edge of bankruptcy where it belongs, has to come from people like you and you and you.

The NEC even found a way to make the stunt retroactive, the probers found. Correspondence showed that Irenee du Pont in 1948 had made four presentations of money or stock, which was sold. Two, for $2000 and $3000, were for "subscriptions" when first received by NEC, the correspondence showed. The others apparently were contributions to the "cause."

Then du Pont changed his mind about another $3000 at first called a "gift." The NEC obligingly changed its records to show it as a "subscription." And early in 1949, he changed his mind about the stock, which had yielded about $3000 in cash, and asked to have that credited as a "subscription" also. That's what it should have been, he wrote Hart.

A LIST OF OTHER contributors of $500 or more was read into the record. Included were such outfits as the Judge Armstrong Foundation, Fort Worth, Tex., operated by one of the country's most notorious anti-Semites; the Texas Co., against which the CIO Oil Workers are on strike or locked out for the 13th week, and the Bucyrus-Erie Co., South Milwaukee, Wis., where the CIO Steelworkers have been on strike for more than three months.

Hart testified that the NEC preaches Americanism, which to him means opposition to U. S. aid to education; public housing; immigration; middle income housing; U. S. participation in the United Nations and its subsidiaries; ratification of the genocide convention; FEPC and other civil rights measures; the anti-lynch bill; rent control.

NEC also opposes the Marshall Plan; social security; "militant" Zionism and U. S. support for Israel; farm price supports; the Point 4 Program; the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act; TVA; the Atomic Energy Act; the World Federation resolution; Communism; world government; the bipartisan foreign policy, and anti-trust suits against the du Ponts and the A&P food store chain.

The CIO on June 23 told the committee by letter that it is perfectly willing to provide information the committee asked it to furnish.

"The CIO will, of course, supply the requested information, and its compilation is under way," CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg wrote Rep. Buchanan, committee chairman.

"Unlike the Inland Steel Corp. and certain other large corporations as well as business-supported propaganda agencies, the CIO has no wish to obstruct or hamper the work of the committee."

John Riffe Is Appointed Southern Drive Director

JOHN RIFFE, a veteran of many union organizing campaigns, has been appointed director of the CIO Organizing Drive in the Southern states.

Riffe, who has served as assistant director of the Southern campaign for the past two years, succeeds George Baldanzi, who resigned from the directorship last month in order to devote full time to his position as executive vice-president of the Textile Workers Union.

In making the announcement, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said that Riffe and the organizing drive would function under the general supervision of Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization.

Riffe was for many years associated with the late Van A. Bittner in numerous organizing campaigns—in the West Virginia coal fields 15 years ago, in the CIO steel campaign in the Chicago area, and in the South.

JOHN RIFFE

Organizationally Speaking

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The Utility Workers Union-CIO has come through with a great election victory among all physical workers at the Boston Edison Co., Boston, Mass. This victory culminates quite a few years of effort and hard work on the part of the Utility Workers Union. The vote was 863 CIO; 335 IBEW-AFL; 325 independent union; 7 no union; 2 void. As a result of this victory, a foundation has been laid in the utility field by the UWU-CIO from New York to Maine.

The officers of the UWU, Brothers Joe Fisher, Bill Pachler, Harold Straub, and the officers of the New York local, led by Patty McGrath, are commended for the fine job. CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Carmichael and the representatives in the Boston Area also are commended. It is a great victory.

The writer had the pleasure of addressing the Transport Service Employees' convention in Chicago, June 20. The members of this fine organization carry your bags in the train depots throughout the country. These people are proud of their affiliation with the CIO and the CIO is proud of that affiliation. Pres. Willard Townsend, Executive Vice Pres. John Yancey, and Secy.-Treas. Eugene Frazier are congratulated for the fine job of building this union.

The Political Action Committee met in Washington on Friday, June 16. It was a great success, delegates from all the nation were in attendance. A pledge was made to collect funds for the PAC, to see that the people are registered in order that they may vote, and to eliminate all anti-labor congressmen and senators from our states and national governments. It is the job of the CIO to help coordinate that vital task and assist the PAC in every way.

John Riffe has been designated as Director of the Southern Organizing Committee. Brother Riffe will work through the Organization Director's office, and we will work closely together in the South to bring the workers there the blessings of trade unionism.

The CIO is on the march! Get in stride and play your part.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports the following election victories of the United Optical & Instrument Workers-CIO, Local 1258, Kansas City Mo.:

In a Union Shop election held at the Barnett & Ramel Optical Co., Kansas City, Mo., the workers voted unanimously for a union shop.

In a Representation election held at the Sutherlin Optical Co., Kansas City, Mo., the workers cast four votes for UO&IWA, and two for no union. Organizational work in these campaigns was conducted by officers and members of Local 1258, assisted by W. J. Widman, representative of UO&IWA. Leary also reports that the CIO has beaten down an attempted raid on the part of the American Federation of Grain Millers-AFL to take over LIU 1162, Coffeyville, Kan. In an NLRB representation election among the workers at the Moore-Lowry Flour Mill, Coffeyville, Kan., the workers voted as follows: CIO-LIU 1162, 29; AFGM-AFL, 14; no union, 1. This successful campaign was carried on by Secy. Clyde Skaggs, Local 1169, assisted by CIO Field Rep. William E. Lewis.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Flintkote Co., New Orleans, La., by a vote of: Gas-Coke 420, ILWU 212, no union 6. Gas-Coke Rep. Sam Olfano was in charge of this campaign assisted by the CIO regional office. UGC&CW-CIO also won another representation election at the Filtrol Corp., Jackson, Miss. The vote was 75 for UGC&CW-CIO and 74 for AFL. UGC&CW Rep. Edward Wertz was in charge of this campaign, assisted by the CIO regional office.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that the Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers-CIO won a representation election among the production and maintenance workers of the General Box Co., Denville, N. J., by a vote of 42 for PJNW to 26 for no union. Paul Eaton and Fred Lafarri, international representatives, were in charge, assisted by the shop committee, which included Pat Di Ruggiera and John Lyman.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following election victories: Cornish Wire, Prospect Park, N. J., IUE 73, no union 1; UE withdrew; Luminous Processes, Inc., Lake Success, N. Y., IUE 17, UE 5, no union 0; Ergy Register Co., Dayton, O., IUE 28, no union 1, UE withdrew; Globe Union, Inc., Fort Dodge, Ia., IUE 69, no union 40; Pyrene Mfg. Co., Newark, N. J., IUE 85, no union 3.

The following "run-off" elections were also won by IUE: Delco Radio Div., GM, Chicago, Ill., IUE 349, UE 167; Westinghouse, Jersey City, N. J., IUE 119, UE 8.

General Electric, Cleveland, O., equipment, IUE 204, UE 193; parts development, IUE 20, UE 19; operating division, IUE 17, UE 11.

East Cleveland Lamp, IUE 111, UE 83; Cleveland Bulb, IUE 108, UE 80.

Electric Machinery, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 215, UE 210.

USA-CIO Dir. William Donovan, of District 38, reports another Steelworkers' election victory over the discredited Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at the Chandler-Price Co., Cleveland, O., by the following vote: USA-CIO 181, MMSW 38, neither 6, challenged 4. USA Reps. Michael Yanak and Jack Ferline conducted the campaign. The committeemen at the plant are to be congratulated for the fine work they have done and the help they have given in this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the UAW-CIO won a representation election at the Cannon Electric Development Co., Los Angeles, Cal., by a vote of 347 for UAW and 241 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that in a representation election held at Grote Mfg. Co., Bellevue, Ky., the workers voted in favor of the USA by a vote of 235 for USA to 26 for no union. Reps. Chester Morgan and Frank Jensen conducted this campaign. A representation election was won by the CIO among the workers of the Schell Leather Goods Co., Cincinnati, O., by a vote of 33 for CIO and 11 for no union. Also in a representation election held at the Mendel-Drucker, Inc., the workers voted for the CIO by a vote of 50 to 2 for no union.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Ziker Cleaners, South Bend, Ind., by a unanimous vote. All 38 votes were cast for ACW.

Natl. Rep. George DeNucci reports that in an Insular Board election held among the workers of the Manuel Angolota Pineapple Plantation, Puerto Rico, the vote was 253 for CGT-CIO and 51 for no union. Dir. of Org. Armando Sanchez handled the drive and the election.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election held at the Liquid Carbonic Corp. at Indianapolis, Ind., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers-CIO.

CP Loses Control Of Scottish Union

The Communists, who for a decade had a majority of the Scottish miners' executive body, lost control when the balance shifted from 11 Communists and nine Labor party, to 11 Labor party and nine Communists. It was the fifth defeat this year for the Communists in Scotland, long considered the stronghold of Communist party influence in the British trade unions. The action was taken at the Scottish area convention of the National Union of Mineworkers.

CWA Members Defy Bell In Guild Strike

The Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. ordered members of the CIO Communications Workers to cross the picket line in front of the Arkansas Gazette. They refused, and Bell threatened firings. The union threatened to strike. On strike since Dec. 17 are 31 members of the Little Rock Newspaper Guild. Management refuses to budge, and is operating with scabs.

"My husband starts to burn every time he hears those anti-labor commentators!"

CIO Hails Senate Action!

10 Million More To Be Eligible For Pensions

THE SENATE last week, by a vote of 81-2, approved its version of HR 6000, the improved social security bill, and the measure went to House-Senate conference.

Only one amendment improving the Senate bill passed—the Lucas-Myers amendment raising the present taxable wage base from $3000 to $3600 a year, which the House already had approved but which the Senate Finance Committee had turned down.

The amendment would have the effect of raising the maximum monthly benefit payable to a single worker or the head of a family to $80 a month from $72.50 as provided in the Senate committee bill and $45 as provided in the present law.

(This would be paid only to persons who have worked for 40 years in "covered" employment. For workers who had been covered less than 40 years the amount would be less. Retired workers at present receiving social security benefits would receive approximately twice what they are now getting. The average amount now being paid to retired workers is $26 a month.)

Other attempts to improve the Senate committee bill failed. Most important from the CIO's point of view was refusal to adopt the House provision which would allow totally disabled workers to receive their social security benefits immediately, without waiting till they reach the age of 65.

The Knowland "scab" amendment passed by a voice vote (see box with this story), but there was some hope of getting rid of it in conference, since the House had not considered it in any form, and it had also been disapproved by the Senate Finance Committee.

Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee and TWUA president, commented:

"Senate action on HR 6000 assures substantial improvement in old age and survivors' insurance by this Congress.

"Ten million more Americans will be brought under the protection of the social security system. Eligibility requirements will be liberalized and the scale of payments will be almost doubled.

"We in the CIO can justifiably feel that our collective bargaining efforts and our political activities have contributed largely to this result.

"As a result of popular demand for liberalization, the Senate Finance Committee, at the last minute, reversed certain earlier decisions, and among other things raised possible benefits by increasing the wage base to $3,600.

"With slightly greater support in the Senate, we would have obtained still more liberal benefit provisions through a higher wage base ceiling and the annual increment formula. Unfortunately, amendments on these matters, and on still further broadening coverage and liberalizing public assistance, were voted down on the Senate floor.

"The complete rejection of the program for permanent and total disability insurance was a triumph for the American Medical Association's million dollar lobbying drive. The insurance companies backed the AMA in this."

'Scab If You Want Jobless Benefits,' States May Say Under Amendment

THE SENATE PUT on a rough, tough and cynical performance when it adopted the Knowland "scab" amendment to the Social Security bill.

It is probable that 999,999 out of every million newspaper readers don't know that it ever passed, let alone what it's about. The Knowland amendment makes it possible for any state unemployment compensation bureau to deny benefits to strikers and lockout victims, unless they take scab jobs, regardless of the provisions of Federal law.

SEN. KNOWLAND (R. Cal.) was put up to it by the California Employment Security Administrator, and the Waterfront Employers Association of San Francisco. The Administrator is the one who withheld compensation from certain maritime pickets last year even though they had been unemployed before the strike, because they refused to take waterfront jobs during the strike. The association is too well known to require description here.

The amendment simply says the Federal Bureau of Employment Security cannot withhold administrative funds to the states it believes are violating the federal law on job referrals until after the disputes have been finally settled in the courts. This might take as long as three years.

THE SENATE FINANCE Committee disapproved the Knowland amendment, but the Senate adopted it by voice vote after 10 minutes' debate, of which only 2½ minutes was granted to opponents of the amendment.

The CIO Executive Board at its recent meeting called for the defeat of the amendment, describing it as "a brazen proposal to use the threat of withholding earned unemployment insurance benefits to coerce workers into scabbing."

Thirty-three Republicans and 12 Southern Democrats voted for the amendment, and 34 Democrats and three Republicans opposed it.

Fraternal Greetings Sent Israeli Labor Movement

Leaders of labor and government last week sent extra greetings to the labor movement of the Republic of Israel.

The messages were forwarded through the National Committee for Labor Israel, which held its annual conference in Washington. The group acts as a fraternal correspondent of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray sent a message noting that Histadrut has won wide respect for "its democratic procedures and constructive social policies."

He said that the "pioneering" programs worked out by the Jewish unions in Israel will "in time be utilized by the workers of other unions in the eastern Mediterranean area to improve their own standards of living, and to bring the benefits of modern industrial civilization to under-privileged populations."

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, who last year headed a CIO delegation to Israel, also praised the unions' work in that new country, and promised continuing support from American unionists.

Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, who recently visited the Jewish republic, said the "citizens of Israel are building a labor democracy which has no truck with totalitarianism." Ewing praised Histadrut for severing its ties with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

Joseph Cohen Dies; Pa. PAC Official

Joseph E. Cohen, executive secretary of the Pennsylvania CIO Political Action Committee and legislative director of the State CIO Council, died recently at his home in Philadelphia.

Cohen, a veteran of labor legislative service at the Capitol in Harrisburg, enjoyed the high respect of politicians of all ranks in both parties as well as of the union members with whom he had worked for many years.

"He had devoted his life to the cause of improving the social and economic well-being of workers everywhere," said the council. "His devotion to this humane cause kept him in harness, so to speak, up to the end . . ."

House Unit OKs Cuts In Excise Taxes

AMERICAN consumers face the not unhappy prospect of a billion-dollars-a-year saving on federal excise taxes, under a bill due to come up this week in the House of Representatives.

Two Republicans joined 15 Democrats on the House Ways and Means Committee to support the bill, which provides that Uncle Sam will suffer no loss in revenue from its enactment. The bill calls for changes in other sections of the tax structure—with some half-billion dollars to come in the form of higher taxes levied on the profits of big corporations.

President Truman had announced several times he would veto any excise tax repeal bill which did not provide equal revenue from other tax sources.

The new bill, as approved by the House group, would cut taxes on smaller corporations — with profits up to about $166,000 a year —and provide much heavier taxes on profits over that figure.

A proposal by liberal Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.) for an excess profits tax, however, was defeated in the committee.

The bill is expected to have easy sailing in the House, since amendments not approved by the potent Ways and Means Committee will not be considered. Both major parties have come out in favor of cutting the excise taxes —on such items as movies, jewelry, furs etc.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 10 million.	Passed both Houses; goes to conferences this week. CIO prefers House version.	Ask conferees to accept House Version.
Rent Control Renewal S 3181	Extends rent control 6 months to Dec. 31, 1950; allows continuation to June, 1951.	Gone to White House for signature.	Start working for full extension at community level.
FEPC S 1728 HR 4453	Senate bill would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	House voted substitute bill without enforcement teeth. Second Senate attempt at cloture due July 12.	Ask Senators to vote for S 1728 without weakening amendments.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.
Emergency Unemployment Compensation HR 8374	Gives extra 26 weeks' benefits in areas where unemployment exceeds 9%.	Awaiting hearings before House Ways and Means Comm.	Ask prompt hearings and fast action on this badly needed bill.

BRT Greets Murray Offer On Labor Unit

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen last week gave an enthusiastic response to CIO Pres. Murray's proposal for labor unity and joint action on major problems facing unions in the nation.

BRT Pres. W. P. Kennedy wrote that his union "has always been willing to cooperate with the other labor organizations and liberal groups in matters of mutual interest. That policy will be continued."

Kennedy, who succeeded the late A. F. Whitney as head of the trainmen's organization, set forth his views in a letter replying to Murray's proposal of last April.

The CIO head had called for creation of a joint labor committee representing all important branches of American unionism, to work for common action on immediate problems and to seek a method of merging all principal union groups.

Talks between CIO and AFL spokesmen on the subject are slated to be held during the summer.

Kennedy's latter called it "essential" for the various labor groups "to bring about closer cooperation." He said such coordination is "sorely needed now, in the closing weeks of the present session of the Congress, and in the primaries and election campaigns this year."

In Ohio, Kennedy pointed out, "we now face the unified efforts of the Tory reactionaries in their defense of Mr. Reactionary, whom they call Mr. Republican. Our unified efforts can and will defeat them."

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 3, 1950 82 No. 27

PRAISE FROM THE CHIEF: President Truman, who spoke at the 17th annual convention of the CIO Newspaper Guild at Washington, praised Guild Pres. Harry Martin (left) for his work as ECA labor information director. The President also lauded Guild and other American unions for aiding free trade union movements in other countries. (See convention story, Page 6.) "The recent unprovoked invasion of the Republic of Korea by Communist armies," Truman said, "is an example of the danger to which the underdeveloped areas of the world are exposed." Bargaining Called Aid In Racial Amity

THE HANDLING of racial relations through collective bargaining has resulted in "some amazing forward steps," Paul L. Styles, member of the National Labor Relations Board, told the Fisk Univ. Institute of Race Relations at Nashville, Tenn., June 29.

"I firmly believe that not only will more progress be made along this line," he added, "but that it will be an accelerated progress.

"We've come a long way, and, although we have a much longer way to go, I think we are on the right road and pressing steadily forward."

As a specific example Styles, a Southerner who lived in the South until appointed to the NLRB a few months ago, cited an experience while he was disputes director of the Atlanta Regional War Labor Board during the war. It involved two groups of mechanics, one white and the other Negro, doing the same work. The Negroes were paid considerably less than the whites. Investigation showed, said Styles, that the Negroes had taught the trade to the whites.

"AFTER ALMOST an entire day spent in debating the case," he said, "we were able unanimously to agree that the Negro mechanics were to be brought up to the prevailing rate in the community and that an across-the-board increase was to be given to all the mechanics without regard to race or color.

"That case taught me a lesson. I think I knew the lesson all the time, but it took that case to bring it forcibly to my mind and convince me that the real American way to do things is to sit down and talk the problem over fairly, freely, and conscientiously, and then to honestly seek a solution for it.

"This is the essence of collective bargaining. That is not only the essence of the Golden Rule but the sum total of that rule. In my opinion, the application of that rule to the problems of racial relations in collective bargaining make the result certain and that result is the extension of democracy throughout our land."

THE ROOTS of racial tensions, Styles declared, are basically economic, and when economic rivalries are removed as they were with full employment during the war, friction also disappears.

The collective bargaining representatives of workers, he said, have a responsibility to represent all workers in a given plant or operation equally. This is implicit in the Wagner Act, he maintained, even though there is no explicit requirement that union membership be open to all regardless of race, creed or color.

(The Wagner Act was so drastically amended by the Taft-Hartley Act that it is usually referred to by the latter name.)

The board has consistently refused to set up separate units of employes of different races or colors doing the same work, he said, and has denied bargaining rights to unions which do not give adequate representation to all employes in the unit.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

Ferguson, Unlike Sen. Taft, Knows Problems Of Ordinary Folks—Kroll

THE 100-MAN central committee of the Ohio CIO Political Action Committee indorsed State Auditor General Joseph T. Ferguson for the U. S. Senate seat held by Sen. Taft (R.) at a meeting in Columbus.

The committee pledged its "wholehearted and unstinting support" to Ferguson in his campaign to capture the seat held by the co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act.

At the same time it indorsed Stephen M. Young, Democratic candidate for Congressman-at-large, and 22 additional Democratic nominees for Congress.

It did not give its approval to Gov. Frank Lausche, (D.), who recently announced he had not decided if he would vote for his own party's candidate or for Taft.

THE CANDIDATES for the senate are complete opposites—by every conceivable test. Taft, who is seeking re-election for his third term, is a 61-year-old son of wealth, whose father was a one-time president of the United States.

Ferguson, for 14 years auditor of state, is the 58-year-old son of poverty. His father was a Shawnee, O., coal miner.

Their lives have been as different as their backgrounds.

"Taft has never known want," says a statement prepared by Ohio PAC. "His only great desire, which has not been filled, is to occupy the seat his father used in the White House. To achieve that end, Taft has played politics with one of the worst political gangs in Ohio's history and, after winning election to the Senate, launched a campaign of continuous sniping at the New Deal and the government's war program, to keep his name before the public.

"FERGUSON, has known little but want in his life. From the time when he was nine, and went to work to support his mother and three brothers and sisters, because of his father's serious injury in the mines, Ferguson has known a constant battle to achieve success.

"But success to Ferguson has meant more than mere election to public office, and so he has resisted the temptations of the most tempting job in Ohio's officialdom—that of state auditor where the opportunities for corruption and fraud are tremendous.

"In their political views, the senatorial candidates are just as definitely opposed.

"Where Taft forms his opinions from textbooks and switches his political stand overnight, if he feels it will bring votes, Ferguson is blunt and forthright. He speaks his mind, often to the distress of his personal political advisers, who sometimes would prefer him to tread more easily.

"He's fond of homey examples, from his own experience, to describe his position on the major problems of the day. For example, when Ferguson discusses national health insurance, one of Taft's pet hates, he doesn't talk of the cost, which is Taft's major point.

"Ferguson speaks instead of the value. He recalls the time his father needed a major operation as the result of an injury sustained in the mines. To a miner's family, the doctors demand for cash on the line was a major catastrophe and Ferguson recalls how, as a skinny kid of nine, he sold papers, cleaned up a grocery store every night and a coal company office over the weekend, to accumulate enough nickles and dimes to pay for the operation, performed on a kitchen table in the miner's shack the Fergusons called home."

AS JACK KROLL, National PAC director and president of the Ohio CIO Council, noted, Ferguson and Taft "are not merely opponents in a political campaign. They are symbols of two worlds.

"One is the world of poverty, hunger and despair for the working man and his family. The other is the world of hope and human dignity.

"Behind the symbol of Sen. Taft are many realities—and all of them are ugly. These are the realities of the Old Deal—of farm bankruptcies, rent profiteering, soup kitchens, low minimum wages and no wages at all.

"These are the ugly and fearsome things behind the Taft symbol. They are not vague shadows of the past but cold facts set down in hard, cold type.

"These are the things you will find in the Senator's record. He has fought for them over and over again in twelve sessions of Congress. He is fighting for them in this campaign.

"BEHIND the symbol of State Auditor Ferguson are other realities—the realities of a better and brighter world for the people of Ohio and of our whole country.

"That is the world in which the people have a Fair Deal, a world of fair wages and adequate security in old age, a world of decent homes and decent education for our children, a world of equal rights for all and of equal opportunity for all.

"These are the things you will find in Joe Ferguson's record and in his platform. He has fought for them as a State officer; he will be fighting for them in this campaign; he will—if elected—fight for them as a Senator."

AFL Opposes Lausche

Gov. Frank Lausche, Ohio Democrat who said recently that he hadn't decided whether to support Sen. Taft (R.) or his party's candidate, State Auditor Joseph Ferguson, in the Ohio U.S. Senate race, apparently will have no labor support whatsoever in his own campaign for a third term.

After failure of the Ohio CIO Political Action Committee to indorse him, AFL Pres. William Green told the convention of the AFL Glass Bottle Blowers in Columbus that "labor will oppose Lausche vigorously."

N. Y. State PAC Meet Backs HST On Korea

LEADERS OF the CIO in New York State brought home to political leaders last week the fact that "the only candidates who can count on labor support in the coming elections are those candidates on whom labor can clearly count."

This was the theme of a one-day conference of the Executive Committee of the State CIO Political Action Committee at the Statler Hotel, New York City, June 28.

Although the conference was scheduled to discuss only domestic issues in relation to the campaign, the events in Korea brought foreign policy squarely onto the agenda.

A resolution condemning Soviet Russia and applauding the "prompt, courageous and effective" action of President Truman was unanimously approved. It pledged the continued support of the CIO to "efforts of our government to preserve the freedom and democracy of all nations and to preserve peace in the world."

The resolution was acted upon after the delegates heard an unscheduled address by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who had conferred with CIO Pres. Philip Murray earlier that day.

Potofsky described President Truman's action as a "shortcut to peace."

"With it we are declaring that there must be a stop to Communist aggression in the world," he said.

THE CONFERENCE heard addresses by Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing, Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., and State Democratic Chairman Paul E. Fitzpatrick, all considered possible Democratic nominees for governor. However, State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander pointed out that the conference was not "a preview of candidates but solely a discussion of problems in which we are happy to hear the views of these outstanding liberals."

The conference called for "appropriate action" by the State PAC to bring about nomination of candidates for all offices who "can be counted to work sincerely, completely and consistently" for labor's program. It called for the full and active support of every CIO member in the state in the form of voluntary contributions to PAC so that "labor's voice, so strong in numbers and determination, will not be muffled because of lack of funds."

Ewing attacked the Washington lobbies of the American Medical Association, insurance companies, real estate associations and power companies. These lobbies, he said, have joined together in a united front to defeat the whole Fair Deal program of social legislation.

Roosevelt pointed out that he was confining his remarks to facts about the Congressional race in New York State. Roosevelt expressed the hope that labor had made "all necessary preparations for effective action" in the coming campaign. "There is little hope for real gains," he said, "unless labor's political action machinery is fully effective."

Fitzpatrick confined his remarks to an expression of appreciation to the State CIO for its assistance to the Democratic minority in the State Legislature "in its vain effort to protect, through the Dewey administration, the gains which the state had made under Govs. Smith, Roosevelt and Lehman."

IUE Appears; GE Makes 1st Offer In Year

WHAT THE old United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers couldn't get in a year of negotiations, CIO's new Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers got in three weeks—an offer from General Electric.

It wasn't much of an offer and was quickly rejected by the IUE-CIO. But it was GE's "first serious contract proposal since June, 1949," according to Chairman James B. Carey of the IUE administrative committee.

"Not until the vast majority of GE workers decided to abandon the UE, expelled from CIO for the communistic activity of its officers, did the company make a serious offer," he said.

"This offer comes after two years in which the company was generous to itself in profits, profits which rose while company employment dropped more than 30,000, which might be due to the workers' productivity.

"The IUE-CIO negotiating committee will go back into negotiations with GE and demand the company make new proposals which will fill the long-awaited needs of GE workers."

THE OFFER provided a five-year contract with annual wage reopenings, a 3% increase with a minimum of 4c an hour for the first year, a contributory pension plan slightly better than the old one, contributory sickness, accident, disability, hospitalization and surgical insurance, and a loan setup to finance periods of layoff and illness.

Carey said the IUE negotiators are prepared to demand a better wage proposal, a $125 minimum non-contributory pension, insurance, hospitalization and surgical plans to include families as well as workers, and a better arrangement for the term of the contract.

"The negotiating committee is impatiently awaiting," added Carey, "an offer from the company on non-economic features of the contract."

P. R. Speaker On CIO Latin Unit

Ernesto Ramos Antonini, labor leader and speaker of the Puerto Rican House of Representatives, has been appointed a member of the CIO Committee on Latin American Affairs by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, is committee chairman.

Antonini, also an outstanding member of the Puerto Rican bar, is foreign relations secretary and legal adviser of the General Confederation of Workers of Puerto Rico (CGT). CGT, which has 100,000 members, is affiliated with the CIO.

Whittaker Named Denham Assistant

General Counsel Robert N. Denham of the National Labor Relations Board has announced the appointment of T. Lowry Whittaker, chief law officer in the board's Atlanta regional office, as assistant general counsel.

Whittaker, a Texan, joined the NLRB in 1941 in the legal department of the Pittsburgh office. He served as an attorney in the Atlanta office and as regional attorney in the New Orleans office before returning to Atlanta in 1947 as head of the legal section.

CIO Backs Truman, UN On Korean Policy

THE CIO gave unqualified indorsement to President Truman and the United Nations for their prompt steps to end Communist aggression in Korea.

From his sick bed in Mercy Hospital, Pittsburgh, where he is recovering from a minor eye operation, CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired President Truman on June 21 the CIO's "wholehearted and unstinting support for your courageous and forthright action in Korea."

"The CIO stands solidly behind your efforts to halt this act of Communist aggression and to restore peace in Asia," his wire continued.

"We likewise indorse the resolution of the United Nations condemning this breach of peace by the North Korean government, and your prompt action in support of this resolution.

"ORGANIZED LABOR throughout the world has learned from bitter experience during the past two decades that acts of unchecked aggression lead directly to world war. We also know that unwavering support for democratic principles is the best way to gain lasting peace. There can be no appeasement of aggression if our democratic world is to survive.

"Mr. President, we recognize that this has been a grave and difficult decision for you. We in the CIO are satisfied that your decision is right, and that it affords the only hope for preserving the peace of the world."

Jacob S. Potofsky as chairman of the CIO Committee on International Affairs also protested the act of aggression. In a Voice of America broadcast Potofsky, who is president of the CIO Clothing Workers, unequivocably supported the United States' position on the UN Security Council order demanding an immediate cease-fire and a withdrawal of North Korean troops from within the Republic of Korea.

"THE INVASION of Korean Republican territories," said Potofsky, "was an act of aggression in violation of the spirit and letter of the United Nations Charter. It is a threat to the peace of the world.

"Only by strengthening United Nations decisions and upholding its moral and spiritual force can we hope to insure the peace of the world. Unilateral action by any nation or group can only serve to weaken the United Nations and thus impair the forces of peace. I support the prompt Security Council decision demanding that aggressors in the Korean situation cease their aggression forthwith."

ILWU To Call Parley Of Left-Wing Unions To Fight CIO

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE SIGNS are pointing to a new, third, Communist-dominated labor grouping in this country.

The line was set in Budapest, capital of Communist Hungary, on May 20. The World Federation of Trade Unions—all its non-Communist unions long since departed—was the forum to announce the policy change.

There, Benoit Frachon, French Communist Party official and a key officer of the French General Confederation of Labor, declared that unions expelled from the CIO "cannot remain isolated from one another without frittering away their efforts and strength, which would weaken their efficiency."

So, Frachon advised that American followers of the WFTU "should coordinate their efforts on a national scale with a view to achieving unified action and to orienting progressively the unity of the trade unions."

BY JUNE the "American followers of the WFTU" apparently had the message.

On June 23 the executive board of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union met in San Francisco.

Topping off an attack on the CIO rarely if ever matched by big business foes of labor, the ILWU declared:

"We now believe that the time has come when the national unions that have been expelled from the CIO and those about to be expelled, should get together for the purpose of putting into effect on a national level what our ILWU locals and rank-and-file have been doing on a local level, namely, exposing the true nature and program and to adopt a program for mutual aid and assistance against CIO schemes for raiding, union-busting and strike-breaking."

(Since November eight unions have been expelled from the CIO as Communist-dominated, and substantial sections of their membership have since returned to the ranks of the CIO.

(Three other unions—the ILWU, the Fishermen and the Marine Cooks & Stewards—have been before CIO hearing committees, but the Executive Board has not yet acted on the committee reports.)

The ILWU resolution "authorized and instructed" the union's national officers to "initiate the calling of a national conference of those unions already expelled from CIO or about to be expelled. . . ."

THE FIVE pages of "whereas-es" in the longshore board resolution compounded a strange collections of slanders, lies, half-truths and distortions about the CIO.

The ILWU Board's ranting included such charges as:

1. The national CIO is "not even as liberal as the California Chamber of Commerce."

This referred to CIO's alleged refusal "to support or encourage recognition and trade" with the Chinese Communist Government.

(Actually CIO has neither supported nor opposed such a move.)

2. The AFL "is doing more than the CIO to carry on traditional union struggles for wages, hours and working conditions."

(Actually, the CIO has always held the lead in gaining economic improvements, and the pension-welfare agreements of recent months have been almost exclusively a CIO show.)

3. In seeking to free unions from Communist domination, the CIO has been "more vicious and reactionary . . . than employers, reactionary politicians and anti-labor employer associations."

4. In both foreign and domestic policies, "the National CIO, falsely claiming to be the true voice of many millions of American workers, gives aid, comfort and indorsement to ultra-reactionary and pro-fascist regimes."

5. In creating—together with British, Canadian, Scandinavian and other democratic union groups—the new Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the CIO has organized a "world-wide 'scab' international labor movement."

6. The CIO uses its "energies and finances against the working people and their best interests, both here in America and abroad."

HARRY BRIDGES' Longshoremen's Union, it said in the ILWU board resolution, had tried with "all the honesty and sincerity it could muster to have the CIO return to the basic trade union principles which built CIO into a great movement."

(Commented Oscar, the CIO office cat, who read the ILWU charges with considerable interest: "Everybody seems to be out of step but Harry Bridges.")

The ILWU, it also developed at the Board meeting, thinks that labor unity will result only in a "mis-shapen coalition of reaction to further throttle the American workers."

Behind that mis-shapen guess lay a complaint that when the AFL and CIO discuss unity in coming weeks, Pres. John L. Lewis of the miners will not be present. The resolution ignored the fact that CIO Pres. Murray had indeed invited Lewis to join a proposed committee representing all labor groups; and that the talks requested by the AFL are concerned with that all-inclusive proposal of the CIO president.

THE BUDAPEST session of the World Federation of Trade Unions was reported at length recently in the Christian Science Monitor, one of the country's leading papers, which said that the WFTU "had made decisions affecting the American labor scene."

Since their expulsion from the CIO, a number of U.S. Communist-dominated unions have joined trade federations of the WFTU. Last summer, Pres. Bridges of the Longshoremen's union was elected head of the WFTU Maritime Secretariat.

The national CIO, together with all other democratic labor centers, has left the WFTU, which had become completely dominated by the Parties of the Soviet Union and the satellite nations.

The WFTU "line" at present is not distinguishable from that of the Cominform.

IWA Assures Weyerhaeuser Strikers Of Complete Support

THE EXECUTIVE board of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers pledged the entire strength of the union's 90,000 members in the United States and Canada to the 9000 striking employes of the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. at a meeting June 28 in Portland, Ore.

The board adopted a resolution urging all locals, district councils and individual members "to give all the financial support possible, with such other aid and assistance as may be necessary" to help the strikers win their battle against the largest lumber operator in the world and to free themselves of its "paternalistic hold."

Pres. J. E. Fadling told the board that at a negotiating session held in Tacoma, Wash., on June 26, the company had flatly refused to arbitrate the union's demand for a union shop. The firm took this stand, he reminded the board, despite its employes' expressed sentiment in a National Labor Relations Board election, and despite the fact it has union shop agreements with an AFL union in its paper and fibre board plants. The company is demanding the retention of a maintenance of membership clause in the IWA contract.

The executive board authorized the international officers to borrow funds if needed to assist in the conduct of the walkout. The officers reported that locals througout the country have sent financial aid to the striking unions.

Weyerhaeuser workers are striking at Everett, Enumclaw, Olympia and Longview, Wash., and Molalla, Springfield, Roseburg and Klamath Falls, Ore. Reports indicate that every thing is quiet, with peaceful picketing, and that the company has made no effort to operate with strikebreakers.

Over And Over And Over Again

That's How The Story Of Political Action Should Be Told — So Every Worker Will Understand It Completely

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S AN old story to those of us who've been around the union movement for a decade or more, but that doesn't mean that it shouldn't be told over and over again.

And, then, there's a new "crop" of trade unionists each year who need to be informed about how it started and what it has accomplished.

It's political action we're talking about—and we intend to talk a lot about it between now and the November elections.

And we hope that union leaders—national, regional and local—will repeat the story time and again until every member of the CIO is thoroughly familiar with it.

IT'S NECESSARY to take a little journey back into history to get the complete story of why the CIO Political Action Committee was formed.

The first American unions of any consequence were established by workers in an effort to improve their wages and working conditions. They dealt directly with employers on matters relating to the places where members worked—and they let it go at that.

Politics, most union leaders said, was a matter with which individuals should concern themselves, and they argued that unions had no business poking their noses into political affairs.

Employers, on the other hand, realized that everybody was effected by legislation and that the type of legislation enacted depended on the outcome of elections.

So, employers sought to influence the outcome of elections. And for years they had considerable success.

BY THE end of the 1920's and the boom that lead to a bust, a number of unions and union leaders were engaging in political action—but on a very limited scale.

During the first administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt, millions of persons learned for the first time of the close connection between legislation and their living and working conditions.

And it was during this period that a group of union leaders took action which resulted in the formation of the Committee for Industrial Organizations in 1935 and the Congress of Industrial Organizations two years later.

The CIO brought to the nation a new concept of the role that labor unions could and should play.

The new organization was not content to deal merely with wages and working conditions. It set out from the very first to provide its members with a more abundant life and to eliminate the inequalities and discriminations which plaqued America's wage earners.

MUCH OF the early life of the CIO was devoted to the bitter struggle necessary to become firmly established as a part of the American system.

After this was accomplished, the organization shifted emphasis to other fields and broadened its program.

And in the summer of 1944 it took what was then considered to be a bold step. It created CIO-PAC.

A majority of the newspapers screamed editorially that the CIO was carrying things entirely too far. The American Federal of Labor criticized the CIO for establishing PAC.

Many CIO members objected at first, because they believed what the newspapers said about the "CIO political bosses in Washington telling the workers how they had to vote."

But PAC "caught on" among CIO members and it soon was recognized as a real political force.

TODAY EVERY major branch of organized labor is engaging in political action—and in many parts of the country PAC and the AFL Labor's League for Political Action are cooperating closely.

Political action—or education, or whatever you want to call it—is here to stay. It has become an important part of the trade union program.

It is no longer an extra-curricular activity. It's the No. 1 job of labor between now and November.

As was mentioned earlier, this is an old story to those who have been around the union movement for some time—but it's a story that bears much repeating.

It should be told again and again, at local union meetings, at council meetings, at every place where workers gather.

If it's done often enough and forcefully enough, every American worker will know before the end of the summer that he or she can play an important role in molding the nation's future simply by voting.

COMMIE 'PEACE' MOVE

"Nuts!"

That's what we said—with considerable fervor—some time ago when we read that the Communists were launching a worldwide "peace" campaign.

We said "Nuts!" because there was nothing at the time to indicate that the boys who follow the Kremlin line had changed their minds about wanting to dominate the world.

To us—and to many others—the "peace" move was nothing more than putting into effect the Big Lie technique which Adolf Hitler had used with much effectiveness some years ago.

And then we'd been witnessing at close range the "peace" and "unity" moves of the Commies in the CIO. Their idea of a nice, clean "peace feeler" was to dip into the gutter for slime to throw at Philip Murray.

The post-war record of the Russians was against them when they started talking about eliminating conflict.

There was Czechoslovakia—and there was Poland.

There was the blockade of Berlin.

Then the "peasants" from North China started their war of "liberation."

And, finally war broke out in Korea when Communist forces from the North invaded the territory of the U. S.-sponsored government of the South.

And the Reds had the audacity to declare that they had been attacked!

Thus another part of the pattern of Communist conquest was revealed to a jittery world.

Thus talk of World War III began growing louder.

A TOUCHY SITUATION

If we had all the answers to the questions being asked about the Korean situation we'd dash right over to the White House and State Department and give them to the proper authorities. We don't possess such answers and we're not even going to guess at what's going to happen next.

But the situation is serious—and it might lead to anything. Even to another war—if the U. S. behaves stupidly.

Everybody seems to be offering advice about Korea, so we're going to toss in our nickel's worth:

Politicians of both parties should not permit the Korean situation to become a campaign issue that's booted around like a football.

The problems created by the situation should be tackled, insofar as possible, on a bi-partisan basis.

To much of the world the war in Korea is a struggle between Russia and the United States — not between two groups of Koreans. And our lawmakers and policy makers shouldn't forget it for a moment.

This is no stage of the game at which to indulge in the hurling of charges at the State Department, the President or our military intelligence forces.

It's time to gather facts, to chart a firm course for our future action in Asia, to do everything we can to prevent a "local" war from becoming international in scope.

A Buck, 4 Names Get You FWPAC Button

FORMER REP. Fred A. Hartley Jr., of New Jersey, who quit his $28,000 a year job as head of the Tool Owners Union when he spotted a new crop of suckers, is using premiums to haul 'em in.

The kids who send in box tops for Buck Rogers insignia or somebody else's death ray guns can't play, though. Hartley's premium, which he probably dreamed up in a fit of nostalgia over the penny grab-bags of his childhood, costs a buck ($1) and the names and addresses of four friends.

It's a star, outlined in blue and with red and white stripes, to be worn in the coat lapel to identify the owner as a member of the intrepid ex-legislator's newest outfit, the Free Workers Political Action Committee. There is no password.

There's nothing new about his technique. He has rounded up all the same old mouth-filling catchphrases used by others of his ilk—Edward A. Rumely of the Committee for Constitutional Government, Merwin K. Hart of the Constitutional Educational League, et al. And he's using them in the same old way.

Everything he's ag'in is labelled socialistic. Everything he's for is tagged "the right of every man." Damn the torpedoes and go ahead! And any Free Worker who isn't orthodox can go form his own Political Action Committee!

For the same buck that brings the trinket for the lapel is a ready-made list of questions, stacked as neatly as the movie starlet of your choice, with which the valiant Free Worker is duly authorized to belabor candidates for office in his community. They're all aimed at electing men or women whose sole aim is to see that the rich get richer and the poor get what they've always got, only less.

The Free Workers, incidentally, belong to the no longer exclusive "Keep the Government Poor Club." Like so many other reactionary outfits in the same business, they want to push federal taxes down to 25% of income, a clumsy device to keep Uncle Sam so hard up for cash (from those who can best afford it) that things like social security, unemployment compensation, farm price supports and other social benefits for the many would be too expensive for the richest country in the world.

There's one thing that has to be said in Hartley's favor. His printed material is the first from a labor-hating outfit ever to come to the CIO's attention that carries a union label. It's that of the CIO Lithographers Union.

Living Cost Rise Highest In Two Years

THE COST of living took its highest jump in any one-month period in nearly two years between April 15 and May 15, soaring .8 of 1% to a new index of 168.6, the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The upward march was led by meat, which increased 7% during the month and appeared likely to go even higher before the present upward trend ends. All foods went up 1.9% in the period covered by the report, with prices advanced by as much as 3.6% in 54 of the 56 cities surveyed.

The overall price index stood fractionally lower than a year ago but was 26.5% higher than when price controls were ended in June, 1946. Food prices were 1% lower than a year ago but more than 37% above the June, 1946, level. Meats were 5% above a year ago, following a dip between January and April.

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index, a usually reliable indicator of retail prices to come, rose 8c in the week ending June 27 to $6.04, the highest since Jan. 11, 1949. The figure, which compares with $5.69 a year before and $6.08 on Jan. 11, 1949, represents the total per pound prices of 31 generally used foods.

Klein To Fight For End Of Rail Labor Law Bias

Rep. Klein (D. N.Y.) has announced that he will fight for an anti-discrimination clause in the proposed revision of the Railway Labor Act now under consideration in the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

The committee has held hearings on the bill which would authorize union shop contracts and a dues' check-off in all railway labor wage and hour contracts. The bill has been bitterly opposed by railway managements.

He Dropped In At The Wrong Place

UNION FIELD representatives—or at least some of them—can spin interesting yarns when they put their minds to it.

Now take the case of Anthony Ramuglia, international representative of the Textile Workers, and his story about the IWW.

It was back about 1922, says Ramuglia, that the Industrial Workers of the World set up headquarters at Lawrence, Mass., and began a campaign for a strike by the badly exploited textile workers of the city.

"That was the method of organizing in those days," says Ramuglia, "especially with the IWW.

"There were no Labor Board elections then. There was no legal recognition of collective bargaining.

"An organizer recruited members, and when enough signed up a strike was called. If the strike was won the union would be recognized by the employer and some increase in wages would be obtained."

WELL, BACK about 1922 the IWW set up several offices at Lawrence and began recruiting among workers at the American Woolen Co.

Joseph J. Ettor, who died recently, was in charge of the campaign. One evening he sat alone in a recruiting office on Newberry Street, waiting for some late recruits to show up, when an elderly man appeared on the threshhold.

The man hesitated at the entrance as if waiting for an invitation. Ettor turned from his reading, looked the man over and said:

"Yes, fellow worker, what can I do for you?"

The man was hesitant, but he finally asked meekly, "Can I see the boss, please?"

"The boss!——There are no bosses here. This is the IWW office. What do you want?"

"I want to see the boss man here. Is he out?"

Ettor shook his massive head, sighed and then said, "If you must have a boss, then I'm the boss. What do you want?"

"I want to join the IWW."

Ettor arose from his chair, walked over to the man, put his hand on his arm and escorted him in.

"Well, now that's fine. Just sit down here and answer a few questions."

THE MAN sat down. Ettor got out an application blank and the interrogation began.

The man's name was Edward ————. He gave his address. He worked as a wool carder at the Everett Mill.

Ettor asked Edward where he had worked before.

"At the Everett Mill," he replied.

"I mean before the Everett Mill," Ettor explained.

"I've always worked at the Everett Mill," said Edward with some degree of pride.

"Didn't you have a job before that?"

"No. I went right into the mill from the sixth grade."

"You never quit or got fired?"

"I should say not!"

"How long have you been at the Everett Mill?"

"Forty-four years."

"YOU NEVER got fired. You never quit. You were never late either, I bet. And you never had an argument with the foreman. Always did what you were told, I'm sure."

"Yes, sir."

"And you never complained?"

"No, sir."

Ettor rose from his chair and motioned for Edward to follow him to the door. He pointed down the street and declared:

"Brother, you're all mixed up. You don't want to join the IWW. Down there—that's where you want to go. That's where you belong. See it? See the sign? It says, 'Salvation Army.'"

And that, says Ramuglia, is how Edward "landed in the Salvation Army."

REDS' LATEST 'PEACE' MOVE

UNESCO, Direct Aid Urged To Re-establish Unions

By STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG
CIO Educational and Research Director

THE QUESTIONS continue to be asked, "What is the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization doing? Has it accomplished anything?"

"Is it worthwhile to continue to support the idea of promoting peace and security through this international organization?"

UNESCO is carrying on activities in two fields that deserve mention. One is educational reconstruction, and the other is the exchange of persons.

In its reconstruction work, UNESCO attempts to instigate and organize international assistance to countries stricken by wars or natural calamities. It encourages the establishment of fund-raising committees in various countries.

Funds are distributed to needy educational, scientific and cultural reconstruction projects in war-devasted countries with UNESCO frequently assuming the responsibility for finding the projects to which aid should be given.

IN THE UNITED States, for example, the National Commission for UNESCO, which is an organization composed of 100 prominent Americans, established a Reconstruction Committee.

This committee reported that about $25 million were collected by various organizations in the United States and distributed in 1949—with the aid of Intl. UNESCO in Paris—in 23 European countries, nine countries in the Middle East, five in Africa and 22 in North and South America.

The money was spent for equipment for vocational institutions, equipment for handicapped children, donations to universities, seminars, the buying of books and periodicals, the creation of fellowship programs, missions for medical rehabilitation and international work camps.

Second Of Series

This is the second of a series on UNESCO by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, who recently returned from Florence, Italy, where he attended the Fifth International UNESCO Conference. He served as an adviser at the conference.

THE MAIN criticism which I have of the reconstruction program is that there has been little or no aid to the trade unions throughout the world, which need considerable assistance in the re-establishment of their own facilities and equipment.

In the future, aid must be given to trade unions in addition to the schools, libraries, laboratories, etc. This is an area where trade unions in the United States can take and have taken an active part. Many trade unions in the United States have made direct contributions to unions abroad. The furtherance of this program is one of the objectives of UNESCO.

In addition to directing the collection and distribution of reconstruction funds, UNESCO also engages in encouraging other organizations and individuals to do the same, so that, as we contribute to trade unions abroad, we are furthering the objectives of the reconstruction program. We thus aid the development of mutual assistance in the promotion of international cooperation.

UNESCO's basic principle of promoting peace, security, and international cooperation and understanding also is carried forward by promoting the exchange of persons. It is generally agreed that, if peoples from various parts of the world get to know each other, they develop a closer understanding of each other and therefore a greater desire to promote peace and security.

UNESCO encourages countries throughout the world to make money available for exchange programs. Most of the work up to now has been in the field of exchange of professional people, students, and scholars. For this program to be completely successful, it must promote the exchange of workers. Workers constitute the great bulk and mass of the world's peoples.

Unless exchanges of workers are encouraged the whole program and concept of exchanges will fail of their ultimate goal.

In this regard, UNESCO is to be congratulated for calling together a group of trade union people to discuss the means of facilitating exchange of workers. We hope that more and more workers will be involved in the program in the future.

Last year the National CIO brought over from Germany and Austria three trade unionists. They participated in our educational conferences and schools last summer, attended various conventions, including the National CIO Convention.

THIS YEAR, IN cooperation with the Department of State and the Department of Labor, a large group of persons, including workers, will come from Germany. These workers will be visiting industrial plants and American trade unions. The National CIO is cooperating with this endeavor. In this cooperation, we are furthering one of the basic concepts and objectives of the UNESCO program.

Guild Plans Dailies As Cooperative Union Move

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE AMERICAN Newspaper Guild, at its star-studded 17th annual convention held in Washington's Hotel Statler, lashed out at the nation's publishers on three fronts—refusal to engage in honest collective bargaining, "mockery of freedom of the press," and a rapid drift toward rigid monopoly control of the industry.

To all three, the Guild gave one big, new answer.

The convention, after discussions lasting until 2:30 a.m. June 30, instructed its Executive Board to "assume leadership" in setting up a Labor Committee for Expansion of Newspaper Publications, which would follow a series of suggested methods in attempting to set up honest, democratic newspapers, free of domination. The papers would operate in competition with the present lords of the press.

The ANG hopes to enlist the cooperation of the other unions in the printing industry, and all other bonafide unions and liberal groups.

To back the idea up, the convention sent to membership referendum a proposal that the Guild make $50,000 available to such a committee "as soon as financially possible."

THE APPROACH was cautious, but the attack was bold. The convention, by a vote of 162 to 146, preferred the committee and referendum approach to the more direct one proffered by the Executive Board, which would have announced that the Guild "intends to acquire facilities necessary to the publication of newspapers" and set aside the $50,000 forthwith.

But there was no disagreement among the delegates as to the absolute necessity of such a step.

The publishers, editorially, greeted the idea with hoots of derision, but with overtones of anxiety. With the Guild's attack on monopoly, they said they agreed. To its caustic criticism of the performance of the publishers in getting and reporting the news, they paid little heed.

But to its intention to hurt them in the pocketbook and in so doing pave the way for better contracts on existing papers and create more jobs, they gave uneasy attention.

SECY. OF STATE ACHESON told the Newspaper Guild convention that the Korean incident had made it clear that if the free world is to keep its freedom and to maintain the peace, it must unite. ANG Pres. Harry Martin (left), who is labor information director for the Economic Cooperation Administration chats with Acheson, who spoke on June 29.

The Guild's decision came after a week of intensive activity, punctuated by a series of speeches from as distinguished a list of guests as ever honored a union convention.

President Truman addressed the gathering June 28, and Secretary of State Dean Acheson on June 29. Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Cal.), now a candidate for the Senate, spoke on June 30, as did Rep. Havenner (D. Cal.) Morris Ernst, nationally known lawyer and champion of civil liberties, addressed the banquet June 27. Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) spoke June 29. Tilford Dudley, assistant PAC director, spoke June 28.

THE PRESIDENT'S address was his first public utterance since he dispatched U. S. forces to aid the South Koreans in pushing back the Communist attack from the north, and for that reason had double importance.

He told the Guild that "we must and we shall give every possible assistance to people who are determined to maintain their independence. We must counteract the Communist weapon of fear." Then, turning away from the subject of military defense of the peace, he gave an impassioned plea for support of his "Point 4" program for technical assistance to the world's underdeveloped areas.

"Behind the shield of a strong defense, we must continue to work to bring about better living conditions in the free nations," he said. "It is important to the economic progress of the free world . . . and to the defense of all free nations against Communist aggression."

Acheson said: "The great single fact which stands out (in the Korean situation) is that a peaceful people, ruled by a sovereign independent government of their own choosing, brought into being by the United Nations and recognized by the great majority of the free nations of the world, was attacked in a cynical and brutal act of aggression.

"We are confronted with a direct challenge to the United Nations. Whether this organization, which embodies our hopes for an international order based on peace with justice and freedom, can survive this test, will depend upon the vigor with which it answers the challenge, and the support which it receives from free nations."

BOTH THE President and Acheson praised the work of ANG Pres. Harry Martin in the international scene. The President also praised American unions, declaring that "nothing is more vital to the cause of free institutions everywhere than the work of our labor unions . . . American unions can best show the workers of other lands that the democratic way, not the communist way, is the road to real economic advancement."

ANG Executive Vice Pres. Sam Eubanks, speaking of the newspaper monopoly situation now confronting the nation and the Guild, declared that the growing trend had been hastened by cartel control of newsprint—the paper that publishers must buy in order to print the news.

"The newsprint trust," Eubanks declared, "has an interlocking directorate which equals anything ever disclosed in the electrical power industry. On the boards of the 11 principal producers there are 98 men, all of whom serve on more than one board.

"And at the heart of it is the great International Paper Co. which is controlled by Winthrop Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, among others. The publishers meekly pay the price the trust sets, at least partly because the paper supply is controlled by people who sometimes advertise. . . . Their (the newsprint makers') profits are fabulous. They take $100 million a year out of our pockets."

(The ANG was active in encouraging Congress to start its present investigation of the newsprint trust, and Eubanks declared he would file a supplemental statement with the committee.)

AT THE close of the convention, the delegates by standing vote unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the President's Korean stand.

(Rep. Douglas called the decision "a great blow for peace." Speaking as a six-year member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, she said that "had we failed to take action, the little nations—yes, and some of the big ones—would now be sending appeasement notes to Russia.")

Sen Humphrey said that "the American people have left the press of America. For over a full generation, people have not listened to, and have lost respect for, the press." He asked the Guild to do what it could to see that the truth was disseminated, particularly about the Communist problem.

"The way to deal with the Communist mentality," he said, "is not to curse it, not to investigate it, not to charge it with this and that, but to create an atmosphere in which it cannot flourish, by making democracy succeed." Humphrey added that he was for the welfare state and was proud of it

THE CONVENTION also:

Approved an all-out political action program.

Voted to continue "to press in every available way and on every occasion for full cooperation and unity" among all newspaper unions.

Expressed support of the House Lobby Investigating Committee and of the House Committee investigating the newsprint trust, and called for development of newsprint sources in Alaska, guarantee of fair price and equitable distribution of newsprint, and anti-trust action against the newsprint trust.

Congratulated the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Radio & Machine Workers for its victorious drive to oust the Communists from the electrical industry.

Praised CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO Steelworkers for their pioneering job in establishing industrial pensions.

Called on all delegates and locals to help citizens of Washington, D. C., acquire the right to vote.

VOTED SUPPORT of President Truman's "Point 4" program for technical assistance to underdeveloped areas.

Postponed, after lengthy discussion, a decision as to whether to create a regional vice presidency for Canada.

Voted full support for civil rights legislation, declaring that "America cannot give leadership or instill confidence and hope in its minorities or the wary people of the world if she continues to permit violation of civil rights in America."

Majority Is Reported Opposed To Communism In Red Sphere

The American Newspaper Guild convention in Washington was host to a series of distinguished labor movement veterans from overseas, and one of them, Aloizy Adamczyk, president of the International Free Trade Union Center in Exile, told the delegates that there were fewer Communist Party members in the Soviet sphere than in many democratic countries.

The majority, he said, is violently opposed to communism but does not dare revolt, and in their enforced silence the people rejoice that the U.S. has "talked back to Russia in the only language Russia understands."

Zygmunt Magorski, chairman of the American Regional Union of the International Federation of Free Journalists of Central and Eastern Europe, praised the proposal of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), for a Marshall Plan of ideas as the most hopeful sign yet that America was becoming "politically mature," and hit at the McCarthy-type approach to the Communist problem, which, he said, the exiled journalists had learned from experience is the quickest way to bring about what it is designed to prevent.

The convention also was visited by the French all-union productivity team and the agricultural machinery team, here by courtesy of the Economic Cooperation Administration to study U.S. production methods and union functions.

CWA Conclave Passes Streamlining Plan

By WILLIAM WEISS

THE FIRST name of Pres. Bierne of the Communications Workers is not Clancy, but last week in Cleveland at the convention of the young CIO union, he and 500 delegates lowered the boom on the old system of dealing with the Bell Telephone Co.

After a knock-down drag-out debate which necessitated two overtime sessions, the weary delegates by a vote of 135,100 to 79,166 approved a constitutional amendment which would eliminate the union's 39 divisions.

The amendment would open the way for industry-wide bargaining and would put an end to the long prevailing system of division negotiations.

But the amendment will not become effective unless it is approved by the membership. The referendum will be held within 90 days.

CIO-PAC DIRECTOR JACK KROLL is escorted to the speakers' platform at the Communications Workers Convention at Cleveland by an honorary committee. Left to right, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne; La Roy Purdy, Division 17 president; Edwin Evanson, Division 33; Kroll; Ernest Weaver, Division 6 president, Carl Walters, Division 69; Jim Orr, Division 1 president, and Tom Rayan, Division 12 president. Kroll predicted that working people in Ohio would repudiate Sen. Robert Taft in November and would elect Joseph Ferguson.

THE AMENDMENT was vigorously opposed by Ernest Weaver, president of Division 6 representing 10,000 Western Electric installers. Weaver contended that the move would put too much power in the hands of the international officers.

Speaking for the amendment, Beirne noted that its adoption would eliminate "unions within the union" and strengthen the organization's bargaining position.

The CWA president lashed out sharply at the questionable motives behind a "recall" petition circulated among the membership calling for his and other officers' removal from office on the grounds that the union had been "sold out" in recent negotiations with Bell System companies.

He termed the petition circulation an attempt at "character assassination" and told the delegates that "you don't build a union by tearing your officers down to the ground."

"This union is big enough, and the people who make it up are big enough, to argue with one another on issues," he said. "Let's argue on the issues, but let us conduct ourselves in such a fashion that we will be building our union and not tearing it down.

"We will be making a decision here as to whether the CIO Communications Workers are progressing or whether the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. is progressing further. The company does not want us strong. That is why I was very happy to see it come out against the two level proposal. It doesn't want it. It is afraid we might have a union."

IN ANSWER to criticism of CWA's failure to call a nation-wide strike this year, Beirne said he would never recommend that the telephone workers go out on strike "until they are prepared to do so and are equipped with what it takes."

He declared the union is in no better position to strike today than it was three months ago or six months ago. "And one of the reasons we are not prepared," he said, "is that this organization of ours with 39 division presidents, 39 division treasuries, have had at times 39 different bargaining practices."

He stated that the distribution of the dues dollar which the member paid to his union has been chewed up and cut up so many times that there is not one single division that has the financial equipment necessary to make a strike successful.

Beirne reminded the delegates that their interests are tied in with the interests of other workers. "We can no longer look on our own little group, be it on a local basis, a division or even the entire international, as having the beginnings and ends of all activity right within our own sphere."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization, was presented with a scroll expressing the "heartfelt appreciation of the rank and file of organized Telephone Workers for his deep understanding and for his wisdom and foresight and appreciation of their problems."

In making the presentation, Beirne called Haywood the "champion" of the telephone workers and said he has won "our undying thanks and admiration for the part he has played in helping us build our union."

Haywood praised the telephone union for the "cooperation and splendid teamwork" given the CIO He predicted that the internal struggles of the union would be settled and that a stronger, more united group of workers would emerge as a result of the differences.

He pledged that the CIO would go on fighting for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act "until that infamous law is stricken from the books."

JACK KROLL, PAC director, said that the CIO is "in politics and is going to stay in politics in order to make America a better place in which to live."

Kroll said Ohio Governor Frank J. Lausche had done "unredeemable harm" to his political career by his "fence-straddling" statement that he was undecided whether he would support Sen. Taft or the Democratic nominee, State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson, in the November elections.

He characterized Lausche's actions as being in accord with the "party line" being taken by reactionary groups throughout the country. "Big business is seeking to destroy our two-party system of government," Kroll declared. "It may well be that Lausche has the same purpose in mind."

The PAC leader told convention delegates from Ohio, who represent some 20,000 CIO members, that Ferguson has better than a 50-50 chance of ousting Taft and urged increased efforts to gain a maximum registration in the state. He said present indications point to the heaviest vote in Ohio's history in the fall.

"The year 1950 is a crucial year, above all crucial years and I am calling on you as loyal members of CWA-CIO to do your duty in helping to get out the vote," Kroll said.

Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel, declared that the CIO believes in a progressive America and a progressive economy. He said that the CIO intends to press for higher wages, better working conditions and improved social security benefits for its members.

Goldberg said the Bell Telephone Co. is "not kidding you, it's not kidding Phil Murray and it's not kidding me about the type of unrealistic and unsatisfactory bargaining in which it has engaged."

HE INDICATED that it has been the experience of other CIO unions that if the union is geared correctly internally, it can better cope with the great business aggregations across the bargaining table.

Goldberg said that American workers pay for the Taft-Hartley Act every day. "We pay for it in the obstacles that have been confronting us. We pay in the hazards and hindrances we have in collective bargaining, in the loss of membership and the loss of economic benefits."

Quoting from a letter written by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to the convention, Goldberg said: "Pres. Joseph Beirne and the other leaders of your union deserve great credit for their efforts to strengthen CWA, to improve working conditions and wages and for working in close and harmonious cooperation with the leaders of national CIO and our other affiliated unions."

Early in the convention, the delegates, with few dissenting votes, approved a report on 1950 collective bargaining given by Vice Pres. A. T. Jones.

Strong opposition to the report failed to materialize. Weaver had been expected to lead vigorous criticism of the report but he adopted a conciliatory attitude in explaining his division's action in calling a nation-wide strike that was not supported by the international.

Delegates also approved resolutions supporting President Truman in his foreign and domestic programs, calling for continuation of ECA and full registration and effective participation by CWA members in political action.

Truman Is Lauded For Korean Decision

The Communications Workers' convention last week adopted a resolution praising President Truman for "his courageous decision to defend Korea against oppression."

Another resolution indorsed CIO Pres. Philip Murray's telegram to Truman supporting the President's policy on Korea.

Memo No. 2 To Boss: Now That My Typewriter Has Cooled Off, Here's More Hot Stuff About E. A. Rumely, 'Hate' Group' Leader

MEMO (NO. 2) TO THE EDITOR: Never use beer to cool off a heat-bound typewriter.

No matter how cold it is, it won't work. Besides, the typewriter might end up with a hangover and not be able to spell. A deep freeze is a lot better, so long as you have a pair of asbestos gloves and enough fuses.

Well, when the typewriter stopped smoking and started to glow in the previous communication, we were throwing a little light on the checkered career of Edward A. Rumely, the ex-convict who, as grand panjandrum of the Committee for Constitutional Government, teaches what he quaintly calls patriotism and devotion to the Constitution. We'd got him down to the middle 1930's, when he tied up with Frank Gannett, the Rochester, N. Y., newspaper publisher.

In February, 1937, the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government, original name of the CCG, was set up. Gannett was chairman and Rumely executive secretary. But Rumely's name did not appear on the letterhead—only the names of Gannett and Sumner Gerard, treasurer then as now. Headquarters were established at 205 E. 42d St. in New York.

THE COMMITTEE got off to a terrific start. In a year or so it had spent $300,000. What it collected isn't a matter of record. Its campaign of propaganda by mail was one of the largest the country had seen up to that time.

A choice aggregation of latter-day Fascists, isolationists, anti-laborites and friends of the top drawer wealthy, it opposed virtually every policy of the Roosevelt administration. It opposed aid to the western democracies during the period of the Hitler-Stalin pact. It opposed lend-lease. It was unfriendly to adequate preparedness. The Communists liked none of these, either. It opposed the Wage-Hour Act, the taxes on surplus profits and capital gains and the president's reorganization plan, and claimed credit for the defeat of the so-called plan to "pack" the Supreme Court.

IN FACT, it credits one of its trained seals, John W. Scoville (the one who owns a pen), with coining the phrase, "court packing." Rep Klein (D. N. Y.), speaking in the House on April 15, 1947, described him as "formerly with the Chrysler Corp."

Klein added that the Committee for Constitutional Government "brags" that Scoville also invented that other sensational triumph of unfettered imagination, "labor monopoly." In fact, he wrote a book by that name, which all members of Congress got free in accordance with the CCG's campaign against unions. Klein quoted the committee:

"Our first step was to coin a slogan, as we had coined 'court packing,' 'purge,' 'one-man rule,' each of which swept across the country and led to victory over public menaces."

More of Scoville later.

A fellow has to build up a reputation, even in these days, before he can get Congress to investigate him. Rumely and the committee made it in sensational time—something like a three-minute mile.

A Senate Lobby Investigating Committee looking into the 1938 election called Rumely and the committee before it, and unearthed some mighty interesting things. Sen. Minton (D. Ind.) and Sen. Black (D. Ala.) headed it. Both are now Supreme Court justices.

Y'know, Boss, we've been referring to the CCG from time to time as Gannett's organization. Maybe we've been wrong. The deeper you dig into this unsavory mess, the more it looks as if Gannett might be just another sucker, although a pretty mean one, and Rumely the slick article who latches on to a good thing when he sees it.

At any rate he tried to pass himself off before this committee as sort of a glorified office boy, and said that so far as policy and such things were concerned, "Gannett is the committee."

But, he went on in answer to a lot of pointed questions, Gannett looked into the office only "every two or three weeks," while Rumely was there or thereabouts full time.

And Gerard, the so-called treasurer, admitted he was in the committee's headquarters only "four or five times" in his first 15 months on the job. Further, he said, he didn't even write the letter that went to contributors over his name along with a financial report. He just signed it when Rumely dropped it in front of him, he said.

RUMELY, it turned out, could make a buck go further than Babe Ruth could a baseball. The committee mailed out millions of reprints from the Congressional Record and about 10 million pieces of other literature, Sen. Minton noted—but spent only $52,000 on postage.

Did the taxpayers pay the bill for this outfit that howled itself hoarse about government extravagance, Minton wondered out loud? Had the reprints been mailed in the postage-free, franked envelopes of members of Congress, he wondered?

During the 1938 election investigation, Rep. Keller (D. Ill.) in a talk in the House on July 27, 1939, described how Aled Davies, Washington representative of the Rumely committee, "seems to carry on most of his work here in the Capitol."

The lobbyist had a system. It kept him in some congressman's hair and in other congressmen's offices, Keller said. He "would call his New York colleagues and request them to call him at different places in the Capitol building," the indignant Keller reported.

Keller then recounted one conversation Davies had with someone he called "doctor" in New York in which he told how a certain Senator would insert a telegram in the next day's Congressional Record, and described with elation the New Dealers' "confusion" and split on the prevailing wage amendment.

He also said Davies gassed about a flood of letters urging people to write their congressman against the lend-lease bill which were being mailed under the auspices of "the National Committee to Preserve Constitutional Government," and told how he was trying to get the Rev. Charles Coughlin to do a job on the bill the following Sunday. By the way, what ever became of Father Coughlin?

"It seems to me," tartly observed Keller, "that a lobbyist who gets so bold as to carry on his nefarious work right under the noses of the members of Congress ought to be kicked out of the Capitol building."

BUT the committee, with its name shortened, went on its frenetic way, pouring out millions of letters and pamphlets and books and booklets and items from the Congressional Record with a speed that threatened the death of every woodpulp tree on the continent.

It inveighed against everything that would do anything toward improving the lot of the common man, the American worker or farmer or small businessman. It used the dulcet voices of orators—platform, pulpit and radio. It never indorsed a candidate for public office—oh, no, nothing like that—but man, did it pour campaign material into the voters' mail boxes!

In 1944 Rumely and the committee went again before a Special Congressional Committee investigating campaign expenditures. The committee asked Rumely to produce a list of financial contributors to his organization. He refused and the committee subpoenaed the files.

He said "no." And he got away with it, too. The District of Columbia grand jury indicted him for contempt of Congress, but he was acquitted in a U. S. District Court on April 18, 1946.

In 1944 the CCG did a little bragging. It distributed material that told of its growth and accomplishments, and thought so highly of it that its representatives handed it around again at a meeting of the Buchanan committee on June 6 of this year.

THE STUFF told how Gannett originally sweetened the kitty until some 20,000 suckers had kicked in with an average of about $10. Then it went to town on the Supreme Court reorganization plan. It also dumped its literature on those states in which President Roosevelt was trying to purge opposition Democratic congressmen. It did the job, too. Only one Roosevelt foe who tried to get back into Congress didn't.

In 1939 it opposed a work relief plan under which the federal government would have loaned $400 million a month. All that money just for eating? In 1940 it opened a fight it's still waging against the national health insurance bill. But it couldn't stop Roosevelt from being re-elected in 1940 in spite of some of the choicest anguish ever expressed in the United States.

In 1941 it streamlined its organization, changed its name to the present tag and installed former Rep. Samuel B. (Sam the Pinwheel) Pettengill as chairman and president. Sam did right well for the next few years.

In 1942 it fought and licked a wartime emergency proposal to limit salaries to $25,000 a year. It also started a "keep the government poor" campaign, which the wealthy find most alluring, by limiting the federal taxing power on incomes and inheritances to 25%. It's still going on.

Since 1944 the CCG has fought labor with every weapon it could buy—and it got some of them pretty cheap. It has opposed such elementary social legislation as the wage-hour amendments. expansion of social security, price control, rent control, universal military training, the Marshall Plan, public housing, farm price supports, FEPC and other civil rights bills and practically everything else the Truman administration or the people wanted.

If it's in favor of anything except high-sounding phrases and tax relief for millionaires and huge corporations, it isn't worth saying much about it. Maybe it feels that in such a socialist country as (it says) ours is, it shouldn't move too fast. Or maybe it thinks it isn't worth while. After all, as it says in one of its begging letters, "the country is tottering on the brink of disaster."

Gosh, it's getting hot. Its literature includes a couple of evil little volumes designed to delude anyone but the most wary. One is by John T. Flynn, "The Road Ahead." The other is the aforementioned Scoville's contribution to confused thinking, "Labor Monopolies—Or Freedom." Notice the cute title.

The Flynn volume is a stinkeroo from way back. If you didn't know much about what's going on and dipped into it, it would scare the very pants off you and start you thinking about a concentration camp for New Dealers, Fair Dealers, everybody who ever carried a union card, members of Americans for Democratic Action and the Federal Council of Churches, and practically everybody in England.

Flynn is a swell writer, which makes it worse. He has put in more twists than a CIO Textile Worker does in a lifetime on the job, and every one of 'em is phony. We'll go into this one in our next, if you don't mind, and continue with the present job of stoking.

HERE'S where the CCG is pretty cute. Its material doesn't go to the common or garden variety of guy, like me. It goes to people it thinks can plug its policies and its benighted standards, leaders in communities, not workers, who don't get brushed off when they echo a canned opinion or try to pass it as their own.

Lawyers are among their favorite folks, and bankers; often they can call congressmen by their first names, and that always helps. Doctors, too, and the heads of business and industrial enterprises. And clergymen who can use their stuff in sermons, and teachers who can foist it on their pupils. And editors . . .

Lookit, boss . . . I just had an horrible thought . . .

Are YOU on their mailing list?

Whee! The ty%-p*wr;¼e* is incandescent! M%re l)t*r.

Strikers On Newspapers Kill Freedom Of Press—Gannett

Frank E. Gannett, tory extraordinary, organizer of the fascist-type Committee for Constitutional Government and head of a newspaper chain, came up with a unique concept of democratic freedoms at the recent Imperial Press Conference in Ottawa, Ont., Canada.

"Guarantees of freedom of the press are wholly futile," he told delegates from 14 British Commonwealth countries, "when irresponsible labor leaders can force a newspaper to cease publication. I must refer you to the situation in New York."

He was talking about the strike at the New York World-Telegram & Sun, where members of AFL and unaffiliated unions refused to cross a CIO Newspaper Guild picket line. He made no mention of the possibility that genuine collective bargaining by publishers, with fair and honest treatment of employes, might go a long way toward eliminating the need for strikes. Nor did he refer to the employes' freedom to strike for decent wages and working conditions if they can't get them any other way.

"My dad says that this X squared is the determining factor for Labor—when it's put on a ballot!"

Anti-Labor Drive Costs US $240,000 Postage Loss

THE TORY Committee for Constitutional Government, which has made a career out of bemoaning the high cost of government, hasn't the slightest qualms about making Uncle Sam buy its postage stamps.

In less than four years it has sent out between 8 and 10 million pieces of mail under the franks of Republican and Dixiecrat members of Congress, Edward A. Rumley, its executive secretary, testified on June 28 before the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.).

At a neat saving of 3c per letter, anyone with a pencil can easily figure out that the Post Office Dept. had to write off between $240,000 and $300,000.

Rumley's claim that the CCG used "only" 8 to 10 million congressional franks to help it defeat administration-sponsored legislative proposals was made in a slightly indignant tone of voice. Committee Counsel Benedict F. FitzGerald, Jr., appeared slightly disbelieving. He had just asked Rumely if the figures were not nearer 40 to 50 million.

The probers' breakdown showed the CCG mailed 692,000 pieces under congressional franks in 1947; 1,216,000 in 1948; 2,853,000 in 1949; and 475,000 in the first four months of 1950.

THIS IS A total of 5,236,000 pieces of mail. In addition, said the committee's investigators, 4 million pieces were mailed under frank in 1947 during the Taft-Hartley Act debate.

Of the 1949 mailings, 2,450,000 pieces went out under the frank of Rep. Gwinn (R. N. Y.), who writes a newspaper column the CCG distributes. The other franks were donated at the government's expense by Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.), a member of the investigating committee; Rep. Rich (R. Pa.), who on virtually every appropriations measure wants to know where the money is coming from; Rep. Mason (R. Ill.), who previously denied allowing his frank to be used; Rep. Donald Jackson (R. Calif.) and Sen. Malone (R. Nev.).

In the first four months of 1950 Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) contributed 70,000 franks; Sen. Eastland (D. Miss.) 40,000; Rep. Wint Smith (R. Kan.) 100,000, and two lots of 100,000 and 165,000 by Hoffman.

The mailings were all of material the CCG induced some member of Congress friendly to it to have inserted in the Congressional Record. The Congressmen can then order as many reprints as the CCG tells him to. He pays the Government Printing Office, and the CCG reimburses him.

The speech then goes out in the Congressman's franked envelope to any one the CCG wishes. The saving to the CCG is not in the cost of mailing along—it would pay a lot more for the material if it had to order it from a private printer.

THE CCG LOBBY technique is to distribute what it calls "educational" literature opposing organized labor, the New Deal, the Fair Deal and social and labor legislation aimed at increasing the security and protection of the average citizen. It flooded the mails in the campaign for passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, did it again recently against housing and rent control legislation and improving the minimum wage and social security laws, and is continuing it against national health insurance.

Its mail goes to about 50 lists of persons ranging from one of 10,171 millionaries, with an addition of 8000 persons worth between $500,000 and $1 million, to a "labor list" of 150 persons, Rumely testified.

At another session on June 27, Rumely refused to tell the committee the names of purchasers of the CCG's publication, which the committee had subpoenaed. He considered the request, he said, a violation of the rights of freedom of the press and of speech.

His defiant challenge to the committee to cite him for contempt of Congress may be answered this week. FitzGerald reminded the committee that since the Lobby Act—which required a report on contributions of $500 or more—became effective in 1947, the CCG has been rejecting gifts of more than $490 and has been selling its books in a "phony sales dodge" to raise money.

World-Telegram Strike Unity Viewed As Good Example

THE UNITY of CIO and AFL unions in the newspaper business in New York City has been "sealed under fire" since 5:30 a.m. June 13, when over 1000 members of AFL and unaffiliated unions refused to cross a Guild picket line at the New York World Telegram and Sun.

That's what Pres. Jay Nelson Tuck of the New York Newspaper Guild told the CIO Newspaper Guild convention in Washington last week.

"This fight is going to be won by all of us," he said.

The publisher, Scripps-Howard, called the presidents of all the other union locals individually and asked them to return to work, Tuck reported, but they one and all replied: "We didn't order our men out and we're not going to order them back."

ANG PRES. Harry Martin called on all Guild locals to empower their officers to begin talks with the printing trades unions in their areas, to use the New York situation as a springboard for a firm, nation-wide alliance of all newspaper unions against the increasingly obstinate refusal of the publishers to negotiate satisfactory contracts with any of them.

The unbroken front being presented to the New York publishers by all unions in the World Telegram and Sun plant is the first such move ever made in the Guild's 17-year history, and its significance has not been underrated by the management.

Tuck flatly said that the publishers were now concentrating on destroying the working unity of the World Telegram and Sun unions, and reported that "the more they put on the pressure, the more unity they create. The craft unions tell us they'll be with us if the fight takes six months."

MEDIATION sessions since the start of the strike have yielded nothing in spite of management-sponsored rumors that a settlement offer was in the making. Tuck said.

"The truth finally came out," he reported. "The publishers' representatives told our negotiators they had 50 days' strike insurance with Lloyd's of London. They're going to make it a long fight. We're ready for them."

"The business office," he continued, "has been returning the money sent in for new subscriptions, explaining — in writing — that the paper doesn't expect to resume publication till Sept. 1 at the earliest."

TUCK SAID there were three main reasons for the CIO-AFL-independent unity now being demonstrated in New York on the strike front.

First, he said, the Guild local and the CIO Council have been cooperating with the AFL on political action and thus have established an atmosphere of mutual trust in working toward common objectives. Second, he said, the publishers have been "kicking all of us around. separately giving us each the same treatment, and that drew us closer together the longer it went on." And third, he said, "The Guild was ready, willing, and able to go on the firing line."

M. Michael Potoker, secretary-treasurer of the New York Guild local, said that financial support for the strike was "splendid and heartening." The day the picket line first appeared, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in his capacity as Steelworkers' president, sent a check for $15,000 and pledged $10,000 more, he said.

The CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers pledged $3000 a week for the duration. The Transport Workers sent $1000. The CIO Auto Workers pledged $1500 a week for the duration and UAW Pres. Walter Reuther appeared on the picket line. The CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union voted $300 a week for the duration. The CIO Utility Workers gave $500 and pledged $300 a week. The CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee sent $100.

The New York City CIO Council turned over its entire defense fund to the strikers, and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers (unaffiliated), pledged $5000 a week for four weeks.

The ANG International Executive Board voted $50,000 and levied a series of assessments on the Guild membership to keep funds coming in. The New York Guild is assessing each non-striking member 5% of his weekly salary.

The strike started when the publisher, after three months of negotiations, refused to make satisfactory improvements in what Tuck described as "the worst contract, by far, on any major paper in New York."

Tenn. Troopers Wreak Vengeance On Strikers

STATE TROOPERS seeking vengeance swept down on Morristown, Tenn., June 21 and threw more than 100 striking textile workers into jail without warrants—and without reason.

Smarting under a verbal lashing administered a week before by a Senate investigating committee, the troops pounced on a picket line shooting fracas as an excuse to move back into the town.

Details of troopers were sent from all over the state and strikebreakers were deputized and armed with tommy guns and pistols to help round up members of the CIO Textile Workers who have been on strike at the American Enka Corp. at Lowland, near Morristown, for the past three months.

THE STRIKE started when the Dutch-owned concern refused to renew a contract with TWUA and to meet wage levels and working conditions in other rayon plants in this country.

Four weeks ago Gov. Gordon Browning sent the National Guard to Morristown to open the way for returning strikebreakers. The guard was withdrawn when the state budget was unable to stand the $5000-a-day drain.

Three weeks ago a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, Jr. (D. Minn.) and Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.), came to the town and found the company was provoking trouble in order to get trooper and National Guard protection. The committee also found civil rights outrageously violated and condemned local and state authorities.

Since then the company has reported shootings in an effort, according to union officials, to bring the guard back. The company got the excuse it was looking for June 21 when a pitched battle between strikers and scabs put five men in the hospital.

STATE PATROL cars began to roll into Morristown before dawn and by noon every striker and union leader they could find was behind the bars of the Hamblen County jail. Many spent 72 hours in prison without seeing an attorney. None of them had been arrested by warrant, according to the union.

Carl W. Holt, a CIO representative, was rousted from bed in Bristol, Tenn., 90 miles away, and accused of buying ammunition for the strikers. He said a civilian who helped police question him complained about the shooting.

"I told him it was bad and I hated to see it happen, but when the company permitted the scabs to carry guns something was bound to happen," Holt said.

"He said the strikers should be lined up and shot and I reminded him that in Russia strikers were not allowed to strike and workers were lined up and shot and he said that was the way things should be done here, too."

Strike leaders who were released in bond will have a hearing July 11.

STRIKERS AT THE AMERICAN ENKA CORP. plant near Morristown, Tenn., came to Washington last week. They gave an eye-witness account of the Gestapo tactics used by state and local police to government officials, the Dutch embassy (the corporation is Dutch-owned), and the CIO Newspaper Guild convention. Left to right: L. A. "Blackie" Warwick, who was brutally beaten in jail; Mrs. Mary Hatmaker, John Edelman, Textile Workers' Washington representative, and W. A. Whited, local union president.

Old California Council Yields CIO Charter

THE ANTI-CIO remnants that stubbornly clutched the bleached bones of the old California State Industrial Union Council to their red-daubed bosoms have finally yielded them.

The old council's charter, suspended by the National CIO, and its seal, have been turned over to Richard T. Leonard, National CIO representative designated as administrator by Pres. Philip Murray. They were given him by Paul Pinsky, acting for Bjorne Halling, secretary of the old council.

Other files, records, books, etc., are being examined by Leonard and Pinsky, with a view to their being turned over to Leonard. An audit is being made of all financial records, and when it is completed money and all remaining property of the charterless council will likewise be given Leonard.

Under an agreement between Leonard and CIO Regional Director Tim Flynn, of San Francisco, acting for the CIO, and Pinsky, the old council's pending lawsuit against Leonard will be disposed of by Jay Jarwin, CIO attorney, and Herbert Resner, Pinsky's counsel.

The old council's charter was lifted because of the subservience of the group's officers to the Communist Party and its defiance of CIO policy and regulations governing councils. The California CIO Industrial Union Council, its successor, was set up at a meeting in Long Beach, Calif., early this month.

The pending lawsuit against Leonard is an injunction suit by the left-wingers to stop him from carrying out his instructions. Superior Court Judge Theresa Meikle in San Francisco threw it out of court on May 1, but the ousted council had announced it would file an amended suit. This plan has now been dropped as part of the lefties' surrender program.

Step This Way, Folks! See Great Statistical Battle Between NLRB And Mister Denham

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board and its ultra-independent general counsel, Robert N. Denham, carried their warfare to a new front last week—the statistical.

Each issued rival publicity handouts bearing the identical title, "N.L.R.B. Statistical Summary for The Month of May, 1950," of the same type the board has issued since it was first set up.

Each showed the number of cases filed and acted upon during the month, with somewhat different breakdowns. Much of the information was duplicated and the wording of whole paragraphs was the same, about the only difference being the location of the paragraphs on the rival pages.

However, Denham gave additional information. In some cases they apparently covered different periods.

The board report was issued through its public information director, Louis Silverberg, who until a few weeks ago dispensed publicity for both the board and Denham. The latter announced at that time that he would handle his own press agentry in the future, and has said he planned to hire an information officer. To date, however, he hasn't done so.

The board's report said that during May 696 union shop election petitions were filed, the fourth successive monthly increase and the largest number in 16 months; the board issued 267 decisions, also the fourth successive monthly increase and the highest in 21 months; and 706 bargaining representative elections were held with 172,570 workers eligible to vote, the highest in any one month under either the Wagner or Taft-Hartley Acts.

Both agreed that in the 361 collective bargaining elections in which CIO unions participated, they won 186, lost 165 and 10 were indeterminate.

The union shop won in 581 of the 594 elections held, or 97.8%, they agreed. CIO affiliates won 154 such votes.

Paper Firm Reneges On Agreement

THE CONTINENTAL Paper Co., whose plant at Ridgefield Park, N. J., reopened three months ago upon settlement of a nine-month strike by the CIO Paperworkers, has withdrawn recognition from the union.

Intl. Pres. Harry J. Sayre announced that the international and its Local 299, representing the plant's 300 employes, would file charges of unfair labor practices with the National Labor Relations Board.

The strike created considerable bitterness between the company and the union, especially local officers, and a settlement was worked out with Sayre's aid after the firm had announced it was closing the plant.

The agreement provided that all contract negotiations be held up for three months. When the union asked for resumption of bargaining, it was greeted with announcement of the withdrawal of recognition by William J. Alford 3d, vice president of the company.

Sayre said the union will accuse the company of refusal to bargain, discrimination, and collusion with an AFL union. In addition, he said, it will sue for recovery of damages for vacation pay, lost pay, contract violation and loss of prestige and reputation by the union.

Firm Kneels To FTC

The Federal Trade Commission brought the Holstein Rubber Products Co., Hartford, Conn., to its knees June 23. The firm promised it would stop advertising itself as the sole manufacturer of automatic kneeling devices. Holstein puts out Kneel-O-Matic, designed to be fitted into church pews.

Kill Bankers' 'Top Down Socialism'—CIO

Donald Montgomery, chief of the Washington office of the CIO Auto Workers, urged the House Banking and Currency Committee on June 26 to kill the Maybank bill (S. 2822) because it is "a Bankers' Bonus Bill" amounting to "socialism from the top down" and "welfare for bankers only."

On behalf of the CIO, Montgomery filed a statement with the committee.

The bill, which passed the Senate as a little-noticed "technical" amendment to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, would cut bankers' insurance payments under that act by 55% while at the same time increasing insurance from $5000 to $10,000 per depositor.

Montgomery said that bankers and government officials speaking for the bill "almost uniformly base their reliance not upon the reserves created out of premiums paid in by banks, but on the provision in the law which allows FDIC to borrow up to $3 billions from the U. S. Treasury in case of need . . .

"Bankers will contribute up to $1.5 billion of the insurance reserve; the Treasury will contribute $3 billion.

"If this bankers' bonus bill becomes law, it will cut a melon of $68 million a year for the benefit of bankers" in reduced premiums, Montgomery pointed out.

"For $68 million a year the banks propose to put chief reliance for the safety of bank deposits upon the government. For temporary profit they would practice long-range socialism.

"The socialism of S. 2822 is one-way socialism. It allows the bankers to call the turn while the government foots the bill. It is top-down socialism. It is urged by banks for the benefit of banks."

Hiring Hall Is Approved By Denham!

ROBERT N. DENHAM, NLRB general counsel, thinks he has a hiring hall contract that's legal under the Taft-Hartley Act. He found it in Nampa Canyon, Idaho.

It's run by the AFL Nampa Building and Construction Trades Council for building trades employers. The agreement, which provides for a union shop, says flatly the council "shall maintain a hiring hall and will solicit tradesmen, both union and non-union, for registration to fill necessary requisitions for workmen."

The employers agree to use the hall, and the unions agree there will be no discrimination against non-union men. At the same time, all construction workers covered must be in good standing, provided they are union members. Non-members must become members within 30 days.

Denham discovered this contract in a case in which a worker first claimed he was discriminated against, then claimed there was an illegal contract in existence. The agreement is absolutely okay, Denham insists, Taft-Hartley or no Taft-Hartley. He brushes off the fact that the union shop clause is not buttressed by a Taft-Hartley union shop election.

Tenn. CIO Delegates See Company Bus Hit Striker

TWO STRIKES cast their shadows over the 11th annual convention of the Tennessee CIO Council, held recently in Memphis.

One strike is at the American Snuff Co. plant at Memphis, where the Steelworkers have walked the picket line for months. The other is at the Dutch-owned American Enka Co. plant, near Morristown.

The two hundred delegates, who went to the Memphis plant to show the strikers that CIO is behind them, saw a bus which was taking scabs home hit a striker, George Vaughan, 58-year-old crippled veteran of World War II.

VAUGHAN, who was knocked down, suffered several cuts of his right arm. He said that before the bus struck him he was hit by a piece of lumber which also broke a bus window. Earl Crowder, Steelworkers' district director, said the board was pushed from inside the bus.

Crowder added that the half-dozen police on duty at the time saw what happened and should have arrested the bus driver.

The accident occurred as the bus turned a corner sharply into the crowd of strikers and delegates.

The Enka strike also was much in the minds of the delegates. They passed a resolution which condemned the "completely irresponsible, uncontrolled and vicious conduct" of the state police and National Guard.

The resolution also asked that the Economic Cooperation Administration withhold further aid to Holland until the Dutch owners of the Enka plant take a more enlightened attitude toward their employes.

HOWARD STREVEL, Steelworker from Maryville, was elected council president, replacing Crowder, who declined nomination.

B. R. Allen, Rubber Workers, Memphis, was elected first vice president, and Matthew Lynch, Textile Workers, Nashville, was chosen again as secretary-treasurer.

Other vice presidents elected are: Homer Ellis, Steel, Memphis; W. B. Frazier, Steel, Chattanooga; Lucy Reed, Communications Workers, Nashville; Robert Rogers, Brewery Workers, Chattanooga; L. R. Blackwell, Chemical Workers, Oak Ridge; Aaron Sloss, Chemical Workers, Nashville; Eula McGill, Clothing Workers, Huntingdon; David Terry, Textile Workers, Old Hickory; Sam Chambers, Auto Workers, Memphis; and George Bentley, Woodworkers, Memphis.

Los Angeles, Long Beach Back ACW Label Week

UNION LABEL Week was celebrated simultaneously by Los Angeles and its sister city, Long Beach, on behalf of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' campaign to push the sale of clothing made under high standards of workmanship and working conditions.

Proclamations were issued by Mayors Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles and Burton W. Chance of Long Beach urging citizens of the two cities to examine the union's record in order to "get a better appreciation of what the union stands for in the clothing industry."

Union label displays were shown in the windows of more than 50 stores, while union label posters and blowups of the label itself were prominently displayed within the stores.

Representatives of CIO and AFL unions conferred with retail store executives and clothing manufacturers on the best and most feasible means of placing the messages carried by the drive before residents of the area. Participating actively were Irwin DeShetler, CIO Southern California regional director, and Albert T. Lunceford, secretary-treasurer of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council.

Greater Los Angeles is not a particularly union-minded section. The Clothing Workers' ability to make the residents aware of the benefits and standards achieved by a union was an important byproduct of the week-long observance.

The Clothing Workers have announced extension of their sponsorship of the radio program, America's Town Meeting of the Air, as part of their label campaign, to Los Angeles and Detroit. In the former city it will be broadcast for a 13-week period beginning July 4 by Station KECA, and in Detroit, for the same period, by Station WXYZ. The union's sponsorship in New York and Washington continues.

Clothing Workers Begin Vacations

Most members of the CIO Clothing Workers are starting vacations this week.

All but a handful of the union's membership in the clothing, cotton garment and affiliated industries are taking their ease under the contracts, with nearly all plants in the industries shut down so employes can enjoy their holidays simultaneously.

Estimated cost to the employers is $30 million, including an extra day's pay for July 4, a legal holiday.

Paid vacations were first provided in the union's contracts in the men's and boys' clothing industry in 1944 and were for one week. Since then they have been extended to other branches of industry under the union's jurisdiction and have been increased to two weeks.

Simon Named Laundry Workers Board Head

Louis Simon, formerly secretary-treasurer, has been elected manager of the Laundry Workers Joint Board, an affiliate of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The board has jurisdiction over 20,000 workers in Greater New York, Westchester, and Long Island.

Sander Genis, ACW vice president, who has been acting manager returns to his duties as manager, returns to his duties as manneapolis and St. Paul. Odell Clark was elected assistant manager; Roger Douglas, president; William Cox, vice president.

"Psst–Boss! Have you tried to collect a kickback from any of your crew since they organized?"

Negro Is Chosen Church Unit Head

The executive committee of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches for the next two years will be headed by a Negro for the first time in its history.

Picked by the committee to preside over its sessions as the denomination's 10th biennial general council closed in Cleveland on June 26 was Rev. Dr. Arthur D. Gray of Chicago. The executive committee runs affairs of the church between the biennial meetings.

Dr. Gray succeeds Rev. Dr. Philip G. Scott of Washington, who declared his election is an "additional demonstration of a determination to bring about an unsegregated church." About the time Dr. Gray was being picked, approximately 2000 delegates were passing a resolution calling for "intensified efforts" to end segregation in Congregational churches. They also demanded the abolition of segregation in Washington.

If Your Congressman Acts Shifty, PAC Him Down In 1950!

Maine CIO Convention Hears Rieve Urge Profit Investment

"NEW ENGLAND faces some very serious economic problems," Pres. Emil Rieve, of the CIO Textile Workers, warned delegates to the recent Maine CIO Industrial Union Council convention at Old Orchard Beach, Me.

Rieve told the 130 representatives of CIO unions in the state that he fears for the nation's economic future unless more industrialists invest their profits to provide more jobs for the unemployed.

His fears, he said, were for the country as a whole if the manufacturers continue to withhold profits which in recent years have been the largest in history.

IN SPITE of the fact that from 1948 to 1950 production was at an all-time peak, there were 126,000 fewer workers in the textile industry, Rieve declared.

Gov. Frederick G. Payne urged council officials to endeavor to find a solution to their industrial problems on a New England-wide basis rather than on a one-state basis.

He suggested that a movement be started by council members to have an economic survey conducted by federal officials to determine what sort of foreign-manufactured products should be imported.

Thirty resolutions were adopted by the convention. Among them were resolutions urging improvements in unemployment compensation; support of farm-labor cooperation; enactment of a state minimum wage law; an increase in workmen's compensation and repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

MEBA Opposes Fleming For Post

Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, last chairman of the abolished Maritime Commission, is unfit to become Undersecretary of Commerce for Transportation, Pres. J. L. Daggett, of the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, told the Senate Commerce Committee on June 28.

Daggett told the committee at a hearing on Fleming's nomination to the Commerce post that his record of approval of transfer of U. S. vessels to foreign flags while he headed the Maritime Commission shows "conclusively" that he is not qualified for the new job.

H. F. Kirk, vice president of the unaffiliated Masters, Mates & Pilots, registered similar objections on behalf of W. J. Van Buren, secretary-treasurer of the union. Many U. S. seamen have lost their jobs because of ship transfers to other flags, he added, and their owners gained huge profits through tax evasions.

Coast Guard Exam Of Seamen Opposed

The CIO Maritime Committee has gone on record as being "unequivocally opposed to the Medical Examination Convention Act of 1949," according to Hoyt Haddock, the committee's executive secretary.

Haddock said the present arrangement of seamen's physical examinations being arranged by the shipping companies is "satisfactory" and should be continued.

"We cannot agree," Haddock said, "to an arrangement that will empower a military organization, the U. S. Coast Guard, to establish and enforce the physical requirements of civilian merchant seamen.

"The maritime unions are also emphatically opposed to granting to a military service those functions that are now performed by such civilian agencies as the Maritime Board, the Public Health Service and the Department of Agriculture."

Board Named In Effort To Starve Out Strikers

The Goodhue County (Minn.) Welfare Board is trying to starve 425 pottery workers into submission by refusing relief, charges Rodney C. Jacobson, secretary-treasurer of the Minnesota CIO.

The welfare board's excuse is that the strikers don't need relief, since 138 of them are getting $2 weekly strike benefits, and Minneapolis unions have been sending food and other strike aid. The state law expressly provides that relief payments are to be given solely on the basis of need, to both strikers and non-strikers.

The strike was called seven weeks ago by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers. About half the 425 affected are members of AFL who have refused to cross the picket line.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer had the honor of addressing the convention of the Communications Workers of America-CIO in Cleveland, O., June 26. The writer presented the views of the CIO on pensions, hospitalization, other forms of security. The delegates were called upon to change the present CWA organization to that of a two-level operation that would help CWA to function more efficiently in the manner of other great CIO industrial unions.

CWA is a great organization. Pres. Joseph Beirne and his associate officers have done a wonderful job. The membership consisting of men and women in almost every hamlet, town, and city throughout the United States are also to be commended for the fine manner in which they have supported their officers and union. The CWA is proud of its affiliation with the CIO, and the delegates expressed a determination to keep at the task of organizing telephone workers until every one of them is in the CWA-CIO fold.

Pres. Philip Murray sent greetings to the officers and delegates at the convention in which he expressed support of the two-level structure.

Natl. Rep. George DeNucci reports that in an Insular Board election held among the sugar field workers at Jose Llinas Plantation, Arecibo, Puerto Rico, the vote was 76 for CGT-CIO and 10 for no union. The campaign was directed by CGT-CIO Board Member Ramon Serrano. In an NLRB representation election held at the Caguas Button Co., Caguas, P. R., the workers voted for CGT-CIO by a vote of 116 to 48 for no union.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that in a representation election held at the Standard Paper Co., Richmond, Va., the United Paperworkers of America-CIO defeated the AFL by a vote of 178 to 81. There were 7 for no union and 3 votes were challenged. George Murphy was the organizer in charge of this campaign under direction of CIO Rep. Lloyd Vaughan.

A. T. Stephens, vice president and director of organization, United Packinghouse Workers of America reports the following election victories: A-1 Packing Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 39, UPWA 21, challenged 11, no union 2; Wilson & Co., Memphis, Tenn., eligible 290, UPWA 230, challenged 14, no union 0.

The New York Newspaper Guild reports that in a union shop election held at the Journal-American, New York, N. Y., the vote was 524 for and 14 opposed.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election held at the Singer Sewing Machine Co., Bridgeport, Conn., the IUE-CIO was victorious by the following vote: Eligible 1538, IUE 1215, no union 142 (UE withdrew).

Al Hartnett, assistant to the chairman of IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE victories: National Rubber Machine Co., Clifton, N. J., IUE 94, no union 3, (UE withdrew); Crotty Bros., Cleveland, Inc., Cincinnati, O., IUE 14, no union 0, (UE withdrew); Sylvania, Warren, Pa., IUE 207, UE 78; Scott-Atwater Mfg. Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 245, UE 108, no union 8; Pioneer Engineering, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 247, UE 27, no union 8.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that in a representation election held at the General Cigar Co., Huntington, W. Va., the workers voted in favor of the United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers-CIO by a vote of 259 GCCW-CIO, AFL 21, neither 106, challenged 5.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the United Packinghouse Workers won a representation election at the Wilson & Co., Memphis, Tenn., by a unanimous vote of 230 to 0. UPWA Rep. G. E. Boone, assisted by UPWA Reg. Dir. Grover Hathaway, conducted this campaign.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the United Automobile Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Westinghouse Electric Corp., Kansas City, Mo., by the following vote: UAW-CIO 257, IAM 181, no union 3. The organizational work was conducted by UAW Area Dir. Luther Slinkard and his staff, assisted by Aircraft Dept. Rep. George Arnold. The United Steelworkers of America won a representation election held at the Marsh Steel Co., North Kansas City, Mo. by the following vote: USA-CIO 20, AFL 13.

Bernard Levinson, acting director, Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, reports that in a card check of the employes of the American Jewish Congress, New York City, the CIO was victorious over the discredited UOPWA. CIO Rep. Ethlyn Christensen conducted the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports the United Steelworkers victorious over the UE in a representation election held at the Clary Multiplier Corp., San Gabriel, Cal., by a vote of 175 for USA-CIO to 28 for UE. Intl. Rep. Herb Finley was in charge of this campaign.

CIO Rep. Peter Aversa reports two representation election victories among tannery and leather workers as follows: Johnstown Tanning Corp., Gloversville, N. Y., CIO 43, no union 14; Filmer Leather Co., Gloversville, N. Y., CIO 25, no union 14.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports that members of the Northeast Broadcasting Local 1, American Communications Association, voted to disaffiliate from that discredited organization and to affiliate with the CIO as a local industrial union. Local 1 comprises announcers and technicians of three Wilkes-Barre, Pa., radio stations.

AMA Plans Election Eve Ad Drive On Health Plan

THE AMERICAN Medical Association entrenched itself in politics more firmly than ever with the announcement at its 99th annual convention in San Francisco that it plans to abandon its traditional ban on advertising and to spend $1.1 million next October to fight national health insurance.

The money would be spent on newspaper and radio advertising on the eve of the November election, and is aimed at influencing the election of congressional candidates who'll vote the way the AMA asks them to.

Dr. Ernest L. Irons, who retired as president of the AMA House of Delegates during the convention, said the board of trustees plans to run one advertisement in each of 11,000 daily and weekly newspapers during the crucial pre-election weeks, with spot radio announcements from 30 seconds up sounding frequently throughout the month.

The money comes from a $3 million fund raised by an assessment of $25 upon each member. The balance will be spent on "education" and publicity in non-advertising fields.

The Democratic National Committee has prepared an 80-page "training kit" of data and arguments designed to rebut the AMA opposition to health insurance for everybody through the plan advanced by President Truman and supported by the CIO and other labor and liberal groups.

It is particularly effective in exposures of voluntary plans, which the AMA is fostering, as "too little, too late, too costly," and cites the AMA's own figures of growth in their coverage to show that only a minor part of the population is protected by them from heavy expenses for illness and hospitalization.

Harry Becker, social security director for the CIO Auto Workers, a speaker at the convention, gave the 10,000 delegates some unpalatable facts.

THE KIND of fight the association is waging, he said bluntly is undermining public confidence in physicians, and the millions it is spending to oppose national health insurance "has promoted public awareness of the insurance idea and the advantages of prepayment."

"The AMA therefore deserves not-often-expressed credit for helping to 'sell' health insurance to the American people," he added, "and for making our Congress aware that certain national health problems do exist, and that they exist as public issues."

Modern and complete medical care cannot be available to all Americans, Becker told the delegates, "unless there is the kind of understanding which permits the workers in the shops and on the farms and the physicians to work together."

He sharply hit the AMA for its distribution of the John T. Flynn book, "The Road Ahead," because of the volume's half truths and scare words and the fact that it is promoted by the Committee for Constitutional Government, which "stands for much that would make most physicians cringe with embarrassment."

The AMA was expected to pass the buck, as usual, on the request of the National Medical Association for a stand in opposition to segregation barring Negro physicians from the use of many hospital facilities. The association's stock answer is that such matters are left to its subordinate bodies.

Race Hate Factor In Graham Defeat

In a bitter fight, Willis Smith, who campaigned as an opponent of the Fair Deal, defeated Sen. Frank Graham in the Democratic primary election runoff for the Senatorial nomination in North Carolina.

The Democratic nomination is equal to election. In the regular party primary the month before, Graham led by 53,000. He did not have a clear majority, however, and Smith called for a runoff election. In the runoff, Smith led by about 20,000.

The New York Times said "the upset resulted from much hard work by Mr. Smith's men, who thought they were battling for a lost cause, and unexpected effectiveness of their principal weapon —an emphasis upon race relations and a display of race bitterness such as this state had not witnessed for 50 years."

U. S. Safety Requires Stronger Merchant Marine, John Green Tells Senate

CRITICAL developments in Korea call for an immediate program to rebuild this country's shrunken merchant marine, the CIO Shipbuilders Union warned the Senate last weekend.

The union proposed—"for the safety of America and the sake of the world"—action on bills to allot $350 million for merchant ship construction, $25 million for ship repairs, and $350 million for naval construction.

The call for action was sent by Pres. John Green of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers to Sen. Warren Magnuson (D. Wash.), who has been a constant supporter of efforts to revive the merchant marine.

The CIO union has been calling attention for months to the fact that U. S. merchant ships have fallen to the lowest number in years, that repair programs are urgently needed, and that the country's defense is being threatened by the condition.

At present less than 30,000 skilled shipbuilding workers are on the job, Green said. He estimated that 100,000 should be at work in naval yards and another 150,000 in private installations. Of 882 vessels now under construction throughout the world, only 28 are now being built in this country.

Green, in Washington to press the union's proposals, was in conference at the White House on the subject during the latter part of the week.

UAW Wins Pensions, 5c Hike At Briggs

A THREE-YEAR contract granting $100 pensions and a 5c hourly wage boost to 30,000 employes of Briggs Manufacturing Co. has been won by the CIO Auto Workers.

Other provisions include a 3c extra boost for workers in the Evansville, Ind., plant to bring them up to Detroit wage levels, an unqualified union shop, and improved vacation benefits. The pact provides for economic reopenings in July, 1951, and July, 1952. Formal ratification by the locals is needed.

General Motors workers in Oshawa, Ontario, have voted to accept a five-year contract with GM of Canada providing wage hikes, $55 monthly pensions and welfare benefits. Negotiations have started in GM's Windsor plant.

UAW's international executive board has approved a walkout against the Hudson Motor Car Co. if future bargaining talks fail to make progress.

Basic Wage Set

The Massachusetts Minimum Wage Commission has approved an order setting a 65c minimum wage for hotel and restaurant workers who do not get tips, and 45c for those who do. The order is a 10c hike. A 65c minimum had been approved previously for office workers and dry cleaners. The legislature last year set a 65c minimum for all employes not covered by wage orders.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 10 million.	Passed both Houses; now in conference.	Ask Senators and Representatives to support liberalizing features, oppose Knowland amendment.
FEPC S 1728 HR 4453	Senate bill would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	House voted substitute bill without enforcement teeth. Second Senate attempt at cloture due July 12.	Ask Senators to vote for S 1728 without weakening amendments.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.
Railway Labor Security Bill S. 3295 HR 7789	Amends Rail Labor Act to permit union security pacts, check-off.	Referred to Senate Labor, House Interstate Committees. CIO supported, providing no racial bias permitted.	Ask Senators Congressmen to approve in line with CIO recommendations.
Railway Compulsory Arbitration Bill S. 3463	Sponsored by Sen. Donnell, would outlaw rail strikes, force compulsory arbitration.	Senate Labor sub-committee has held hearings.	Ask Senators to defeat.

GOP Demands Mundt-Nixon Bill Passage

SENATE Republicans last week called for quick passage of the Mundt-Ferguson-Nixon Bill, which has been roundly criticized by the Dept. of Justice, labor and liberal groups as a major threat to civil liberties of all Americans.

The bill (S. 2311, HR 7595), a slightly revised version of earlier models, has been attacked by the CIO at hearings of both the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Basis of the CIO and liberal complaints was that the bill, under cover of registering and controlling Communist organizations, would open the door to strict regulation of and injurious abuses against all sorts of organizations —including trade unions.

The Dept. of Justice and FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover have also complained that the bill's likely effect would be to drive the Communist Party underground. In that case, they said, the party would still function but it would be even harder to tell what it is doing.

The Mundt-Ferguson-Nixon bill has been approved by Senate and House committees. Its supporters apparently feel that the situation in Korea will breed an atmosphere capable of moving the bill through Congress.

It is believed that Pres. Truman had that bill, among others, in mind when he said the U. S. should not try to fight the totalitarian left by becoming a totalitarian country of the right.

NAACP Enables Board To Oust Red Branches

Directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have been given the power to expel any branch under Communist control.

The power was voted by resolution, 309 to 57, after a two-hour debate at the 41st annual convention in Boston.

BULLETIN!
The North Korean Permanent Committee of the World Congress for Peace has cabled an appeal to the World Congress calling for united efforts to check Wall Street's aggression, a broadcast from Pyongyang reported.

Free Unions Say:

"The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions on behalf of 50 million democratic trade unionists throughout the world registers a vehement protest against the flagrant and unprovoked armed attack launched by Communist forces on Southern Korea.

"In the firm conviction therefore that the steps taken by the U.S.A., Great Britain, and other members of the UN are designed to restore peace to Korea and to uphold the dignity and authority of the UN, we call on the trade unionists of all lands to give these measures their unqualified support."

SHARP CONTRAST—The headlines which make up the outer portion of the page above appeared in the Daily Worker, Communist publication. The statement in the center box was issued by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which CIO belongs. The Worker says the Korean war is a "bloody military adventure cooked up by MacArthur and John Foster Dulles." ICFTU says fighting began with a "flagrant and unprovoked armed attack" by the Communists. (See story on Page 7.)

IUE Contracts Far Superior To UE 'Sweetheart' Pacts

CONTRACTS being signed by the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and those signed by the discredited United Electrical Workers in the same community give a striking illustration of what CIO meant when it said UE had "ceased to function as a trade union."

"In its desperate hope that a signed contract will keep the workers from slipping away, UE has entered into any sweetheart agreement offered it by the companies," IUE officers declare.

HERE IS THE RECORD: There are two large refrigerator plants in Evansville, Ind., each with approximately 3000 workers. IUE-CIO signed an agreement with Seeger providing a 19c package which included $100-per-month minimum pensions, 5c flat increase and a 3c boost in the incentive rate, plus 7c more in raises next year.

UE settled for 5c at the nearby Servel plant, signing an agreement not even to start negotiating about pensions until April 24, 1951.

TWO BATTERY shops in Scranton, Pa., provide another example. The UE shop there is a small division of General Electric. After a two-week strike UE settled for a 5c increase for nine of the 200 workers who had walked out.

Meanwhile, at the Scranton Battery Co., a four-hour strike netted for the IUE-CIO plant a 10c increase retroactive to Feb. 1, 1950, and three additional 5c boosts to occur every six months until July, 1951.

At the Sklar Instrument Co. in New York—after a strike of more than nine months—UE settled for an average cut in take-home pay of 7c to 9c an hour, and in some cases as much as 40c. The UE claim is that the faulty incentive system is changed—but the newly signed contract permits the company a free hand in installing any incentive plan it chooses.

NOT FAR AWAY, at the Liquidometer Corp., IUE-CIO negotiated a 22½c package calling for 7c across-the-board, a minimum rate of $1 instead of the old 80c rate, and an extensive company-paid health and hospitalization program.

Other IUE negotiating achievements include:

A 17c package won from the Foote Brothers' Gear & Machine Corp., Chicago. The straight wage increase varies from 7c to 14c an hour, with a major portion of the plant getting the larger increase. Inequity adjustments will raise the rates affected another 5c to 10c.

The Foote Bros. contract calls for a full union shop, first won in the Chicago metal trades. An increase in the company-paid insurance program will provide $30 a week up to 13 weeks for illness and accident, and substantial hospital and doctor's payments for both the employe and his family.

IN DAYTON, Ohio, the local at National Foundry & Furnace Co. won a 14½c package including 4c and 7c raises, a complete union shop, a health program and improvements in the grievance procedure. The second and third shift differentials which had been so worded in the old contract that the company avoided paying them, will now go into effect. A new time standard will be worked out for production jobs by both the union and the company.

Another 14½c package was won at Formica Co., Cincinnati, with a two-year contract calling for 8c across the board now and 5c next year.

Pro-CIO Unit In ILWU Backs HST On Korea

SOME OF THE rank-and-filers in Harry Bridges' union don't see eye to eye with their president. For instance, in Local 6 of the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union there's a Committee for National CIO which just doesn't go along with the pro-Soviet thinking of Bridges and his lieutenants.

When it was reported that officers and employes of Local 6 had asked President Truman to halt his action in support of South Korea the committee's steering group forwarded a resolution of its own strongly denouncing Communist aggression in Korea and pledging full support to the U. S. and UN.

The Committee for National CIO claims 1000 members. Meanwhile, the ILWU faces expulsion from the CIO for preferring the Communist line to CIO policy and Bridges himself is under conviction of perjury for denying Communist ties when he applied for American citizenship.

At a meeting of ILWU Local 10, Bridges himself took the floor to oppose a motion supporting Truman. Bridges moved to delay action "until the United Nations has had time to formulate policy."

Apparently he deliberately chose to ignore the fact that the UN issued a cease fire order to the Communist government of North Korea and that Truman's action was in support of the UN. Bridges' motion was defeated, but the chairman adjourned the meeting before the motion supporting Truman could be acted upon.

Truman Thanks Murray For CIO Support In Crisis

President Truman has sent the following letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray in reply to Murray's telegram in support of the U. S. stand on Korea:

"Your message gives me real strength for our future tasks in the Korean emergency. It helps tremendously to know that you and your associates support us in the stand we have taken on the side of the Republic of Korea, and it is gratifying beyond words that you feel our decision is right and just.

"I need not tell you that I shall use every resource at my command to promote peace, and that my every effort will be to strengthen the United Nations as an instrument of peace.

"Thank you for wiring me at this momentous time."

Federal Workers' Rally To Hear Sen. Humphrey

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) will speak at 8:15 p.m. July 11, at the penthouse of the Federal Security Building, Independence Ave. and Fourth St., S. W., Washington, at a rally for government employes.

The rally is sponsored by Local 1 of the Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee, CIO, in cooperation with the national committee.

As a member of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Humphrey has defended the rights of federal employes. His subject will be "The Government Employe and Congress."

Local 1 Pres. Samuel Danley said that the rally "will be an attempt to get government workers together to talk over the insecurity of federal employes at appropriations time every year and to decide what a strong union can do to keep that insecurity to a minimum."

Graham's Defeat In N. C. Due To Stay-At-Homes

NOW THAT THE battle has been over long enough for unemotional analysis of the results, it seems apparent that what licked Sen. Frank Graham (D. N. C.) for renomination to the Senate was simply that 45,000 people who voted for him in the first primary stayed home on the day of the run-off.

The votes did not go to Willis Smith. They were never cast.

Here are the figures: In the May primary, Graham collected 303,000 votes. The vote by which Smith won the run-off was 279,000. But Graham got only 258,000 votes.

Smith picked up 30,000 votes when the field was narrowed to two candidates instead of four. But there had been 60,000 votes cast for the two other candidates, both of whom were much farther to the right even than Smith.

"What happened?", inquired the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in an editorial on July 1. "Did they stay home or go for a Saturday's fishing? . . . Were they, within one month, overcome by Smith's smear tactics? Or were they so confident after Graham's first success that they did not bother to vote again?

"The run-off returns do not prove that a majority of the people of North Carolina decided to pursue the Dixiecrat philosophy. They do indicate considerable lethargy among those citizens who believe in the principles of Sen. Graham. Did the Tarheel State let liberalism go by conviction—or by default?"

The Navy tried out four antihistamine drugs on 1964 persons at its training center at Great Lakes, Ill., and found they were "ineffective in preventing or relieving the symptoms of the common cold."

Seamen Will Get War Zone Bonus

Agreements covering war bonus payments for merchant marine service in Korean waters have been signed by five Pacific Coast maritime unions and the Pacific Maritime Association.

The employers agreed to cover each seaman's life with a $10,000 paid-up insurance policy and to give a bonus of $100 when a vessel enters a port under attack and a $125 bonus for each bombing raid.

Unions which signed the pact are the American Radio Association, Marine Engineers, and Marine Cooks and Stewards, all CIO; the Masters, Maters & Pilots, AFL, and the unaffiliated Marine Firemen.

Agreement Between Union and Members On Security Eliminates Poll, Says NLRB

A NEW TYPE of "union security agreement" between a union and its members has received the approval of the National Labor Relations Board.

The unique agreement was contanied in a contract between the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and the Hercules Power Co. at Hattiesburg, Miss. It had been objected to by an AFL affiliate, which sought to break up the contract on grounds that the union security provision was illegal.

The contract contains a statement that all employes who are members of the union and all who become members, "agree to remain members of the union in good standing for the duration of this contract." The union provided a 15-day period when any person who was unhappy in the union's ranks could resign.

THE NLRB held that this internal union agreement was not illegal under the Taft-Hartley section that calls for a special Labor Board election before a union can even ask for union security.

"The paragraph . . . clearly purports to be an agreement among the employer's employes, as such, and not an integral part of the bargaining agreement between the employer and the intervenor (the union) their recognized bargaining representative," the board said.

"It imposes no obligation upon the employer and affords no protection to the employe in the event of the discharge of any employe for failure to join or to maintain membership" in the union.

Under the contract the Gas, Coke union provided the employer with names of union members, and the firm practiced a check-off of dues of those on the list, provided they had individually requested such dues deductions.

The contract between Hercules and the UGCCW was signed in October, 1948.

Monroney And Thomas Face Run-Off

THE POLITICAL winds have been sweeping down the plains of Oklahoma, where the Fourth of July primary forced veteran Sen. Elmer Thomas (D.) into a run-off for the Democratic nomination to the Senate, after 16 years of virtually no opposition.

Thomas' opponent is Rep. A. S. (Mike) Monroney, best known for writing and pushing through the Congressional Reorganization Act of 1946, who piled up some 14,000 votes over Thomas but barely failed to get a majority. The run-off is July 25.

Almost 500,000 votes were cast in the primary—a record number.

Thomas is chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee and campaigned strongly on a pure "patronage" basis. He kept telling the voters that his position enabled him to get favors for Oklahoma, whereas Monroney, he said, would just be a little old freshman Senator with no power.

Monroney, on the other hand, said he guessed the Oklahoma voters wanted one favor in particular which Thomas has consistently opposed—public power, particularly extension of Rural Electrification Administration lines to the farms and ranches of the Sooner State.

MONRONEY also assailed Thomas as a grain speculator, which Thomas has admitted, and as a "messenger" for private utility companies. Thomas accused Monroney of selling out Oklahoma by alleged support of a 60% parity price level. This Monroney denied.

Oklahoma unions supported neither candidate. Thomas' voting record on labor legislation is better than Monroney's, but Monroney's record on other important issues, particularly on the international front, is better than Thomas'. An indorsement of one or the other may be forthcoming in the run-off.

The Republicans had a race, too, but in Oklahoma as in many other states, Democratic nomination practically amounts to election.

Johnston Murray, son of "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, won the Democratic nomination for governor, and five of the eight Democratic incumbents in the House were renominated. The other three, including Victor Wickersham, the only Representative not indorsed by labor, face run-offs.

Stanley Earl Safe In Japan

Stanley Earl, former Oregon state CIO officer who has been serving as ECA labor adviser in southern Korea, is safe in Osaka, Japan.

News of Earl's arrival there was cabled to ECA headquarters in Washington. His wife and children had been evacuated from Seoul, capital of Southern Korea, within a few hours of the invasion launched by the North Korean army.

Earl, for many years secretary-treasurer of the Oregon CIO Council, went to Korea about a year ago.

In a telephone interview with the Portland Oregonian on June 26, Earl indicated that the population of Seoul seemed apathetic about the war.

Advice To CP: Study Taft Blast At Acheson For Twisted Logic

SEN. TAFT (R. O.) could give the Commies a lesson in twisted logic and line-changing anytime. In fact, he may have done so June 28 in his famous Senate speech on Korea.

The Commies started shouting that the nasty old "puppet" South Koreans had pulled a vicious, unprovoked attack on the North Koreans' People's Democracy, or whatever it is they call Stalin's Korean machine. This was a simple exercise in false logic consisting of turning the map upside down and changing the labels, so that the attacked becomes the attacker, etc.

Taft, however, woke up to the horrid fact that, for once, the Truman administration had done something of which he approved.

FROM THIS, which would be a shock to any staunch GOP partisan, he somehow worked himself into an apparently sincere demand that Secretary of State Acheson resign.

How did he get from there to there?

He demanded Acheson's resignation after the Secretary had concurred in swift White House action to implement the United Nations resolution calling on the Northern armies to retreat back of the 38th parallel, yet he did not disagree in any way with the action taken. Why, then, did he want Acheson to step down?

Because the White House must have over-ruled Acheson, since Acheson had been taking the position that military assistance to Chiang Kai-Shek, in China, would be both pointless and dangerous. That's the only reason Taft could see for Acheson's support of U. S. intervention in Korea—he went along because he did not want to be publicly repudiated by his chief, or something.

THAT TOOK care of Acheson! And it illustrated Taft's No. 1 rule of logic: when a man in public life, with whom you have previously disagreed, takes a position with which you agree, accuse him of not really taking it at all.

Now for the President. Taft could not lightly accuse Mr. Truman of not being really convinced that action in Korea was necessary, since he obviously made the decision himself. But wait! Did the President really have the power to make the decision at all?

ACCORDING TO Taft, the decision probably was an usurpation of power by the Chief Executive. Only Congress can declare war. So the South Koreans should have waited around a week or so while Congress made up its mind what to do about it.

In this display of logic, Taft followed rule No. 2: where the facts are awkward, disregard them. The fact, of course, is that the U. S. is not at war with anybody, and that the action taken was the result of a "cease-fire" order by the Security Council of the United Nations, of which the United States is a charter member. Furthermore, even without the UN tie-up, the action by the President in dispatching troops to a trouble spot is not without precedent.

All of Taft's lengthy speech was studded with attacks on the administration for allegedly following a foolish, inconsistent foreign policy in Asia. Yet the Ohioan never once came out and gloated that the White House had finally come around to Taft's position.

It could be that Taft is above gloating, or that even that much praise for Truman was too much for him to swallow—or it could be that he was aware that his foreign policy pronouncements in the past have been politically motivated and did not really hold water.

"Forward!"

Joe May Need Some Answers On Wis. Tax

SEN. JOE McCARTHY of Wisconsin, who spent the spring asking questions of the State Dept., may have to answer some himself — embarrassing ones, too.

The questions involve the Republican Senator's state income tax.

He didn't pay any for 1949, and Wisconsin tax officials are asking "how come?"

McCarthy, who flung a series of wild charges of "communism" at the State Dept., without ever showing proof, may be asked for convincing proof in connection with his latest income tax return.

The Washington Post, a bitter critic of McCarthy's campaign against the State Dept., revealed that the Senator had paid no Wisconsin tax on the $17,120 income he received last year. Under Wisconsin law, state income tax returns are open to public inspection.

McCARTHY'S TAX return showed the Senator claiming that his income was more than offset by alleged losses on security and heavy interest payments.

The Senator swore that he had lost $2290 on securities, and had spent $15,172.54 on interest. A detailed break-down of the interest payments reveal the Senator as a great borrower.

He said he made interest payments of $9150.22 to the Appleton State Bank at Appleton, Minn.

In addition, McCarthy said he paid interest of $2857 to his brother Howard; $71.75 to his brother Steve; $2258 to his brother William; $74 to sister Helen; and $74 to sister Olive. To a niece, Mrs. Elmer Coon, Uncle Joe paid out $18 in interest.

Two Wisconsin loan outfits received over $500 in interest from the Senator.

FIGURED AT 4%, the interest paid out by McCarthy to relatives and banks would indicate a debt of more than $225,000—an amazing amount for a Senator who is supposed to represent the people as a whole.

The Post story charged that 1949 was the fourth straight year in which the fast-talking Senator had paid no state income tax.

In 1946 he listed income of $7334 as a state circuit judge, and balanced it off with losses of $8080.

In 1947, his first year in the Senate, McCarthy earned $13,945 —but claimed losses in the stock market of $15,046.

In 1948 he reported a total income of $28,947, but offset it with interest payments of $3090 and alleged stock market losses of $25,881.

ON THE basis of his income tax statements, at least, McCarthy had had no net income for four years—although he seems to be eating three square meals a day, losses or no losses.

McCarthy was in tax trouble with Wisconsin officials several years ago.

In 1943, the Post said, while a Marine officer, McCarthy admitted he had made $42,000 on the stock market—but he paid no state tax on grounds that he was not a resident of the state! But he did file returns for both 1942 and 1944—and throughout the three-year period held office as a state circuit court judge.

Javits Asks Probe To Find Out Why Half Of Voters Stay At Home

ON INDEPENDENCE Day the Nation celebrated the 174th anniversary of the announcement of its intention and confidence in its ability to handle its own affairs.

The very next day, Rep. Javits (R.-Lib. N.Y.) noted that almost a half of the eligible voters—judging by participation in the 1948 elections—weren't even bothering to vote.

Javits did two things about it:

1. He asked Chairman Sabath of the House Rules Committee to grant a hearing on his bill to investigate why citizens do not vote in adequate numbers. Said Javits:

"As our responsibilities increase voting apathy must decrease. We cannot afford to let only half the people elect our federal Government officials at a time when on their decisions hinge our lives and the security of our nation. Korea and our decision to act there make the problems even more pressing.

"If we want our people to be fully informed on such momentous issues, we must first give them the urgent need to get information. This incentive they must have if they vote. I wish to emphasize that I do not advocate compulsory voting, but believe its desirability or undesirability should be looked into in such an investigation as I propose."

2. He asked the governors to tell him of any action being taken by them or citizens unofficially to find why there is a lack of interest in voting, and suggested that each governor inform his state's Congressional delegation of his views on stimulating voting.

In his letter to the governors, Javits enclosed a table showing that the number of eligible voters who cast ballots in the 1948 elections ranged from 74.6% in Utah to 13.7% in Alabama.

The U. S. average in the 1948 elections was 52%, and in the 1946 Congressional elections only 37.5% voted.

There Isn't A Commie Under Every Bed!

So, Don't Let The Extremists Of The Right Use Red Issue To Put Across Their Totalitarian Schemes

By ALLAN L. SWIM

I'M PROBABLY passing up a wonderful opportunity this week to blast away at the Commies with ammunition provided by their attempt to seize control of South Korea.

After all, the Korean situation is the top topic of the day and editorial writers are really going to town on it. And they should.

The Stalinites in Korea are behaving just like the Hitlerites did in their early attempts to make the little man with the funny mustache the ruler of the world.

That having been said, I'm going to switch over to what war in Korea may do to the internal affairs of the United States.

THERE ARE FEW things that could be worse than for us—as a nation—to reach the point where we see a Communist under every bed.

Hysteria at this point is a luxury which we can't afford—and in the guise of fighting Red fascism we must not stamp out anti-Communist liberalism.

The McCarthys, the Parnell Thomases and a large portion of the American press have set the stage for the fascist-minded and the other reactionaries to cash in on their pet theories.

Now, with the Korean war creating fear throughout the world, it would not be difficult—if we permitted it—for strong-willed, noisy men to set us back years in our quest for greater freedom, in our fight for broadened civil liberties.

It's a real threat—a real possibility—and make no mistake about it.

DON'T BE surprised if you hear some of our extreme rightists say:

"In the next world war—if there is one—things will be different. In the last one we had little trouble with sabotage and there was no big fifth column with which to deal.

"But next time—if there is a next time—there will be fifth columns all over the place. Every Commie will crawl out of his secret hole with a stick of dynamite in his hand.

"This means that we must tighten up our security regulations—and we can't afford to be namby-pamby about it.

"Yes, sir, we've really got to crack down on our subversive elements. Our loyalty tests must be harder to pass. More people should be required to sign loyalty pledges.

"And, of course, labor unions should be brought under stricter controls because, after all, they harbor many subversives."

That's what they're likely to say if they think conditions are "right." That's the line you can expect from those who think the best way to retain freedom is to restrict it.

And if they can create enough hysteria they can put their line across.

THE UNITED STATES should take every step necessary to protect itself—internally and externally—from the possible consequences of the war in Korea.

That protection should include safeguards for the way of life which the Communists seek to destroy. It should provide no opportunity for the extremists of the right to move in with their brand of totalitarianism while we're combatting the extremists of the left.

If we need new laws to protect us against sabotage, subversion and treason they should be enacted immediately.

But they shouldn't contain ridiculous, undemocratic provisions like those written into the Mundt-Ferguson-Nixon Bill.

If it becomes necessary for us to crack down harder on the Commies to preserve our democracy, then let's crack down.

But we should be sure it's Commies with whom we're dealing—not New Deal or Fair Deal liberals.

Let's separate the wolves from the sheep and not slaughter the sheep because we find that a wolf or two has wandered among them:

YES, THE STAGE has been set for a new wave of hysteria to sweep the country. If it does and if our liberties are restricted as a result, the Communists will be the principal gainers in the long run.

They will be given a new propaganda weapon to use on the underprivileged peoples of the Orient. They will be able to say, with facts to back them up, that we're moving further and further away from the concept of true democracy.

Let's not kid ourselves about what could happen. Let's not underestimate the seriousness of the situation.

So, keep a clear eye on developments—and if you see anybody using the threat of Communist expansion to restrict your democratic rights, begin yelling—and yell loudly.

HELP WANTED—FAST, DIRECT

Every American unionist will surely hope for the success of the international labor mission which is now starting its visit to the Far East.

The mission is being sent by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and during the next two months it will visit more than a dozen non-Communist countries from India to Japan.

The ICFTU delegation—on which both CIO and AFL are represented—cut a heavy job for itself. Among other things, it will study the Asiatic trade union movement; look for ways of helping these unions; explore methods for increasing standards of living; and study both the extent of Communist infiltration and "the best, most effective means of combatting such activities."

It's a full agenda. But unless Asia and the world get some effective answers, the future of our democratic world will be severely threatened.

American workers cannot easily picture an entire continent where—as a CBS news reporter described it a few months ago—"for one billion people . . . anything more than a pound of rice a day borders on luxury."

It's clear that one pound of rice isn't enough to nourish the forces of democracy, to give people a stake in the democratic way of life, or to resist the wiles of Communist propaganda.

That was evident in the easy successes of the Chinese Communists over the "armies" of Chiang-Kai Shek.

It's also evident in those disturbing news reports from South Korea, where the "army" of the right-wing government fell apart in front of the Communists from the north.

BEING 'ANTI' NOT ENOUGH

Time and again, leaders of the CIO have pointed out that the democratic world can't win just by being "anti-Communist." It will get support—civic and military—only when it offers the promise of a better future for the people. Unfortunately, neither Chiang-Kai Shek in China nor Syngham Rhee in Korea was able to offer hope to their people for either the present or the future.

There's a serious lesson in all that for other countries throughout southeast Asia—indeed, everywhere throughout the world. You don't beat Communists by aping their totalitarian methods.

We need friends throughout the world. We need the friendship of peoples who have a stake and a hope in their societies. We need people living under democratic governments who would be proud to fight for their ideals and institutions. And they, in turn, need our help and understanding.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has recognized these facts of life in Asia. American senators whittling down already small appropriations for the Point Four program simply haven't learned the facts—and the danger.

So, we wish every success to the ICFTU mission. The task—to strengthen the ties of friendship and mutual respect among free workers on every continent—must have the highest priority in the months ahead.

Full-Scale Attacks On Schools Revealed

A GENERAL attack is being organized on public school education in the United States, Dr. Harold Benjamin of the University of Maryland, told the National Education Association in an unscheduled speech last week at its convention in St. Louis.

"Under the steam of indignation of spending money for a modern school program," he said, "the enemy has lately gone into some full-scale battles, as in Denver, Minneapolis, Upper Arlington, O., and a number of other communities, large and small.

"In at least one part of the country, the Los Angeles-Pasadena-Glendale area of California, he has apparently started an all-out campaign."

A leader in the anti-school campaign, he said, is the National Council for American Education.

"In the recent Pasadena case," he went on, "anti-tax groups, heated 'patriots,' and opponents of Columbia University's 'red' pragmatism rallied behind a general or chief of staff named Allen A. Zoll."

ALLEN A. ZOLL is a super-right-wing stalwart who has been around for a long time making a good living off the hatreds he helps whip up.

A decade or so ago he was the No. 1 man in American Patriots, Inc., which in December, 1947, was labelled "fascist" in an official list of subversive organizations released by Tom C. Clark, then U. S. attorney general and now a U. S. Supreme Court justice.

Before World War II Zoll was active in distributing pro-Japanese propaganda and was a close friend of many Nazi sympathizers. He talked longingly of things like revolution and the barricades, and spewed anti-Jewish hatred. His associates ranged from wartime sedition defendants and Japanese agents to apologists for Franco Spain, the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, and the lunatic fringe of those who could find nothing right with the United States and little wrong with her potential enemies.

Zoll made what apparently were perfunctory protests when his organization was tagged by Clark, but did not repudiate any of his associates or activities.

INSTEAD HE organized the National Council for American Education. In it he interested some of the backers of American Patriots, Inc. They went hunting Communists in every textbook and in every classroom, but that wasn't all.

The NCAE, interested in saving money for the wealthy who support it, has inveighed constantly against taxes which would go for school expenditures, and appears to be trying by indirection to push big business propaganda into classrooms.

Last year Zoll charged that 76 Harvard professors "have a total of 366 affiliations with 124 different" Communist fronts. Fulton Lewis, Jr., the anti-labor radio broadcaster, picked up the charges. Neither has yet offered any substantiation.

Zoll in his publication, "Educational Guardian," has been lauding the fascist-type Committee for Constitutional Government—now being investigated by the House Lobby Investigating Committee—for its distribution of John T. Flynn's anti-labor, anti-New Deal, anti-Fair Deal scarebook, "The Road Ahead." The Zoll publication itself is offering the book for sale in editions at various prices.

Zoll also helped raise money last year to finance the radio broadcasts of Upton Close, the extremist right-wing broadcaster, who is anti-Semitic, isolationist, a frantic hater of the Russians, an "America Firster," and pro-Japanese who once was aired by Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council — another fascist-type group being studied by the House Lobby Investigating Committee.

800 Idled By Strike Awarded Jobless Pay

The 800 members of Local 551 idled at Chicago by a strike against Ford in Detroit in May 1947 by the CIO Auto Workers are entitled to unemployment compensation of $80,000. So Judge John A. Sbarbaro declared in upholding a ruling by Frank Annunzio, director of the state Department of Labor.

He Waited Until It Was Too Late

THIS IS A STORY about a union "trouble shooter" who sat through a meeting without knowing what was going on.

He listened but he didn't understand.

And at the point where he expected to make his speech the audince got up and walked out.

What happened was a complete defeat for him and the group for which he was to have acted as a spokesman.

Here's what happened, according to Big Joe Adamson, former United Public Workers board member who for years fought against Communist domination of his union.

THE PUBLIC WORKERS had a fairly large local at Hamtramck, Mich., (just outside Detroit) which has a big Polish population.

The members, most of whom were employed by Hamtramck schools, were getting fed up with the policies of their international union, which was expelled from the CIO on charges of being Communist dominated.

Word of this dissatisfaction reached international headquarters and officers decided to send one of their regional directors into the situation as a "trouble shooter."

His job was to "save" the local for the Public Workers and to keep its members from rejoining the CIO.

He arrived on the scene and put in an appearance at a meeting of the local.

THE "TROUBLE SHOOTER" arrived early for the session and spent a bit of time wandering around the hall, chatting with members he knew.

He was pleased that there was such a large turn-out; it would provide him a good opportunity to get his story across.

Then the meeting was called to order—and the "trouble shooter" was a bit flustered because the local president spoke Polish.

And the regional director couldn't understand a word he said!

After the opening formalities were disposed of, a member rose to his feet and made a rather lengthy speech—in Polish.

There was more talk—in Polish.

The "trouble shooter" sat there and listened—and wondered what was going on.

He knew that a debate of some kind was under way, but didn't have the slightest idea about what was being said.

And nobody took the trouble to explain.

AT THE END of an hour the "trouble shooter" was beginning to look uncomfortable and to squirm in his chair.

But the meeting went right on. And every speech was in Polish.

"I'll get my opportunity a little later," the "trouble shooter" must have told himself.

Finally the debate ended, the president spoke briefly—then there was some voting.

Suddenly the president banged his gavel. Members began rising from their seats and heading toward the exits.

The "trouble shooter" jumped to his feet and declared, "Wait a minute! I've got something to say to this group."

The president of the local turned toward him and, speaking English for the first time since the meeting started, declared:

"I'm afraid you waited too long.

"We've just voted to disaffiliate from the United Public Workers and to join up with the CIO Government and Civil Employees Organizing Committee."

And that was that! A.L.S.

CCL-PAC Now Operates On Year-Round Basis

By HENRY WEISBACH,
Secretary, PAC-CCL

PAC IN Canada dates back to 1943, when the Canadian Congress of Labor convention adopted a resolution which stressed necessity for political action by organized labor. Canadian CIO unions belong to the Congress.

The political structure in Canada is entirely different from that in the United States. In Canada the system of political party rule is strictly adhered to, while in the U. S., an elected representative may support a bill regardless of the party he belongs to.

In Canada this is highly improbable. Once elected as a member of a political party this elected member must adhere to the line taken by his party, whether as the government or as the opposition. Breaking this tradition would mean crossing the floor of the House and joining the opposing faction — which very seldom happens.

The PAC-CCL, therefore, has to follow a different direction than CIO-PAC. The CCL proposed a legislative program outlining the demands of organized labor. This program was submitted to all political parties in Canada.

THE LIBERAL Party and the Progressive Conservative Party did not accept the program. The Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) stated its willingness to accept such a program as its labor platform.

The only CCF government in Canada, in the Province of Saskatchewan, has implemented most of the demands of organized labor. The CCL has, therefore, at each subsequent convention indorsed the CCF as the political arm of labor.

PAC was first brought into action during the provincial election in Ontario in 1948. The Conservative premier, George Drew, who now leads the Progressive Conservative Party in Canada, stated that the trade unions did not represent labor—but that he did.

The trade unions through their political action machinery helped to hand Drew a personal defeat. PAC was successful in electing 15 trade union members to the Ontario Provincial Parliament and increased the CCF seats from eight to 21—thus making the CCF the official opposition in Ontario.

In the 1948 provincial election in Saskatchewan, PAC also played an important part and was successful in re-electing the CCF government in that province.

In the federal election campaign in 1949 PAC functioned, for the first time, on an almost country-wide basis. Money was collected in many centers where PAC was active. Activities were spotty in some places and the elections did not bring the desired results.

Up to the 1949 convention of the CCL, PAC operated only during election campaigns. Learning from past experiences, the convention decided that this was not sufficient and that PAC should function on a permanent basis. Machinery to this effect was set in motion at the Executive Council meeting of the Congress in January, 1950.

A NATIONAL PAC was set up on which all affiliated national and international unions and provincial federations of labor are represented. A campaign to collect a dollar per member per year will be launched this fall.

Committees are elected on a local union, community and provincial basis. PAC-CCL is making headway. A newsletter issued monthly by the National Committee keeps all PAC members informed of current legislative issues. Organized labor in Canada is beginning to realize that it has to use its political arm as well as its economic power.

Gold Workers Join Rush Into CIO

The CIO is back in the rich Canadian gold fields for the first time since the moribund Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers—since expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination—walked out on the workers.

Local 100, Porcupine Mine Workers Union, signed the first contract recently with MacIntyre-Porcupine Mines, Ltd., one of the richest in the world. The first fruit for the workers was a 15c-an-hour wage increase; a cost of living clause under which they may get as much as 7c an hour additional before the pact expires, and two weeks' paid vacation for the first time in the company's history. A union-management committee was established to devise a pension plan yielding a minimum of $50 monthly.

Local 100 is an affiliate of the Steelworkers through the Canadian Congress of Labour, to which CIO unions in Canada belong. The CCL took jurisdiction over the non-ferrous mining industry when the MMSWU failed to make even an attempt to renew contracts. The jurisdiction later was transferred to the Steelworkers.

Food Index Prices Highest Since Late '48

LAST WEEK, for the second successive week, the Dun & Bradstreet index of wholesale food prices made a spectacular jump, rising 15c to $6.19—the highest level since Dec. 28, 1948.

In the previous week it had spurted 8c to $6.04, which was the highest point since Jan. 11, 1949. Normally the index moves only 2 or 3c in a week.

Last week's index compared with $5.66 a year before and $6.21 on Dec. 28, 1948. The 15c increase was the greatest in any week since July 13, 1948, when it zoomed 24c to the all-time high of $7.36. The increase was caused by advances in 17 food prices and declines in two others.

The index represents the total of the price per pound of 31 generally used foods. It was only one sign of an impending increase in the cost of living that eventually will hit the consumer.

Between the start of the Korean conflict and July 5 hog prices on the Chicago livestock market went up $3.65 per hundredweight to $24.25, the highest since November, 1948, when the peak of $25 was reached. On July 3 prices were up from 50 to 75c and on the next business day, July 5, following the Independence Day holiday, they soared another 75c to $1. The highest price in 1949 was $23.65.

The wholesale prices of several well-known name brand coffees went up 2 to 4c a pound over the holiday weekend, taking it still further out of the reach of a lot of workers. Meantime, the coffee industry is running newspaper quiz advertisements plugging a radio program and showing how much cheaper coffee is now (when made at home) than it was in 1664.

Korean War Spurs CP Front Groups In Drive For 'Peace' Petition Names

COMMUNIST FRONT organizations are attempting to use the Korean War to create anti-administration sentiment and to obtain additional signatures for a phony peace petition.

The petition demands "strict international control" of atomic weapons, despite the fact that Russian delegates to the United Nations have fought plans for bonafide international inspection of these lethal devices.

The fountain-head of all the petition-circulating groups in this country appears to be the Peace Information Center in New York City.

The organ of the Communist Party in this country, the Daily Worker, is filled with information about these petitions.

A FRONT PAGE editorial in the June 29 issue tied the so-called "World Peace Movement" to an attack on the Truman Administration for going to the defense of the South Koreans, and set the line for the "petition pushers."

The Workers also carried news about the circulation of the petitions and letters to the editor—one from an enthusiastic "petition pusher" and another from a person who wanted to circulate the petition. (Issue of June 30.)

The petitions are being circulated in virtually every major U. S. city. In some of these such as New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh and Milwaukee, labor "peace" groups are circulating the petitions.

THE NEW YORK Labor Peace Conference is typical of the membership of these labor groups. The petition solicitors are drawn from the ranks of the left-wing unions, such as Local 65 and others in the distributive union group which withdrew from the CIO Retail Wholesale and Department Store Union, and locals of the United Electrical Workers and the Public Workers, both expelled by the CIO for following the Communist Party line.

The "peace campaign" got its kick-off at the Communist-dominated meeting of the World Committee in the Defense of Peace in Stockholm last March.

IT WAS NOT until Oct. 1, last year, when the First National Labor Conference was held in Chicago, that the Communists began the movement to use the left-wing unions in this country for the petition campaign.

About a dozen regional conferences were held later. At one in Cleveland, 100 labor leaders and members accused CIO Pres. Philip Murray of aiding a move toward war.

"PEACE" Petitions like this one are being circulated by Communist-front organizations throughout the length and breadth of this land. They are directed currently at the participation of the United States in the war to halt the North Korean aggressors.

Radio Free Europe Goes Beyond Iron Curtain

A NEW VOICE for democracy went behind the iron curtain July 4 in the first broadcast of Radio Free Europe, designed by the National Committee for a Free Europe to "tell the true story of democracy and freedom."

The NCFE, a group of private citizens, conducts the station as a private venture aimed at "halting communism and saving freedom." The recordings are made in the U.S. and are flown to transmitters in Western Europe at secret locations to prevent jamming by Russian stations as long as possible.

July Fourth was selected for the first broadcast as "a symbol throughout the world of man's long struggle for freedom." The next 10 days of programs will be limited to announcements of the new station's purposes and future agenda.

Bastille Day, July 14, anniversary of the fall of the Bastille and start of the French revolution, marks the beginning of Radio Free Europe's full broadcasting schedule.

The new station is designed to supplement the Voice of America broadcasts and "speak with the voice of the private American citizen," said Frank Altschul, chairman of the NCFE's radio committee. "Our broadcasts will hit harder (than the Voice of America) because we won't be handicapped by the diplomatic limitations of a government agency. It will speak with the voice of the private American citizen."

A GROUP OF exiled leaders of Eastern Europe, including former prime ministers and cabinet ministers, will speak to their native countries such as Poland, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, and Bulgaria. "A prime objective of Radio Free Europe will be to bring to those people the voices of their democratic leaders who have been driven into exile," said NCFE President DeWitt C. Poole.

"They will speak to their imprisoned countrymen in their native language, in the familiar tone of a family reunited. They will give the lie to Communist propaganda and tell their listeners of the undying struggle to assure freedom everywhere."

NCFE operates RFE on public contributions. It will expand operations, probably establish broadcasting offices on the Continent when funds become available.

Members of the committee include CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, AFL Pres. William Green, and AFL Vice Pres. Matthew Woll.

"You make cars all week—why do you have to tear this one apart every Sunday?"

Public Relations Group Says AMA Lies About Health Plan

THE AMERICAN Medical Association has deliberately lied in calling the proposed national health insurance program "socialized medicine," charged the National Assembly for the Advancement of Public Relations. The group is devoted to fostering public relations in the national interest rather than special selfish interests.

The health insurance program is being backed not only by the Truman administration, but by many liberal Republicans, the Assembly pointed out.

The AMA's "mendacious" propaganda, said the statement, is intended to block a program "which doctors who are still true to their oath to serve the sick must enthusiastically support."

The statement said either the AMA has failed really to study the program, "or else they have decided to bear false witness against it." The AMA propaganda has "deliberately confused the decent and humanitarian doctors" with "an utterly false depiction" of the national health insurance program, said the Assembly, dubbing the propaganda a gross injustice to the nation's busy doctors.

The statement then nailed the "completely fradulent" claims of the AMA, refuting the points made by the AMA, and declared "national health insurance is needed and it will come fairly soon, and if the AMA were smart, it would get behind the program now."

THE STATEMENT said the AMA has taken advantage of the fact that doctors are busy men to slip over on them "an interpretation of health insurance which is just as completely lacking in veracity as the claim of the Communists that the Republic of Korea invaded North Korea."

The statement warned that when the nation's doctors discover how they have been fed lies "in order to defeat a 100% American program that is needed to keep hundreds of thousands of Americans from going to their graves years ahead of their time, they will rise up and demand that the $3 million a year now being spent for spreading lies about health insurance and how it works should be spent instead for research on a cure for cancer and other appropriate medical purposes." (LPA)

ICFTU Seeks 'Bread, Freedom, Peace' For World

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

SOME eighteen months ago, three union leaders left a meeting in disgust.

The meeting was that of the executive council of the World Federation of Trade Unions; the place was Paris, France; and the union leaders were spokesmen for the CIO, the British and Dutch union federations.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who did the walking-out for the CIO, explained his action in these words:

"The CIO sees no point in remaining in an organization so paralyzed by disagreement that it, in effect, no longer performs any useful function.

"The purpose of a world organization of labor is to serve workers. It is not to serve governments, or politburos or political parties, or any other group.

"A world organization of labor must be free and independent of these influences. It must be free to criticize any or all of these other bodies, where they violate the interests of labor."

IN A YEAR and a half, such an organization has been established by the unions of the world—the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

It has links with 65 national trade union centers in 50 nations. It has a membership of 48 million workers. It has a constitution and a headquarters in Brussels, the capital of Belgium.

And, most important of all, it is going about the business of serving workers — not governments, politburos or political parties.

The ICFTU's activities and programs are reaching into every section of the free world.

TWO ICFTU LEADERS: Pres. Paul Finet (Belgium) and General Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek, shown during a recent session of the international labor group's executive board. Oldenbroek visited the U.S. early this year.

● While you are reading this story, members of an ICFTU delegation to Asia are sitting down with union leaders in Calcutta, India, and Tokyo, Japan. They're spending two months in the Far East to help the cause of democratic unionism—which needs plenty of help in those areas of the world.

● A month or two ago, ICFTU members from Europe and the United States got together in Dusseldorf, in the heart of the German Ruhr. The subject at hand: what to do about the powerful industries of the Ruhr—often the backbone of aggressive war—so that they may work for the benefit of all of Europe.

Out of that conference came a decision to support labor's interests in the probable event of far-reaching changes in the make-up and administration of European industry.

● Some time later this year, the ICFTU will conduct an American hemisphere union conference — probably in Mexico City. At that meeting, spokesmen for the CIO and AFL will get together with Latin American unionists to work out plans for urgently-needed improvements in the status of millions of workers south of the Rio Grande, and to build their democratic union organizations.

● At the United Nations, the Economic & Social Council has given the ICFTU its top "Class A" consultative status—over the protests of Soviet and satellite delegates. ICFTU has filed a number of important statements with the UN body.

● The powerful "international trade secretariats" — each composed of unions in a particular industry—have been brought into the ICFTU. These industrial union federations, concerned with bread-and-butter problems affecting great numbers of workers, will strengthen the status and prestige of the ICFTU.

These form a substantial degree of progress for an organization that came into being just seven months ago.

When the democratic unions left the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions, there was no new structure to take its place—nothing more than a rough idea that free unions "ought to get together."

By mid-1949, these free trade unions were doing something about the sentiment. At Geneva, Switzerland, representatives from nearly 40 union centers got down to the business of planning the sort of union confederation they wanted to have.

Continuations committees were set to work. When the ICFTU called its constitutional convention at London late last November, there was general agreement on goals—and a lot of disagreement on how to achieve them.

But most of these disagreements were cleared up by free and full debate among the delegates.

As Paul Finet, the new ICFTU president, expressed it: "The new international organization of free trade unions will be all the more effective for the birth pangs it has had to undergo."

And J. H. Oldenbroek, the new secretary-general, voiced the sentiments of the ICFTU when he said, in his inaugural speech:

"I shall have to work under the executive board and carry out the decisions of the general council and congress, and abide by the constitution.

"But I shall refuse to carry out any instructions from any individual organization. Let us work together with the wisdom of the East, the civilization of the West, and the dynamics of the New World—and we shall establish an international that will be a great success. It will realize the objects for which it has been founded."

TODAY THE ICFTU is settling into its new headquarters building at Brussels.

Its staff, brought together from many continents, is "shaking down" into a hard-hitting work force.

Its influence is spreading throughout the world.

The ICFTU influence is one for the common good. As the new labor federation declared in its first manifesto last December, its goals are for "bread, freedom, peace"—

Bread—economic security and social justice for all.

Freedom — through economic and political democracy.

Peace—with liberty, justice and dignity for all.

Delegates Seek To Stimulate Democratic Asian Unions

AN INTERNATIONAL labor delegation left last week for Asia, to spend two or three months in close consultation with trade union leaders in a dozen non-Communist nations.

The mission was sent by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Its purpose: to develop "practical proposals for fully enlisting the tremendous potential strength of the democratic Asian labor movement in the international struggle for peace, freedom and social justice."

On the delegation are spokesmen of the CIO and AFL: John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils, and Gordon Chapman, an officer of the AFL government employes union.

With them are J. W. Dalley of the British Trades Union Congress; Roger Kekeyzer of the Belgian Confederation of Labor; Deven Sen of the Indian National Trades Union Congress, and Jay Crane, an American on the ICFTU headquarters staff.

During the next 60 days the ICFTU group will be talking and working with union officials in Pakistan, India, Japan, Formosa, Burma, Thailand, Indo-China, Hongkong, the Philippines, Indonesia, Singapore, Malaya, Ceylon and Iran.

The delegation has been studying Asiatic problems at ICFTU headquarters in Brussels, Belgium. It has also conferred with Asiatic delegates attending the convention of the UN Intl. Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland.

Out of that planning period came a five-point program for the delegation. Its members will work on these objectives:

1 "A survey of the present position of trade unionism in Asia, the difficulties confronting the union movements there, and the best means of overcoming present obstacles.

2 "An elaboration of plans for the establishment of regional union organizations which, while forming an integral part of the ICFTU, would enjoy a large measure of autonomy required for dealing effectively with the many special problems facing Asian workers.

3 "An investigation of the economic situation in the various Asiatic countries, to find the types of international technical and economic assistance needed for advancing economic and social development, and the role which the trade unions might play in ensuring its application in the interests of the general population.

4 "An exploration of the possibilities of establishing residential and other colleges in Asia for training union leaders.

5 "An investigation of the extent and methods of Communist infiltration designed to exploit the national and social aspiration of the Asiatic peoples for disruptive Communist political ends—and the best, most effective means of combatting such activitiies."

The ICFTU made clear that it is not trying to impose any form of unionism on the Asiatic worker which would be "alien to their national traditions."

"All discussions and inquiries will be conducted in closest collaboration with the national movements of the various countries which the delegation will visit.

"In this way, the ICFTU delegation is confident it can further develop all practical proposals for fully enlisting the tremendous potential strength of the democratic Asian labor movement in the international struggle for peace, freedom and social justice."

The ICFTU pointed out that the Communist agression in Korea "in no way diminishes" the importance of the labor mission.

"Now, more than ever, the ICFTU considers it necessary to strengthen democratic unions in Asia; help those unions coordinate their efforts . . . ; and formulate plans for speedy and adequate assistance aimed at promoting economic and social progress."

TIME FOR A LAUGH: European problems are pretty involved, but there's time for a joke when two veteran European labor leaders get together at an ICFTU meeting. At left: Leon Jouhaux of France; at right: Anton Proksch of Austria—both graduates of Hitler concentration camps. Yep, that's a glass of wine in Jouhaux's hand!

'Flagrant Attack' On South Korea Is Protested

A strong protest against the "flagrant and unprovoked armed attack" on South Korea has been issued by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

At the same time the big international labor organization "welcomed" the firm stand taken by the United Nations Security Council.

"This United Nations action will, we are convinced, secure the wholehearted support of all free and democratic trade unions. They will undoubtedly reject, as they have done before, spurious appeals from so-called peace movements aimed at sabotaging the legitimate defense measures of democratic peoples. . . .

"In the firm conviction that the steps taken by the USA, Great Britain and other members of the UN are designed to restore peace to Korea and to uphold the dignity and authority of the United Nations, we call on the trade unionists of all lands to give these measures their unqualified support."

Paper Products Field Being Studied by FTC

The Federal Trade Commission is now looking into the paper products manufacturing industry.

It wants to know if there are any price-fixing conspiracies or other practices in restraint of trade. Under investigation are 13 trade associations and their members.

Study Of Resources Urged For New England

TESTIFYING before the Senate Committee on Public Works last week, John Edelman, CIO Textile Workers Washington representative, urged the immediate appointment of a fact-finding board to survey the critical New England economic picture.

He suggested that the venture, which would explore the resources, assets and liabilities of the area, be undertaken jointly by the six New England states and the federal government.

Although employment has been rising throughout the country, the New England region still has the highest relative unemployment. Edelman declared that there is no simple formula to assure the area's future.

"New England's key industries have been slipping badly in the last 25 years," he said. "Textiles and leather goods, once the main foundations of this region's economy, have been migrating to other areas."

HE SAID THE seriousness of the unemployment problem is further evidenced by the inability of workers to find jobs after they have been laid off.

In the year ending March 31, 1950, he testified, more than 300,000 New England workers were jobless for such long periods that they exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits.

He quoted figures to show that in February of this year, when unemployment in the nation amounted to 7.6% of the total labor force, the rate of unemployment in New England was approximately 9.5%.

Edelman said that when the nation's industry slides into a mild recession, New England manufacturers, workers and merchants are likely to be hit more severly than the rest of the country.

"This is exactly what happened in 1949," he told the committee. "When unemployment rose to 9.9% for the country as a whole, New England recorded 14.1% unemployment."

Quoting from a booklet issued recently by the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation entitled "The Foundations of Prosperity," Edelman said that "labor has a concern with regional development and resource conservation which is based on all the needs of every citizen."

"We have a common stake, along with farmers, businessmen and professional people, in the raising of the general standard of living by the provision of cheap electric power," he added.

AS A MEANS of improving the region's economic lot, Edelman said, the CIO advocates the "common-sense" development of hydroelectric power on the rivers by public agencies; flood control of the rivers by erosion control; river navigation when it pays its own way, and irrigation projects which are agriculturally sound.

"Workers now realize that there is a direct tie-in between their jobs and public policy in relation to natural resources," he said.

He cited a New England textile mill owner who moved his plant South because his power costs would be cut in half.

"It doesn't take many such incidents to wake workers up to the vital connection between the supply and cost of electricity and the security of their employment," he added.

House Unit To Decide Fate Of 2 'Hate Group' Lobbyists

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE HOUSE Lobby Investigating Committee is scheduled to decide July 10 if it will cite for contempt two reluctant lobbyists, a convict and an ex-convict, who refused to tell it where they get the money their far-right-wing organizations spend to influence Congress and the voters.

The convict is Joseph P. Kamp, executive vice president of the Constitutional Educational League, a friend of the Nazis, a Jew-baiter, a pal of the monopolists and a virulent foe of organized labor. He is serving a four-month term in the District of Columbia jail for refusing to answer similar questions put to him by another congressional investigating committee in 1944.

The ex-convict is Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, which is the king pin of all the frantically vociferous fascist-type organizations belaboring the Fair Deal, the New Deal and organized labor with trumped-up warnings of "Socialism," the "welfare state" and that epitome of unfettered whimsy, "labor monopoly."

RUMELY WAS convicted of violating the Trading With the Enemy Act of World War I, when he bought the old New York Mail with money put up by the Germans. He served one month in the Westchester County, N.Y., penitentiary before being pardoned by the late President Coolidge.

Kamp refused to answer the committee's questions on June 6, just before he started his term.

Rumely steadfastly declined to disclose the CCG's source of income from wholesale purchases of its literature although asked to do so at several sessions with the investigators. At the latest, on June 29, he wrapped himself in the First Amendment and claimed immunity under its guarantee of freedom of the press.

THE ONLY RESULT of such a disclosure, he told the committee, would be to lay open the purchasers "to the pressure of the labor bosses or the smears of left wingers."

The bulk of CCG's income comes form the sale of its publications. Direct gifts of $500 or more must be listed with Congress under the Lobby Act. CCG turns back all donations of more than $490 and relies for funds upon large-scale purchases of its books. This, Chairman Buchanan (D. Pa.) of the investigating committee has said, is a "phony sales dodge."

At the June 29 session Rumely told the committee the CCG is "very hard up at present because your investigation has knocked down our book sales." It "always was hard up," he claimed, then admitted writing a letter in 1949 setting income at $5.5 million in seven years.

RUMLEY, a non-practicing physician who received his education in this country, England and Germany, testified the CCG's principal bank account is in New York, but that in connection with a subsidiary organization it calls "Fighters for Freedom" it has additional accounts in Knoxville, Chattanooga, Nashville and Memphis, Tenn.

He also denied that Rep. Ralph Gwinn (R. N.Y.) receives a salary for his work as co-author of a "Paul Revere Column" distributed by CCG through another subsidiary, "Features for America." Gwinn is paid only for research expenses "when we have the money," he claimed.

The New York Congressman, another garrulous opponent of anything that smacks of the New Deal, the Fair Deal or trade unions, has been more than generous to the CCG. Last year he provided it with 2,450,000 envelopes bearing his congressional frank for sending out its literature.

Buchanan told his committee at a meeting on June 30 that he planned to ask contempt citations on July 10. The delay he attributed to the absence of Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.) who was out of town.

WITNESSES before the committee this week will include Francis J. Biddle, national chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, and James Loeb, its national executive secretary; spokesmen for the Public Affairs Institute, and representatives of the Foundation for Economic Education.

Buchanan said Republican committee members lost their enthusiasm for a probe of organizations supporting national health insurance when Democrats suggested a look at the American Medical Association. The AMA and the CCG were the top lobby spenders in 1949.

U. S. C. Of C. Peddles Films From Anti-Labor College

THE CHAMBER of Commerce of the U. S. is hurt, deeply hurt . . . It seems that a whole lot of workers were asked the question, "Who did the most for you in the last 30 years?"

"Unions," answered 51% of those queried.

"The goverment," answered another 43%.

When it recovered from the first shock the chamber mourned that many people have "a distorted conception of business and our economic system." Apparently it didn't sit down and wonder if maybe, after all, the workers were right.

"Let's take the offensive!" it said. It has whipped up an "American Opportunity Program" aimed at explaining our economic system and getting rid of what it quaintly calls "misinformation, misunderstanding and dissatisfaction," which is leading the United States to a "planned economy."

The opportunity program retails at $1.50. It consists of a series of booklets designed to tell the employer how to foist his or the Chamber's ideas on his employes through employe meetings, bulletin boards, employe publications, letters to employes, annual reports, plant tours, radio and films.

THE BUSINESS about the movies is particularly interesting. Eight of 65 films are recommended for "priority use." Among them are those of the film division of Harding College, Searcy, Ark.

Harding College is an obscure institution which according to the current World Almanac has 633 students, a faculty of 43 persons.

Its president is Dr. George S. Benson. He runs it as sort of a sideline for what he mis-names "Freedom Forums," a profitable racket feeding on the anti-union hatred of well-to-do industrialists, especially in the Middle West, and financiers.

Dr. Benson is a labor-hater of long standing and a pal of the monopolists. A former foreign missionary, he became head of the Arkansas college upon returning to the United States. Soon after he began to write a column plugging the C. of C.'s idea of "free enterprise" which was distributed to small-town weekly newspapers. He also did radio broadcasting along the same lines.

In 1946 he was actively backing the Veterans Industrial Association, with headquarters in Little Rock, Ark., a strikebreaking goon squad for anti-union southern employers. It "guaranteed" the open shop, barred the checkoff and prohibited in its constitution any member signing a contract with an employer.

DR. BENSON'S line is the "persecution" of industry by government of the New Deal and Fair Deal type, the "evils" of "regimentation" and high taxes, and the shimmering virtue of "free enterprise."

In the last year or so his activities have carried him from newspaper column and microphone to captive audiences in industrial plants.

He, or someone trained in the Freedom Forum technique, goes into an industrial plant at the behest of management, and before a gagged audience of workers attacks the Fair Deal, the New Deal, social and welfare legislation and everything else that's to the best interests of the workers. The technique is not so much to attack organized labor directly as to belittle it and what it has done for the workers, and to give credit for the steady improvement in the standard of living to the very employers from whom the unions wrested it.

A "FORUM" is properly a meeting for open discussion. But not a Freedom Forum. The speaker is the only one who can open his mouth. The worker just has to sit there and take it. There is no debate. He can't even walk out, because he's on company time and is being paid. It he wants to ask questions he can write a letter. Maybe he'll be answered and maybe he won't.

The workers in a number of plants in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio and other Middle West states have been subjected to this sort of one-sided propaganda lately.

The result hasn't always been what the promoters have in mind or one for which the C. of C. yearns so plaintively. The Wisconsin CIO News, official publication of the State CIO Council, in its June 23 issue printed the following editorial, entitled "Thank You, Dr. Benson," which explains:

"We wish to take this opportunity to thank Dr. George S. Benson, father of the anti-labor 'Freedom Forums'. As you all know, those 'Freedom Forums' are lectures that workers in the plants are being forced or coerced into attending.

"The lectures don't attack unions. But that's because Doc Benson is a smart man (and believe you me, he gets paid for being smart, too). No, they don't attack unions. Instead they attack everything unions stand for.

"So we wish to thank Doc Benson. Because in every plant where management has forced such lectures down the workers' throats, our PAC drives have been doubly successful.

"Thank you, Doc Benson, may you stay in business a long time. We know it pays off for you, but it pays off better for us."

"My suspenders broke."

A Case History: The Press, The Enka Hearing

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

THE MEN and women who help put out the nation's newspapers spent a good deal of time, at their union's convention in Washington the other week, talking about the evils of monopoly control in the newspaper industry.

They pointed out that circulation was never greater; advertising volume and revenue were at an all-time peak—but the number of newspapers kept shrinking, the number of one-paper towns kept increasing, and John Q. Citizen was taking it on the chin as regards honest presentation of the news.

What the convention did not discuss, but what all too many union members know, is that even where there is no newspaper monopoly, even where there are two papers in town, the union story is either never heard or is distorted.

For a case in point, look at Morristown, Tenn., where there are two papers—the Daily Gazette & Mail and the Sun. Nearby Knoxville also has two papers—the Journal and the News-Sentinel. A Morristown resident has the choice of four papers. Surely out of the four one could get an unbiased account?

Not when it involves a union and a big corporation.

You may recall how shocked were unionists the nation over to read that National Guard troops had been sent in during the strike at the Dutch-owned Enka rayon plant at Lowlands, near Morristown. In the turmoil that followed strikers were beaten, arrested wholesale "on suspicion," held without bail, etc. As Time magazine cynically put it, one striker was still black and blue from the "therapy" administered by the troopers.

AT THE insistence of the union, a sub-committee of the Senate Labor-Management committee went to Morristown to investigate the strike. Present for the committee were Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Sen. Murray (D. Mont.).

Even before the Senators arrived, both Morristown papers declared "outsiders" had no business meddling in the affairs of the "sovereign state of Tennessee."

The hearing lasted 14½ hours. Six hundred townsfolk stayed throughout, but the papers said the hearing was "often dull." The papers said "most everyone who sat through that meeting came away with this one certainty—if our nation's future is in the hands of such men (Humphrey and Murray), certainly we have a grave worry for America's tomorrow." But elsewhere in the story was this: "There was little doubt where the audience's sympathy lay; every Humphrey tirade met with cheers and applause."

ONE HEADLINE said the union's attorney "Terms Morristown Atmosphere Unpleasant." What he really said was the the police, the press and the radio station had been hostile to the strikers. Another headline said "Wild Man Of Senate Lives Up to Name; Humphrey Pepped Up Hearing by Ranting and Preaching."

A front-page column in the Gazette & Mail said "press reports from throughout the country" had tagged Murray and Humphrey as "utterly pro-union and incapable of conducting a fair and impartial hearing." The "press reports from throughout the country" turned out to be a line from an editorial in the Knoxville Journal.

The Sun referred to the "100,000 words of testimony that all members admitted could do no good." The fact is that neither Humphrey nor Murray made any such remark. Both said repeatedly that the hearing was a valuable study of the disruption caused by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Sun credited the company's attorney with a statement that he never made.

The distortions, the sneering, were bad enough. Worse were the omissions. The Journal gleefully retold Enka's testimony of how a farmer with a rifle saved six strikerbreakers. It did not quote Murray's comment that "If one farmer with a shotgun could hold back 150 pickets, why couldn't 60 armed state troopers control 250 pickets? Why call out the National Guard?"

The Journal reported the charge of Enka's attorney that the union was a "monopoly," and Humphrey's denial. It failed to report what else Humphrey said: That Enka could not get an injunction, strikebreakers, state troopers and the National Guard, if the union had a monopoly.

The Journal gave Enka 43 inches of space, to 15 for the union.

ENKA'S CHARGES that pickets overturned cars, burned one, hurled rocks, dynamited two homes, got full play. The testimony of Lonnie Warwick and Silas Switzer of how they were jailed and cruelly beaten rated hardly a line. There was no mention of the fact that Warwick wasn't even picketing when arrested.

Not one of the four papers reported the testimony on Enka's "back to work" movement," which the company said was a "voluntary" action led by a worker named Melvin Green. Murray instructed Enka to produce Green for questioning. Green did not appear. Not one of the four papers said anything about that.

The union's attorney testified that Att. Gen. Henry Foutch, sent by Gov. Browning to investigate before the National Guard arrived, did not interview a single union member. Not one paper mentioned that testimony.

HUMPHREY ..summarized ..the hearing this way: "If what happened in Morristown is what the Taft-Hartley Act leads to, a great case is being made here for its repeal."

No local paper thought that important enough to print.

So, here are four local papers, reporting on a hearing that kept 600 persons interested enough to remain for 14½ hours in a murky auditorium in summer heat; a detailed account of the way a powerful corporation deprived more than 700 Tennesseeans of their civil rights; a documented case history of how the Taft-Hartley Act makes it easy for employers to break strikes. And the four local papers merely saw it all as a "pro-labor tirade."

Humphrey told the American Newspaper Guild convention that the American people no longer believe their press. The behavior of the four local papers covering the hearing on the Enka strike shows why.

PERHAPS THEY DISTRUSTED PRESS: The photo above shows a portion of the 600 persons who attended the hearing of the Senate labor subcommittee on the strike of the CIO Textile Workers at the American Enka plant near Morristown, Tenn. Many of them TWUA strikers, they sat through the 14½-hour hearing. They got the whole story, which they could not have obtained by reading the newspapers of the area. See the story above.

Miami Citizens Over-Rule Council To Vote For Housing Program

THE CITIZENS of Miami recently voted 14,246 to 10,410 to go ahead with a public housing program, thus overruling their city council, which had voted it down, and clubbing the real estate interests which had opposed the referendum.

Public housing had the fighting support of both Miami newspapers, which cooperated in exposing the nation-wide plan behind the "spontaneous" local opposition to public housing. Leading citizens spoke out in favor of slum clearance, as did citizens' organizations.

The opposition campaign was vicious, centering subtly and in some cases openly on the race issue. One radio advertisement bluntly said: "Do you want a Negro housing project in your neighborhood?"

But the citizens' groups and the local press answered lies with facts, and put a terrific effort into turning out the vote.

The campaign had quite different results from that conducted last November in St. Petersburg, where public housing was defeated 3876 to 3300, with about 17½% of the registered voters participating.

The fight there was spearheaded by white owners of Negro property, and the money spent was contributed openly by their organization, to an outfit known as the Council for the Preservation of Private Enterprise, which spent thousands of dollars on misleading advertisements.

The proponents of public housing were unorganized, although the unions did the best they could with limited funds.

Price Fixing In Auto Parts Charged By U. S.

The National Automotive Parts Association and 23 of its members were accused of price fixing in suits filed in Detroit by the Justice Dept. June 30, charging violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

The complaints charge the 24 corporations organized in the association in 1925 to act jointly in agreements with manufacturers about purchase and resale terms. The members buy automotive parts from manufacturers and sell to jobbers, who in turn sell to service stations, repair shops, or to car owners.

Will Clayton Sees Through Anti-Housing Ads In Houston

Houston, Tex. will have a public housing referendum July 22, and the fight is already hot and heavy. The real estate lobby is buying space, at $800 to $900 a shot, to run advertisements plugging the old line that public housing is socialistic, un-American, and will increase local tax rates.

Fighting strongly on the side of public housing, however, is Will Clayton, cotton broker and former Undersecretary of Commerce, who is wealthy himself, and as a leading taxpayer is not taken in by the phony propaganda.

Public housing is good business, Clayton said. True, public housing projects do not pay taxes—they pay a certain percentage of the rents they receive in lieu of taxes. Existing public housing projects in Houston, he said, are paying $52,000 more a year in this special form than the taxes assessed against the sites before the projects were built.

Scoffing at the "socialism" cry, Clayton commented:

"The father of the public housing bill is that great hero of national socialism, the Hon. Robert A. Taft, senior Senator from Ohio . . . If public housing is socialism, so is the RFC, organized to save banks and institutions that were unable to save themselves, and incidentally, fathered by another great 'socialist', the Hon. Herbert Hoover, and operated . . . for 10 to 12 years by a national figure well known in Houston for his 'socialistic' tendencies, the Hon. Jesse H. Jones."

ACW Has Gone Long Way From Sweatshop Days

By WILLIAM WEISS

ALMOST WITHOUT exception, older members of CIO unions like to "look back" to the old days before their union was formed and make a comparison between conditions as they were then and as they are at the present time.

Veteran CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers are justifiably proud of the progress of their union as they recall the sweatshops of the early days in which children of 10 or 11 were forced to work 16-18 hours a day for a few cents as recently as 1921.

Writer Mary Heaton Vorse related what a school teacher told her during investigations of malnutrition among school children in New York City in 1910.

"WHEN I SEE a pair of pipe-stem legs and sallow cheeks and I ask that child what his father does," Miss Vorse wrote, "nine times out 10 he answers, 'a tailor'."

A number of years later she was able to report: "What a change has come about in the industry! Now the children of tailors are bonnie. Good wages have been translated into terms of childhood, strong bodies, bright eyes, red cheeks and a vivid enjoyment of life. This is what those extra dollars have meant."

The average sweatshop of the early twenties was little more than a dug-out in the cellar of a private home, usually below the level of the street and frequently alive with rodents.

Workers, girls in their teens, were forced to sit amid the grime and filth of the basement with no place to eat except at their machines.

In 1933, in the depths of the great depression, conditions in the men's shirt industry were worse than they had ever been. The U. S. Dept. of Labor conducted a wage survey covering the shirt industry in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Missouri, Indiana, New York, Delaware, Maryland, and Pennsylvania.

THE REPORT stated: "Investigation of about 20,000 payroll records showed that half the workers in the industry earned less than $7.40 in a busy week in the early summer of 1933 . . . half the women workers in rural areas earned less than $4.30 a week."

Homework, the practice whereby employers forced workers to take work to their homes, proved to be a convenient and inexpensive way to operate a clothing business as late as 1933.

In that year, there were over 7000 "homeworkers" employed in the Rochester, Philadelphia and New York markets.

The advantages to an unscrupulous employer of using the process were many. Factory space could be kept to a minimum; union standards could be avoided; labor legislation could more easily be violated; and workers could be isolated from each other more effectively.

The elimination of "homework" became one of the primary goals of the Amalgamated. With the help of NRA, the Wage-Hour Law and state legislation, the scourge of tenement work finally was erased from the clothing industry.

Although legislation against the unwholesome practice has aided in its elimination, the best assurance that homework will never return to the clothing industry is the inclusion of a simple clause in every Amalgamated contract: "None of the manufacturer's work shall be performed in the homes of the employes."

The use of child labor in the industry was eliminated in much the same way by a combination of protective legislation and union vigilance.

THE ANSWER to the queston "How far has the Amalgamated gone?" was presented very clearly in 1948 when Life magazine ran a feature on the state of the union. Life summed up the story of progress for ACW by citing the history of one of its members, David Zwiren.

"Zwiren," the article stated, "has seen the whole industry revolutionized and he has grown prosperous beyond anything he ever imagined when he arrived in the U. S. as an immigrant from Poland in 1907."

The story continued: "In that year, most men's clothing was made in sweatshops. The pay was low and the hours long. Workers often toiled in ill-lighted lofts for more than 60 hours a week or did piecework at home for as long as they could stay awake.

"Today, David Zwiren works only 38 hours and makes $65 a week. His doctor bills are paid when he is sick and he owns an insurance policy that costs him nothing. If he desires to retire he is provided with a comfortable pension.

"The changes are due in a large measure to a union called the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America . . . Moreover, the union has made itself the biggest thing in the lives of its 375,000 members."

While improved wages and working conditions have been the first concern of ACW negotiators, the union has also made tremendous strides in caring for the social welfare of its members.

Death benefits, accident and health insurance, hospitalization, surgical and maternity care, and finally, retirement pensions, are all part of the Amalgamated social insurance program.

In promoting and initiating its social welfare programs, the Amalgamated has been concerned not only with the benefits which accrue to its members but with the stimulation which those programs provide in the furtherance of economic security and social legislation.

BUT THERE is a limit to what one group of workers can do in the way of improving the general welfare. For that reason, the Amalgamated has always supported the broadest program of federal social security in all its aspects.

From the very beginning the Amalgamated has had to convince the employers that it could defend its position as spokesman for the workers in the clothing industry. It has won this right through hard-fought strikes.

One of the most bitter and hard-fought begun in 1910 at the Hart, Schaffner & Marx plant in Chicago and became a city-wide strike. For five bitter winter months the strike continued until finally the determination of the Chicago tailors resulted in a signed contract. The history of the Amalgamated really began with this strike.

Ten years later another significant strike took place in New York City.

IN DECEMBER of that year, the association of New York City men's clothing manufacturers broke off negotiations with the union and locked out the workers. Sixty thousand were turned out into the streets. Scabs and armed guards were recruited. The clothing industry barons adopted the "American Plan" in a vicious campaign to smash the union.

For six months, the struggle continued until the employers, realizing that the clothing workers were determined to stay out until their demands were met, signed a contract in June.

The last great clothing market to hold out against the union was Philadelphia. In a battle reminiscent of the early years, 10,000 workers there won agreements in a spectacular struggle in 1929. With that victory, the last major clothing market was brought into the collective bargaining framework.

Today the Amalgamated also includes among its members clothing salesmen, glove workers, neckwear makers and laundry workers, to mention only a few.

In 1944, the late Pres. Roosevelt in his address to the Amalgamated convention characterized the true spirit of the union in the following words:

"The Amalgamated has always refused to rest upon past glories and achievements. Its ever recurring pioneering in new fields of endeavor convinces me that its members can be relied upon to make their contribution to a consistently better life for American workers."

Local Inspections Revealed Aiding Milk Monopolies

UNDER THE noble guise of protecting your children's health, city and county inspectors throughout the country are keeping milk prices high by sponsoring monopolies of milk producers in each city area.

The evidence piled up June 30 as a Senate Agriculture Subcommittee questioned Federal and District of Columbia health officials on just how milk regulations work.

A perfect example is Washington, D. C., where the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association is fighting to keep outside producers from sending their milk into the city.

MORE THAN 25 years ago, when it became known that diseases such as undulent fever, typhoid, tuberculosis and diptheria could be transmitted through milk, many localities set up ordinances governing the dairy industry.

Dr. Charles L. Williams, Sr., assistant surgeon general of the U. S. Public Health Service, told the story of these regulations and said they were effective at one time. Now, however, Dr. Williams told the senators, "there is no sound public health reason for the exclusion from a state or a community of milk of satisfactory sanitary quality."

Public Health Service standards have been accepted by 32 of the states and federal milk certification "based on uniform standards and uniform enforcement procedures" could end multiple inspection by the cities and allow exchange of milk in all the states, the health service maintains.

GROUPS SUCH as the Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Association strongly opposed this because it would ruin their exclusive markets.

In Washington, for instance, during the war shortage the District commissioners allowed milk to be shipped in from Wisconsin, Ohio, Minnesota and other places. Dr. Daniel Seckinger, District health officer, told the committee not one epidemic or spread of disease could be traced to the milk.

Now, however, the commissioners bar the "outside" milk. They point to a 1925 law that forbids shipment of milk into the district except from farms that have been inspected by local officials.

A page advertisement in the Washington Post, June 30, called on the citizens to rally behind a provision that bars any method but steam sterilization for sterilizing milk cans. The result is to keep out small farmers who can't afford to install steam sterilization machinery.

A. W. FUCHS, chief of the Milk & Food Branch of the Division of Sanitation of the U. S. Public Health Service, told the Senate group he considers chemical sterilization completely adequate for health purposes.

Every public witness before the committee voiced the same opinion, including Dr. Seckinger. The milking machines are chemically sterilized, the pails are chemically sterilized, everything is chemically sterilized except the 10-gallon cans in which the milk is shipped.

A representative of the Washington Restaurant Association pointed out there is no logical reason why the Milk Producers should insist these cans be steam sterilized. They aren't telling the truth, he said, because they have an axe to grind. (LPA)

Local That Bolted To AFL Back In CIO

A CIO local that bolted to the AFL on March 1, 1949, has come back to the fold.

It is the former Local 50, CIO United Wholesale, Retail and Department Store Union representing candy and confectionery workers in New York City. It shifted when eight other locals of the UWRDSU were forced out because of Communist-domination, and Local 50 members feared the international was "disintegrating."

"Since then," said Pres. Frank Sciba, "it appears that not only has the UWRDSU come back from the brink of disaster, but is making new strides."

FIVE-YEAR-OLD JUDY McMAHON, Chicago, plants a kiss on the cheek of Joseph E. Brady in appreciation of a check for $3376 given by the state councils and the members of the CIO Brewery Workers to the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults. Brady is coordinator of the union's state councils.

Murray Picks 2 To Conduct Cal. Hearings

CIO PRES. Philip Murray moved last week to free two California county CIO councils of alleged Communist control.

He appointed CIO Rep. Richard T. Leonard and Tim Flynn, CIO regional director for Northern California, to conduct hearings on complaints by CIO unions against the Contra Costa Industrial Union Council and the Alameda County Industrial Union Council, both in San Francisco's East Bay area.

Many CIO locals withdrew from the two councils more than a year ago. They charged them with being "nothing more than an agency for the dissemination of the Communist Party line," and with interference in the internal affairs of affiliates. Neither, say the complainants, is any longer representative of the CIO in its territory. In both counties pro-CIO unions have organized Committees for National CIO.

The charter of the California State council was lifted several months ago by Pres. Murray and a new Council organized at a convention last month. Both Leonard and Flynn figured prominently in the proceedings. Leonard was named administrator of the old council by Murray and served as acting head of the new pending the constitutional convention. He and Flynn at present are checking property and assets of the old council and are receiving them in the name of the CIO and the new council. The left wingers who controlled the old body have withdrawn lawsuits by which they hoped to block the CIO action.

TWUA To Ask Raise In '51

THE COTTON and rayon division of the CIO Textile Workers union will not press for wage increases this fall, but will wait until March, 1951, and at that time seek to negotiate new contracts covering wage increases, pensions, and hospitalization.

This was the decision of 400 delegates to the cotton and rayon division gathering in New York last week. It was taken on recommendation of TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve and Mariano S. Bishop, head of the division.

The contract covering 400 plants and 100,000 workers expires next March 15. It contains a wage re-opening clause effective Sept. 15, which will not be invoked. The last wage increase was negotiated for a 10c increase and since then, TWUA leaders have regarded the situation in the industry as too critical to warrant further pressure. Minimum wage in the cotton and rayon branch now is 97c an hour, and the average straight time hourly pay is approximately $1.20.

U.S. To Public: Beware Of 'Butterleggers'

As the new oleomargarine regulations went in effect July 1, the government warned the public to watch out for "butterleggers." Paul B. Dunbar, federal Food and Drug Administrator, said unscrupulous concerns could pass off the oleo now in storage as butter.

Every public eating place is required to notify its patrons by placards and on the individual servings, if it is putting out colored oleo as a spread.

Auto Union Wins Pensions For 20,000 At Kaiser-Frazer, Allis-Chalmers

TWO LOCALS of the CIO Auto Workers have signed five-year contracts, each covering 10,000 workers, providing for minimum $100 monthly pensions at the age of 65, but with retirement not compulsory.

At the Kaiser-Frazer plan in Detroit, members wishing to continue work after 65 may do so if found physically capable by doctors named by the pension fund trustees. Disability pensions after 15 years will be a minimum of $30 monthly plus $1 for each year over 15 years. The retirement pension may rise to $125 monthly, depending on length of service and the increase in social security.

UAW-CIO Local 248 and the Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., of West Allis, Wis., agreed upon fully funded pensions of at least $100 upon retirement at age 65 and in some cases as early as age 60, with retirement at 65 also depending upon the worker's physical condition.

In addition, the company and the union, which a few years ago staged one of the bitterest strikes in recent labor history while the local was dominated by leftists, agreed upon a modified union shop with an NLRB election to be held within the plant. Present non-members need not join the union, but the company president sent them a letter saying they "should all belong to the union and participate in the work of the union." New employes will be required to join within 90 days.

The pact provided an immediate wage increase of 3c an hour, with another 3c next year and an escalator clause yielding 1c an hour for every rise of 1.25 points shown the Bureau of Labor Statistics' index. Several groups received additional boosts. After next year the contract may be reopened on wages and arbitration questions.

Harold Christoffel, a former president of the local, was convicted of perjury charges growing out of his declaration before a congressional committee that he was not a Communist.

Townsend Is Ill; Trip Cancelled

On the eve of his departure to attend a meeting of the ECA Labor Advisers in Paris Pres. Willard S. Townsend, of the CIO Transport Service Employees, was stricken June 28 with a violent gastric disorder and admitted to Chicago's Provident Hospital.

Townsend had been invited to serve as consultant to the ECA Labor Advisers at the Paris meeting by Paul Hoffman, ECA Administrator. While abroad he was also scheduled to attend one of the meetings of the newly organized International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Dr. Leonidas Berry stated that Townsend will be confined to the hospital for an extended period.

Subpoenas May Be Issued For Publishers

A second invitation to newspaper publishers, large and small, to testify before the House subcommittee investigating possible monopoly in the newsprint industry was extended last week by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), chairman of the group.

"If I get no better response than I did the first time," he said, "it may be necessary to subpoena a number of the publishers."

The publishers were asked to appear this week or next. Celler said he is anxious to get their views on the manner in which newsprint is sold. The investigation, which is being made by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, was touched off by charges of monopoly made by the CIO Newspaper Guild.

The Communications Workers of America-CIO convention has ended and those attending overwhelmingly approved the recommendations to establish a two-level structure. This recommendation will now go to the members to vote as they feel about the proposed change. This change is the one way for CWA to build a really strong structure and meet the problems of the men and women of this vital industry.

The strike of the Newspaper Guild-CIO against the World Telegram and Sun continues in New York. All of us are called upon to render every support to this strike action of the Guild.

The Commies who were repudiated at the United Furniture Workers Convention, just recently concluded, are now actually encouraging independentism. Just as has always been known, their loyalty begins and ends with the Cominform, and not trade unionism. Members of the Furniture Workers decided the communist issues involved; they got sick and tired of the methods employed by Communists who talked out of both sides of their faces.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a representation election at the General Elevator Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted 30 IUE, 10 no union.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE election victories: Super Radiator Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 11, UE withdrew, no union 0; Mercury Mfg. Co., Chicago, IUE 83, UE withdrew, no union 6; Ideal Electric Co., Mansfield, O., IUE 111, UE withdrew, no union 12; Minneapolis Artificial Limb Co., Minneapolis, IUE 45, UE withdrew, no union 1; GE Draftsmen, Bridgeport, Conn. (run-off), IUE 38, IFTEAD 19; J. J. Tourek Mfg. Co., Chicago, IUE 154, UE 5, no union 44; Automotive Devices, Springfield, Mass., IUE 22, no union 1.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. Ralph Tillotson reports that a representation election at the Marathon Electric Co., Erie, Pa., resulted as follows: UAW-CIO 116, independent union 73, no union 2.

Tom Andert, president of the United Optical Workers-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the American Optical Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., the workers voted 4 to 1 in favor of the UOW-CIO.

A. T. Stephens, vice-president of the United Packinghouse Workers, reports that the UPWA-CIO was victorious in a representation election at the Swift & Co. plant food division, Harvey, La., by UPWA 52, FTA 11, neither 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports that in a union shop election among employes of the Berwick, Pa., the workers voted 21 for CIO to 8 against.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the United Brewery Workers were victorious in a representation election for employes of the Miller Malt Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 14 UBW-CIO, 7 AFL. Intl. Rep. Robert Person and Milton Stoll, secretary of the local, handled the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at the Beatrice Creamery Co., New Castle, Ind., the United Brewery Workers won by the following vote: UBW-CIO 25, no union 1, challenged 1. Intl. Rep. John Dippel was in charge of this drive.

CIO Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports that in a representation election at the Pollack Engineering & Mfg. Corp., Newark, N. J., the workers gave the United Steelworkers-CIO 151 votes, no union 15.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following representation elections in Illinois. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Chicago, United Rubber Workers-CIO 21, against 12, challenged 1; Kitchen Art Foods, Inc., Chicago, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union-CIO 51, against 6. The following union security elections are also reported: Reynolds Metals Co., McCook, eligible 1076, USA-CIO 617, against 26; Illinois Upholsterers' Supply Co., Chicago, eligible 37, Textile Workers Union of America-CIO 30, against 1; Crown Stove Workers, Cicero, eligible 110, UAW-CIO Local 453 88, against 9, challenged 1.

CIO Reg. Director John Maurillo reports that the Barbers & Beauty Culturists Union-CIO Local 12 won by a unanimous vote in a representation ballot at the Rothchild Barber Shop, Syracuse, N. Y.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Adel Brick & Tile Co., Adel, Ia., by FGC&SS-CIO 35, no union 7, challenged 1. Intl. Rep. Gene Minshall and Dir. Neil Brower were in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that the CIO won a certification election among the workers at the Modine Mfg. Co., Paducah, Ky., who have been chartered as a CIO local industrial union.

Reuther Says 'Take Price Tag Off Peace'

IF THE United States would spend $13 billion a year for the next century in an attack on poverty and insecurity throughout the world, it would win the cold war and take the price tag off peace, Pres. Walter P. Reuther, of the CIO Auto Workers, said last week in Detroit.

The total, he pointed out, would be $1.3 trillion, the same amount this country spent in 44 months to win World War II.

His proposal "to help the backward people in the world help themselves" is in line with President Truman's Point Four program of aid to underdeveloped nations, which the CIO has approved—although the President envisioned spending far less.

"AND WE should propose to Russia and her satellites," added Reuther, "that they could participate in this program if they were willing to participate in total, universal disarmament, controlled by the United Nations.

"Democracy is being challenged on the 38th parallel in Korea. We can't have a Far Eastern Munich. We regret the use of military power, but we didn't make the decision—the Commies did."

Reuther said he is convinced that 90% of all Americans would be glad to spend the money if it would end poverty and insecurity throughout the world.

Ouster Of N. J. PUC Is Urged

THE NEW Jersey CIO Council has called on Gov. Alfred Driscoll to fire the present Public Utility Commission members "because of their unique philosophy that a public utility is always right."

The request was sent by Carl Holderman, state CIO head, and followed a ruling by the State Supreme Court knocking out a fare increase granted by the PUC two years ago to the Public Service Corp. as unjust and unreasonable.

The present PUC should be fired, Holderman declared, because although the court ordered a return to a 5c fare, it sent the whole matter back to the PUC for a new hearing. Holderman said the present PUC "has forfeited public confidence in any future decisions it might be called upon to make in a re-hearing of this or other rate cases."

WHEN THE PUC granted the 2c increase, the state CIO protested to Driscoll, and he authorized the state attorney general to take the matter to court. In doing so, Driscoll himself criticized the PUC.

The Supreme Court, in its unanimous decision, censured the PUC because it "failed to recognize that it was under a duty to go behind the figures shown by the company's books and get at realities."

The Newark Evening News, commenting on the court decision, said the ruling "will shake public confidence in the competence and usefulness" of the present PUC. "The net effect of its errors, as adjudged by the court, was to take millions of dollars out of the pockets of riders and give them to Public Service, without proved justification." (LPA)

Congress Has Much To Do In Proposed Final Month

THE 81ST Congress is moving into what may be the final month of its session—with lots to do and lots not done.

Leaders of both parties seem hopeful that Congress can leave Washington by Aug. 1—just three weeks off.

Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), majority leader, said last week that he hoped the Senate would polish off four big projects and then head for home. Sen. Taft (R. O.) said the GOP group saw no objections to such an early adjournment.

On the other hand, the Korean situation is so touch-and-go that the best-laid plans of senators and representatives may be knocked apart. But members of the House and over one-third of the Senate have a lot of campaigning to do, and they're anxious to be back home for the business of trying to win re-election.

Lucas listed these four "must" proposals: (1) Passing of some $28 billion in U. S. appropriations, to keep the government in business for another year; (2) Approval of a House-passed bill to reduce excise taxes and make up some of the difference through new corporation profits taxes; (3) Liberalization of social security; and (4) Another effort to limit debate and pass the FEPC bill.

FEPC: The test on FEPC is scheduled to come up Wednesday, July 12—for its second test of the session.

FEPC supporters will offer a petition to limit debate on a motion to bring up the measure—which under GOP-indorsed Senate rules requires 64 votes to accomplish.

The Dixiegop coalition was able, once before, to stall off action on FEPC by withholding the necessary votes.

If the coalition wins again, the Administration will have suffered a 100% failure in its drive to put across the President's popular civil rights program.

There's a bare possibility—but not much more than that—that the District of Columbia Home Rule bill, which passed the Senate last year, may come up in the House.

A petition drive to get the home rule bill out of committee is about 25 short of the necessary 218 Representatives' signatures—and new names are being added to the list at a very slow rate.

SOCIAL SECURITY: HR 6000 is now in a Senate-House conference to iron out differences in the two versions of the bill which have been passed. CIO is seeking to secure acceptance of the best sections of the two measures.

Union groups are also centering fire on the vicious Knowland (R. Cal.) amendment, which would seriously endanger the unemployment compensation system.

The CIO pointed out last month that the Knowland amendment would make it impossible to cut off federal funds from states which violate the national standards for jobless benefit systems. The CIO added:

"It is a brazen proposal to use the threat of withholding earned unemployment insurance benefit payments, to coerce unemployed workers into taking jobs vacant because of a labor dispute."

The Knowland amendment was sponsored by business groups in California, and the CIO said its passage would provide them with a "strikebreaking device." The amendment was adopted in the Senate without hearings, after only 10 minutes of debate.

MUNDT-NIXON BILL: With adjournment in sight, Sen. Mundt (R. S. D.) frayed Senatorial tempers with a move to slip through the Senate his Mundt-Nixon bill—roundly criticized by the CIO and liberal groups.

The bill, ostensibly aimed at the Communist Party, would seriously affect liberal and labor groups, and the Dept. of Justice has advised against its passage.

One section—calling for conviction of persons helping totalitarian objectives—would provide an easy weapon for cracking down all forms of civil liberties.

Mundt tried to bring the bill to the floor on the evening of June 30, when only four Senators were present.

Lucas, furious at the attempt, charged that such a move "isn't cricket." He said "I am not going to be stampeded, and I am not going to permit any politics to be played with this bill."

APPROPRIATIONS: CIO legislative representatives are concerned lest a Dixiegop "economy rider," which would force an average 10-15% cut in the funds of government agencies, work serious hardships on unions trying to use the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

The "economy" motion was sponsored by Reps. Taber (R. N. Y.) and Thomas (D. Tex.). It would cut NLRB funds by an estimated 11%—which union observers feel would cause still further delays in Labor Board handling of elections and unfair labor charge complaints.

POINT FOUR PROGRAM: Supporters of the Administration's foreign policy voiced alarm at an "authoritative" report that the Senate Appropriations Committee had voted a 75% slash in funds for Point Four—the government's program to give technical and economic assistance to backward or under-developed areas of the world.

The Senate group was reported to have cut the appropriation from $45 million asked by the President down to $10 million. This is woefully short of the sum required for the program—particularly since the U. S. has already pledged $11 million to the United Nations for similar work.

The Senate group's action—if it remains unchanged—is certain to be used by Communist propagandists as "proof" that Uncle Sam really isn't interested in the fate of colonial peoples. Such propaganda might do serious harm to democratic forces throughout the world.

BANKERS' BONUS: A bill which would have given the nation's bankers a whopping bonus—for no particular reason—was held up in the House Banking Committee by Reps. Patman (D. Tex.) and Multer (D. N.Y.).

The committee is set to study the bill again next week, with Fair Deal members hoping they can kill it. The measure passed the Senate almost unnoticed.

Under its provisions, bankers buying deposit insurance through the U. S. Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. would get a 55% cut in the rate of their premiums.

It's estimated they'd save about $68 million a year on the deal—with the U. S. Treasury having to take over the liability in case of bank failures.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS: There's a lot of business which Congress won't finish—a large part of it because of obstructive tactics by the Dixiegop coalition.

The civil rights program is one major casualty. Middle-income housing is another. The health insurance program never got to first base, nor did the Brannan Plan for new methods of farm income support. And Rep. Celler's House-passed bill to prevent corporation monopoly through the buying of other firms' assets never reached the action stage in the Senate.

So the 82nd Congress will have plenty to do when it meets next year.

Move NOW To Extend Rent Controls, CIO Told

Leo Goodman, director of the CIO Housing Committee, last week appealed to all CIO councils and unions to get busy immediately, in cooperation with other local groups, to insure the extension of rent control after Dec. 31.

Reminding all CIO affiliates that existing controls will expire then, unless the community governing body takes action before that date to have controls extended, Goodman asked that immediate efforts be made to start movements to encourage city councils to act in time.

Furthermore, Goodman said, all CIO affiliates should immediately check on the make-up of local rent advisory boards, which have new power under the law.

"The new rent control extension," he said, "places added responsibility on the local rent advisory boards. Councils and locals should therefore check their local boards to see that the balance of representation required by law is still in effect, with adequate tenant and labor representation."

The rent advistory boards, on whose motion the Office of Housing Expediter is virtually forced to decontrol a community, are appointed by OHE, but they are nominated by the state governor, Goodman pointed out. Under the new law the nomination of these boards is the governor's sole remaining power over what happens to rent control in the communities, since governors can no longer veto "local option" decontrol actions passed by city councils.

The rent board, furthermore, often carries more weight with the city council than any other citizens' group, since the board alone has easy access to pertinent information. The board, for instance, can ask OHE to make a rent survey or a compliance survey, and OHE will do so.

"Where unbalanced situations are found, they should be reported immediately to the governor," Goodman said, "and names of suggested replacements should be proposed to him. Remember, under the new law, once the advisory board has voted decontrol, nothing can undo its action."

Social Security Weakened By AMA

The Committee for the Nation's Health last week accused the American Medical Association of being "responsible, more that any other organization, for knocking disability insurance out of the Senate (social security) bill."

The bill included disability insurance when it passed the House last year, but this feature was knocked out by the Senate. The measure now is in House-Senate conference.

"The AMA has aligned itself with the insurance companies, which are against disability insurance because of direct self-interest," the committee said. "The AMA wants the help of these insurance companies in fighting national health insurance, and took the front of opposition for them against disability insurance.

"AMA officials declared that disability insurance should be turned down because it is a step toward national health insurance or 'socialized medicine.'

"However, Sen. Walter F. George, conservative southern Democrat, says there is nothing to this charge."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Keep writing to Senators and Representatives to force action.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 10 million.	Passed both Houses; now in conference.	Wire Senators and Representatives to support liberalizing features, oppose Knowland amendment.
FEPC S 1728 HR 4453	Senate bill would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	House voted substitute bill without enforcement teeth. Second Senate attempt at cloture due July 12.	Wire Senators to vote for S 1728 without weakening amendments.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.
Railway Labor Security Bill S. 3295 HR 7789	Amends Rail Labor Act to permit union security pacts, check-off.	Referred to Senate Labor, House Interstate Committees. CIO supported, providing no racial bias permitted.	Ask Senators Congressmen to approve in line with CIO recommendations.
Railway Compulsory Arbitration Bill S. 3463	Sponsored by Sen. Donnell, would outlaw rail strikes, force compulsory arbitration.	Senate Labor sub-committee has held hearings.	Ask Senators to defeat.

Akron Unions Act To Save Rent Control

The unions in Akron, O., are taking swift action to save rent control in their city.

The Akron city council last week voted decontrol of the big industrial center. It was the second time the council had done so, but last year, Gov. Lausche vetoed the action. Under the new law, however, governors have no veto power—so the council figured it could have things its own way.

The council reckoned without a provision in Ohio law, however. The law states that the action of any city council can be undone by referendum and that a referendum must be held if a sufficient number of signatures is obtained.

The unions got together immediately and started circulating a petition and they hope to get enough signatures very soon. Then they'll put on a drive to carry the referendum and undo the city council's nefarious work.

If this is successful, they will immediately start another petition, this time for keeping rent control beyond the Dec. 31 automatic expiration date.

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 17, 1950 82 No. 29

THE METHOD by which American taxpayers help foot the bill for anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal propaganda of the Committee for Constitutional Government is illustrated above. The photograph, taken for the Buchanan House Lobby Investigating Committee at the CCG headquarters in New York, shows mail bags filled with CCG "literature" which is being shipped out free under the postal franks of friendly members of Congress. The envelopes and pamphlets shown give a good idea of the type of material which CCG has distributed in franked envelopes. (See story on Page 10, editorial on Page 4.)

Texaco Strikers Face Entire Oil Industry

By RAY DAVIDSON

ON JULY 14 the bitter strike of CIO Oil Workers against The Texas Co. entered its second hundred days.

More than 7500 members of OWIU are involved in this dispute—a sizeable number of men for a relatively small union. Percentagewise, it is as great to OWIU as the Chrysler strike was to CIO Auto Workers.

The billion-dollar Texas Co., fourth largest company in an industry noted for its king-size operations, "continues to display stubborn resistance to the strikers and contempt for the idea of collective bargaining," according to OWIU.

"It is not, however, the giant Texas Co. which has the strikers worried. The strikers know how to shut down that company's plants and keep them down.

"THE THING that makes striking hard is that the strikers must fight not only the one company, but the entire oil industry.

"Many major companies have rushed to the defense of Texaco. Texaco service station pumps have continued to pour gasoline into automobiles, although a large part of Texaco's refining capacity has been out of operation for over 100 days. What the customers are getting is gasoline supplied to Texaco by other companies.

"Texaco has had a bit more difficulty in filling the customers' requests for lubricating oil canned in trade-marked Texaco cans. But the company has solved that problem to some extent by having the trade-marked cans shipped directly from can factories to refineries of other companies, where they are filled with oil and routed into Texaco's marketing system.

"Despite these obstacles, the Texaco strikers know that if they hold out long enough, the company will be forced to terms. After a number of months of idleness, refinery equipment deteriorates seriously, at great expense to the struck company. And this is one place in which aid cannot be extended by other companies."

ISSUES IN dispute hinge largely on questions of security for the workers. The union wants job descriptions written into the contracts to prevent speed-up. It wants provisions to restrict supervisory workers from doing work of men in the bargaining units.

It seeks a provision against the handling of certain plant maintenance jobs by outside contractors—"a gimmick which the oil companies often use to tear down unions." It wants more rigid safety rules for the highly hazardous refinery work. And, the union is still trying to get the company to bargain on pensions—something Texaco has refused to do thus far.

The union has filed refusal to bargain charges with NLRB on the pension issue.

IUE Given Bargaining Rights In 10 Major Plants By NLRB

CERTIFICATION of the CIO International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers as bargaining agent for workers in nine major General Electric plants and one large Westinghouse plant was approved last week by the National Labor Relations Board.

The old United Electrical Workers had protested the results of the elections in nine major locals of the GE chain on the ground that Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin's speech at an IUE-CIO rally in Lynn, Mass., constituted government interference. The locals which UE claimed were affected by the speech extended as far as Fort Wayne, Ind., and included Syracuse, N. Y., Bridgeport, Conn., Philadelphia and Erie, Pa., and Pittsfield, Holyoke, Fitchburg and Lynn, Mass.

On other grounds UE had also protested the election in a Westinghouse local in Sharon, Pa., and a small GE unit in Cleveland.

Meanwhile IUE-CIO had objected to company interference on behalf of UE during the election campaigns in the production units at GE's Schenectady and Erie works.

THE BOARD was able to go ahead on the certifications last week after UE announced that it was withdrawing all protests in the General Electric and Westinghouse chain. A month earlier, on June 17, IUE-CIO had informed the board that since the delayed certifications were causing harm to the workers, IUE would be willing to drop all protests if UE would do likewise.

Approximately 75,000 workers will be affected by the certifications.

Meanwhile IUE-CIO negotiations with the General Electric Co. continued as GE announced that it was putting into effect a 3% general wage increase which will amount to not less than 4c an hour.

IUE-CIO Chairman James B. Carey announced that "we are quite willing to apply immediately GE's offer of a 3% increase for the past year and to negotiate a substantial wage increase in keeping with the corporation's phenomenal profits, the additional increase to be effective upon agreement."

"WE THINK that the company's offer of a general wage increase, the first since 1948, is somewhat overdue in the light of GE's profit picture of the last few years," he added.

"For GE to come up with a meager 3% wage increase in a two year period is somewhat miserly, to say the least. However, we are willing to apply this offer immediately and negotiate an additional wage increase, more in line with GE's dignity and position among the members of the billion dollar club.

"This should make clear our position that any 3% increase is simply a down payment. Consequently this in no way precludes our negotiating a substantial increase in line with what the wage standards of GE workers should be and with what GE can afford to pay."

CCL Hits Canadian Government, Employers For 'Playing' With CP

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labour sharply rapped the Canadian government and employers in that country for helping Communist-controlled unions defeat the will of the majority of workers in many war-crucial plants.

The attack was made by the CCL executive committee at a recent meeting in Ottawa which charged that the Korean crisis "provides ample proof that the appeal of the Communists for peace is a complete perversion of the truth and fully demonstrates that Communism is bent on taking over world control by any means." CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

"The CCL has done everything possible to liberate Communist-controlled unions," said the executive committee statement.

"IT IS noteworthy that in every vote where Communists have been put to the test, they have been rejected by Canadian workers.

"Unfortunately, however, the efforts of the Congress have been severely handicapped by faulty labor legislation, unwisely administered, which makes it unreasonably difficult to get a free election in many plants.

"Thus, for example, in Trail, B. C., a Congress affiliate, the United Steelworkers, representing a majority, has so far been denied a vote in the plant of Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co.

"In this key undertaking, known to be producing strategic atomic fission materials, the Communist-controlled Mine, Mill Union expelled by CIO retains its minority control through a substandard contract recently entered into by the company. By this irresponsible act the company shows an indifference to the national security which is incomprehensible, unless the lure of a bargain-basement agreement motivates the company policy at the very time when the Far East is aflame with war.

"Based on experience it would appear that in practice Canadian trade unions are the only legitimate Canadian agencies that are really fighting communism. In many instances where employers feel that they can get a better deal from Communist unions they will compromise with those unions to keep out unions opposed to communism.

"IT IS also observed that governments are disposed to play around with Communists where it is considered to be smart politics. It is likewise noticeable that sub-agencies of governments, such as labour relations boards, are bending backward to justify continuance of Communist controlled unions in some industries because it is contemporarily the smart political thing to do.

"The Congress believes that the time has arrived when the Canadian government and people should realize that Canadian workers are being denied the opportunity to liberate themselves from communism in vital undertakings such as Trail because of expediency on the part of some governments and the desire of some employers to reap higher profits which can be secured by compromises with Communist controlled unions."

Fuss Over Sumner Pike Due To Uranium Price

SUMNER T. PIKE, board member and until recently acting chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, has passed his political purity test after all.

The Senate members of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy earlier refused to recommend Pike, who is a Republican from Maine, for re-appointment to the job he has held for three years, but on July 11 the Senate confirmed him 55-24, with only the die-hards opposing him.

Sen. Hickenlooper (R. Ia.), who is up for re-election this year, led the fight against Pike, charging that he "just didn't measure up to the requirement of the job." Hickenlooper is still smarting at the Senate's refusal to take seriously his charge that former AEC chairman David E. Lilienthal was guilty of "incredible mismanagement" of AEC after weeks of hearings brough forth no evidence to back it up.

HIS CHARGES against Pike were even more vague. The most serious was that Pike had aligned himself with "loose security practices" when he was just a plain AEC Commissioner. The "loose" practice involved hiring a clerical staff on a temporary basis in order to get some work done, when AEC was first set up, instead of waiting for FBI clearance of several thousand filing clerks, etc.

Chairman McMahon (D. Conn.) of the joint committee said he had listened to two hours of talk before the committee without being able to find out what the Republicans on the committee was objecting to about their fellow GOP-ster.

The deciding vote against Pike on the committee was cast, however, not by a Republican, but by Sen. Johnson (D. Colo.), backing up his fellow Coloradan, Sen. Millikin (R.).

And out of all the hoorah finally emerged the real reason for all the fuss about Pike. Johnson and Millikin finally admitted on the Senate floor that they opposed Pike because Pike would not press for a raise in the price the government pays for low-grade uranium, of which there is plenty in Colorado.

But Sens. Taft (R. O.), Hickenlooper, Wherry (R. Neb.), et al were still against him.

Soviet Germany Week 48 Hours; Time And Quarter For Overtime

Any worker who wants a 48-hour week with time and a quarter for overtime, and with politicians setting his workloads and piece rates, can have them—by going to the Communist-controlled zone of Germany.

Maybe he wont even get the time and a quarter for the seventh day. The new Soviet Zone Labor Law, which went into effect in East Germany on May 1, does not make it mandatory, but says that it is "usually paid."

It is a strange sort of labor law which contains no guarantee of the workers' right to bargain collectively, even though it says that the mutual obligations of the workers and the managements of "people-owned plants . . . will be set down each year in the plant agreement." The agreement doesn't make too much difference, because the government is authorized to lay down orders that would make it even more onerous.

Likewise, the law contains no guarantee of the right to strike—in fact, that naughty (in the Soviet world) word isn't even mentioned.

The law gives the government the right to shift a worker from one industry to another—a means of keeping up production in the mines. It also lets the government put the worker's wife in his job and give their children to the tender mercies of a Communist-operated nursery school for indoctrination.

It abounds in clauses that have no meaning except one: everybody's going to work, or else—on the government's terms.

Workers in Germany struggled for their rights for 60 years. Now, in East Germany, they can't even struggle.

Labor Wants "Full And Adequate Voice" In U. S. Emergency Plans

ORGANIZED LABOR will start some top-level, high priority conferences in the next few days with the government's important National Security Resources Board.

The NSRB—a branch of the Executive Office of the President—is concerned with a wide variety of home-front jobs in connection with mobilization of the nation's industrial and human resources in case of war or emergency.

It is headed by W. Stuart Symington, former secretary of air and one-time president of the Emerson Electric Co. in St. Louis. Symington was named to direct the NSRB a few weeks ago, after the agency's top post had been left vacant for a period of many months.

Presenting labor's views on a number of subjects involving industrial relations, mobilization and union representation in the key government agency, will be a nine-man committee representing practically all the unions in the country.

CIO SPOKESMAN on the committee are Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers; Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers; and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, recuperating from a recent eye operation, will be in close touch with the group and may join it in possible later meetings

The AFL will be represented by Pres. William Green, Secy.-Treas. George Meany, and George Harrison, head of the railroad clerks.

Pres. Al Hayes of the Machinists, Pres. John Lewis of the Mine Workers and George Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives Association round out the nine-man group.

Formation of the committee resulted from a "get-acquainted" luncheon attended by Symington, Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin and spokesmen of the various union organizations. The CIO was represented by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and all the other vice-presidents, with the exception of Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, who was unable to attend.

Symington told reporters that it had been a "good, constructive meeting" and that he was impressed by the "friendly sympathetic viewpoint" of the union spokesmen.

LABOR AND WAR PROBLEMS: Questions about mobilization of nation's industry and human resources—in Korean police action and in case of war—were discussed by top government officials and labor spokesmen at Washington confab. Among those at session: George Harrison, AFL railway clerks; AFL Pres. Green; Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin; W. Stuart Symington, head of National Security Resources Board; John Owens, United Mine Workers; Walter Reuther, CIO Auto Workers; G. E. Leighty, railway brotherhoods.

THE UNION statement issued after the meeting emphasized the need for voluntary cooperation with labor and for "adequate representation for organized labor in the policy, planning and operational divisions of the government agencies involved."

"We reviewed a number of the successful steps taken during World War II for the mobilization of the nation's resources, and expressed satisfaction over the manner in which these voluntary measures were employed at that time.

"It was felt that the achievement of close cooperation among all major groups in the country's economy, which is now available for the prosecution of the campaign against aggression, is preferable to compulsory steps toward mobilization of resources; and that significant values in terms of individual cooperation, morale and working efficiency can be attained through such voluntary action," the unions said.

EMIL RIEVE

Two of CIO's spokesmen on emergency planning.

Noting the need for a "full and adequate voice for labor" in the government agencies, the unions said "the creation of mere advisory bodies in such agencies will not meet the nation's needs, and in the past this type of advisory structure has proved ineffective."

CIO And AFL Unity Confab Opens July 25

CIO AND AFL sit down together at the conference table next week, for the first formal unity talks since May 1947.

A joint annoucement by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green said the discussions will be held at the Hotel Statler in Washington, starting July 25.

The CIO unity negotiating committee wil consist of Murray, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, and Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The AFL group will consist of Green, Pres. Charles MacGowen of the Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Pres. Dan Tobin of the Brotherhood of Teamsters, and Pres. Dan Tracey of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

THE MEETING grew out of a labor unity letter addressed by Murray last April to the AFL, the railroad brotherhoods, the miners and the machinists.

At that time, Murray called for quick creation of a standing joint labor committee representing all major branches of labor. He suggested the committee should have a "double mandate. Immediately, it should be empowered to coordinate our efforts in the economic, legislative and political spheres. It should also seek to achieve organic unity of all the American labor movement."

The AFL subsequently suggested conversations to explore the matter in greater detail. Leaders of the miners, the machinists and the railroad trainmen have accepted the proposal.

Radio Station Honored

Station WDET, the FM station of the CIO United Auto Workers, has received a plaque for postwar station showmanship from Variety, trade magazine for radio, stage and showbusiness. WDET is the only FM station in the nation to receive this top industry honor. Variety cited WDET for its integration in the community life of Detroit, and rated the station as "one of radio's most unique postwar innovations."

Labor-Management Meeting For Electrical Industry Urged

A CONFERENCE of labor and management in the U. S. electrical, radio and machine manufacturing industries should be called by the National Security Resources Board, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey wrote last week to W. Stuart Symington, NSRB chief.

Acting as administrative chairman of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, CIO, Carey wrote:

"We are proposing a procedure that will obviate labor-management misunderstandings in our industry in time of emergency, unify our common production effort, and facilitate our transition to a war economy with a minimum of economic shock and a maximum of democratic participation."

Carey said that labor is able and anxious to offer suggestions for spurring production for the nation's security.

"BUT TO MAKE its full contribution, in our industry for example, labor must be taken into full partnership in the planning," Carey added.

The IUE-CIO chairman also charged that certain employers in the electrical industry have not been "impartial" in the struggle between the IUE-CIO and the United Electrical Workers, which was expelled from CIO as Communist-dominated.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

Senate Approval Of Judge Hastie Urged By Murray

Prompt and favorable action in the Senate on the months-old appointment of William H. Hastie to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals was called for last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

In wires to members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Murray noted that Hastie's appointment had been sent to the Senate for confirmation on Jan. 5.

"In view of Mr. Hastie's integrity and proven ability, the failure of the committee to render a prompt, favorable report can only be attributed to the fact that he is a Negro," Murray told the committee.

He said the CIO is "strongly of the opinion" that Hastie's confirmation should be recommended at once by the Judiciary Committee.

Denham Loses To Labor Board In Circuit Court T-H Decision

Non-Communist affidavits, required by the Taft-Hartley Act for unions wishing to use the services of the National Labor Relations Board, have come up for another decision in the U. S. circuit courts.

The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled last week that unions can be in compliance with T-H, even if the officers of the parent federation—AFL or CIO—haven't signed them.

The 2-1 decision arose in a case involving the AFL electrical workers and the West Texas Utilities Co., of Abilene, Tex. The court overruled the arguments of NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham, and sustained the position of the NLRB itself.

The Washington decision is also in opposition to a ruling several months ago by the highly conservative Fifth Circuit Court in New Orleans.

In the Postex case, involving the CIO Textile Workers, the Fifth Circuit maintained that no CIO union was in compliance with the T-H until CIO national officers all signed oaths.

Effect of that decision would be to throw out hundreds of cases involving CIO unions in the period between 1947 and 1949, when CIO officers signed the affidavits. Many of these cases are of considerable importance.

The U. S. Supreme Court will probably get the affidavit problem at its fall session, and will have to decide whether to uphold the Denham argument.

Words Alone Won't Do The Job

U.S. Propaganda, No Matter How Truthful and Widespread, Won't Win Loyalty of Hungry Oriental Peoples

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU'VE HAD your pound of rice for the day and now you have a rare treat in store for you.

You're going to see a movie—one of those films which is called a documentary. You know it's a propaganda film, but so what? You've never seen one before.

So, with a bit of eagerness and a lot of curiosity, you show up where the film is being shown.

It's an impressive thing. You see the fine houses in which Americans live. You're told that most U. S. workers can afford electric refrigerators and that many of them have their own automobiles.

You see pictures of massive factories and smooth-running production lines.

You're told that all of these good things result from the wonderful system under which the U. S. operates.

Certainly you're impressed. Frankly, you're amazed.

And as you trudge your weary way home you remember that your total amount of food for the next day will be one pound of rice!

SINCE THE trouble started in Korea three weeks ago a lot of the U. S. lawmakers have decided we should step up our propaganda efforts in the Orient.

They say we've got to let the people over there know about our economy and our democracy if we're going to keep them from falling victims to the Communists.

Some of them have made impressive speeches — speeches so good that you might get the idea that words alone, if used in sufficient volume, will solve our problems in the Far East.

They haven't explained exactly how we're going to get our message to the millions who live in the Orient. They haven't pointed out that only a few of the Asiatics have radios and that few read newspapers.

But at least they've pointed out that the democracies must tell their story convincingly if we're to make gains in the world-wide ideological war.

We in the CIO are in favor of the use of propaganda in combatting the Communists, because we know how effectively the Reds use the propaganda weapon.

But propaganda alone won't do the job. A beautiful picture of a TV set in an American worker's home won't help fill the empty belly of an Oriental.

The repeated telling by the Commies of how we impose segregation on Negroes will be more impressive than all the pictures of all the TV sets ever made.

And we're going to have trouble selling mass production overnight to men and women who aren't sure where their next meal is coming from.

We, to put it bluntly, are going to have to do more than spread propaganda if we're going to win the loyalty and support of the peoples of Asia.

Yes, a lot more.

THE TRUMAN program of aid to underprivileged peoples, if administered properly, could do much to help us win friends and influence people in the Far East.

The Point Four program, as the Truman plan is often called, is extremely important. It's designed to show—not merely tell—people how they can improve their standard of living.

It's designed to provide technical assistance where it's most needed.

Obviously Point Four won't eliminate famine and pestilence overnight. Bountifulness can't be made to replace poverty in short order, no matter what we in the U. S. do.

BUT THERE are things we can do—and must do—if we're going to play an effective role in battling Communism throughout the world.

One of these is to make our own democracy work better and to do away with discrimination against minority groups.

Another is to help other nations fill the empty bellies of their people.

If we combine action with words we can win in the long run. But the words alone have an empty sound when you're living on a pound of rice a day.

FRANK ABUSE

Imagine the editorial screaming that would take place in some of the daily newspapers if the CIO used the postal franks of a couple of friendly members of Congress to mail a few million "educational leaflets" to people throughout the country.

Yes, just imagine—then read on.

There's a fellow named Edward A. Rumely who gyrates like a whirling dervish along the pro-fascist fringe. He's the executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government.

He's a slick operator who does a lot of preaching about economy—government economy, that is.

And he believes in the economical operation of CCG. Fact of the matter is he's saved CCG a big hunk of money over the past four years by letting you—and all other taxpayers—foot a big portion of CCG's postage bill.

Rumely recently testified before the House Lobby Investigating Committee headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) that during the past four years his outfit had sent out eight to 10 million pieces of mail under the franks of Republican and Dixiecrat members of Congress.

The CCG mail was designed to defeat the program of the Democratic Administration.

CCG, which yells about the trend toward "socialism," made full use of our "socialistic" postal system—and at no cost to CCG—to get its propaganda distributed.

(The postal system must be "socialistic" because it is owned and operated by all the people through their government.)

And now for the $64 questions:

Were you impressed by the fiery editorials in the daily press condemning CCG, Rumely and the "franking" members of Congress? Or were you impressed by the lack of such editorials?

WORTHWHILE INFORMATION

We'd be the last people in the world to question the right of CCG and similar outfits to engage in the "art" loosely referred to as "propagandizing." We do a lot of it ourselves—and we make no bones about it.

The money we spend on it comes out of the dues paid by union members. There's no secret about it.

But Rumely says the public isn't entitled to know where CCG gets its heavy sugar—that which comes in through "sale" of "literature" which CCG distributes.

Of course Rep. Buchanan—and everybody else who has studied CCG—knows that much of the money comes from big corporations and others who fight the New Deal, Fair Deal and organized labor.

But Rep. Buchanan wants Rumely to name names and amounts—and rightly so.

The public is entitled to this information. It's entitled to know who's financing CCG and similar outfits.

Rep. Buchanan and his colleagues deserve a lot of credit for probing into the lobbying organizations. The labor movement is indebted to them for their focusing of public attention on the practices of such outfits as CCG.

A final note:

The Buchanan committee didn't pass us by. It asked for information and we supplied it—gladly.

All of which leads to the conclusion that Rumely has something to hide or he wouldn't try so hard to hide it!

Active Union Members Better Citizens

For every union member who has sat through a listless meeting of his local, Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs of the CIO Rubber Workers has a real message in the current issue of the United Rubber Worker.

WE'VE ALL heard the adage to the effect that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A parallel might be drawn here between the chain and our union.

We all recognize that the lifeblood of our union, or any union, for that matter, is the local. Therefore, it follows that in order to have a strong union, we must have strong locals. Weak locals make for a weak organization on a national or international scale.

In order to organize and maintain a local union that has alert leaders and active members, we must all put forth maximum effort at all times to make the union movement something personal—something exciting—something vital.

This is at times extremely difficult to accomplish. Thomas Jefferson once said that it is oftentimes difficult to make a person do what is for his own good. This is true in any "movement," or "cause," such as unions.

OUR FIRST problem in a dynamic local union, then, is to have available a sufficient number of maintaining leaders. Without real leaders, any group, regardless of interest, will wallow and flounder—for we all need guidance and help from others, regardless of our knowledge and zeal.

Many times real leaders of ability are not available and therefore must be developed. To that end, the CIO has and is sponsoring a number of schools for the training and education of persons vitally interested in the union movement. From these schools have come a great number of those who are today regarded as guiding lights in our unions.

WITH MEN of high caliber leading our locals, our first big problem is solved. For to keep an interested membership, local union officials must be a mixture of diplomat, statesman and master of ceremonies.

Take the membership meeting for example. The officers must be able to move the meeting at a fast pace—fast enough to keep the members in attendance from dropping off to sleep—yet slow enough to give every person an opportunity to receive some benefit from the proceedings.

The officers, also, must be able to develop interest and active participation on the part of the members by new programs that will interest everyone plus sufficient activity to make the members see that their local union is alert and active.

There are many functions of a local union—many duties and responsibilities. Some of these which are most important are close cooperation with the International Union, political action, participation in state and local industrial union councils of the CIO, training in parliamentary law, economics, history and labor problems, in addition to the primary work of the local in collective bargaining sessions and grievance procedures.

EVERY local union member should be aware of the latest legislation that will affect him, of the trends in the political arena, on local, state and national levels, of the changing developments in securing better working and welfare contracts by his own as well as other local unions, and of conditions generally in the ever-constant fight to advance the cause of the working man.

THESE LISTED above are but a few of the duties of the local union member. The important thing, however, is that interest must be built in all these things—interest that will keep the members coming to each meeting.

Your international union, through its many and varied services to locals, also attempts to build interest among the members.

But the services of all the organizations in the world mean very little if the officers of the local union fail to keep their members active and alert.

Active participation in local union programs makes a better citizen of the member. For it builds a group spirit—a spirit that can conquer any difficulty. A need exists in the union movement today for more of this spirit—the spirit that gets the vote out—that participates in civic affairs—that aids all worthwhile causes—that spreads intelligence and knowledge throughout the mass of the unorganized and anti-labor individuals.

He Did Not Touch On The 'Real' Trouble

THINGS WERE tough that year for workers in most parts of America, but sections of New England were particularly hard pressed.

There weren't any industrial unions then—back in 1912—and craft unionism wasn't yet making much progress.

The situation was especially bad in North and East Boston, inhabited by a large group of Southern Italians. Their special talent was digging with picks and shovels.

In the first place, there wasn't enough work to go around—and, in the second place, the use of construction machinery was increasing.

IN NEARBY Lynn, Mass., a fellow by the name of Luigi Galleani was attracting considerable attention by advocating anarchy in public speeches and in his weekly newspaper.

Galleani was against capitalism, against the state, against the status quo, against the church. He made flamboyant "blood and thunder" speeches wherever he could get an audience together.

Word of Galleani's "good work" reached the Italian imigrants and he achieved considerable fame and notoriety among them.

He gained considerable support from a "social and cultural" club with headquarters on Maverick Square.

The club, which arranged debates, gave "social" plays, etc., decided in the summer of 1912 to bring Galleani to Boston.

Leaders of the club wanted Galleani to tell the hard-pressed Italian laborers about the "ideal social order" in which there would be no bosses, no priests, no police—and plenty for all.

A MEETING WAS arranged and leaflets advertising it were distributed widely in the Italian sections.

The leaflets announced that the "celebrated Galleani" would speak and that his subject would be "The Cause of Your Misery and How to End It."

About 600 persons showed up for the meeting, jamming the little hall at which it was held.

Luigi Galleani (who was deported to Italy seven years later) was a striking figure, with beard, flowing black tie and resonant voice.

Galleani damned the authorities of Boston, of Massachusetts and the United States. He damned the authorities of Italy, of France, of Great Britain, of all the world.

He condemned the Pope and hurled epithets at all authority—religious, civil and military.

On and on he went—for an hour—and then for an additional 40 minutes.

He pulled out all the stops, but nothing startling happened.

THE AUDIENCE sat in almost sullen silence. The workers had misery and they had come to the meeting in the hope that Galleani could tell them how to eliminate it.

They seemed unimpressed by his oratory, by his wild gestures. They weren't swayed by his bitter condemnation. They just sat and listened.

Finally Galleani ended his speech and asked if there were any questions "or is there anybody here who would like to say something?"

From the back of the hall came the raspy voice of a Sicilian:

"Mr. Professor, you talk and talk and talk. You sweat out seven shirts and you no tell us what the trouble is. But I tell you and everybody here.

"The trouble is the DAMNED STEAM SHOVEL—yes, the DAMNED STEAM SHOVEL!"

At this point the meeting broke up—with the crowd shouting in praise not of Galleani but of the man who understood the problems of those who used the pick and shovel.

Raise The Spotlight A Little Higher

Britain's Biggest, Transport And General Workers

By RAY BOYFIELD

Secretary, Organization Department British Trades Union Congress

MORE THAN a fourth of Britain's trade unionists belong to three unions. The largest is the Transport and General Workers' Union.

TGWU has over 1,250,000 members and is a combination of what were 50 separate organizations. It was formed in 1922 by a merger of 14 unions mainly concerned with dockers, road transport workers and general laborers. Its sponsors, who included Ernest Bevin, the union's first secretary, wanted to promote national wage agreements and knew they must have a large organization to be able to bargain effectively with the national combinations developing on the employers' side.

Their aims, however, were not merely a bigger but also a better union. They were conscious of the difficulties confronting a voluntary association of increased size and believed that a loose federation would be insufficient. They achieved strength and improved services through amalgamation, while still enabling proper attention to the needs of each section of membership.

THE BASE OF the union's organization is its branches. Most branches consist of workers in one industry and may be based, for instance, on a particular bus garage, slate-quarry or chemical factory. In the small towns and villages, however, a branch will include members working in a number of trades—perhaps agriculture, flour-milling and road maintenance.

Above the branch the machinery is twofold, one for administrative, the other for trade purposes. Each of the 15 trade sections of the union (docks, road transport, building and others) has its own separate machinery for trade purposes with elected area and national committees. These bodies are policy-making on wages and working conditions within their industry, subject to the Executive Council. They have no functions in connection with finance and administration. They are decentralized and controlled by 13 area committees which also co-ordinate the work of trade committees in their areas.

Policy for the union as a whole is made by delegate conferences every two years. In between conferences the supreme authority is the Executive Council, composed of members elected from each trade and also from each area.

THE UNION has some 600 full-time officials, none of whom is allowed to serve as a delegate to the conference or to have a vote on any of the committees. Vacancies may be filled only by members working within the trade concerned. Members of Communist or Fascist organizations are ineligible for office.

The main work of the union lies in seeking improvements by negotiation in the wages and working conditions of its members. Many occupations of union members were among the lowest paid in Britain, and the success of union methods within public, private and cooperative employment is shown by the improvements secured in wages and holidays.

The secondary function of trade unions has been the provision of cash benefits to members in times of misfortune. Unions were the first to stress the necessity for state provision of social security payments and they also showed by practical example what could be done.

OWING TO THE union's financial resources (its reserves exceed the equivalent of $18,200,000) and the size of its staff, it can maintain specialist service departments for research, education and legal and political services. The legal staff gives assistance on cases arising from accidents, alleged wrongful dismissal, offenses under the road transport law and so on; they are also responsible for watching industrial diseases and seeking new safety measures.

State Dept. Booklet Tells ITO's Story

The story of the International Trade Organization—what it is intended to do as an affiliate of the United Nations and how it intends to accomplish its aim—is told in a recent pamphlet prepared by the Office of Public Affairs of the Dept. of State.

The publication explains that ITO sets up a code of principles which member countries agree to follow in their conduct of their trade with each other, and provides an international forum for the orderly discussion and solution of trade problems. A charter has been agreed upon, after many international conferences, and has been ratified by Liberia, Australia and Sweden. The United States has not acted.

The pamphlet shows how important foreign trade is to this country, which is totally lacking in 30 of the 50 strategic materials listed by the Munitions Board, how it provides jobs and offers a market for industrial and agricultural exports—and how artificial barriers which interfere can be wiped out by common international action through the ITO.

Workers Must Listen To 'Freedom' Talks Or Lose Pay

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IN EVANSVILLE, Ind., members of Packinghouse Workers Local 125 call it the "BB-PAC."

The "BB" stands for "Big Business."

To the Auto Workers of Local 719 in Brookfield, Ill., it's "Operation Gas Chamber."

Elsewhere it's known as the boss' PAC, the voice from the grave, and a lot of names that would never get through the mails.

BUT TO THE promoters it's the "Freedom Forum," as neat a scheme as ever was conceived for convincing the workers that black is white.

The Freedom Forum is part of the advertising industry's share of the big business and high finance scheme to convince the great majority of the people that everything they want and much of what they have is bad for them, because it encroaches on their "freedom"; that the country is headed hell-bent for socialism or communism or liberalism (the catchword is "socialism"), which are practically synonymous, that the employer is an earthly god from whom all blessings flow, etc.

It pours this balderdash on captive audiences in factories, mills and offices—paying them so they'll attend.

AT THE same time it ladles out honeyed words about freedom, patriotism, free enterprise, capitalism, the American Way of Life (for which it gives industry credit), and the rest of it that sounds just like the propaganda generated by the high-powered machines of the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Committee for Constitutional Government, the Constitutional Educational League, the National Economic Council and all the other posses of far right-wing high-binders riding herd on organized labor, including the Republican party.

It blandly proclaims that it isn't political. Then it tries to tear down such things as social security, public housing, slum clearance, national health insurance, farm subsidies, federal aid to education and the like. They're communistic, it says. And if anyone wants them—well, draw your own conclusions. Besides, they involve subsidies to the worker or the farmer. Subsidies are favored by the Communists, too, it asserts. And anyone who wants subsidies—guess what he is.

(Except, of course, the subsidies that go to big business. They're capitalism.)

Freedom Forums are sponsored by the department of national education of Harding College, Searcy, Ark., of which Dr. George S. Benson is president, and the Joint Committee, made up of representatives of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers. They were dreamed up by Dr. Benson and Ken Wells, director of the joint committee.

It sounds innocent enough. But to take it from there. Wells is executive vice president of another self-styled patriotic outfit known as Freedoms Foundation, Inc., which has headquarters at Valley Forge, Pa., and devotes itself to "Preserving and Extending the American Way of Life," as its letterhead reveals.

It gives an almost convincing lip service to the constitution and individual responsibility, as the Freedom Forum does, and bawls the same old mouth-filling phrases that are normally reserved for politicians' Independence Day speeches.

THE FINANCIAL angel of Freedoms Foundation is Edward F. Hutton, the wealthy New York broker. Hutton filled the same role (along with others) for the Liberty League of unblessed memory and has chalked up for himself a long record of anti-Semitism. Another director is H. W. Prentis, Jr., former NAM president.

The captive audiences down whose throats Big Business is ramming its propaganda have been mostly in the middle west. Sometimes Doc Benson himself has been around. Other times executives who attended training institutes on the Harding campus read off prepared speeches. Still other times prepared speeches are read by executives who hadn't known Harding College was in existence until a few days before.

In no case is the audience permitted to ask questions. And in most cases, perhaps all, the propaganda is falling flatter than an angel-food cake in a thunderstorm.

SWIFT & CO. has been particularly active in plumping its employes into chairs and making them listen. It has done this in Chicago, South St. Paul, Minn.; Sioux City, Ia., Denver, and Evansville, Ind.

The stunt appears to have been pulled everywhere in the same way: The workers are told to knock off for the last hour and go to a "lecture" and be paid, or go home and not be paid. Only a few are taken at a time—departments or sub-departments. Then a Freedom Forum lecture is read to them—often "This Is Our Problem," which is full of hi-falutin' language that fools very few indeed.

In some cases the workers have been invited to ask questions—while the lecturer rambles on at such a furious pace nobody could slip in a word with a lard-daubed shoehorn. In other cases they were told to think over what they heard for a couple of weeks, then if they had any questions to write them in "and we'll try to answer them."

SWIFT LOCALS went to work in short order. In some plants grievances were filed demanding the lost hour's pay for those who preferred going home to listening. In most cases, mimeographed leaflets prepared by the locals answered the phony claims and arguments and with deft precision tagged the propaganda as fascist, anti-union and pro-big business.

The company, said Local 28 in Chicago, "raves about government control, but they say nothing about the government control exercised by the Taft-Hartley Act over labor."

"Could it be," the local went on, "that Swift & Co. observes two standards? In other words, government control is all right provided it is used against labor."

The Evansville, Ind., leaflet, after dubbing the stunt the "BB-PAC," declared:

"It is clearly an attempt to propagandize for the fascist fringe of big business. . . . Notice carefully that although Swift attacked socialism and communism, not one word was said against an even more dangerous philosophy—fascism.

"Notice carefully that Swift advocates the right to bargain with employers. Not the right to bargain collectively, mind you. They have always claimed you had the right to bargain individually with your boss. But do you remember how things were under individual bargaining before the CIO?"

Members were urged to contribute to the CIO-PAC and "help elect representatives in Congress who will support a program in the interests of all the people in this great country of ours, not the chosen, favored few."

LOCAL 167 in South St. Paul, Minn., used several issues of its "CIO Express" to point out just what the company was trying to do.

"Swift spent that money in an effort to convince its workers that 'even in the worst depression Americans are far better off than people in other countries at their best,'" it said in a special edition.

"The money was spent to convince you that the big corporations make small profit by using the phoney line that Swift's makes 1.2% on the sales dollar.

("You and I learned in American public schools that profits are not figured on the sales dollar but on money invested.)

"Swift's spent this money to convince you that the things that President Roosevelt did were wrong, because from 1939 to 1947 a man who in 1927 said he believed in socialism admittedly was of great service in forwarding Interior Dept. plans to preserve the natural resources of our land . . .

"If industry abhors socialism why doesn't big business provide adequate health insurance to cover families of those who produce the profit for them? Why doesn't Swift agree to a decent pension plan on which its workers may bargain collectively? Why has it been necessary for workers to strike for these benefits?"

AT SWIFT'S Denver plant copies of John T. Flynn's book, "The Road Ahead," were given away. This is the one being distributed in editions at various prices by the Committee for Constitutional Government.

It is a dire warning, based on a solid foundation of quivering innuendo and shifting distortion, that the country is going socialistic, that free enterprise is being destroyed and that the future holds only ruin unless somebody does something about it.

The Denver UPWA local issued a series of leaflets tearing the lecture to pieces and analyzing each claim and alleged fact. The first was headed "Swift and Company Takes Up Political Action Program! Promises More of Same." It was illustrated with a cartoon of Jack Stafford, company spokesman who read the lecture, orating from a soapbox.

"His opening remarks," the first pamphlet started out, "stated that these meetings were for the purpose of telling you about your job, your company (we suppose he meant the company you work for), etc. He also stated that these meetings were not political in any sense, yet every issue he spoke of was plain old-fashioned politics, camouflaged by a new technique.

"He blasted social security, public housing, subsidies, old age pensions, medical insurance, etc., as socialism, and then in turn stated that socialism was communism,

"We have no quarrel with the fight against communism, but—"

OTHER packing companies also have been belaboring their employes with tory propaganda. The current issue of The Packinghouse Workers, the union's international organ, says:

"Swift & Co. is not alone in this bilgewater business. Recently workers at the Wilson, Tobin and Armour plants have been barraged with the same sales talks on free enterprise.

"Wilson has been stuffing its slim pay envelopes with misleading messages about government expenditures, Tobin has been screaming wild-eyed about taxes and Armour recently called one of its workers a capitalist, making no mention that this 'capitalist' has no guarantee of a job without his union.

"Some capitalist!"

The union's Educational Dept. has issued a bulletin alerting all locals. It begins: "Swift & Co. has entered the field of workers' education."

"Operation Gas Chamber, afflicting Auto Workers Local 719 at Brookfield, Ill., began several months ago in the Electro-Motive Division of General Motors. Sixty to 80 workers at a time were taken off their jobs for an hour and made to sit through 'This Is Our Problem.' There was no discussion or question period."

GM employes are getting millions of pieces of literature aimed at influencing their thinking and voting and weakening their confidence in their union. Among them is a reprint of America Firster Flynn's book.

In Cleveland Thompson Products, Inc., worked a switch play and whipped some of its company union stalwarts into line to bell their brothers with Freedom Forum material. The captive audiences were taken from their work in groups of about 40 at a time and told in effect—and without a chance to answer back or to ask questions—that the Truman Administration is sending the country straight down the road to socialism and communism.

The union being the type it is, the lecture was called a "joint labor-management" affair.

Does Your Plant Have Anti-Union Speakers?

Have you a little Freedom Forum in YOUR plant?

The editors of the CIO News have been wondering just how far industry has gone in using the captive audience technique to make its employes subject to sly anti-union propaganda, ponderous preachings against the New Deal, the Fair Deal and organized labor, and the well-worn but effective Big Lie strategem that socialism is practically here.

If Dr. George S. Benson, of Harding College, or one of his "trained seals" has sounded off in YOUR plant, please let us know. Write the Captive Audience Department, CIO News, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Captive Audience Listens —Then Gives Bucks To PAC

Any member of a CIO union who gets peeved because his employer forces him into a captive audience so he can be pounded with anti-labor, anti-New Deal, anti-Fair Deal and pro-Big Business propaganda has an easy way to show his resentment.

He can combat the bosses' PAC by contributing to his own PAC—the CIO Political Action Committee—as CIO members in Milwaukee, Wis., did after a series of plant talks there by Dr. George S. Benson, the big shot of Freedom Forums which sponsors his speeches.

One of the CIO-PAC's objectives is to drain off the apple sauce in political speeches and claims—which is what Freedom Forum talks are, no matter what Doc Benson says—so the workers can have the facts before them and make up their own minds on issues and candidates.

Freedom Forums with captive audiences were conceived by Benson, president of Harding College, Searcy, Ark., and some of the country's foremost national advertisers and advertising agencies. But they ignore one age-old adage that applies to humans as well as to animals—"You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink."

Potofsky Asks Voice For Labor In State Dept.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

AMERICAN FOREIGN policy needs a liberal injection of the influence of organized labor at top policy levels — and the democratic world would benefit immensely from the operation.

That was the main theme of a speech delivered by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee at the Colgate University Foreign Policy Conference on July 11. The college, located at Hamilton, N. Y., devoted a week to hearing the views of speakers from all walks of life.

The CIO spokesman, who heads the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, suggested that the know-how gained at the collective bargaining table might prove helpful in the eventual negotiation of international peace.

American labor has rallied to President Truman, to the U. S. government and the United Nations in their efforts to "stop the aggression in Korea," Potofsky said.

"There cannot be two minds concerning aggression. It must be stopped whenever it raises its ugly head. Aggression by any nation is particularly dangerous in the tinder-box world in which we live . . .

"American labor therefore applauds the quick and vigorous steps taken to put out the fire in Korea. We pray that it may be done swiftly and effectively."

BUT WAYS "must be found for negotiating the differences between East and West" for the preservation of peace, the CIO official declared. "We of labor will not accept the notion that war is the only alternative."

"I suggest that this lesson would be more easily learned by diplomats, if labor were regularly consulted and permitted to participate actively in the formulation of foreign policy," he added.

"Indeed, the most serious defect in our foreign policy is the absence of American labor from its highest councils.

"THERE has been too strong a disposition to let only bankers industrialists and lawyers make our policy. But they alone will not find the solution. The new and world-shaking problems of our day require new experts with broad and selfless horizons . . .

"We need men in the State Dept. who will seek to promote democracy everywhere. We need men who will be able to develop a favorable balance sheet for American interests abroad, not just in terms of dollars and cents, but in terms of the far more important factors of friendship and devotion to the democratic ideals for which we stand."

Potofsky made clear that he was not critcizing "our distinguished secretary of state, Dean Acheson, who is performing a splendid conscientious job in the face of the greatest difficulties."

But he indicated that programs pushed by State Dept. business interests—aid to Peron's regime in Argentine, friendly assistance to Spanish dictator Franco, and support of cartel programs of the industrial barons of the German Ruhr—are damaging our "moral leadership" throughout the world.

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has embarked U. S. unions on major projects to build the Good Neighbor policy in Latin America and elsewhere, Potofsky told the Colgate audience.

"I have no doubt that this kind of cooperation won more friends for America than loans to Peron or Franco or restoration of Ruhr barons to the seats of the mighty," he added.

"What we in the CIO have been able to start, in a small way and through our own efforts, can be done far more effectively through our government and the United Nations—provided that our free trade unions are made true partners in the enterprise.

THE CIO official described as a "calamity" the crippling $25 million cut recommended by a Senate committee in the funds of the Point Four program.

Point Four, he said, will encourage democracy and rising living standards in under-developed areas—but he said new industrial techniques must be balanced by a teaching of "those social and labor techniques through which the American people have developed their system of checks and balances in our industrial civilization.

"Those techniques . . . can best be taught by the men and women of American labor."

Peron Steps Up War On Labor

DICTATOR PERON of Argentine, his tottering finances bolstered by a $125 million loan from the United States, has been stepping up his attacks on organized labor almost from the minute the Yankee gold was chuted into his strong box, the CIO has learned.

His anti-labor venom has been directed especially against the maritime workers and shipbuilders' unions, which had maintained their sturdy independence throughout his iron rule.

Some of their leaders have been thrown into jail on trumped-up charges, others have been forced to flee and at least one has vanished without a trace. Union property, including a number of fine buildings, has been seized by the Argentine government, it is said.

Peron has organized his own unions in these fields. So scabs now build the ships, keep them in operating condition, and man them as they sail to world ports, while members of legitimate unions are forced out of their jobs.

The Argentine unionists, however are not making their fight for survival unaided. The CIO Committee on Latin American Affairs is in close contact with the leaders who can still be reached and has expressed to them the full solidarity of the CIO.

THE INTL. Transport Workers Federation, which is recognized by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, has given its full support to the persecuted Argentine unions. Its executive board has taken steps to establish a world-wide boycott of Argentine shipping which could well serve to bring Peron to his knees. There are indications that the Peron government has belatedly recognized this.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO Latin American committee, protested strongly to the State Dept. when the $125 million loan was made to Argentine. His warning to Assistant Secy. of State Edward Miller that it would "help strengthen the Peronist totalitarian grip upon the Argentine people" has been borne out by the events of the last few weeks.

Any other union in Argentine, whether Peronist or not, which shows signs of independent action faces the same fate as the maritime and shipyard workers, it appears.

The dictator has taken steps against the packinghouse workers, which has been friendly to him in the past but has apparently learned a lesson because of a suspicion that its members are sympathetic to the maritime and shipbuilding workers.

This union has sought to establish and maintain friendly relations with the CIO Packinghouse Workers on strictly trade union matters, as the major U. S. Packinghouses also have large operations in Argentine.

Labor Attache Named

Hugh C. Reichard, labor liaison for the American Friends Service Committee and formerly an international representative for the CIO Auto Workers, has been appointed a State Dept. labor attache at Caracas, Venezuela.

"That tyrannical boss of my husband's is sick. Have you any 'Get-Worse' cards?"

Democratic Pot Beats Dixiecrat Kettle In S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S voters on July 11 chose to keep their profound dislike of the Fair Deal program within the ranks of the Democratic party where they can fight it effectively, instead of going outside it into the formal Dixiecrat camp.

They trounced Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, 1948 Dixiecrat candidate against President Truman, who was running for the U. S. Senate, and re-nominated Sen. Olin Johnston, who never deserted the Democratic Party but whose program differs scarcely a whit from that of Thurmond. The two men campaigned vigorously on almost identical platforms and at times each seemed to be trying to attract votes by declaring that he hated the Negroes more than the other.

James F. Byrnes, former Secretary of State, who broke completely with Truman on domestic policy and put on a state's rights campaign, won the governorship nomination handily against inexperienced opposition.

Four of South Carolina's six-man House delegation were renominated. The other two, Reps. James B. Hare and Hugo Sims Jr., face run-offs July 25. Sims, a young World War II veteran, who led the unsuccessful House attempt to pass the administration's "compromise" Taft-Hartley repealer in 1949, trailed his principal opponent, former Rep. John Riley, by 600 votes out of nearly 50,000 cast.

Nomination is election in South Carolina, a one-party State

There were no labor indorsements in the race.

Immediately after the results were certain, Johnston flew back to Washington to vote against the administration's second attempt to bring Fair Employment Practices legislation to the floor.

15 Brewery Workers Win $14,500 Lost Pay

Two beverage distributors at Sacramento, Calif., have been nicked by the National Labor Relations Board for interfering with union organization. Both have been ordered to stop, and pay 15 workers a total of $14,500 in lost pay.

The action was on complaint of the CIO Brewery Workers. The Acme Beverage Co. was ordered to pay five workers $2500 in sums ranging from $125 to $950; Sterling Brands was ordered to pay 10 men a total of $12,000. Of this nine get $1320 each, and the tenth $120.

Witnesses Say 3 Councils No Longer Represent CIO In Areas

WITNESSES testified at hearings last week that three councils in California no longer represent the CIO in their areas.

Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO Regional director, heard the charges against the Contra Costa County CIO Council, and Richard T. Leonard, National CIO representative, conducted the hearing of the Alameda County CIO Council. These hearings were held in the CIO regional office in San Francisco.

The hearing on charges against the San Diego Council were held in that city by Irwin D. Shetler, Southern California regional director.

Only witnesses to appear in behalf of the councils were officers from Alameda County organization.

Robert Spears of Local 506, CIO Auto Workers, speaking for the San Diego Committee for National CIO of which he is secretary, testified that the San Diego Council has held no quorum meetings since May 1949.

Out of eight CIO unions in the area, five, with upwards of 1500 members, are not affiliated with the council, Spears said. The other three—Furniture Workers, Lithographers and Longshoremen—have less than 200 members, he added.

Unions not affiliated include the Auto Workers, Communications Workers, Clothing Workers, Newspaper Guild and Steelworkers, Spears testified.

The council began to disintegrate in March, 1948, when most of the unions walked out in protest over the anti-CIO policies of the officers.

PRESENT at the hearing beside Spears were Mrs. Anne Olf, president, Local 288, ACWA, and Morry Rabin, president, Local 95, ANG.

At the hearing, DeShetler was told that D. C. Mays, ILWU, listed as president of the council, was dead. The postoffice return-receipt for the registered letter carrying notice of the hearing was returned signed with May's name, DeShetler said.

The only other council officer listed was that of Secretary Agness Adams, who is with the CIO-expelled Food & Tobacco Workers.

Appearing in support of the charges against the Alameda County Council were Chairman Arnold Campo, Vice Chairman S. M. Pratt and Secy. James McKenna of the Alameda County Committee for National CIO; Manuel Dias and Robert Hannah, Auto Workers; Milt Jacobs, Utility Workers; and William Van Curen, Sam Civens and A. J. Reger, Steelworkers. Testimony in defense of the old council was presented by a delegation headed by Pres. William Christensen and Secy. Paul Chown.

COMPLAINANTS who appeared against the Contra Costa Council were: Frank Casey, secretary of Oil Workers Local 326, Rodeo, and chairman of the Contra Costa County Committee for National CIO; Pres. Jack Woods and John Mittura of Steelworkers Local 1440, Pittsburg; Pres. Jack Bruhl and J. A. Classick of Oil Workers Local 587, Hercules; and Secy. V. F. Coragliotti of Oil Workers Local 5, Martinex.

The hearing officers will report to CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

1949's Last Quarter Profits Are Eclipsed

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission and Securities & Exchange Commission last week said that the net income of U.S. manufacturing corporations after taxes amounted to approximately $2.4 billion for the first quarter of 1950, a boost of 5% over the fourth quarter of 1949.

The profit rise was the result of increased sales of about 1%, accompanied by slightly lower costs and expenses. Net sales for the first quarter of this year totalled $39.4 billion, compared to $39.2 billion for the last quarter.

A higher rate of return was shown by the smaller companies for the first quarter of 1950 than for the last quarter of 1949, while the largest companies showed a somewhat smaller rate.

PROFITS VARIED considerably among the different manufacturing groups, half of the 22 groups showing smaller profits for the first quarter of 1950 than in the preceding quarter, and half showing larger profits.

The increases outweighed the decreases, however, because of the larger profits recorded by the steel companies and the auto and auto manufacturers.

The net income after taxes for the first quarter of this year were about the same as for the first quarter last year.

(General Motors seemed headed for even larger profits this year than during last year, its profit peak. Newspapers reported that GM manufactured 1,883,902 passenger cars and trucks during the first six months this year compared to 1,363,039 units during the last half of 1949—a gain of 520,083 vehicles.)

SALES OF manufacturing corporations in the first quarter of 1950 aggregated about $38.5 billion, or about $70 million more than in the preceding quarter.

According to the report, total assets of manufacturing corporations amounted to about $111.3 billion at the end of March 1950, an increase of about $1.5 billion over the end of 1949.

Corporations with assets of $100 million or more had $121 in cash and government securities for every $100 of current liabilities at the end of the first quarter of this year.

Prices Go Only One Way These Days—Up

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index, which gives the consumer a preview of coming price trends before retail markets reflect them, jumped another 9c in the week ending July 11 to $6.28, the highest level since $6.33 was chalked up on Dec. 7, 1948.

The increase came on the heels of a 15c rise the previous week and was the fourth in as many weeks. Since June 20, the index has risen 34 cents. It now stands at 60c more than a year ago, when the figure was $5.68.

The boost was caused by advances in the prices of 17 food items. The barometer is made up by totalling the prices per pound of 31 generally used foods.

J. William Belanger
To Visit France

3 Union Leaders Will Visit France

Three veteran U. S. union members will tell their stories to the workers of France during a six-week study tour under the auspices of the Economic Cooperation Administration, ECA Labor Advisers Clinton S. Golden and Bert M. Jewell announced last week.

They are J. William Belanger, president of the Massachusetts CIO Council and vice president and regional director of the Textile Workers; Harold Gibbons, secretary-treasurer of AFL Teamsters Local 688, St. Louis, and a former CIO union official; and Mrs. Carmen Lucia, a vice president of the AFL United Hatters.

The first and last weeks of their tour will be spent in Paris meeting leaders of the non-Communist unions, said Golden and Jewell. The remainder of the time they will be on tour visiting factories and talking to workers and union officials under the ECA plan to strengthen the free labor movement in France.

'Socialism' Tag Kills Security Dept. Plan

THE HOUSE on July 11 vetoed the President's plan to create a new Dept. of Health, Education and Security, by a vote of 249 to 71.

The plan, indorsed by all of organized labor and a multitude of other liberal organizations as well as by Ex-President Hoover, was buried under a blizzard of false objections.

The House GOP leaders, keynoted by Representative Halleck (R. Ind.), said the plan was nothing but a concealed device to foist "socialized medicine" on the U. S. taxpayer. (If the plan had been allowed to go through, there still could have been no national health insurance unless Congress specifically approved it; and the national health insurance proposal, participation in which by both doctors and patients would be purely voluntary, is a far cry from "socialized medicine" in any case.)

It became clear in the course of debate that many Congressmen were voting not against the new cabinet-rank department but against Oscar Ewing, present head of the Federal Security Agency, who is an outspoken proponent of health insurance.

IRONICALLY, BY defeating the plan, the House deprived Congress of a chance to get rid of Ewing, if it so desired.

The plan would have required Senate approval of any man nominated by President Truman to fill the new cabinet post. Hence, if the plan had been approved and the President had nominated Ewing, the Senate could have refused to approve him, if it so desired. But as matters stand, the Senate can't get at him.

The Washington Post in a July 12 editorial noted this point, and commented tersely that it was difficult to see what the opponents of the plan had gained by defeating it.

"The Federal Security Agency remains in existence," the Post said, "an agency administering federal activities in the fields of health, education and security. Its jurisdiction is about the same as it would have been under the President's proposal. Rejection . . . has simply denied it departmental status and thus, to a certain extent, impaired its effectiveness. Mr. Ewing continues to be its administrator."

THE ROUT WAS accomplished by a combination of 143 Republicans and 106 Democrats. Seventy Democrats and one lone Republican—Rep. Jacob Javits of New York—voted for the plan.

Last year a slightly different version was licked in the Senate, for the same reason.

Under the 1949 Reorganization Act, the President may suggest changes in the structure of government agencies and these will go into effect unless a constitutional majority of either house—218 in the House or 49 in the Senate—disapprove of the plan within 60 days of the time it is proposed.

The Senate Committee on Executive Expenditures, shortly before the House vote, passed a resolution disapproving of the plan, but the House vote made further Senate action unnecessary. The Senate resolution was introduced by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.). His chief objection, spoken at a hearing on the resolution, appeared to be that "welfare people" might run the department. The plan differed very, very slightly from one introduced by Taft himself two years ago.

The CIO position was given by Frank Fernbach, CIO legislative representative, at the same hearing. He said that while the Truman proposal might not be perfectly satisfactory to labor, "action is more important than perfection" at this stage.

"Labor, commerce and agriculture are all represented in the cabinet," he said, "but we regret that, be we labor, business or agriculture, we have no real representatives of our combined needs for health, education and security to whom we can turn in the cabinet." He added that these important fields needed the prestige of cabinet representation so that they would not be overlooked in top policy discussions.

Big Local Asks Officers For Non-Red Oath

THE 550 elected and appointed officials of Local 600, CIO Auto Workers, must sign a pledge that they are not Communists, Fascists or Ku Kluxers, or face dismissal. The decision was taken at a stormy three-hour meeting of the local's general council. The vote was 75 to 63. The local covers 65,000 workers at Ford's Dearborn (Mich.) plant.

Carl Stellato, recently elected local president, proposed the action, and answered the charge of "witch-hunting" by demanding "How can that charge be justified when American soldiers are being killed?" The decision was regarded as a personal victory for Stellato, who was elected with the support of Pres. Walter Reuther.

The pledge must be signed and in the hands of the local's secretary by Aug. 1. It calls for condemnation of Russia and full support of President Truman's "history-making" action in Korea. The pledge brands the conduct of Russia and its satellites as "a threat to our very fundamental right to live in the manner in which we choose." The pledge also contains a promise that the signer will not distribute any leaflets or other literature for petitions favoring Soviet policy.

Stellato later announced that the names of those who fail to sign the pledge will be announced at a membership meeting after Aug. 13. The parent union declared "the fight being carried on now by the president of Local 600 is a continuation of the fight during the past years by the union to rid itself of disruptive, anti-union, Communist elements."

N. J. Council Plans Parley At Rutgers

More than 100 unionists are expected to attend the two-day conference on education and welfare conducted July 22-23 by the New Jersey CIO Council at Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J. Speakers and instructors will include Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers; George Baldanzi, executive vice-president, Textile Workers; Vincent Sweeny, publicity director, Steelworkers; Leo Perlis, director, CIO Community Services Committee, and Dr. A. L. Lewis, publicity director, Rubber Workers.

Swiss Rail Union Has Three Chateaus

THE SWISS railway workers union owns three chateaus in Switzerland which are used as vacation homes for the workers and their families.

John Brophy, director of CIO councils, visited one of them recently when the delegation of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade unions stopped at the Intl. Labor Organization meeting in Geneva before they started on their mission to the Far East.

The rates for members of the union—$3 a day covers everything—are sufficiently moderate so that they can easily be met by the worker's regular vacation pay. Those with 10 year's membership in the union get a 15% discount. Incapacitated union members receive free service for 28 days.

Brophy reports that after a fine meal on the terrace he was shown through the Hotel Sonloup from top to bottom. There are 36 rooms, beautifully furnished and "clean to a fault." Each has a fine view, French doors and a veranda.

THIS IS THE HOTEL SONLOUP, one of the three chateaus in Switzerland owned by the Swiss railway workers union. Before American trade unionists left with other representatives of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for a visit to the Far East, they stayed at this hotel. The Americans were attending a meeting of the Intl. Labor Organization at Geneva.

Univ. Of Missouri Will Admit Negroes

The board of curators of the Univ. of Missouri at Columbia have voted to admit Negroes. They acted to comply with a ruling of Circuit Judge Sam C. Blair, who declared that qualified Negroes must be admitted to the university and the five state-supported colleges for courses not offered at Lincoln Univ., the state's school for Negroes.

The action clears the way for admission of two Negroes to the Missouri School of Mines at Rolla, and a third to the university here for a graduate course in economics. All three previously had been turned down.

Bridges' Korea Stand Starts ILWU Brawl

AFTER A meeting punctuated by rough and tumble debate, fisticuffs on the floor, and the wailing sirens of police cars, San Francisco CIO Longshoremen prepared for a showdown decision this week on opposing Communist aggression in Korea.

For two meetings members of Local 10, Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, have debated a resolution condemning the Communist invasion of South Korea and pledging "without any double talk that we will support our government and our President and the United Nations 100% in this great crisis, and that we will load any and all cargoes destined for the war area."

The strong resolution was presented by Pres. Philip Sandin and all other officers of Local 10, which has 6000 members. The ILWU faces possible expulsion from the CIO as Communist-dominated.

For two meetings Harry Bridges, ILWU international president and a Local 10 member, used delaying tactics to oppose it.

AT THE MEETING on July 10, with 2000 members in San Francisco's Coliseum Bowl, debate was brought to a close by violence on the floor.

Pat O'Hannigan, a pro-CIO unionist speaking in favor of the policy resolution, was "jumped" by a left-winger, which started a melee. Sandin adjourned the meeting as 20 police entered the hall. Fisticuffs continued briefly on the street outside.

The hotly-debated resolution will come up again July 19 as the first order of business.

According to daily press accounts, Bridges was booed by longshoremen and defeated twice during last week's Local 10 meeting.

When the longshoremen first met on June 28, a few days after the Communist attack began in Korea, Bridges unsuccessfully proposed that the local delay action "until the United Nations has had time to formulate policy."

(At that time, the UN already had formulated policy, first trying to win a cease fire and then called for military support for South Korea.)

Last week Bridges presented a similar "cease fire" proposal. It was turned down.

THE LOCAL 10 resolution backing the United Nations has the support of anti-commie officers elected some months ago in the key ILWU local. With Sandin, they are Secy.-Treas. George H. Arms, Recording Secy. Albert R. Bertani, and Business Agents Ernest Arata and Walter Nelson. The text of their resolution:

"Whereas, we, the Longshoremen of the Port of San Francisco banded in Local 10, are American citizens, proud of our country and loyal to it; and

"Whereas, serious international trouble has broken out in Korea, caused by the invasion of Southern Korea by the Communist Northern Korean Army; and

"Whereas, in many places doubts have been cast on our loyalty as American citizens by statements that the San Francisco Longshoremen would try to halt or even sabotage shipments of war materials destined for Korea, Japan and the threatened Oriental areas; therefore be it

"Resolved, that we, the Longshoremen of Local 10 ILWU, in no uncertain terms, condemn the act of aggression by the Communist North Korean Army in breaking the peace and invading South Korea; and be it further

"Resolved that we go on record without any double talk that we will support our government and our President and the United Nations 100% in this great crisis, and we will load any and all cargoes destined for the war area; and be it still further

"Resolved that we shall not join phoney Communist demonstrations, picket lines, etc. and be it finally

"Resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor, Sen. Warren Magnuson and the press."

San Francisco ILWU Ship Clerks' Local 34 adopted the same resolution as is pending in ILWU Local 10. On roll call vote of 400 members, only two opposed and three abstained.

Two-Way Profit Deal Is Questioned By FTC

The Federal Trade Commission recently issued a complaint charging the Lagomarcino-Grupe Co., food wholesalers, and the Davenport Brokerage Co., both of Davenport, Ia., with violating the brokerage section of the anti-trust laws.

The violation arises, according to FTC, because members of the Lagomarcino and Grupe families own a majority of the stock of the Lagomarcino-Grupe firm and are sole stockholders in the brokerage company. The food firm buys its supplies from the brokerage company and pays it a commission which the stockholders receive as dividends.

Press Often Friendly To Taft Blasts Him In Korean Boner

THE CIO NEWS was not alone in flaying Sen. Taft (R. O.) for his statement demanding that Secy. of State Acheson resign because—Taft said—the Truman administration had reversed the State Dept. by going to the aid of South Korea.

The CIO News, which last week ran the attack on Taft, also was not alone in comparing the Senator from Ohio to Communist party-liners.

In editorials, syndicated columns and cartoons, Taft was attacked as a "double-dyed isolationist," seeking to make political capital out of an international crisis that was already costing the lives of American fighting men.

SIGNIFICANTLY, however these blasts at Taft appeared in newspapers and magazines not published in Ohio. Ohio papers, traditionally fond of praising the Senator, were strangely silent on his latest antic.

Not so the out-of-state newspapers. For example, Time Magazine, usually friendly to the Ohio politician, reported, "The Communist attack in Korea might well have not taken place, argued Taft, if the U. S. had given the South Koreans proper aid . . .

"But Taft said nothing about Senate votes last September and again in May, to authorize multi-million-dollar aid to Korea. Among those who had voted against the bill, both times: Robert A. Taft."

The Denver Post charged Taft was "off-key." It added:

"As a double-dyed isolationist, the senator's views are always suspect when he is talking foreign policy. He is an isolationist, and except for China, is opposed to commitment of the United States in almost all fields of foreign affairs.

"Senator Taft, we believe, has put both feet in his mouth this time."

In an editorial page cartoon, the Nashville Tennessean used the same approach, picturing the wide-eyed Taft shoving into his mouth a foot labeled "Attack on Acheson."

(The CIO News last week reprinted a cartoon by Herbert Block in the Washington Post showing Taft, armed with a wooden sword, charging the State Dept., while Uncle Sam was charging toward the Korean battlefront.)

Columnist Thomas L. Stokes noted the "chorus of criticism that engulfed Taft," who, Stokes wrote, "was straining a bit in this instance to make a point. It fell flat with a discordant echo."

THE ALSOP brothers, Joseph and Stewart, swung harder in their copyrighted article, comparing the votes of the extreme left-winger, Vito Marcantonio, New York Congressman, and those of Senator Taft, with Marcantonio's votes representing the Communist Party line and Taft's the extreme right-wing Republican position.

"You discover," the Alsops wrote, "that whenever containing Russian imperialism has been the issue, there has been hardly a penny to choose between the simon-pure party-line Congressman of the American Labor party and the Republican senators (including Taft) who are so prone to find 'Communists' all around us."

Continuing, the column said, "If one can give a score, taking Marcantonio as 100, Taft gets a mark of 85% party-liner."

"Taft, moreover, in his attack on the Atlantic pact and military aid, almost indorsed the Kremlin contention that we are being 'provocative' by aiding free nations to defend themselves. This publicly delighted the Daily Worker."

Concluding, the column said, "It means, very simply, that a large and extremely influential group in American politics has flatly refused to recognize the grim facts of life in the postwar world."

"The measures Taft (and his cohorts) opposed have passed without exception. But they and others like them have held back, and limited, and weakened the American effort to contain the Soviet, none the less. We must understand this clearly, because the time for all-out effort has now come, beyond the possibility of doubt."

Despite these verbal blasts from usually friendly sources, Taft repeated, in radio broadcasts, criticism of the Truman administration that closely paralleled the line being taken by Communist propagandists.

Radio Employe Is Told To Hit CIO, FTC Told

G. A. Richards, owner of radio stations WJR of Detroit, KMPC in Los Angeles and WGAR in Cleveland, ordered an all out attack on the CIO, the Federal Communications Commission was told.

In hearings at Los Angeles on license renewals for all three stations, 23 memos from Richards to employes were introduced. One to Leo Fitzpatrick, then a WJR official, said "if we don't pitch in with everything we have the CIO will put in their men all over the country and that means communism in some form."

A letter to the KMPC manager said "do what you can to beat" a proposed California FEPC in 1946. Another to Fitzpatrick told him not to mention the Roosevelts on the air again "except in case of more deaths and then only a short paragraph."

FCC Counsel Benedict P. Cottone asserted a series of political broadcasts by the Richards stations might not only constitute a violation of FCC regulations but of such laws as the Corrupt Practices Act. LPA

PEOPLE CONCERN HER: While on a Scandinavian tour, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt found time to visit the home of a worker in a Danish cooperative apartment. Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, the U. S. Ambassador to Denmark, speaks to wife of the worker who is holding an adopted child. Also in the group is Svend A. Godfredsen, ECA Labor Information Officer in Denmark and former education director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

Union Members To Study Abroad

Three American union members will go to Ruskin College, Oxford, England, on Transatlantic Foundation scholarships for a year's study beginning next October, it was announced by Dr. Harold Taylor, president of Sarah Lawrence College and chairman of the U. S. Committee on Ruskin College Labor Scholarships.

They are Carla Ruth Myerson, Washington, D. C., a student at George Washington University, who was formerly with the CIO Education Dept. in Washington and the Southern School for Workers, Richmond, Va.; John A. Cochrane, St. Paul, Minn., CIO Marine Engineers and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen; and James Emmett Wolfe, Louisville, Ky., assistant director, Kentucky State Federation of Labor.

Each scholarship is worth approximately $800. Ruskin College offers courses or social studies and the theory and practice of government.

Bill Would Halt Undercover Bribes For Congressmen

THERE WAS A time, recalls Rep. O'Sullivan (D. Neb.), when lobbyists influenced lawmakers with wine, women, and occasional song. Now they pay 'em to write grade-school prose, "engaging legislators to scab upon the writers" who are trying to earn an honest living.

O'Sullivan thinks there ought to be a law.

So he has introduced a bill which would make it unlawful, among other things, for members of Congress, their employes and relatives to accept more than actual traveling and hotel expenses for delivering speeches, or to accept pay for writing articles, for two years after they leave Congress.

"I have observed of late," O'Sullivan said, "that lobbyists have made tremendous efforts to have people who do their bidding receive their pay-off—so to speak—for services well rendered by writing articles, making speeches, and indulging in comments so that they could be paid handsomely for their unnecessary services, in lieu of making an attempt to bribe the individuals directly."

Many such paid speeches and articles, he observed, "were not worth a red cent as far as a literary effort was concerned."

O'Sullivan also put into his bill a prohibition of abuse of the privilege of free mail by members of Congress. He recalled to his colleagues how Congressmen had loaned their "frank" for free mail for millions of copies of speeches and other propaganda to the Committee for Constitutional Government, regarded generally as the leading anti-labor and anti-administration lobby.

Meantime, the House Lobby Investigating Committee delayed action on its possible citation for contempt of Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the CCG, who has refused to name the purchasers of large quantities of its literature.

Last week the committee heard testimony by former Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle and James Loeb, Jr., national chairman and executive secretary, respectively, of Americans for Democratic Action.

Biddle said frankly that ADA operates as a lobby and that it is registered as one under the Corrupt Practices Act, a step which few lobby groups take. Its Washington legislative agents, he added, are registered under the Lobbying Act.

"ADA is proud to be part of what might be called the 'liberal lobby' in Washington," he said.

"There was a time when lobbying activities were the exclusive prerogative of private interests seeking specific legislative and administrative advantage. These lobbies still exist, and it is right that they should, although it is also right that the public know of their activities and their financial backing.

"But one of the most heartening developments of the last 10 or 15 years is the emergence of the 'liberal lobby', made up of women's organizations, trade unions, enlightened veterans' and farm groups, church groups and such organizations as ADA. By and large these organizations seek to influence legislation in the public interest, rather than in behalf of private or commercial interests."

Loeb admitted that ADA has made use of some congressional mail franks but said they have been few in number, compared to Rumely's admission that the CCG used 8 to 10 million in less than four years. Loeb suggested the committee investigate the use of franks by lobby groups. (LPA)

TESTIFYING BEFORE House Lobby Investigating Committee, National Chairman Francis Biddle (above) of Americans for Democratic Action hailed the rise over the last few years of a "liberal" lobby of which unions are a part.

NLRB-Denham Feud Is Renewed, Underscoring Need For Plan No. 12

The National Labor Relations Board and General Counsel Robert N. Denham are doing their fightin', fussin' and feudin' out loud again.

They took off at each other last week on a matter of internal administration. Denham appointed Anthony Sabella, of the board's New Orleans regional office, to head the sub-regional office at Memphis, Tenn.

The NLRB ordered its division of administration (which is under Denham's jurisdiction) to hold up its processing of the appointment, to void any action already taken to put Sabella on the job, and to withhold payment of his salary at the new and higher level.

The situation is one of the type President Truman sought to forestall when he sent to Congress his proposed Reorganization Plan No. 12, which would have ended the independent status of the board's general counsel. The plan was killed by the Senate when Sen. Taft (R. O.), co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, reversed his position of the previous session.

It stems from T-H's confusing and indefinite division of authority between the board and the general counsel. Under the law the general counsel is independent of the NLRB in some matters and subject to it in others. The board delegated some of its own administrative functions to Denham when the act was first passed, then last February rescinded some of the delegation.

Denham accused the five board members at that time of seeking to "usurp" his authority, as the amended delegation provided that no appointment, discharge or transfer of a regional or subregional director would become effective except upon board approval. The board cited passages from the law. Denham took refuge in a House Labor Committee report made while T-H was in the works.

NMU Backs Korean Stand

BY OVERWHELMING majorities, members of the CIO Maritime Union are voting their "wholehearted approval and full support" to the United Nations' action against North Korean aggression.

The resolution also gives a vote of confidence, "with admiration and gratefulness," to President Truman for his "courageous and forthright manner in taking direct action to stop the criminal acts of the red bandits."

"It is becoming more apparent than ever before that the Soviet Union intends to continue its imperialistic aggressor actions against freedom-loving peoples," the NMU statement says.

"The war started by the North Korean satellites of the Soviet Union against the South Korean people indicates that Russia will stop at nothing in their attempt to enslave the world."

The resolution was adopted at a national NMU membership meeting in New York by a 2954 to 10 vote.

It has also been passed by unanimous or near-unanimous votes at NMU meetings in Baltimore, Norfolk, Marcus Hook, Pa.; Seattle, Port Arthur, Tex.; Philadelphia, and other ports.

Six Firms Indicted On Price-Fixing Count

A federal grand jury at Detroit has indicted three corporations and three individuals on charges of violating the anti-trust laws by fixing prices and restrictive terms for the sale of typesetting services and materials to printers. The indictment charges a 10-year conspiracy to suppress and eliminate competition throughout the country.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

Immediate Repair Of 134 Ships Proposed

SEN. MAGNUSON (D. Wash.) has introduced a bill to appropriate $25 million for the immediate repair of 134 ships.

The average cost of putting them in working order would be $180,000, compared with $5 million each to replace them. The vessels are now moored along the three coasts. They include transports, hospital ships, cargo attack vessels, attack transports and motor torpedo boat tenders.

The "tragic events" in Korea underscore the need for the vessels, Magnuson said.

"The requirement for having these vessels in readiness is not something on which we can afford to watch pennies," he added.

MAGNUSON, a former merchant seaman, introduced the bill less than a week after a joint labor-management committee representing the maritime industry conferred in Washington with Acting Chairman John T. Koehler of the new Federal Maritime Board, and asked him to urge the $25 million appropriation to put the 134 vessels in shape.

Such a move, they told Koehler, would revive shipyard employment and bolster defense. Shipyard employment in April was 44,575 workers, lowest since December, 1933, compared to 1.3 million at the wartime peak.

Hoyt S. Haddock, director of the CIO Maritime Committee, and James Brownlow, head of the AFL Metal Trades Department, represented labor on the committee.

At the time of the Washington meeting, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, asked President Truman, in a telegram to order "thousands" of laid-up merchant vessels renovated for use because of "the Korean situation and tense world picture." He pointed out that thousands of jobless merchant seamen and shipyard workers are available for the work.

Ancestors Of Third Of 150 In Local Antedate Mayflower

Can you trace your ancestors back to the Mayflower? Oh, yeh? Well, that's nothing. Out in Pawhuska, Okla., there's a whole group of CIOers who can trace their ancestors much farther back than a few little ole centuries.

Their family trees were full grown long before Columbus or the Vikings or anybody else ever set foot on our shore. And they don't have to hire any genealogist to prove it.

These CIO members work in a shirt factory and belong to Local 553, Amalgamated Clothing Workers. A recent poll of the local showed that a third of the members are descendants of American Indians. The local has about 150 members, and of these 50 are Indians, while 34 of the others are married to Indians. The 12-man executive board has seven Indians on it.

Eleven Indian tribes are represented in the local—Cherokee, Sioux, Choctaw, Cree, Delaware, Chickasaw, Iroquois, Shawnee, Sac-and-Fox Pottowatami and Osage.

Pawhuska is named for Pau Kue Skah, meaning white hair, in honor of a tribal chief. Shortly after the Civil War, the Osage tribe was located on the land surrounding Pawkuska through a treaty with the U. S. Government. The town became the county seat of Osage county and the U.S. Indian Agency was located there.

Later, oil was discovered and in the early 1900's the Osages became the richest tribe of Indians in the world. Pawhuska now is an important beef producing center. The region has some of the largest grazing lands in the country.

War Threat Called Aid To Racial Amity

IMPROVEMENTS in the nation's racial relations are being accelerated by the threat of war, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk Univ., declared at the concluding session of the school's annual Race Relations Institute at Nashville, Tenn.

"The nation knows that if it is to enter a fateful global conflict," he said, "it must do so with more positive democracy on its side and less guilt on its conscience.

"It knows that destiny is pressing hard upon us and that we must abandon the luxury of gradualism. It knows that what matters most now is not only this change but the spread of the change."

There are many indications that the American people want more rapid improvements in the relations between the races, he said. Included in a list were recent court decisions and executive orders which he said show the beginnings of a national policy of positive rights and the growing acceptance of the concept of law as an educator in bringing about rapid changes in the field.

HE ALSO listed a "new realism" in the South of the "fiscal futility" of duplicating expensive buildings and equipment to maintain segregation, and cited local adaptation to changes in traditional practices decreed by law.

"The symbols of segregation are on the wane in all parts of the country," he added.

Minority groups are exhibiting less defeatism and more plans for action which are being put into effect, he maintained. But in many areas "powerful political influences, backed by industrial pressures behind the scenes" have blocked enforcemnt and extension of fair employment practices.

Dr. Johnson is an internationally known sociologist. He is a U. S. delegate to UN Educational, Social and Cultural Organization.

Seniority Protected For UN Soldiers

Brooklyn umbrella workers who go off to war under the banners of the United Nations will have their seniority protected. The clause, contained in a contract just signed between the CIO Textile Workers and Louis Reiss & Sons, New York City, protects any worker who "enlists or is conscripted into the armed forces of the United States or the United Nations." The plant was recently organized after a seven-week strike.

"Medicine won't help! Every time he thinks of returning to his non-union job, he suffers a relapse!"

Court Upholds Refusal To Serve Meal To Negro In Nation's Capital

IN WASHINGTON, capital of the United States and citadel of world democracy, a restaurant or hotel can refuse to serve a Negro solely because of his color.

Municipal Court Judge Frank H. Myers so ruled on July 11 in a test case brought by the District of Columbia to enforce "lost" ordinances making it a misdemeanor for refusal "to sell or wait upon any respectable, well-behaved person without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

The ordinances were passed in 1872 and 1873 by the then-existing District Legislative Assembly. Judge Myers ruled that they were repealed "by implication" when an Organic Act was passed in 1878. The Organic Act, he said in a 12-page opinion, "was passed for the express purpose of providing a complete form of permanent government for the District of Columbia and for legislative substitution for all previous legislation enacted dealing with the same subject matter."

In 1891, he went on, the Supreme Court held that the Organic Act was intended to supercede previous laws and "to provide a system of government complete in itself in all respects."

The decision was described as "deeply disappointing" by Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People,

"It will have terrible repercussions," he said, "throughout Asia, Africa and Latin America, whose colored peoples we are asking to support our action in Korea. Radio Moscow will tell the world that the nation's capital is still Jim Crow by judicial decision."

District law officials will appeal the decision.

Outdoor Advertising Monopoly Charged

The government has accused the General Outdoor Odvertising Corp. and the Outdoor Advertising Association of trying to monopolize billboard advertising east of the Rockies.

Two anti-trust suits were filed in Chicago June 30. The first, against General Outdoor, charged it tried to monopolize such advertising in 1500 cities with 30 million population, by purchase of 50 competitors, purchase of controlling stock in other firms, and through mergers. The second, against the association, charged a conspiracy to fix commission rates to advertising agencies, and elimination of competition by dividing markets.

Firm Ordered To Tell Of Rayon In Garment

When a concern advertises or sells women's wearing apparel composed in whole or in part of rayon, it must clearly say so. The Federal Trade Commission has found the Gay Time Frock Co. of Scranton, Pa., and Chicago sold apparel containing rayon, which looked like natural fibers such as silk, and the company failed to reveal "in words familiar to the public" the rayon content of the products.

This practice, the FTC said, "is misleading and deceptive and many members of the purchasing public are thereby led to believe that said garments are composed wholly or in part of silk . . . or other natural fibers." The FTC ordered Gay Time to be more sober in its ads hereafter.

Strong 'Voice Of America' Advocated

STANLEY Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, recently told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization is doing a splendid job of arresting the spread of Communism throughout the world by "promoting peace and security through international understanding and cooperation."

Ruttenberg appeared before the committee, together with Lt. Gen. W. Bedell Smith, former U. S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, and Bernard Baruch in support of a proposal by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) and 12 other Senators for a vastly stepped-up program of propaganda aimed at the Soviet-dominated part of the word.

HE ADVOCATED making the Voice of America really a voice and not merely a whisper. "We must get to the minds and loyalties of men," he declared.

"From our experience in the labor movement we think the spreading of the concept of democratic ideas and programs to the people of the world is as important, if not more important, than the maintenance of a strong military force."

He cited the experience of the CIO in attempting to deal with Comunism in the various unions which have since been expelled.

"We found it impossible to work with them," he told the Senators. "The only way to work with the Communists is to accept their point of view. This we never did."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Virginia organizers and directors of the Southern Drive met in Old Point Comfort, Va., for the Virginia State Organizing Conference, July 8 and 9. CIO State Director Ernest Pugh presided. The meeting was attended by John Riffe, National Director of the Southern Drive, his staff and and by many local union officers. The delegates discussed their problems and are determined to carry on the organizing of the Old Dominion. The many Negro delegates participated fully and freely in all events. They recognize that the greatest force for eliminating racial discrimination in our country today is the CIO.

The writer had the honor of addressing this conference, which, by the way, was the first state-wide conference attended by Director Riffe since assuming his duties.

Both the CIO and AFL spoke to unionists from abroad visiting this country under Marshall Plan auspices. They came specificially from Belgium, Philippines, Korea, Japan and Costa Rico. The writer met with these delegates. They were impressed with the industrial role played by the CIO in American industry, and also the interest of the CIO in world affairs, the stopping of aggression, and securing greater measures of security and happiness for people everywhere.

The writer attended a conference along with other CIO as well as AFL, UMW and Machinists representatives, with Stuart Symington, head of the National Security Resources Board. The overall civilian problems created or intensified by the Korean crisis were discussed. It was pointed out that any plans for present or future mobilization of American resources must provide full participation of organized labor.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the Chairman of the IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE victories: Walter Haertel, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 14, no union 1, UE withdrew; Winkley Artificial Limb Co., Minneapolis, IUE 9, no union 1, UE withdrew; Sylvania, Kew Gardens, N. Y. (runoff), IUE 75, UE 64; Air Reduction Sales, Cleveland, O. (runoff), IUE 15, UE 5.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that the United Steelworkers-CIO won a representation election at Chapman Industries, Chicago, Ill. There were 10 eligible voters, 9 voting for the USA-CIO. The following union security victories were also reported: Keats-Lorenz Spring Co., Chicago, eligible 19, USA-CIO 16; and the Globe Co., Chicago, eligible 237, USA-CIO 218, against 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reportes that in a representation election at the Swift & Co. fertilizer plant, Harvey, La., the United Packinghouse Workers-CIO won over the discredited FTA. The vote was: eligible 162, UPWA-CIO 52, FTA 11. Ninety-four people who were eligible were on a temporary lay-off, accounting for the small vote.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the United Optical & Instrument Workers-CIO won a union security election at the Gate City Optical Co., Kansas City, Mo., by a vote of yes 9, no 3. The work in connection with this election was handled by officers and members of Local 1258, assisted by Intl. Rep. W. J. Widman, of the Optical Workers. Local Industrial Union No. 1169, Coffeyville, Kan., won a union security election at the Moore-Lowry Flour Mills by a vote of 45 yes, 2 no. There were 47 eligible.

CIO Reg. Dir. August Scholle reports that CIO Local Industrial Union No. 1064 won the following representation elections in Detroit, Mich.; Ford Motor Co. part-time dining room and cafeteria workers, eligible 58, LIU No. 1064-CIO 42, against 12; Fred B. Prophet Co., R. P. Schere Corp. Gelatin Products Div., eligible 13, LIU No. 1064 12, against 0. LIU No. 1064 also won the following union shop elections in Detroit: Fred B. Prophet Co., Ternstedt Div., eligible 32, for LIU No. 1064 24, against 0; Fred B. Prophet Co., Budd Div., eligible 18, LIU No. 1064 14, against 0; Fred B. Prophet Co., Fisher Division No. 21, eligible 11, LIU No. 1064 8, against 1.

William F. Donovan, director of District No. 28, USA-CIO, reports that the district won its second round with the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union in an NLRB representation election at the plant of the Cleveland Crane & Engineering Co., Wickliffe, O. The vote: eligible 240, USA-CIO 211, against 9, void 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that in a representation election at the International Harvester Co. foundry unit, Louisville, Ky., the UAW-CIO was victorious by a vote of 881 to 261.

CIO Field Rep. Fred Fudge reports the following IUE-CIO victories in Williamsport, Pa.: Sylvania, IUE 40, UE 2, no union 2; E. Keeler, IUE 135, UE 10, no union 3; Hermance Machine Co., IUE 36, no union 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the United Packinghouse Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Farm Belt Fertilizer & Chemical Co., Kansas City, Kan., by UPWA-CIO 6, no union 4. Intl. Rep. Frank Brown conducted the organizational work in this campaign.

A. T. Stephens, vice-president of the UPWA-CIO, reports that in a representation election at Libby, McNeill and Libby, Rochester, Minn., the UPWA was victorious over the FTA by a vote of 265 to 9.

Va. CIO Staff, Leaders Meet

Organizing the unorganized, political action and the planning of educational activities occupied the attention of more than 100 CIO staff members and local union leaders recently at a two-day conference at Old Point Comfort, Va.

The meeting, sponsored by the CIO Organizing Committee and the Virginia CIO Council, devoted one day to organizational problems. Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, John Riffe, CIO organizing committee director, and Lloyd P. Vaughn, state council director of organization, addressed the group.

Rev. Charles C. Webber, Virginia PAC director and president of the Virginia CIO, conducted the session on political action. He stressed the importance of precinct organization and the necessity of poll tax payment and registration for CIO members and their families.

The educational session was led by Ben Segal of CIO Textile Workers educational staff, and Brownie Lee Jones, director of the Southern School for Workers.

Germano Renamed To University Unit

Pres. Joseph Germano of the Illinois CIO Council has been reappointed to another term on the advisory committee of the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations of the Univ. of Illinois.

Two new members, William W. Wirtz, professor of law at Northwestern University, and John Slezak, president of the Turner Brass Works, Sycamore, were also named to the 15-man board.

Senate Kills Action On FEPC For Second Time

THE BILL to set up a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, pledged by Democratic and Republican parties alike in their 1948 campaign platforms, urged by President Truman and supported by the CIO and the rest of organized labor, is dead for the present.

It was killed the afternoon of July 12 when, for the second time, a motion invoking cloture to end debate failed to receive the support of the required two-thirds majority of the full Senate—64 votes. Fifty-five senators voted for cloture, nine less than were needed, and 33 voted against it.

A few hours later Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), Democratic majority leader, announced that the measure will not be brought up again at this session of Congress. Any further move in that direction, he said, would be "futile."

Cloture was invoked to head off a filibuster by Southern senators before it even started. Lucas filed a cloture petition with 44 signatures on July 10, as required by a Senate rule sponsored by Sen. Wherry (Neb.), Republican floor leader, and passed early in the session. A vote automatically came up at 1 P.M. on July 12.

THIRTY-THREE Republicans and 22 Democrats voted in favor of the resolution. Opposing it were six Republicans and 27 Democrats. Twenty-three opposition votes were cast by southern Democrats. The 10 from northern and western states were those of Sens. Bridges (R. N. H.), Ecton (R. Mont.), Gurney (R. S. D.), Hayden (D. Ariz.), Johnson (D. Colo.), Malone (R. Nev.), McCarran (D. Nev.), McFarland (D. Ariz.), Mundt (R. S. D.) and Young (R. N. D.).

Sen. Johnston (D.) hurried back from South Carolina, where he had just won renomination in a primary campaign in which all candidates tried to outdo each other in opposition to FEPC, and voted against cloture. Also opposed was Sen. Graham (D. N. C.), liberal recently defeated for renomination, who had refused to make his position known during the primary.

The first FEPC test was on May 19, when cloture was invoked to end a Southern filibuster. It was defeated then by a vote of 52 to 32. Last week a vote showed no switches. The improvement in the strength of the pro-FEPC bloc came from votes cast by senators who were absent the first time.

Despite the defeat the forces behind FEPC refused to give up the fight. A meeting is tentatively planned for September by civil rights, civic and union groups to study and make public the views and actions on FEPC of candidates in the November election. Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, pointed out that the nine-vote margin was the smallest by which an FEPC measure had ever been kept off the Senate floor, and said that in spite of everything, "we have moved much further ahead."

THE VOTE was taken before packed galleries and with relatively little discussion. In a last-minute speech Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) warned that "what is being done here today is to say to the Negro and other minority race soldiers fighting on the battle fronts of Korea: you're good enough to die, but if you come back you're going to be made second-class citizens."

Lucas, urging that a vote be permitted on the issue and that even those opposed to FEPC agree to cloture, told the Senate that there is no discrimination in the recruiting of men now in Korea. So long as they measure up to their responsibilities, he went on, it does not matter if they are whites or Negroes, Jews or Gentiles, Protestants or Catholics. That, he insisted, was what was wanted through an FEPC.

Sen. Russell (D. Ga.), who led the floor fight in the May battle, called Lucas' plea emotional and described the measure as "this compulsory jail sentence FEPC bill."

AFTER THE vote Sen. Morse, liberal Republican from Oregon, clashed with Wherry over the practical effectiveness of the cloture rule he had sponsored.

The Republicans, many of whom voted for cloture confident in their knowledge that Southern Democrats would prevent actual Senate consideration of the bill, seized upon the defeat to accuse the Democrats of failing to keep their campaign pledges. Guy Gabrielson, Republican national chairman, announced that civil rights proponents "can only look forward to a Republican Congress for results."

HST Makes Case For Full Point 4 Fund

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

PRESIDENT Truman, at a serious off-the-record conference with Senate leaders of both parties July 11, urged the Senate Appropriations Committee to restore the $25 million cut it made in the authorized figure for the "Point Four" program for technical assistance to underdeveloped foreign areas. For once his words had some effect.

Truman originally requested $45 million for the program. When the bill authorizing the start of the project (actually an expansion of activity that has been going on in Latin America for nearly 10 years) passed Congress, the State Dept. was authorized to spend $35 million. But that didn't produce any spendable money — it just indicated that Congress approved the idea, up to a $35 million ceiling.

The House already had acted on the omnibus appropriations bill at the time the Point Four authorization came up, so the Senate got the first chance at actually backing up the idea with cash.

For reasons best known to itself, the Senate committee allowed only $10 million for the project, although the administration, recognizing an economy wave when it saw one, scaled its actual money request down to just under $27 million for the first year.

THE SLASH caused immediate, strong protest in a number of quarters including CIO, AFL, Americans for Democratic Action, and church groups, and brought scathing editorial comment in a number of newspapers.

All these groups took the same position: that in the Point Four program—aimed at non-Marshall Plan countries, principally Africa, the Middle East and the Far East—the U. S. for the first time was proposing to export something besides famine relief and military might. It would export technical know-how to help the citizens of those countries solve their own problems.

"The reported cut," said the CIO executive officers and vice presidents in a statement issued July 11, "negates our contention that democracy has more to offer the world than totalitarianism."

Warren Austin, American ambassador to the United Nations, also appealed to the Senate for restoration of the full amount.

LEAVING THE White House, the senators said the President "had made a good case," and Sen. Smith (R. N.J.), said he believed the committee might reverse its action. The President was understood to have emphasized heavily that the people of Southeast Asia, now the world's No. 1 trouble spot, were counting heavily on the program and that a slash would endanger our entire position there.

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) introduced an amendment restoring the full amount as soon as the Senate opened debate on the omnibus appropriations bill. A vote was not expected until this week.

Next day, July 12, the House approved by a vote of 195 to 151 a bill authorizing the Export-Import Bank to guarantee up to $250 million of private investments that might be made by U. S. capital in projects developed by the Point Four nations as a result of American technical help.

The guarantee would not safeguard investors against ordinary risks, but would compensate private investors for "expropriation, undue restriction, interference or impairment," and would assure them that "reasonable profits" could be converted into U. S. dollars and brought back to this country.

THE POINT FOUR nations which wished to attract American investment capital would be required to sign treaties guaranteeing that fair wages would be paid to the native labor employed by the enterprises.

As Secy. of State Acheson told the 1949 CIO convention, "hundreds of millions of people, inhabiting large areas with great natural resources, refuse any longer to accept the notion that hunger and poverty are their natural lot . . . These people are no longer satisfied with promises of a better life; they want it here and now . . . To people who have always been miserable, who have never known the protection of a Bill of Rights, the spurious promises (of the Communists) sound real . . . The ideology that will prevail is the one that can deliver the goods, both materially and spiritually."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 10 million.	Passed both Houses; now in conference.	Wire Senators and Representatives to support liberalizing features, oppose Knowland amendment.
FEPC	Would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	Pigeonholed for this session.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.
Railway Labor Security Bill S. 3295 HR 7789	Amends Rail Labor Act to permit union security pacts, check-off.	Referred to Senate Labor, House Interstate Committees. CIO supported, providing no racial bias permitted.	Ask Senators Congressmen to approve in line with CIO recommendations.
Railway Compulsory Arbitration Bill S. 3463	Sponsored by Sen. Donnell, would outlaw rail strikes, force compulsory arbitration.	Senate Labor sub-committee has held hearings.	Ask Senators to defeat.

UAW Wins Long Strike

The eight-week strike at the American Seating Co. at Grand Rapids, Mich., has ended with 1350 members of the CIO Auto Workers winning a package of 10.93c for pensions, general pay increase, adjustment of inequities, improved holiday pay, vacation pay and life insurance.

Among the 40 contract improvements won was the union shop, which covers all but religious objectors. Those much prove such claims to a joint committee and must pay the equivalent of union dues and assessments into the welfare fund of Local 135.

The union also won access to data on time standards. The company's insistence on unilateral management of production standards for direct incentive workers and allowance ratios for indirect incentive workers was the major cause of the strike.

Slash In Taxes BarredByWar

NEITHER YOU NOR your employer will have to worry with new tax laws for a while—you'll just go on paying the same old taxes, which CIO believes are too high for most CIO members, too low on most corporation profits.

Your wife will go right on shucking out a 20% "luxury" tax on baby oil, baby powders, and cosmetics. The same old silliness will prevail on the matter of fur coats. If the fur's outside the coat, it's a luxury. If it's inside, it's not. Not that many CIO members are shopping for fur coats.

The tax bill, on which the House and Senate had labored long, has been shelved for this session because of the Korean crisis. The House brought forth a measure which cut excise taxes $1 billion without doing enough about finding other sources for the income the government would lose by that action. President Truman told Congressional leaders that with things going the way they are, the present tax structure—which he doesn't like—is certainly preferable to a measure that might bring in less money.

There are veiled hints that if the world situation goes on getting worse, everybody'll be paying more taxes anyway—but so far, that's just in the rumor stage.

Truman Asks U. S. To Gird For Defense

PRESIDENT Truman's message to Congress last week laid out a program to swing the country over from a period of uneasy peace to stand-by preparedness for war.

For the nation, it will be a costly program, the President made clear, but one for which there is no alternative.

"For ourselves, we seek no territory or domination over others. We are determined to maintain our democratic institutions so that Americans now and in the future can enjoy personal liberty, economic opportunity and political equality.

"We are concerned with advancing our prosperity and well-being as a nation, but we know that our future is inseparably joined with the future of other free peoples," the President told Congress.

To be prepared against aggression in Korea and in other danger spots throughout the world, he said, both the United States and other free nations must be ready with military strength—"and even more important, a solid base of economic strength, capable of rapid mobilization in the event of emergency."

AMERICA'S economic power—actual and potential—is greater than at any time in the past, the President reminded Congress.

But the "magnitude of the demands for military purposes . . . in an economy which is already operating at a very high level, will require substantial re-direction of economic resources."

The size of our military needs for the next few months, was clearly outlined in the Presidential message.

Congress will certainly lift the present two-million limit on membership in the armed services. Increases in supplies for a larger military service, plus necessary reserves and heavier military procurement, are soon to follow.

In addition, continued aid to the free nations must be maintained so that they, too, can meet the challenge of Communist aggression.

To meet these needs, the President said he would soon ask Congress for $10 billion in additional appropriations — and even the economy bloc in Congress seems ready to go along.

The President had other proposals to "make sure that the economic strength which is at the base of our security" is not impaired.

He called for legislation to establish priorities and allocations on materials needed for national security, to prevent inventory hoarding, and to limit non-essential uses of scarce commodities.

He said he is asking all government agencies to study their programs, in order to cut down wherever possible on non-essential use of services, manpower, commodities and raw materials.

HE ASKED Congress to authorize loans and grants to industry where they are needed to speed up the output of essential war materials.

At the same time, the President outlined a fight against inflation on the home front.

He called for restrictions on too-easy installment buying; moved to cut down too-easy credit for home-building; and predicted that he would soon present the Congress with a program of heavier taxes, aimed at sharing the burden among individuals and corporations with the goal of eliminating profiteering.

"However, if a sharp rise in prices should make it necessary, I shall not hesitate to recommend the most drastic measures of price control and rationing," the President said.

The program, the President told Congress, is based on the decision of the U. S. and its friends in the United Nations that "to restore the peace in Korea we must expect a hard and costly military operation."

Profiteers, Hoarders Speed Rationing, Price Controls

PANICKED consumers, cold-blooded profiteers and "smart" businessmen combined last week to bring nearer the thing they all feared—rigid price control and rationing, credit controls and allocations.

The way they acted, you'd think they wanted controls slapped on them, fast.

Manufacturers placed orders for excessive stocks of raw materials.

Canada Prices Also Jumping

The United States isn't the only country where prices are going up.

The cost of living is at an all-time high in Canada, where wage levels are substantially lower than in this country. The current retail price index stands at 165.4, up 1.4 points from 164 a month ago. Most of the boost was due to increased meat prices.

Wholesalers ordered tremendous, abnormal quantities of manufactured goods. Retailers suddenly decided to lay in huge stocks, vastly more than they would need in a normal market, and to take quick profits now. And back of all this, in every market where speculation is possible, traders in "futures"—i.e., gamblers on the future selling price of such items as cotton, rubber, lard, wheat—began placing their bets on a rise in prices which would net them a quick, big profit. And on Wall Street, the bets began to shift to "war" stocks.

And the housewife?

SHE REMEMBERED standing in line, filling out forms, going without minor and in some cases major conveniences, paying too much for shoddy wartime substitute goods in a seller's market, and—pitifully—she was seized with a desire to stave off all this nuisance and hardship for herself and her family.

She began buying sugar, which would harden and spoil; coffee, which would get stale; paper goods, which would take up shelf room while they mildewed; case-lots of canned goods, stacks of sheets, mountains of soap; and utilities—ironers, washers, freezers, everything electrical. And her husband suddenly went and bought four or five new tires for the car, or even plunged ahead to order a new auto.

They acted as if they were trying to create shortages, so that if the Korean conflagration spread their personal civilian troubles would start sooner.

AND NONE OF it made any sense at all. It was entirely unnecessary. There was plenty of nearly everything, now and for some time to come. Future supplies of most things were assured. And if full-scale, all-out war did come, the hastily assembled little hoards must be declared, would be seized if excessive, and would delay the time when the hoarders would be able to get a ration book at all.

Prices, of course, went up. Cotton went from 34c to 40c a pound. Green coffee went from 50c to 56½c a pound. Hogs went up $5 a hundredweight. Broilers went from 25c to 32c a pound. Wool went up 5c a pound. Steel and oil went up. Hides soared. Wheat went up about 3c a bushel. Lard went up 60c per 100 pounds. Soybeans, sugar and black pepper started up.

THE INCREASE in sugar prices was the silliest of all. Probably there never has been such a world surplus of sugar. In all the other commodities, production was and had been for some time at record or near-record highs. In some of them, the government was holding mountains of surplus stocks bought under the farm support price program, notably cotton. (The Agriculture Department promptly dumped some surplus cotton on the market and drove the speculative price down a little.) The Dun and Bradstreet index of wholesale food prices went up 13c in one week—36c in three weeks.

All the foregoing was at the wholesale level. At retail, where the housewife meets the prices, clothes and food started up. A food market basket which cost $7.20 a year ago, cost $7.93 last week. Bread prices in many cities increased 1c a loaf, completely unjustified for the time being.

President Truman and the Congress reacted, of course. The administration did not want to pay inflated prices for its necessary orders to support the Korean action, to muster and supply the relatively slight increase in total size of our armed forces, and to carry out its international commitments. And it was well aware that Communist Leader Lenin had predicted that communism would win the world by forcing the United States into runaway inflation, and bankruptcy.

CHAIRMAN GILLETTE (D. Ia.) of a Senate Agriculture subcommittee announced he would investigate "unwarranted" food price increases. Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) called for immediate controls on six or eight basic items. Rep. Klein (D. N. Y.) called for controls, too, and said "the current efforts to soak the consumer for all the traffic will bear under scare buying are nauseating."

He said he had heard "shameful reports of dealers starting false rumors of shortages to induce volume buying and hoarding."

The President's advisers recommended readying the machinery for a price freeze and roll-back, although this was not among the first requests to Congress.

Pot And Kettle With Us Again

It's actually supposed to have happened in New York.

A woman (not the wife of a CIO member, we hope) was asked why she had bought two large orders of sugar from adjacent grocery stores.

"I'm just trying to get some before these hoarders I hear so much about buy it all up," she replied.

NMU Negotiates War Risk Bonuses

CIO Maritime Union members who sail in the Korean area will be paid war risk bonuses under an agreement with Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipping companies.

The agreement provides double pay while in port in specified areas of China and Korea; $100 if attacked in a harbor or $125 if the vessel is damaged or a crewman injured.

Each seaman will be provided with $10,000 life insurance and $500 insurance on his personal effects.

Home-Building First To Feel War Clamp-Down

THE BOOMING private home-building industry was the first to feel the direct effect of the coming increase in national defense spending—and the public housing program, barely started although authorized last year, also was slashed.

Using powers already granted him by the Congress, President Truman on July 18 cut in half the total amount of money that the Housing and Home Finance Agency can earmark for guaranteeing mortgages issued by private banks. He also called for substantial increases in down payments and stricter credit standards as a condition of issuing any mortgages at all.

The move, which was bold and direct, was aimed at (a) saving building materials which might be needed in the defense effort, and (b) stopping profiteering in those materials.

The real estate lobby apparently didn't know what to think. It was pleased that the administration now was putting the brakes on public housing, but it was displeased to think that the government-guaranteed mortgage hayride might be ending.

Specifically, here is what the President did:

1. He cut HHFA's authorized increase in mortgage guarantees from $1250 million to $650 million and at the same time said that appraisals for mortgage purposes could be dated no later than July 1, 1950, i. e. before the Korean outbreak. In other words, builders cannot pay war-scare prices for building materials and then get the government to pay them back. If they want to pay the higher price, they must either absorb it themselves or pass it on to the home-buyers.

2. The home-buyers, he said, must make a larger down payment in any case—at least 5% larger and in some instances more than that. And a down payment of probaly 10%ff will be required on HHFA loans for modernization and repair.

3. Banks, he added, must be a good deal more strict about issuing mortgages anyhow.

4. Public housing starts will be limited to 30,000 in the next six months, he said, as against nearly twice that many which the government had expected to approve, and the entire public housing program will be "re-examined."

The same restrictions will apply to veterans' housing.

"It is already clear," the President said in his letter to the various government agencies concerned, "that as a result of events of the past month, many materials used in residential and other construction will be required in increasing amounts for national defense purposes.

"It is imperative that these requirements be met fully and without delay.

"These increased demands will aggravate inflationary tendencies already evident in some of the materials unless positive actions are taken to reduce pressures in residential construction."

Reds Ambushed In 'Peace' Drive

Communist members of a Birmingham, England, steel workers local recently began soliciting signatures for the phony party-inspired peace drive.

The petition was left overnight in the union hall in the hope that a local meeting the following night might support the "drive." Before the meeting opened it was passed around again and 150 new signatures were obtained.

Feeling much emboldened, one of the Reds took the floor and proposed that the local officially endorse it. The comrades were amazed when his motion was passed without a word of debate.

Then they discovered what happened. Someone had substituted another petition—supporting the United Nations' stand on Korea. They hadn't caught on to the switch because their petition had been rolled like a scroll.

Aussie Sea Union Backs UN Action

A rank and file revolt against leaders of the Australian Seaman's Union here has forced the union to lift its ban on the transport of war material to Korea. The members said they wanted to help in the United Nations war effort.

CIO Hails President's War Program

CIO PRES. Philip Murray last week hailed President Truman's program, offered to Congress as necessary to help defeat aggression in Korea and "to strengthen the nation's defenses against other international threats to the peace."

"The American people must meet the demands placed upon our economy by these unavoidable increases in military expenditurs," Murray said.

Th CIO president said the public has been "alarmed by soaring price increases" in recent weeks, and they have "accentuated the existing inadequacies of workers' wages and purchasing power."

In the present emergency, there should be no room for profiteering or inflation, he said. He suggested the President should now be given powers to start price control and rationing as soon as it may become necessary. In that case, he added, prices should be rolled back to the June 25 level.

Murray warned of dangers if housing credit is contracted in such a way as "to penalize primarily the low-income families, many of whom are in dire need of decent shelter."

And he predicted the nation's manpower resources can be expanded to maxmimum use if "we draw upon all races, creeds and colors, without discrimination."

Pres. Murray's statement in full:

THE CIO congratulates President Truman for the strong program he has proposed to defeat the Communist challenge to world peace in Korea, and to strengthen the nation's defenses against other international threats to the peace.

We support the request of the President for a budget increase of $10 billion to strengthen our defenses. The President's proposals for necessary allocations and inventory controls, restrictions on consumer credit, and the curtailment of unessential production are a necessary part of a coordinated economic program.

The American people must meet the demands placed upon our economy by these unvoidable increases in military expenditures.

We have been alarmed by soaring price increases in the past few weeks, which have accentuated the existing inadequacies of workers' wages and purchasing power. In the present emergency there can be no room for private profiteering and inflation. To meet these problems, the President should be given authority at once to control prices and ration scarce commodities. If it becomes necessary to invoke these powers, prices should be rolled back to the June 25th level.

The United States must move swiftly to expand productive capacity where shortages exist in basic industries.

We note with approval the announcements of leading steel corporations of plans to expand their facilities, but their efforts must be intensified. No time must be lost in repairing the damage done to our national economic strength in the past few years by the short-sighted scarcity-minded policies of those who consistently refused to plan in terms of a strong, growing society.

The President has given recognition to this problem in his proposal for production loans. This program must be moved into immediate action. The nation must not repeat the fiasco of World War II, when construction of needed industrial facilities was held up until the war was already upon us. We want no more "Gano Dunn Reports."

PHILIP MURRAY

WE SUPPORT the President's efforts to restrict non-essential construction and excessive use of housing credit. Limiting or rationing housing merely by credit devices, however, will penalize primarily low-income families, many of whom are in dire need of decent shelter.

The continuing housing shortage will be intensified in many areas. The government's powers and programs in the housing field should be geared immediately to relieve these shortages. Problems growing out of the housing shortages—the need for additional housing, curtailment of non-essential commercial building, prevention of rent gouging, the allocation of building materials and speculation in real estate—should be viewed as facets of the same problem—a shortage of housing. They should be met by effective controls and a building program to meet the shortage in the areas of greatest need.

The President has promised a tax message that will make a vigorous effort to curtail profiteering. This message should include an effective excess-profit tax, taxes upon higher-bracket incomes, and the closing of many tax loopholes. This type of a tax program will enable us to pay for a great share of this new effort, reduce some of the inflationary pressures released by the defense effort, and strengthen the plea for equality of sacrifice.

The President's program can be handled with our existing manpower; but the nation must also take steps to strengthen its human resources to meet any eventuality which may occur. Any national effort must draw upon all races, creeds, and colors, and it must brook no discrimination.

Special efforts must also be made to develop community facilities, including housing, all-day nurseries and schools, as well as other auxiliary services in the vicinity of any defense establishments. Large new reserves of human power can be made available to help in this task, if we take proper steps to bring them in.

While we necessarily must strengthen our defenses and those of our allies, we must not lose sight of the fact that in the struggle before us, we must offer to the peoples of the world a program which breathes into them the hope of greater economic security and progress. We, therefore, call for a "Point Four" program on a scale sufficiently comprehensive to advance the economic interests of undeveloped areas and their peoples as a necessary companion measure to our military assistance program.

We know the American people are prepared to support the President in meeting any demands which our nation's vast obligations may make upon them.

Reuther Offers $1.3 Trillion Plan For Century-Long 'War' For Peace

A PROPOSAL for a century-long campaign for world peace, based on wiping out the causes of war, was made on July 18 by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, of the CIO Auto Workers.

The program was sent to President Truman in advance of publication. It is an extension and development of Reuther's recent suggestion that the U. S. spend $13 billion dollars a year for the next 100 years to create an atmosphere of peace by helping the undeveloped nations of the world, including Russia and her satellites, to help themselves.

Reuther specifically proposes that the people of the United States, through Congress, make available to the United Nations for the next century the $13 billion a year, or a total of $1 trillion, $300 billion, to be used solely "to help people in other nations help themselves by developing and expanding their economic resources and facilities and for other purposes that will contribute to improvement of living standards, including nutrition, housing, health and education of their people." He still would include Russia and her subordinates if they would join under regulations to be set up by the U. N.

His plan, he said, would combine "fully adequate military measures and prompt bold action to wipe out human misery and desperation, to win the loyalty and support of hundreds of millions of people and strip the Kremlin of its power to exploit them and sacrifice them in battles of aggression."

REUTHER pointed out that the U. S. spent in 44 months of World War II the same amount of money he proposes should be spent in a century in a war on war itself.

He visualizes the foreign aid program as a complement of adequate military measures and promotion of a "practical program of economic and social justice at home."

"This direct attempt to destroy the sources of Communist power," he said, "will have to be supported by an adequate system of defense based on joint planning and pooling of strength with our democratic allies."

A joint defense program and disarmament by all or most nations, he asserted, will reduce military expenditures and make available some of the money that would have to be raised to finance such a program. In addition, he said, taxes on corporations and personal incomes of more than $15,000 should be restored to their wartime levels to provide additional funds, while still more money would be available through taxation of additional income that would result from increased production and jobs.

IN A LETTER TO President Truman accompanying his proposal, Reuther said it was drafted "in full support of your policy and as a contribution to its earliest possible application" and as an "attempt to equal in scope and force the Communist challenge that must be dealt with everywhere in the world."

"We must work at the task before us on every sector of the world problem—on the military front — the political front — and the economic and social front," he added. "This proposal is an effort to underscore the importance and compelling need for bold positive action on the economic and social front."

The Auto Workers is printing the full text of Reuther's proposal in pamphlet form. Copies may be obtained by writing the UAW-CIO Public Relations Dept., 411 W. Milwaukee, Detroit 2, Mich.

Senate Due To Approve Funds For Ship Repair

The Senate this week is expected to approve a $25 million addition to the Maritime Administration's appropriation to be used to repair 134 merchant ships in the reserve fleet and put them in 100% operating condition.

At the moment, only 21 vessels are being built. Employment in the shipyards was 134,300 in Navy and private yards, down 51,300 from a year ago, as compared to over a million during World War II. The CIO Shipbuilding union has long urged such an appropriation.

Auto Workers Propose Industry Talks On War

THE CIO United Auto Workers has proposed a joint conference of labor and management in the auto industry to study problems created by the nation's new defense program.

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther made the proposal in letters sent to the heads of General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and other auto makers.

"This is an opportunity to prove again to the world that free labor and free management can rise to the challenge, and through practical cooperation, give leadership in mobilizing our productive power to defeat the forces of totalitarianism and aggression," Reuther said.

The companies had no immediate comment on the union suggestion.

Reuther offered four major subjects that should be discussed by the auto industry and the union.

1. "The impact of the President's partial mobilization order on the level of production and employment in the automobile industry."

2. "Exploration of possible and practical steps to be taken to minimize dislocation and unemployment."

3. "Consideration of the working out of joint recommendations to the government on steps which should be taken to expand steel production."

4. "Discussion and formulation of recommendations on other matters related to the full mobilization of the production potential of the automobile industry in support of the efforts of our government and free people of the world to resist Communist aggression."

Unity Talks Begin This Week In D.C.

Unity discussions between CIO and AFL are scheduled to open this week.

The first session will be held Tuesday afternoon, July 25, at the Hotel Statler in Washington. Earlier in the day, organized labor's nine-man special committee will be meeting with Stuart Symington, head of the Natl. Security Resources Board, for another discussion of emergency manpower problems.

The unity talks will be the first between CIO and AFL since May, 1947. They developed out of a letter sent by CIO Pres. Murray to other union groups last April.

Murray, still convalescing from a recent eye operation, will not take part in the July 25 CIO-AFL talks. The other seven members of the CIO committee are expected to be on hand, however, along with four representatives from the AFL.

Progress, Yes—But Not Enough

We've Come Long Way Since League Of Nations Days, But There's Hard Road Ahead In Battle Against Communism

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE WAS a general feeling at the beginning of World War II that the average American boy could whip 10 well-trained Japanese soldiers with one arm tied behind him.

We soon learned, to our sorrow, that it wasn't so.

We took a terrible beating in the Pacific until we finally made up our minds to throw everything we had into the conflict.

We finally won—at a high cost.

Soon after the Communists from North Korea invaded South Korea a small number of American troops were thrown into the conflict.

There was general feeling in the United States that the Korean war would be over in a few weeks—or a month or two at the longest.

Since then our forces have been taking a beating — and many Americans have expressed surprise that the "crude" soldiers from North Korea could put up such a scrap.

Certainly there must be a lesson to learn from what has happened—a lesson which could help us operate more effectively in the future in the international field.

So let's take a look at the situation.

WE HAD AN opportunity at the end of World War I to become a leading member of an international peace organization—the League of Nations.

But we preferred isolationism.

We plunged unprepared into World War II, largely because a large segment of our population thought it would be a good idea to let somebody else defeat fascism.

We came out of World War II as the world's leading democratic nation and—to hear us tell it—without a doubt the world's greatest power.

We became a leader of the United Nations. We launched the European Recovery Program. We were responsible for the North Atlantic Pact.

And when the UN called for action in Korea, President Truman sent in troops which were available in the area.

ON THE BASIS of this record it's easy to say that we've made great progress in our thinking since World War I—and so we have.

But there's a comparatively large group in the country—and in Congress—which has fought nearly every move the Administration has made in its campaign to halt the spread of Communist totalitarianism.

This opposition group says it fears communism, that it wants the spread of communism halted—but it doesn't want to expend the money and energy necessary to do the job.

Among this group are those who are "strongly" in favor of ECA but want to slash ECA appropriations, who think the Voice of America is a good thing but would like to see it operate on a shoe-string, who speak warmly of the good that the Point 4 Program could do but are reluctant to vote enough money for the project.

And in the group are those who want democracy to spread throughout the world but fight efforts to make it operate more effectively at home.

Sure we've made progress, but not enough.

THE AVERAGE American cannot understand the fanatic zeal of the Communists and there's a general feeling in this country that anybody who follows the Stalinist line must be pretty stupid.

The next step in the reasoning is that because they're stupid they must be ineffective.

The facts show something entirely different.

Russia, for all practical purposes, has taken over control of Eastern Europe, China and a large portion of Korea.

There are large and effective Communist groups in Italy and France.

Why?

One reason is that the Communists let nothing stand in the way of spreading their doctrine throughout the world. They work at it night and day. It's their No. 1 program.

Another reason is that we of the democracies spend a lot of time talking to ourselves about the glories of democracy instead of spending time and effort talking to those who are leaning toward communism.

We spend too much time damning communism and too little time making democracy work better.

We and our allies have been guilty of exploiting the peoples of the "backward" areas of the world. So it's not difficult for the Reds to convince them that Communism offers them more in the future than democracy has provided them in the past.

And those of us whose skins are white have too frequently shown discourtesy—and sometimes contempt—to those whose skins are dark.

All of this adds up to the fact that we've got a lot of work to do and a lot of changes to make if the spread of communism is to be halted.

HOLD YOUR HORSES!

One of our neighbors—a fellow who had a heck of a time using all the stuff he hoarded during World War II—dashed out and bought a new car as soon as he learned American troops were going into action in Korea.

Another was in a cold sweat until he was able to rake up enough money to buy a new set of tires for his old car.

And as American boys began dying in Korea other Americans began buying more sugar than required for their immediate needs.

Business began booming in many stores. Consumers either had the idea that they would stock up on "scarce" items or would do a bit of buying on credit before restrictions were placed on installment purchasing.

Rumors were as thick as flies around Washington.

In a way it was understandable. In a way it was disgusting. And it reminded one of what occurred early in World War II.

The gouging began in some stores within a few days after the first U. S. bombers went into action over Korea. Prices were increased a little here and hiked sharply there.

By the end of the third week of the conflict, Washington housewives—and housewives in other parts of the country—were beginning to complain bitterly about the increase in food costs.

And good, patriotic citizens were beginning to say such things as: "Well, I had no intention of running out and buying things I didn't need right now but when I saw what others were doing I decided I'd better protect myself."

And those who were seeking such "protection" were cutting their own financial throats. They were adding fuel to the fire that leads to inflation.

REMEMBER LAST TIME

Those who recalled what happened during World War II and gave serious consideration to the future were appalled by the somewhat hysterical behavior of their friends and neighbors. But that didn't keep some of them from repeating the mistakes they'd made earlier.

"I was stupid last time," they told themselves. "This time I'm going to be smart."

But they weren't smart.

Well, so we've got a situation on our hands. Some people have already begun benefiting financially from bloodshed.

So it's proper at this point, we think, to ask, "Where do we go from here?"

Are prices going to go up and up and up? If so, are we going to wait until they're 'way up before talking about price controls?

And isn't it likely that we're heading for that vicious cycle called inflation?

There're several things we can do about the situation.

We, as a nation, can quit acting like a bunch of ninnies and buy only those things we actually need.

We can let the hysteria send us on a buying spree which will result in a price increasing spree.

We can slap on price controls.

Regardless of what we do, however, we ought to be ashamed of how we've behaved up to this point.

The Bard Gets Into The Labor Movement

There are times when the immortal Shakespeare wrote as if he were an active union member or organizer, as a few excerpts from his plays indicate—

"What is man, if his chief good and market of his time be but to sleep and feed?"

Antony and Cleopatra, Act IV, Sc. 2

"Strike, you slave; stand, rogue, stand; you neat slave, strike."
King Lear, Act II, Sc. 2

". . . they shall strike."
Richard II, Act III, Sc. 3

"Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that' no matter, the greater part carries it."
Coriolanus, Act II, Sc. 3

"Indeed, Master Ford, this is not well; indeed."
Merry Wives of Windsor, Act IV, Sc. 2

"Since we have begun to strike, we'll never leave till we have hewn thee down."
Henry VI, Pt. 3, Act II, Sc. 2

"Fear no more. . ."
Cymbeline, Act IV, Sc. 2

". . . a good demand."

ULC Quizzes Candidates

Vermont's United Labor Committee, composed of representatives of CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions, last week invited 16 candidates for state and national office to answer a list of questions.

All but one accepted the invitation. Of the group that appeared, all but one answered the questions, which concerned Taft-Hartley and other labor legislation, the St. Lawrence Seaway project, and a possible Vermont Power Authority.

The session was off the record and the candidates were interviewed one by one.

The entire procedure was so unprecedented in rock-ribbed Republican Vermont that the event rated nearly two feet of space in the Burlington, Vt., Free Press, which sought to find sinister implications in the fact that reporters were not invited and in general handled the story as if it were a very hot potato indeed.

The paper made much of the fact that Gov. Arthur was before the committee for a whole half-hour and quoted in full a statement by another interviewee, George M. Abbott, Congressional candidate, who hissed: "In Russia, people are instructed how to vote. That is why Russia is a slave state."

He could have added that in Russia, candidates don't like to be questioned, but he didn't.

He Was The Boss For A While, Then—

THIS IS A STORY about a man who climbed a big step up the ladder to so-called fame and fortune and then climbed right back down again.

It started back in 1917 when Mr. Jones, as we shall call him, became managing director of a phosphate plant—the largest industry in the town in which it was located.

Mr. Jones and his recent bride had reason to feel proud. After all, he'd just been out of school a short time. And the job of managing director was a good one.

The Joneses quickly made a lot of "friends" in their new town and were almost immediately "accepted" by the "better elements."

Yes, the future looked bright.

And then something started troubling Mr. Jones.

THE MEN WHO WORKED at the phosphate plant, Jones soon noticed, were poorly clothed. And he gasped when he learned about the meager lunches in their pails.

He did a bit of checking and here's what he found.

Most of the workers were paid $1.25 for a 12-hour day—and prices were going up because of the war in Europe.

The men simply couldn't make ends meet.

Jones sat down at his desk and wrote a detailed letter about conditions to the "home office" in New York. He told about the conditions of the workers and strongly recommended a substantial wage increase for them. He mentioned that there was talk of forming a union.

Jones got a prompt reply, in which he was told that the "home office" determined wage rates and that it was completely satisfied with existing pay.

He was told that if the workers kept talking about unionization he should form a company union and become its president—so the company could keep it under control.

JONES WASN'T satisfied with the "home office" reply, so he kept needling his employers to "do something" for the employes.

He got no satisfactory replies.

Finally he said that if the "home office" didn't do something to remedy the situation he was going to help the men form a "real union."

He then got a telegram from the "home office." In effect, it said, "You're fired!"

A short time later Mr. and Mrs. Jones appeared on a platform with a union organizer and urged the workers to organize.

They organized—and then they struck.

Immediately the Joneses became "outcasts" insofar as the "better elements" of the town were concerned.

Their "friends" wouldn't even speak to them when they met on the street.

And the situation didn't improve when Mr. and Mrs. Jones showed up on the picket line.

BECAUSE OF THEIR low pay, none of the workers had been able to build up a reserve on which to live while on strike. And union finances were slim, too.

The strike dragged on—for one month, two, three, four, five.

And piece by piece Mr. and Mrs. Jones sold their personal possessions to raise money to aid the strikers.

Finally the situation became somewhat desperate—so the Joneses sold their home.

The strike was eventually won, but the settlement did not provide for Mr. Jones to return to his old job.

Instead, he and Mrs. Jones became union organizers.

They took part in some of the toughest organizing campaigns in the country.

Mr. Jones died several years ago and Mrs. Jones has retired as an organizer. But her heart's still with the union movement.

She recently told a CIO News staff member:

"What happened down there at that phosphate plant really opened our eyes—and if we had our lives to live over again we'd do just like we did back in '17."

ACTION ON 2 FRONTS!

UNESCO Operates In Many Fields To Unite People

By STANLEY H. RUTTENBERG
CIO Education And Research Director

IN TWO PREVIOUS articles appearing in the CIO NEWS I have commented on some of the work of UNESCO in fundamental education, reconstruction and exchange of persons, with particular reference to involving the great masses of people throughout the world.

UNESCO works in many other fields of endeavor. It has been studying the social tensions that cause people to become engaged in international conflict. The results of these studies may provide us with leads in how to approach tensions which cause conflicts.

UNESCO is also conducting projects to popularize natural sciences. For example, contributions made to natural science by scientists of India and other countries throughout the world are brought to the attention of other peoples. Thus the contribution of scientists in one country is made clear to peoples throughout the world. This is all done on the assumption that appreciation by Latin-Americans of contributions made by Asiatics, and vice versa, to the scientific world, will develop a better understanding between these two groups of people.

MUCH EFFORT IS made in UNESCO's work to develop a closer relationship between peoples in various professions. UNESCO is encouraging the establishment of international groups of natural scientists, political scientists, economists, historians and philosophers.

This work of aiding international organizations is based on the premise that when people in the same walks of life understand each other's problems, help each other develop and grow stronger, share knowledge in their respective fields, and learn to work together in these and many other ways, they will become great benefactors of peace.

Third Of Series

This is the third of a series on UNESCO by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, who recently returned from Florence, Italy, where he attended the Fifth International UNESCO Convention. He served as an advisor at the conference.

Obviously some of these reasons are the same as those behind the formation of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which the CIO played such an important role in establishing. Of course, the ICFTU was established because of the international interest of free trade unions throughout the world in getting together in an organization to fight for common objectives.

IT SHOULD BE understood that when the trade union groups established the ICFTU on their own initiative, they were doing the thing which UNESCO is encouraging peoples in other walks of life to do.

In addition to this work UNESCO spends approximately one-eighth of its $8 million budget in the field of mass communications, that is, in the field of the radio, press and film.

It is felt that one can get at the minds and loyalties of people through the printed word, through the cinema, and through the spoken word on the radio. UNESCO's Department of Mass Communications publishes material for use by radios, newspapers, magazines, etc., in an effort to bring before the people of the world the objectives of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and the need and desire of people to promote peace and security.

UNESCO also encourages the production of films that develop the themes of its objectives. For example, more films produced by Hollywood that promote an understanding of the problems of discrimination would make a basic contribution toward peace and security.

ONE OF UNESCO's objectives is to encourage more of these kinds of films to be produced not only in Hollywood, but in other motion picture production centers throughout the world.

In order for UNESCO to be completely successful in carrying the message of international understanding and cooperation for peace and security, its efforts must reach people. It must be an organization in which people talk to people, and not an organization in which just intellectuals talk to intellectuals.

One of the greatest difficulties in the organization up to the present is that it has not directed its sphere of attention to the great masses of people throughout the world. Much good work is being done by UNESCO in many of the fields I have already mentioned—social tensions, education, communications, etc.—but unless the information developed by these departments gets to the masses of people, the objectives of the organization will not become properly and adequately implemented.

It can be said that UNESCO, really to catch on, must become a mass oragnization. It has not yet widened its base of operation, but having worked with the organization in the past few years, I feel confident that in time it will.

Senate Probers Declare —

McCarthy Used 'Big Lie' To Perpetrate 'Hoax'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

SENATE Republicans fought a desperate but losing battle last week to whitewash Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin.

By a sizeable majority, the Senate refused to set up a new investigation of the charges with which McCarthy had filled the nation's headlines during the spring of 1950.

So the report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee stands—a scathing condemnation of the Wisconsin Republican, whom three of his fellow Senators called everything but a "liar."

Senatorial courtesy apparently held back the distinguished three-man majority of the Foreign Relations Sub-Committee from using the four-letter word on McCarthy.

But their report was peppered with fiery phrases such as these:

- "The charges and the methods employed to give them ostensible validity . . . (were) . . . a fraud and a hoax perpetrated on the Senate of the United States and the American people.

"They represent perhaps the most nefarious campaign of half-truths and untruths in the history of this republic."

- "For the first time in our history, we have seen the totalitarian technique of the 'big lie' employed on a sustained basis."
- "We have found that the complaint of Sen. McCarthy concerning disloyalty in the State Department . . . is false."

THE MAJORITY opinion was signed by three Democrats: Sen. Tydings of Maryland, who has generally voted more conservative than Fair Deal; Sen. Brien McMahon of Connecticut, who heads the influential Joint Committee on Atomic Energy; and Sen. Theodore Green of Rhode Island, an alert 82-year-old banker and scholar.

Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper (R. Ia)—who stumbled into an ineffective attack last year on David Lilienthal, then head of the Atomic Energy Commission—asked for more time to file a minority report. He will probably give McCarthy a clean bill of health.

Sen. Henry Lodge (R. Mass.) filed a curious minority report that knocked down many of McCarthy's charges—particularly in the case of Owen Lattimore, the Far Eastern expert. But he held back from any outright attack on the Wisconsin Republican.

Lodge, who failed to attend many of the hearing sessions and who read only a dozen of the files on people attacked by McCarthy, complained that the investigating committee hadn't been thorough enough in its probings.

With Hickenlooper and Lodge dissenting, the Foreign Relations Committee voted 9-2 to send the sub-committee report to the main body of the Senate. And by an 11-0 vote, it discharged the sub-committee, thus ending any further investigation of McCarthy's charges.

THE REPORT of the three-man majority was a methodical examination of the various points raised by McCarthy, and a summary of its findings on 10 men and women whom he had branded as Communists or disloyal.

The McCarthy charges started off with four speeches—three of them made at cities around the country, and one on the Senate floor. The committee took them up one by one:

1. McCarthy, on Feb. 9, at Wheeling, W. Va., had said: "I have here in my hands a list of 205—a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping State Dept. policy."

The report: "Our investigation establishes that the foregoing allegations are false, and particularly, that Sen. McCarthy had no such list as alleged, and that there is not one member of the Communist Party or of a 'spy ring' employed in the State Dept. known to the Secretary of State or other responsible officials of that department."

2. McCarthy, at Salt Lake City on Feb. 20, said: "Last night I discussed the Communists in the State Dept. I stated that I had the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party."

The report: "Our investigation establishes that Sen. McCarthy at no time has had the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party in the State Dept. . . . and he has been unable to produce competent evidence or to indicate where such evidence is available concerning one member of the Communist Party, card-carrying or otherwise, who is employed in the State Department."

3. McCarthy, in a Feb. 20 speech on the Senate floor, read to his colleagues what he said was the speech that he had delivered in Wheeling on Feb. 10—but actually he changed the wording of the most important paragraph of the Wheeling speech.

Instead of reading the Wheeling speech as delivered, McCarthy softened it to cover only 57 cases of people who "would appear to be" Communist card-carriers or supporters of Communist policy.

The report said: That substitution of paragraph "constituted a misrepresentation of the true facts to the Senate."

4. McCarthy, in his Senate speech, left the impression that his facts were all new, and had been secretly obtained.

The report found: The Senator's list of 81 cases was in fact a "colored and distorted version of material developed" by staff investigators of committees of the GOP-controlled 80th Congress. Four committees had all the material about the so-called 81 cases—and realized the material was of little value or significance.

The report also found that while Sen. McCarthy had said he would be "willing, happy and eager" to present full information to the committee, he had in fact followed a policy of non-cooperation.

"Our investigation establishes that the only logical reason for the Senator's non-cooperation and failure to supply further information was the fact that he had no information to supply."

SEN. TYDINGS, who headed the sub-committee, really "poured it on" to Sen. McCarthy during the course of a long speech on the Senate floor.

"A fraud, and a hoax, and deceit" ran through "this whole matter," he said.

Tydings said he did not propose a formal censure of McCarthy—but he said that if Senators read the record of the McCarthy affair, "you'll find out who's been whitewashing . . . whitewashing with mud . . . slime and filth."

So far as evidence is concerned, he added, "there's not an ounce of truth" in McCarthy's evidence. And he added that he thought McCarthy had done a dis-service to the boys in Korea, "standing out there between democracy and dictation" while their families read such charges based only "on loose threads, sketchy, hashed-over, worn-out evidence."

Tydings also paid his "respects" to one of the sub-committee's most vocal critics, Republican Sen. Jenner of Indiana. He accused Jenner of voting on every major foreign policy issue right together with "Joe Stalin and the Daily Worker."

Sen. Joe Faw Down An' Go Boom!

HERE'S WHAT the Senate investigation committee found about 10 persons accused by Sen. McCarthy of being Communists now in the employ of the State Dept.:

1. Esther Brunauer. She had been a member of one organization five years before it was cited as a Communist front, and in 1934-36 had participated in two meetings of a pro-Soviet organization.

"The conclusion is inescapable . . . that there is no evidence that Mrs. Brunauer is disloyal, a Communist sympathizer or a security risk."

2. Gustavo Duran. He'd resigned from the State Dept. in 1946.

3. Haldore Hansen. He's neither "one of the most strategically important officers" of the State Dept. nor will he be in charge of spending millions under the Point Four program—as McCarthy had charged.

On the basis of the record and of FBI investigations, "we do not find Haldore Hansen to be disloyal or a man with pro-Communist proclivities."

4. Philip Jessup, ambassador-at-large for Secy. Acheson. "The accusations made against Dr. Jessup are completely unfounded and unjustified, and have done irreparable harm to the prestige of the U. S."

5. Dorothy Kenyon, former New York judge: "It is apparent that she was less than judicious in joining certain organizations during the late 1930's and early 1940's . . . We do not find that her employment in the past by the State Dept. is evidence of the fact that the department has employed disloyal persons."

6. Owen Lattimore, Far Eastern expert, on whom McCarthy said his charges would stand or fall:

"We find that Owen Lattimore is not now and never has been in any proper sense an employe of our State Dept. . . .

"Far from being the 'architect of our Far Eastern policy'"—as McCarthy had claimed—"we find that Mr. Lattimore has had no controlling or effective influence whatsoever on that policy . . .

"We find no evidence to support the charge that Lattimore is the 'top Russian spy'—"as McCarthy had also claimed—"or, for that matter, any other sort of spy . . . In no instance has Mr. Lattimore, on the evidence before us, been shown to have knowingly associated with Communists."

7. Frederick L. Schuman, William College professor. Never a State Dept. employe. His only connection with State Dept. was a one-hour lecture delivered without pay — before the Foreign Service Institute in 1946.

8. John S. Service, State Dept. career employe. ". . . We conclude that John Service is neither a disloyal person, a pro-Communist nor a security risk. We have been particularly impressed with the frankness and cooperativeness of Mr. Service in his appearances before us."

9. Harlow Shapley, Harvard College scientist. Never was he a State Dept. employe "in any real and proper sense."

10. John Carter Vincent, U. S. Minister to Switzerland. McCarthy had referred to Vincent as No. 2 among his 81 alleged cases; a leading Communist; a member of a State Dept. espionage ring working for Russia, and a man who should be prosecuted at once.

Said the committee: "We have carefully reviewed the loyalty file concerning Mr. Vincent—and the McCarthy charges are absurd."

Loyalty Probe Study Suggested

A number of recommendations for procedure of Congressional hearings and for study of the government's loyalty program were suggested by the three-man majority of the Senate Foreign Relations Sub-Committee.

Its report contained suggestions for:

1. A 12-man commission—appointed by the President, the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House—to make a thorough, impartial study of the federal government's loyalty program.

2. A joint Senate-House committee to study the immunity of Congressmen and Senators from civil suits for speeches made in Congress, while seeking to insure that such immunity "does not become a shield to perpetrate injustice and fraud."

3. A warning to Congress that injustice often results from Congressional hearings on the loyalty of an individual.

4. A study of laws on immunity from prosecution for witnesses appearing at Congressional hearings.

'Fruit Tramp' Drive In High

THE WHIRLWIND drive to bring CIO unionism into the lettuce packing industry of California and Arizona is moving into high gear.

A petition and card-signing campaign has been started, with the hope that by mid-August CIO Local Industrial Union 78 will be ready to ask the National Relations Board for an early election among several thousand employes of the big lettuce sheds.

The Food Tobacco & Agricultural Workers—expelled from the CIO last February on grounds of Communist domination—has a union shop contract with the powerful Grower-Shipper Association.

Richard Leonard, national CIO representative, is heading up the organizing drive. Other CIO staff members are expected to be added in coming weeks.

Leonard pledged full support to the "fruit tramps"—the lettuce shed employes—against firing or blacklisting. The CIO has already filed a number of unfair labor practice charges, growing out of FTA attempts to blacklist pro-CIO members.

Charging a "conspiracy" between FTA and the Grower-Shipper Association, Leonard said "many people have been fired despite the fact they offered to pay dues and FTA refused to accept them. CIO is doing everything possible, through unfair labor practice charges, to stop this."

He quoted reports from many lettuce sheds to show that pro-CIO sentiment is strong in FTA's ranks.

Reported one worker: "We're all paid up in FTA, but we're about 75% for CIO—and we're going to stay in and fight until we win the election."

Meanwhile the new CIO California Industrial Union Council pledged 100% support to the local industrial union.

John Despol, council secretary, told a lettuce workers' mass meeting that CIO's fight is "to clean up infection spots in the trade union movement—and one of them is FTA right here in Salinas."

Talking about Communist actions in the past, he added:

"In the name of democracy, I've seen them destroy democracy. In the name of unions, I've seen them destroy unions—all toward their goal of total power over people."

Tim Flynn, CIO director in northern California, also predicted that the Communists "are going to get a licking, not only over in Korea, but in their complete elimination from the trade union movement in the United States."

Rumor Laid—Out

The CIO last week called the bluff of Communist party-liners in California's big lettuce-growing area.

CIO Local Industrial Union 78—preparing for a major National Labor Relations Board election contest with the CIO-expelled Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers—called a big mass meeting of workers in the packing sheds around Salinas.

FTA organizers tried to keep the crowds away with phony rumors that members of Harry Bridges' longshore union would be on hand to picket the meeting—and presumably to keep CIO members out.

Two longshoremen turned up for the meeting. They were both anti-Bridges and pro-CIO. They made it clear that rank-and-file longshoremen in San Francisco have no taste for Bridges' anti-CIO policies, and that they're working hand in hand with CIO.

Glass Workers Take Their Convention Seriously

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

OUTWARDLY THE biennial convention of the CIO Glass Workers held last week in Milwaukee followed the usual pattern of such affairs, but it had a distinct spirit all its own.

You didn't have to listen long to the proceedings, carried on in the Wisconsin Hotel's ornate, gold-scrolled banquet room, with its diagonal rows of tables crowded with delegates, to get the feeling that these men and women brought a special atmosphere with them from the plate and window glass, pottery, tile, jar and numerous other plants in their industry.

They were an earnest crowd. It was plain that they took their union seriously and were deeply interested in all its affairs, down to the most minute details.

When Joe Froesch, the big sober-faced president of their union—full name, Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers of America—opened the convention on July 17 with a crack of his gavel, nearly all of the 125 delegates, representing 56 locals with a total membership of about 50,000, were in their seats.

Ten of the delegates were women. The union has more than 5000 women in its various locals.

WIVES OF delegates and other visitors, seated on couches and chairs around the edges of the room, crowded the hall to capacity. The crystal-spangled lights in the ceiling shown down on an attentive and expectant group. All had their eyes on the platform in front, where Froesch stood, flanked by the other members of the nine-man international executive board and the union's general counsel, Sam Rothbard. A narrow green cloth valance, pleated across the archway and down the sides, framed them like a picture. At one side was an American flag.

The delegates stood while the Star Spangled Banner was played and Rev. Franklyn Kennedy, editor of the Catholic Herald-Citizen in Milwaukee, and a member of both the Governor's and the Mayor's Committees on Human Rights, gave the invocation.

Secy.-Treas. Lewis McCracken read the convention call. Then members of the international executive board—composed of the president, two vice-presidents, secretary-treasurer and five district presidents—all spoke briefly on their special fields of work.

Froesch mentioned the union's pensions, won from the Big Glass companies and other gains which he said "were all steps in the right direction."

Vice-Pres. Leland Beard reported on his activity as head of the union's research and education program; Vice-Pres. Ralph Reiser spoke on his work as director of organization; McCracken discussed political action; District Presidents Herman Leiner, Neil Brower, Henry Wingert, Burl Phares and Willard Pelican told of the progress made in their respective districts, and the convention was off to a good start.

MAYOR FRANK P. Zeidler of Milwaukee, main speaker at the opening session, introduced to the convention by McCracken as a "square shooter," and one of the few mayors in the country who can truthfully be called a friend of labor, gave a rousing union talk that would do credit to any labor leader.

He said that Milwaukee's beautiful municipal recreation park and beach on the lake front was the realized dream of labor visionaries of 40 years ago. Pointing out that labor has a greater stake in both domestic and foreign affairs than any other group in society, he declared that it was labor's responsibility to develop progressive programs, in the general interest, that other groups could rally around.

LABOR CAN furnish the grass roots leadership for the people, he said, "and it's up to labor to seize this opportunity."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, the main speaker at the afternoon session, brought greetings to the convention from CIO Pres. Philip Murray. He told the delegates that obtaining unemployment insurance paid for by industry was the next big task facing the CIO.

"We must make American workers the most secure in the world, to be an example to others," Haywood said. He warned the glass workers that a big fight looms on the political front if labor is to defeat reactionary legislators. There's only one way this can be accomplished, Haywood said, and that is to "build strong unions."

"Don't ever kid yourselves into thinking that big industry has accepted unions—they've accepted them the way you accept measles," he declared.

John W. Gibson, assistant U. S. secretary of labor, also touched on this point in an address made later.

"If we are forced into another world conflict, labor must be named as a full partner with industry in any all-out war effort," he said.

"Uncle Sam can be assured of the all-out support of organized labor in any emergency. In view of this all-out support, labor deserves and therefore has got to be given full representation in the policy, planning and operational divisions of government agencies involved in any mobilization of resources."

Gibson warned of attempts being made by industrial groups in the midst of the present crisis, to undermine the wage structure of workers employed by companies which have government contracts under the Walsh-Healey Act, and to break down the unemployment insurance system.

HE'S A "SQUARE SHOOTER" and the kind of city official labor likes, Secy.-Treas. Lewis McCracken of the CIO Glass Workers Federation said in introducing Mayor Frank P. Zeidler (left), of Milwaukee, to the union's biennial convention last week in the Mayor's city. Zeidler made a militant Union Speech.

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce, he said, only this month passed a resolution calling for the repeal of the minimum wage provisions of the Walsh-Healy Act, which it declared had become "a thorn in the side of businessmen."

THE ATTEMPT to get the various states freedom to undercut labor standards through denials of unemployment insurance benefits, Gibson said, was being steered by Stanley Rector, a paid lobbyist for the "Unemployment Benefit Advisors, Inc.," an employer-financed outfit organized in Wisconsin.

The scheme cooked up has been embodied in the Knowland amendment to Social Security bill H.R. 6000, Gibson said. The amendment would prohibit the U. S. Secretary of Labor from intervening when a state violates federal standards in the unemployment insurance system, until the violation has been passed on by the state courts.

A good part of the convention's time was taken up with a careful re-examination of the international constitution. Each section of each article was gone over and passed upon after a detailed report recommending changes or no changes by the Committee on the Constitution.

TO THE Glass Workers, their constitution is an instrument to be used constantly. They don't allow it to get rusty, but look it over thoroughly, polish and sharpen it at every convention. It is referred to constantly in debate, and the meanings of its provisions are argued over as to their application in a particular instance. It is regarded as the final word.

One revision changed the word "shall" to "should." The arguments were prolonged and sometimes heated, as it involved the question of whether a local was to be instructed that it must affiliate with state and county CIO councils, as implied by the word shall, or whether, in a difficult situation, it could decide for itself, as implied by the word should.

As international officers are elected for a two-year term by referendum in odd-numbered years, Glass Workers' conventions have extra time that might otherwise be used in voting.

In drawing up the union's program for the next two years, the convention indorsed the CIO's policy on the current situation in Korea, hailing President Truman's prompt action against Communist aggression and urging support for his Point Four program to aid the industrially backward areas of the world.

DELEGATES ALSO pledged the union's "energies and resources" to help wipe out the Taft-Hartley Law; called for the defeat of Sen. Taft (R. O.)—the International's headquarters are in Columbus, O.; backed the National Health Insurance bill; indorsed the CIO's housing and rent control program; urged that the minimum wage under federal law be raised to $1; hailed the CIO's efforts to rid the labor movement of communism, and praised Murray for his outstanding leadership.

An organizing program adopted called for a drive to bring further office workers in the glass industry into the ranks of the federation, and a resolution on political action urged all locals and members to devote their energies "without stint" to getting out the vote. PAC Director Jack Kroll was scheduled to address the convention on the last day.

WOMEN PLAY an important part in the affairs of the CIO Glass Workers. More than 5000 of them are members. These 10 were delegates to the convention at Milwaukee. Six work in glass jar, pottery, tile and other plants on the production end, four are office workers.

Beginning at the left around the table, Mary Ellen O'Neill operates a drilling machine at the Corning Glass works, Charleroi, Pa., where she has worked for 24 years. She is financial secretary of the local and a member of the grievance committee.

Mae Hunt worked as a packer on the assembly line for 4½ years at the big Pittsburgh Plate Glass plant in Crystal City, Mo., and now is full-time secretary in the local union office.

Marguerite Cullen (standing) works in the kiln department at the Mitchell-Bissell plant, Trenton, N. J., which makes porcelain guides for textile machinery. She's been here 25 years and is president of the local.

Behind her in white suit is Ruth Willits, clerk at the PPG plant in Ford City, Pa., where she has worked for 13 years. She is financial secretary of the local.

Louise Billard also works in the kiln department at Mitchell-Bissell's in Trenton. She has been there 21 years, and is local financial secretary and a member of grievance and negotiating committees.

Pearl McAllister (head of table) has worked for five years at the Robertson Manufacturing Co. (tile plant) in Morrisville, Pa. She is a feeder—feeds tiles into the machine. Nearly half of the 425 workers there are women, she says.

Garnet Nameche (standing), an office worker at the PPG plant in Ford City, has been there 14 years.

Louise Metzger does decorating and blending in the studios of the Roseville Pottery, Zanesville, O., where she has worked for 14 years. She is financial secretary of her local.

Daisy White is a packer in the big Ball Brothers glass jar plant, Muncie, Ind. Margaret Lee also used to work there, but is now full-time secretary of the Muncie local.

Economic 'Educator' Bares All

THE OFFICIAL spokesman for a slick-paper cousin of the Committee for Constitutional Government "bared all" before the House Lobby Investigating Committee on July 18.

The spokesman was Leonard Read. The organization is the Foundation for Economic Education, which plumps for the same reactionary, big money principles and aims beloved of the CCG, but in a sober, sedate scholarly fashion.

The "all" that Read "bared" was a complete list of contributors who in the last four years poured a total of $1,348,489.05 into the FEE propaganda machine.

Read gave the names of the donors—more than 100 tory individuals, firms and foundations—with a wry face, and complained to the committee that he probably had lost at least one $10,000 a year contributor by doing so.

The names of the 40 largest donors are printed in an adjoining column. A glance will show that they include some of the same wealthy individuals and firms who have kicked in to every anti-labor, pro-big business propaganda and lobby outfit in the business of trying to convince the average American that the country is going socialist, if it isn't there already, and that such aids to mankind as social security, unemployment compensation, the TVA, public housing, rent and other price controls are depriving him of his freedom to go hungry and unsheltered in his own sweet way.

HIGH ON THE LIST, it will be noted, are the duPont Co. and the brothers Irenee and Lammot duPont, whose names have been linked to nearly every reactionary outfit since the Liberty League.

Some correspondence between Read and Lammot duPont also was entered into the record. Earlier in the probe, when the committee was questioning Merwin K. Hart, of the National Economic Council, a letter was introduced in which Lammot duPont wrote that all outfits working to set "sound views" before the public should be encouraged, as one can't do the job alone

In the FEE session, Lammot duPont's views on propaganda were laid bare in a letter to Read criticizing the accuracy of one of the organization's publications. Wrote duPont:

"I looked in my dictionary to find out the definition of 'propaganda' and find it to be 'any organization for spreading a particular doctrine or a system of principles.' This makes it clear to me that the meaning of propaganda is the spreading of one side of a question. That is not wrong or bad in its proper place. The practising attorney certainly spreads his client's side of the case, and does not spread his opponent's side of the case.

"Evidently, propaganda—if I have the right definition of it—has no place in teaching school. It seems to me that propaganda has its merits today, but the trouble with most of our propaganda is that it presents but one side of the case, and in addition does not adhere to the truth.

"There is no objection to propaganda if it tells the truth, even though it does not tell the whole truth."

Hmm-m.

DESPITE duPont's misgivings about the place of propaganda in teaching, the FEE made every effort to get its publications into the hands of grade and high school teachers and college professors. It had help from some of the other donors. The William Volker Fund, of Kansas City, Mo., which kicked in with $90,000 in gifts and an $80,000 "loan" during the four-year period, made one purchase of 20,000 books in 1946 for which it paid $3175. An accompanying letter was signed by W. W. Luhnow on behalf of William Volker & Co., and went into the record. A paragraph read:

"The thought struck me that the 10,000 dealers we serve in the Western half of the United States ought to be a pretty good cross section of our citizens both in rural and urban areas, so why not use this literature in mailings of about once a month to these dealers.

"We will ask them not only to read the literature but to take it to their local high school principal or to their college professor if in a college town and to purchase additional copies of anything that particularly strikes their fancy, and see what reaction we get after a few months of mailings. We hope that we will be agreeably surprised at the reader interest we develop."

The FEE was particularly active in propagandizing against the Tennessee Valley Authority, which has brought new prosperity to millions of Americans and created untold wealth for the country. Maybe that explains why the list of contributors included seven utility companies. The 1950-51 trustees include W. C. Mullendore, president of the Southern California Edison Co. of Los Angeles.

READ TESTIFIED that in the four years of its existence, the FEE had distributed about four million books and pamphlets which he claimed represented the "truth" as the FEE saw it on such controversial issues as TVA, the Marshall Plan, rent control and similar matters. He insisted the FEE is primarily interested in research in the working of the "free market" and that it takes no position on legislation.

The FEE is not registered as a lobby group and donations to it are exempt from income taxes. (Donations to the CIO Political Action Committee are NOT deductible.) FEE is cleverer and less obvious than the CCG, the executive secretary of which, Edward A. Rumely, mailed propaganda to members of Congress by the wastebasket-full. In the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, the "coordinator" named by the GOP saw to it that each congressman "requested" and received all FEE material.

Daily Worker Brushes Off Wallace

Henry Wallace, the man who came to dinner at Progressive Party headquarters and stayed on, has apparently worn out his welcome, judging from a recent editorial in the Daily Worker.

"Hopalong Henry" was taken severely to task by the D.W. for his recent indorsement of U. S. participation in the Korean war.

The editorial cited in detail Wallace's past record of opposition of such anti-Russian measures as the Truman doctrine of "containing Communism" all over the world, the Marshall Plan, military aid to the "corrupt" Greek government and "interference in the affairs of the Chinese people."

"And now," the editorial continues, "he has said we must continue our fight against North Korea troops in South Korea until such time as Russia is willing to use her influence to stop the fighting and start through the United Nations negotiations for the settlement of the whole Asiatic problem.

"Henry Wallace has left Gideon's army."

Anti-Labor Amendment Put Up To Ark. Voters

The people of Arkansas will get a chance to vote in November on a constitutional amendment to repeal the state's "Freedom to Work" amendment, which outlaws even the union shop.

With only 19,945 signatures required, initiative petitions with 25,929 names have been filed with the secretary of state.

Westinghouse And IUE Sign Interim Pact

TWO BIG developments in the past week straightened out some of the complicated finances involved in the nine-month dispute between IUE-CIO and UE and will start the long-anticipated flow of money into the IUE treasury.

An interim agreement with Westinghouse Eelectric Corp. was ratified July 16 by the IUE Westinghouse Conference Board. In addition to providing grievance procedure and provisions on hours of work, overtime payment, holidays and vacations, the agreement makes arrangement for the check-off to start in August.

These partial provisions will remain in effect for 90 days during which negotiations will continue toward a complete agreement, including economic items. A new pension and social insurance program will be discussed.

Meanwhile General Electric checkoff funds from last November to April 1—totaling $422,682—have been held in escrow pending a decision by Federal Judge Knox as to whom they belonged. On July 17 he ordered that the funds be distributed according to an agreement reached between the contending unions that the union winning the local be given the local's treasury.

Under this agreement IUE will receive more than $225,000 and UE about $173,000. In the few units where the vote was for neither IUE nor UE the money will be returned to the individual workers. This amounts to approximately $10,000.

SAM JETHROE, star outfielder of the Boston Braves, is also a member of CIO Rubber Workers Local 74 in Erie, Pa. National League fans are calling him the most dangerous man on the bases in the senior circuit since Max Carey hung up his spikes. To date he has swiped 24 bases and is far ahead of rivals in both leagues.

ARA Pact Retains Hiring Hall

THE CIO Radio union last week concluded a new contract which "effectively keeps the hiring hall for union members" and adds a strong new security clause comparable to the union shop.

ARA Pres. William Steinberg announced in San Francisco that negotiations had been completed with the Pacific Maritime Association for a new agreement covering 600 West Coast ship radio officers. The agreement provides, according to Steinberg:

- Reinstatement of the old ARA contract as of April 28, date when the National Labor Relations Board cracked down on the ARA hiring hall under the Taft-Hartley Act.
- Continuation intact of past hiring practices, with all radio officers to be obtained through the union.
- Maintenance of industry-wide seniority, under which consideration will be given to seniority on all vessels under contract to the union—both East Coast and West Coast—and on the basis of recent experience (past two years) on U. S. vessels. The PMA failed in an effort to set up separate West Coast seniority.
- Agreement, subject to an NLRB union security authorization election, to a new clause—comparable to the union shop—which provides in effect that any radio officers hired who are not members of the ARA, must join the union within 30 days after hiring.

Steinberg said the new hiring clause, similar to that negotiated by the ARA and the CIO Maritime Union with East Coast dry cargo, tanker and collier firms, "effectively saves" the ARA's past hiring protection.

Steinberg and ARA Vice Pres. Philip O'Rourke are continuing negotiations toward an industry-wide pension and welfare plan, for which employer contributions now are accumulating.

ARA's contract has been in negotiation intermittently since mid-May, when the radio officers' union declared it had been locked out after West Coast ship firms tore up its agreement, and picketed San Francisco piers for some four hours.

Rank-and-file CIO Longshoremen, Firemen and other maritime workers supported the ARA in the tieup, which was called off after the PMA agreed to maintain the status quo during the negotiations just completed.

While the maritime workers backed up the ARA, the radio officers had "the heat turned on" by waterfront union party-line figures, who were anxious to support the shipowners' story and reluctant to aid the ARA in its now-successful fight to save its contract.

NMU Amendment On Meetings Wins

Members of the CIO Maritime Union have approved one constitutional amendment and rejected another in a month-long referendum conducted by the Honest Ballot Association.

The association announced approval by a vote of 10,678 to 1348 of a proposal to hold membership meetings once a month instead of the present twice monthly. At the same time an amendment which would have required a member to hold a minor post, such as patrolman, agent, dispatcher, etc., for six months before being eligible to hold office was defeated by a vote of 3651 to 8067.

The National Council, governing body composed of national and port officers, had recommended approval of the membership meeting amendment and rejection of the second.

Memo No. 3 To Boss: Here's The Saddest Story Ever Written, The Tearful Tale Of A Liberal Who Went Very, Very Wrong

MEMO (NO. 3) To The Editor: Thanks for the new typewriter. The old one was pretty well burned out, wasn't it? But that junkman didn't have to sneer at it.

The asbestos roller on the new one is bound to be an improvement. The automatic sprinkler system should be good, too. And the built-in fire alarm is real elegant, though the siren may disturb some folks.

In these dissertations on the Committee for Constitutional Government and Edward A. Rumely, the triple-plated so-and-so who runs it, there has been mention from time to time of John T. Flynn and his book, "The Road Ahead."

This book is the bible of the CCG and its offspring, Fighters for Freedom and Features for America. By the time the CCG gets through passing it out, it may be in as many homes as the Bible itself. Far right-wingers in the big dough pay for 'em, CCG distributes them free—it'll even sell one if properly approached.

Its main thesis is that the United States is well on its way to socialism, which is the same as communism; both are plugged by Socialist Planners, who, the author writes, "control" the CIO, AFL, Truman Administration, Americans for Democratic Action, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, British Government—in short, everybody interested in trying to do something for the little guy who needs help to help himself. It is a mixture of fact and fiction seasoned with twisted reasoning and laced with foreboding. It is a vicious book. It can easily make an impression on anyone who doesn't know the background and the facts. It contains some remarkable statements that must make Joe Stalin chortle. For instance:

"The Communist, in our domestic affairs, is a menace to the extent that he is the partner—and often a very effective partner—of the Fabian Socialist.

"The real enemy we must identify and fight at every crossroad and at all points is the American edition of the British Fabian Socialist, who is engaged in a sneak atack here as his comrades were in England, who denies that he is a Socialist and who operates behind a mask which he calls National Planning."

(Italics Flynn's.)

THE READER'S Digest published a condensation of this tasty little mess in its February, 1950, issue. It also quoted seven paragraphs of tub-thumping reviews in its own inimitable deceiving way. For instance, it quoted the New York Times' review as describing "The Road Ahead" as one of the two "most important books about the contemporary American scene that we will have this year." It didn't add the rest of the reviewer's reaction:

"Neither one is an intellectual or a literary achievement of any great consequence. Their importance lies in the fact they are the latest and most extreme manifestations of an endemic hysteria affecting a considerable segment of our society."

Ralph T. Coghlan, writing in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch a month ago, said:

"I have read Mr. Flynn's book and can understand why it is being seized upon by conservatives to be circulated among the American people. By and large, spokesmen for American conservatism in the past two decades have been pretty feeble and ineffective. Men like Herbert Hoover have done their best, and so have the publicity writers for such organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers. But their best is not very good.

"Mr. Flynn, on the contrary, is a brilliant pamphleteer, and a ruthlessly direct one. He knows how to write. His prose is blunt and simple. He is animated by fiery ideas and prejudices. One of the most ardent of the latter is his hatred of Franklin D. Roosevelt and nearly everything he stood for. His views of FDR were contained in 'Country Squire in the White House' and other writings.

"As a skilled propagandist, Mr. Flynn knows how to select facts which fit into his main thesis, ignoring others which do not. He knows how to present a measure of truth and distortion, so it is hard to unscramble them. He knows the value of repetition and innuendo. As a matter of fact, he is a sort of opposite number to the late Charles Michelson, the Democratic publicist who did so much to destroy Herbert Hoover politically.

"Mr. Flynn's book made an impression on me. If I had no standards or information to weigh against Mr. Flynn's words, the book might have made an overwhelming impression. If I were totally ignorant, it would have scared me to death."

THE REV. George G. Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Council, in his column for April 3, 1950, described "The Road Ahead" as "one of the season's most controversial and, in our opinion, most mischievous books." He gagged especially hard at Flynn's assertion that American unions are "socialist-controlled," and his flat statement that the late Sidney Hillman, president of the CIO Clothing Workers, was head of the CIO "until his death, when he was succeeded by Philip Murray."

"The latter inaccuracy," observed Father Higgins, with commendable kindness, "is laughable but relatively unimportant. The former, however, is a dangerous falsehood."

Now get a good, firm grip on your nerves, boss. Flynn used to be a liberal. In fact, you might say he was almost a radical. There was a time—gosh, but it must seem a long way back now—when FDR wasn't far enough to the left for him. He wrote a column for The New Republic, and it was a good one.

Like a lot of other liberals during the 1930's, he was a pacifist and an isolationist, and he didn't like British "imperialism." In 1940 he wrote the "Country Squire in the White House" and attacked Roosevelt as a disappointment to liberals and an aristocrat who was likewise a warmonger and an imperialist.

From then on his liberalism went down the drain faster and faster. His isolationism became stronger and stronger. He no longer attacked the Fascists. The New Republic dropped his column. He became chairman of the New York chapter of the America First Committee of noxious memory and national chairman of the equally objectionable Keep America Out of War Congress.

FLYNN, IN ALL fairness, tried to fight off the Fascist influence in these outfits at first. He repudiated the support of the German-American Bund, the rank Nazi-supporters who later went on trial for sedition, and the Coughlinites. But eventually they won him over, and he began writing pieces for the magazines attacking Great Britain which won him plaudits in the Nazi German language press.

I guess things just went from bad to worse. Look where he is now—right up there chumming with people like Merwin K. Hart, head of the National Economic Council, which is being investigated along with CCG by the House Lobby Investigating Committe; patted on the back by Joe Kamp, executive vice president of the Constitutional Educational League, who is at the moment doing a stretch in pokey because of contempt of Congress, a favorite child of the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, who has turned a notorious mixture of religion, politics and rabble-rousing into a good thing—a very good thing—for Smith himself.

This is the guy whose book the CCG is using in an effort to convert the U. S. to its own peculiar brand of reaction. The CCG aims to distribute two million copies by the end of the year.

IT'S DOING this directly, through other outfits on the lunatic fringe of fascism and especially through its own creation, Fighters for Freedom.

Fighters for Freedom is a "grass roots movement," to use a phrase the CCG dredged up from the Bull Moose campaign of 1912, which people are invited to join "to save yourself and your country from the creeping, stealthy advance of socialism."

"Only organization," it says here, "community by community, by patriotic men and women willing and able to save themselves, can ever stop the undermining and eventual destruction of our Republic."

"IF YOU DON'T WANT to live under a Socialist-Labor Union Government," the literature says elsewhere, "if you would safeguard our own form of government and preserve political, social and economic freedom in America, the Committee for Constitutional Government invites you to join the Fighters for Freedom."

They're really organizing, too, boss. They turned on the heat so in Memphis, Tenn., a couple of months ago, that Dr. L. M. Birkhead, director of the Friends of Democracy, an organization devoted to pointing out pious frauds like the CCG and the Fighters for Freedom, was prevented from speaking on the ground he's a Communist!

Doc Birkhead is about as much a Communist as Phil Murray or Emil Rieve.

THE TORIES in Memphis have done so well organizing themselves that Sen. Mundt (R. S.D.), who can spot a Communist cell in a grade school, burst into oratory in the Senate on July 12. He used up more than a page of the Congressional Record with a Grade B Fourth of July speech plus a story from "that progressive and courageous southern newspaper, the Memphis Commercial-Appeal," detailing the accomplishments of the local lodge of Fighters for Freedom.

"This fighting, articulate, highly significant organization of the men of Memphis," he recounted, among other things, put 1882 copies of "The Road Ahead" into every schoolroom in the city—a fine thing indeed for the basic instruction of the next generation of Memphians in lieing, distorting, viewing with alarm and heavy breathing. Wonder what would happen if the CIO put a collection of Phil Murray's speeches in every Memphis classroom?

"Distribution of the book," said the Commercial-Appeal article with which Mundt rounded off his peroration, "is the latest step by the fast-growing Memphis organization to acquaint the public of the need for action to preserve our cherished freedom.

"Organized here just two months ago, the Fighters for Freedom and the Memphis Committee for Constitutional Government have mushroomed to where there are now more than 2000 members in the organizations."

"The Memphis organization is just one of 28 already formed across the country. Typical of the work being carried on by other fighters for freedom is the job being done in Florida.

"Before the recent Democratic Senatorial primary there, more than 100,000 copies of 'The Road Ahead' and other pieces of literature were distributed. Workers convassed the state telling the citizens that a vote for George Smathers was a vote for constitutional government and freedom."

FEATURES FOR America comes right out in print and advertises columns for newspapers by Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.), the Boy Babbler of the Bronx River, and Dr. Willford I. King. It describes them as "informative and squarely in the stream of current comment," and I guess you know they're slanted at a crazier angle than the leaning tower of Pisa. It also circulates "Paul Revere Letters" warning that the British Socialists are moving in on us. Don't laugh—it works.

Gwinn is a professional bleeding heart for the wealthy who's doing his damnedest to uphold the right of a fellow to starve to death if he can't find a job or is too old to work. When he speaks in Congress, it's his voice but the CCG's speech. Like the rest of his sort, he follows the Commie line faithfully when it comes to foreign affairs, and he has an anti-labor record longer than a spurned woman's memory.

King is Rumely's front. He's carried on CCG letterheads as chairman but in his appearances before congressional committees professes only a hazy knowledge of what's going on in his own office. His heart, too, bleeds furiously at the mere mention of higher taxes on the poor millionaires.

Boss, this new typewriter is a wonder. The refrigerating system really works. But it's awful tiring typing with fingers still bandaged from the last time. So I'm just going to quite here.

GERVASE N. LOVE.

Logroller At Work

Rep. Gwinn (R. N. Y.), who has assumed a position as a leader of the reactionary Republican forces in Congress, is a great admirer of Dr. George S. Benson, president of Harding College, Searcy, Ark., and moving spirit of the Freedom Forum.

The Freedom Forum is a stunt whereby anti-union employers force their workers to listen to speeches extolling big business, the Republican Party line and the virtues of so-called "free enterprise," and at the same time belittling the accomplishments of unions, the Fair Deal and the New Deal.

Gwinn is such an admirer of Benson that in February, 1950, he took up the time of the House by making a laudatory speech extolling him and recounting his efforts to stem the tide of "socialism" all the right wingers allege is sweeping the country.

FEDERAL EMPLOYES in Washington crowded a rally sponsored by CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee and heard Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) urge them to join union. Left to right are William C. Mirengoff, organizing chairman of local 1; Sen. Humphrey, and Pres. Samuel D. Danley of local 1. Rally was called at Danley's request.

Organize, Humphrey Tells U. S. Employes

Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) told a government workers' rally in Washington that "the United States government has an obligation and a responsibility to be a model employer," since it must set the example for democratic labor relations.

"Government workers do not have the right to strike," Humphrey told the rally, which was sponsored by the new CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee. "But they do have a right, just as every other American has a right, to join unions of their own choosing for the purpose of democratic collective bargaining as to fair conditions of employment.

"There is no reason at all why government workers should not have a right to join unions to represent them before congressional committees and in their own agencies to settle grievances. The essence of democratic government is to preserve the human element in government service."

The GCEOC was established after the United Public Workers was expelled from the CIO on charges of Communist domination. Samuel D. Danley, Pres. of GCEOC Local 1, presided at the rally.

Humphrey told the gathering, which was well attended, that government workers have the responsibility of joining with Congress "in an effort to run an efficient government operation which is both businesslike and human at the same time."

"The objective is particularly vital today," he said, "with the developing international crisis. Unfortunately, we are entering a period which will force our government to spend increasing amounts in defense armaments and we hope in economic and social programs such as those of the Point Four program."

The Senator came out against reckless curtailment of non-military government expenditures, which he admitted was a temptation to Congress, stating that in many instances petty economy brought about real waste.

He asked the audience to give Congress some money-saving ideas that would lead to more efficient operation, and stated that in his opinion an increase in postal rates would be one method of helping Congress "economize constructively."

Raises, Pensions At Hudson

The CIO Auto Workers has signed a new contract with the Hudson Motor Car Co. which provides pensions, medical and hospital insurance and a wage increase of 3c an hour for 20,000 workers.

The agreement, reached after a 15-hour bargaining session, removed the threat of a strike that had been voted by UAW Local 154 in Detroit.

The pension plan, modeled after the recent General Motors contract, runs for five years. The contract itself, including a full union shop, is for a three-year period but may be re-opened each year on wages and economic provisions.

UAW estimated the cost to the company at 15c an hour for each employe, including the across-the-board wage raise and improved differential and vacation pay. The annual gain for each worker will be approximately $300, making the overall yearly cost to the company about $6 million.

The pact guarantees pensions of as much as $117.50 monthly to workers 65 years old who have had 25 years service, and modified amounts for shorter terms. The company assumes full cost of the hospital and medical insurance programs.

Chicago, 3 Puerto Rico Towns Pass Rent Control Ordinances

CHICAGO will have federal rent control until June 30, 1951, no matter what happens elsewhere.

The Chicago City Council, by the overwhelming vote of 44-2, passed a resolution on July 12 continuing controls past the Dec. 31 automatic expiration date.

The same action has been taken in the city councils of three Puerto Rican communities, the largest being the town of Isabella.

In Kokomo, Ind., the City Council not only voted to keep controls beyond Dec. 31 but reversed a previous decontrol resolution in order to do so. (The decontrol resolution had not been sent to the Office of the Housing Expediter, or the later action would have been ineffective.)

The unions in Akron, O., spearheaded by the Akron CIO Council, are busy gathering the 7500 necessary signatures to force a referendum on the Akron City Council's decontrol vote, which will go into effect Aug. 7 unless stopped.

ALL OVER the country, similar actions are brewing as the result of the rent control law passed by the 81st Congress. Under the new law, controls expire automatically on Dec. 31 in over 3000 communities now under rent ceilings—unless the governing body of the community votes before then to ask for continuance, or unless the local citizens ask for it by referendum.

The Illinois situation, however, is particularly acute. There, the state attorney general ruled that the legislature must pass an enabling act to make the federal law effective.

So the legislature, dominated by down-state farmers, got together and passed an act stating that any Illinois community that wanted rent control after Dec. 31 had to vote for it before Sept. 1—a full three months before the deadline in other states. The legislators also said that for such a community action to be valid, it must be approved by three-fifths of the members of the local governing body.

OHE now is inclined to believe that the Chicago action will cover suburbs around the Windy City, too, but that point is not settled.

Meanwhile OHE is seeking quickly to check up on the membership of local rent advisory boards, which become even more powerful and important under the new law than they previously were. Before, the state governor could veto any local board's decontrol resolution. Now, the governor has no say in the matter. (See box with this story.)

OHE is also encouraging local rent boards to get up-to-date information on the rental vacancy situation in their communities, and is pointing out that OHE's staff will help in gathering accurate information wherever it is called for.

Last week for instance, OHE asked Gov. Douglas Mac Kay of Oregon to replace one Bartless F. Cole as "tenant" representative on the Portland area rent advisory board.

THE PORTLAND IUC and the State IUC both complained to OHE that, in their opinion, Cole was unfit to represent tenants. On June 29 the Portland council asked his ouster, stating that he had been a "most active and consistent advocate of decontrol."

In a personal letter to OHE Administrator Tighe Woods, Jesse Bell, secretary-treasurer of the Portland IUC, stated that Bell had attended only six out of 16 meetings of the board held since he was appointed in January, 1949, that he had become a homeowner, and that at the last meeting Bell, the "tenant" representative, had moved that the Board adopt a decontrol resolution.

Woods asked Gov. Mac Kay to submit the name of a candidate to replace Bell, stating that Bell clearly did not fulfill the requirements of a tenant representative.

Tenants: This Is Important!

Check-list for local unions and councils:

Area Rent Advisory Boards are supposed to be composed in the ratio of one "tenant" representative and one "landlord" representative to three "public-interest" representatives.

The boards are all-important, because if they pass a rent decontrol resolution, the Office of the Housing Expediter is required by law to issue a decontrol order. Once this is done, nothing can undo it.

The boards also have powerful influence on most city councils—their recommendations in favor of continuing controls will carry considerable weight.

The boards are appointed by OHE on recommendation of your state governor. OHE also can remove board members and substitute others.

OHE is checking on members of all boards to see that the ratio set forth above is observed. The CIO News believes you should check up too, and do it now. If you are dissatisfied, you should complain to OHE through the Area Rent Director.

Here are OHE's official rules governing selection of board members. Read them carefully.

"The tenant representative is a person who can present effectively the viewpoints, problems and needs of tenants. Generally, such a person will be the leader of a tenant or consumer organization or other organization concerned with tenants' problems in the area. It may be that in certain localities no active tenant or consumer organization will be in existence. In such a case the tenant representative should be a person who has identified himself as being interested in tenants' problems.

"The landlord representative is a person who has knowledge of and can effectively present the viewpoints, problems and needs of the landlords. Generally, such a person will be an owner or operator of residential rental property, or a real estate manager, dealer or broker.

"The public-interest representatives are persons who represent the viewpoints of the public at large. In this group are to be found individuals, such as leaders of veterans' organizations, who are concerned with housing problems of returned GI's; industrial or business leaders, professional men, newspaper publishers or editors, educators, public officials, leaders of organized labor, and leaders of women's group and civic organizations. Persons who qualify as landlord representatives or tenant representatives as well as persons directly or indirectly connected with real estate operations or tenants' groups cannot qualify as public-interest members."

Hastie OKed For Court Post

The Senate Judiciary Committee on July 17 approved by a 9 to 1 vote the appointment of Judge William H. Hastie to the Third U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The committee acted only a few days after its members received a letter from CIO Pres. Philip Murray asking for prompt and favorable action on the nomination, which had been stymied since President Truman sent it to the Senate on Jan. 5. Only Sen. Eastland (D. Mass.), one of the Dixiecrat bloc, voted against Hastie, who is a Negro.

Hastie formerly was governor of the Virgin Islands. He has a distinguished record of accomplishment and his "integrity and proven ability" were pointed out in Murray's letter. He has been sitting on the court under an interim appointment.

IWA Sets New High

A contract containing the highest base rates for the lumber industry in Arkansas has been signed by CIO Woodworkers with the sawmill division of the Crossett Industries at Crossett, Ark.

A wage increase of 3c per hour was won and raised the base rate to 79 cents, highest in the state according to IWA Rep. L. R. Hoover, who assisted in the negotiations.

The Rubber Workers: Born In A Haze Of Tear Gas

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE EARLY history of the CIO Rubber Workers makes interesting reading—but only if the reader has a strong stomach and does not mind descriptions of workers being beaten and used as targets for tear gas shells by police and deputies.

The rubber companies in and around Akron, O., "threw the book" at their employes in 1913 when they walked out in protest against a "speedup" put into effect at Firestone and rapidly adopted by the other major plants in the city.

STRIKEBREAKING techniques developed in that historic struggle set the pattern for the infamous Mohawk Valley Formula as applied by Remington Rand some 20 years later:

(1) Union organizers were branded as "agitators" by Firestone, Sieberling and Shaw, representing the big three in Akron. (2) The strikers were termed a "minority," imposing its will on the majority. (3) The strikers' demands were called arbitrary and unfounded. (4) A "citizens committee" was formed to bring pressure upon the community to break the strike. (5) The Chamber of Commerce attacked the strike and its motives. (6) Large numbers of deputies were sworn in by the local sheriff and vigilante activities were sponsored. (7) A "back to work" movement was started with strikebreakers.

The walkout began when Firestone posted a new wage scale, on one day's notice, which would have meant a pay cut of 35% for most workers.

On the twenty-fifth day of the strike, approximately 350 workers gathered at the Goodrich Rubber Co. plant and began picketing. The police ordered them to disperse. When the leaders refused, the strikers were charged and driven two blocks away, where they attempted to make a stand.

THE FIFTH WEEK of the walkout proved to be crucial. It was during this period that the employers, the Citizens Welfare League and the hostile press completely demoralized the workers. The strike was lost and the men went back the next week on terms dictated by the Big Three.

The following 20 years saw the growth and transformation of Akron into the rubber capital of the world and the rapid expansion of the tire industry.

Although no serious organizing drives were attempted during these two decades, the spark of life which flamed into a militant and well-knit union of 150,000 members in 1943 still glowed.

The year 1936 was only a few hours old when 500 Firestone workers struck over the suspension of a union member. The sit-down technique was used with good effect in this instance and at the end of 59 days, with 10,000 workers out, the company capitulated and signed a collective bargaining agreement with Local 7, URWA.

GOODRICH signed with the union a short time later. But the "tough nut" of the industry, Goodyear, was quite another matter. A strike was called there in 1938, after months of fruitless negotiations, and led to what newspapers called "the bloodiest battle in Akron's history."

The Akron Times-Press reported that behind police lines, "one room of the plant's gatehouse was filled with thousands of rounds of tear and nausea gas shells, grenades and bombs. Another room was the armory for arms of all kinds, including four Thompson machine guns."

Mayor L. D. Schroy indicated that he had the situation well under control and would do his "utmost to keep the factory open." When the company attempted to run in strikebreakers through the picket line, the Mayor's "control" ended abruptly.

"Police nightsticks cracked against skulls. Screams filled the air. Bleeding men and women, rushing blindly to get away from the maiming police clubs, trampled one another . . .

"A stand was made in front of the union hall. Many strikers ran upstairs to the assembly room. Police cut loose with tear gas on the hall . . .

"Round after round of gas was fired into the hall, leaving it a shambles. Twenty men who found all exits blocked were trapped, gasping and blinded in the union headquarters."

DESPITE MANY other instances of company and police-inspired union-busting-brutality, the Goodyear workers maintained their solidarity and the last of the Big Three finally signed a contract in 1941.

Detroit PAC Kicks Off Campaign With Rally

THE CIO Political Action Committee played a major role in getting more Democratic candidates on the Michigan ballot in 1950 than in the past 80 years, State CIO Pres. August Scholle told a Wayne County PAC rally in Detroit kicking off the fall campaign.

Scholle said the Democrats had candidates in every congressional district, state senatorial district, and all but two of the 100 state representative districts, a virtually unprecedented showing.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who won the 1948 primary on the strength of labor support in industrial centers, told the 200 delegates that "we have a chance this year to mold the political course of Michigan for the next generation." He is up for re-election.

The Wolverine state has not re-elected a Democratic governor in an off-year election since the victory of Woodbridge Ferris in 1914.

Williams pointed to the recent grant of a $9 million annual Michigan Bell Telephone Co. rate boost as striking illustration of what to expect from Republicans. The hike was voted 2-1 by the Republican Public Service Commission majority, overriding the Governor's appointee as Commission Chairman, John McCarthy. Williams and Atty. Gen. Stephen J. Roth plan court action to block collection of the increase.

"This is one year when labor simply can't afford to sit idly by while the Republicans claim another victory by default," Williams said. "It may be an off-year, but it's a rare opportunity to strengthen the foothold of progressive government in our state."

He cited "barbaric" inequalities in unemployment compensation and other benefits as major targets of reform in his next administration.

Contending that the state protects its 26 largest corporations from paying their share of the tax burden in a manner found in no other state, he called for backing in his fight for a four percent corporate profit levy.

"This is low by comparison with most of the industrial states," he declared. "It is an absolute necessity if we in Michigan are to finance even a rock-bottom program of state services." (LPA)

N. Y. Tenants Lose Back Rent Fight

Tenants in New York State have lost a fight before the Court of Appeals on back rent increases.

The decision means that landlords are entitled to collect increases granted by the Federal Housing Expediter before the state Rent Control law went into effect May 1. The court held invalid the section of the state law which attempted to forbid such collections.

Eubanks Urges U.S. Aid In Newsprint Dearth

SAM B. EUBANKS, executive vice president of the American Newspaper Guild, proposed on July 20, that the government help finance expansion of U. S. newsprint production by one million tons a year.

An expansion of that amount with regulations for fair distribution, Eubanks said, would "guarantee" a paper supply indefinitely for most of the country's daily and weekly newspapers.

The U. S. depends upon Canada for nearly 85% of its annual consumption of 5.5 million tons of newsprint.

Eubanks made his suggestion before a House monopoly subcommittee which is investigating whether a monopoly exists in the newsprint industry. Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) is chairman.

Eubanks said a 1948 Guild study of the industry "contains ample evidence that the suppliers of newsprint operate as a combination to control production and distribution and to fix prices."

The price of newsprint now is $100 a ton, compared with $58 per ton five years ago, while "it is generally agreed" that $85 a ton would give producers a fair return on their investment, Eubanks said.

Eubanks suggested that the subcommittee recommend a "new government policy" which would call for:

1. Assurance of a plentiful newsprint supply from resources under U. S. jurisdiction, including Alaskan forests.

2. "Protection" of that supply by guaranteeing some minimum such as 2000 tons per year to all purchasers at the lowest possible price consistent with actual production costs.

Eubanks said he believed it would take five years or more to work out a solution to the newsprint shortage. He doubted there would be a "change for the better" in that period.

"Many papers have about reached the point where they cannot take any more increases in newsprint costs," he said.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

On Monday, July 17, the writer addressed the convention of the Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers of America-CIO in Milwaukee, Wisc. This was the largest convention ever held by the Glass Workers, and reported the largest membership of its history. This fine organization is one of the original unions that help establish the CIO, and it has been an asset to the CIO ever since its original affiliation. The delegates and officers are standing behind the CIO and its policies all the way. President Froesch, his fellow officers, and the membership of this union are to be congratulated for building such a splendid organization.

The writer proceeded to New York, where he held meetings with both the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee and the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee. From New York the writer went on to Boston, Mass., to attend a mass meeting of the telephone workers.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that the United Paperworkers of America-CIO won a representation election among production workers of the Simpson-Doeller Co., Baltimore, Md., by a vote of UPA-CIO 35, no union 28, void 1.

Tom Andert, president, of the United Optical & Instrument Workers-CIO, reports that UOIW-CIO won a representation election at the Singer Optical Co., Evansville, Ind. by a unanimous vote.

CIO Reg. Dir. F. J. Michel reports that in a representation election at Louis Allis, Milwaukee, Wisc., the IUE-CIO was victorious by the following vote: IUE 735, UE 52, no union 8. IUE Rep. Harry Gordon was in charge of the campaign.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE victories: Electric Storage Battery, Boston, Mass., IUE 26, UE 0, no union 0; Roscoe Mfg. Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 20, UE 3, no union 2; Darling Valve Co., Williamsport, Pa., IUE 247, UE 9, no union 1; Grant Battery, Minneapolis, IUE 39, UE 25, no union 1; Monomelt Co., Minneapolis, IUE 7, no union 4; Merkle-Korff Gear Co., Chicago, Ill., IUE 85, UE 4, no union 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a representation election at the Swank Dry Cleaners, South Bend, Ind., the workers voted to be represented by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO by a vote of ACWA-CIO 12, no union 9.

USA-CIO Rep. Floyd J. Hill reports that in a union shop election at the Bristol mine of the Inland Steel Co., Crystal Falls, Mich., the workers voted in favor of the USA-CIO by 44 yes, 24 no, 1 void. The organizing drive was under the direction of Henry Burkhammer, director of District No. 33, USA-CIO.

William Donovan, director of District 28, USA-CIO, reports that in a union shop election at the Atlantic Foundry Co., Akron, O., 178 voted in favor of the union shop to 7 against. There were 2 void ballots.

John Lawson, secretary-treasurer, United Stone & Allied Workers-CIO, reports that in a representation election at Pembine, Wis. plant of the Staso Milling Co. the US&AW-CIO was victorious by a vote of 36 US&AW, 29 Intl. Hod Carriers. Reps. Harold Etchison and Robert Kutrz represented the US&AW in this campaign.

The US&AW-CIO also won a union shop election in 84 manufacturing plants in the Barre, Vt., district granite industry. Of the 434 eligible, 386 voted in favor of the union shop and 21 against.

CIO Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports that in a representation election at the McNeill-Libby canning plant, Rochester, Minn., the workers voted United Packinghouse Workers-CIO 265, FTA 9, neither 22.

CIO Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports that members of LIU No. 1403, of the P and R Macaroni Co., Auburn, N. Y., voted 36 to 12 in favor of a union shop.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers of America-CIO, reports that a representation election at Mixer and Co., Lincoln and Silver City, Mont., resulted as follows: eligible 67, IWA 50, no union 4.

James Dickerson, district director, USA-CIO, reports the following representation election victories: Magnet Cove Barium Co., Malvern, Ark., USA-CIO 93, AFL 2, neither 10; Magnet Cove Barium Co. Mining Div., Magnet Cove, Ark., USA-CIO, 65, no union 29.

Tentative Agreement Nears On Social Security

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

HOUSE-SENATE conferees went on quietly working on the social security bill last week, overshadowed almost completely by Korean developments. At the end of the week there had been several minor agreements reached, but none on the two most important differences between the House and Senate bills.

The conferees are expected to reach final agreement next week. The resulting bill probably will pass, in spite of a growing outcry from the Taft-Wherry wing of the GOP for cutting domestic spending to the bone in order to carry on the Korean action within a balanced budget and without raising taxes.

Arguments in favor of the bill have been strengthened, with the internationally-minded pointing out that it is, in a sense, an international measure and another propaganda weapon in the war of ideas.

THE U. S., they say, must take care of its aged and maintain their purchasing power, and the fact must be shouted throughout the world that in spite of military demands, the greatest democracy on earth went ahead with its plans to improve the lot of 11 million of its aged citizens.

So far, the conferees have tentatively agreed:

1. To accept a Senate provision which would have the effect of lowering the maximum amount of benefits a retired worker could receive by wiping out the present "annual increment" system, which gives him an extra 1% for every year he keeps on contributing after he has reached "fully insured status"—but

2. At the same time, to increase everyone's benefits by an average of 77½% as compared to the 90% average in the Senate version and 70% in the House; and

3. To make it possible for those who keep contributing after 1950 to receive higher benefits for the same amount of earnings than they would have received before, by allowing them a "new start" as of Jan. 1, 1950. In other words, if you keep working in covered employment for the required six quarter-year periods after 1950, and then retire, your benefits would be based on your average earnings for 1950 and after, rather than your average of the years before 1950. This would mean your average would not be dragged down by lower previous wages.

STILL UNSETTLED are two major questions:

1. Whether the Senate conferees will accept the House provision, heartily indorsed by all of organized labor, which would allow a permanently disabled worker to receive his retirements benefits before the age of 65; and

2. Whether the Senate will drop its "Knowland" amendment, really a strike-breaking clause put in by Sen. Knowland (R. Cal.) at the request of West Coast shipping interests. It is a complicated proposition, but in essence it provides that men may be denied unemployment benefits if they refuse to scab, in spite of the fact that the federal law clearly states that this may not be done.

TIRED AND HOT, the three-man delegation representing the Intl. Federation of Free Trade Unions, which is surveying the labor movement in the Orient, arrives in Tokyo. Shown are (left to right) John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils; F. E. Dalley, of the British Trades Union Congress, an interpreter, and J. B. Krane (wearing spectacles), of the ICFTU secretariat. ICFTU was set up to help spread Democratic ideals.

Senate Body Restores Cut In Point Four Fund

THERE'S ONE bright spot in the picture.

"Point Four" — the President's expanded program for providing technical "know-how" to backward areas—will start off with almost the full amount originally authorized by Congress, as a direct result of the Korean situation.

The Senate Appropriations Committee, which a fortnight ago voted to cut the amount to two-thirds of what the President had asked, and to slap highly restrictive conditions on spending even that amount, changed its mind completely last week and voted to support a sum within $500,000 of what the Budget Bureau had originally requested.

The change of heart came after a long conference with Mr. Truman, who told the economy-minded legislators that failure to approve the program would seriously jeopardize the U. S. position in Asia.

Point Four aid is intended for Asiatic countries primarily. Under the program, skilled personnel would be sent to work with local government to set up basic projects aimed at increasing agricultural production, upping electrical output, improving sanitation, utilizing native resources to build needed industry, etc.

The U. S. would put little or no capital into actual construction of the thousands of different projects envisioned, but would supply the technical assistance needed to get the projects going with local funds. As a condition of receiving this type of assistance, the governments involved would agree to certain minimum standards of wages and working conditions for the persons to be employed.

U. S. PRIVATE investors who might wish to follow up by backing the resulting industrial projects with their own funds would be guaranteed against abnormal losses through expropriation or local taxes, but would not be privileged to profiteer.

A sort of "pilot" operation of a similar nature has been going on in South America for the past 10 years. It has resulted in tripling crop production in some sectors, increasing fertilizer production and usage, wiping out malaria in some areas, etc.

The program is regarded as a real "export of democracy," a real example of democracy delivering the goods without enslaving the population. It would help those countries which are not involved in the Marshall Plan — those which, indeed are so under-developed that they have no large-scale industry or agriculture which could be benefited by Marshall Plan aid.

The Marshall Plan is set up to close the "dollar gap" in world trade. Point Four countries have never been much of a factor in world trade and their citizens have lived at the below-subsistence level for centuries. It is in the Point Four countries that communism is likely to make its easiest conquests.

The senate committee voted to provide the full $26.9 million requested by the Budget Bureau for Point Four and another $7 million for the previously established Latin American program.

T-H Repeal Sought In War

PRES. EMIL RIEVE, of the CIO Textile Workers, on July 15 asked President Truman to call for passage of the Fair Deal program now, including repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, and also suggested that the chief executive propose immediate enactment of stand-by economic controls to prevent artificial shortages and profiteering.

Rieve, who also is vice president of the CIO and one of the nine members of the United Labor Committee set up under the National Security Resources Board, transmitted his appeal in a letter.

"The United States must in words as well as deeds, personify the quest for freedom of all people everywhere," Rieve said.

"As you yourself have said, we are engaged in a struggle for the minds and hearts of men. Unless we win the moral contest we cannot win the physical one. This was amply demonstrated in China, where a superior army collapsed for lack of conviction; and newspaper dispatches suggest that a similar weakness exists to some degree among the South Koreans.

"It is not enough for Americans to know that Communism's promise of security is false. We must convince the world, not of Communism's shortcomings, but of democracy's superior virtues. . .

"I realize that the U.S. is using the Voice of America and other devices to propagate the democratic faith in other lands. My concern in writing you is not what we are saying overseas, but what we are doing at home.

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 31, 1950 82 No. 31

AGREEMENT TO WORK together in fields of political action and legislation was first fruit of CIO-AFL unity conference in Washington on July 25. Conferees also defined work to be done in future sessions, and at a second meeting on the following day agreed to consult again Aug. 4 in Chicago. Shown at the start of the opening meeting are (left to right) Pres. Charles MacGowan, AFL Boilermakers; AFL Pres. William Green; Pres. Daniel J. Tobin, AFL Teamsters; Pres. Dan W. Tracy, AFL Electrical Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve, CIO Textile Workers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers; CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood; Vice Pres. Frank Rosenblum, CIO Clothing Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran, CIO Maritime Union, and CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey. CIO Pres. Philip Murray was unable to attend because of a recent eye operation, and Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, of CIO Rubber Workers, was detained by a wage conference. See story on Page 3.

PRICES

The buying hysteria went on its merry way for another week, and prices went on up. The general wholesale level had risen 13% since the Korean affair started; wholesale food prices were up 9%. More increases are announced for fall. Back of it all are cynical men making a dollar on public confusion. There is no shortage of food, of textiles, of leather; there will be no appreciable cut-back in manufacture of washing machines, ironers, etc., unless war spreads, in which case controls will be slapped on. Here and there, voices were raised in warning and protest, labor's among them. (See story on Page 2.)

NSRB

Organized labor will be represented in the policy and operating divisions of the National Security Resources Board, top U.S. agency handling home-front economic stabilization. NSRB Chairman Symington announced creation of a National Policy Committee, with three members each from labor, industry, agriculture and the public. CIO Pres. Murray, AFL Pres. Green and Machinists Pres. Hayes have already been named. Everett M. Kassalow, CIO research official and secretary of the Full Employment Committee, will serve as assistant to Symington; other union men will be named later. (See story on Page 3.)

LOBBY

Did you ever wonder how the Committee for Constitutional Government manages to pay for all the reactionary propaganda that it's pouring on the country—in view of the fact that contributions to it are so small? It's not done with mirrors but with books. Wealthy tories pay for 'em by the thousands, CCG distributes them where it thinks they'll do the most good—to its own carefully compiled lists of editors, clergymen, teachers, librarians, etc. And the "purchasers" pay no income taxes because their money is spent on "education." Cushman Reynolds, of the Labor Press Association, tells about it on Page 8.

Prices Still Soar As Labor Warns Of Inflation

LABOR UNIONS, aware as no other group is aware of what inflation means to the wage earner, last week began doing what they could to combat the mounting wave of war-scare hoarding and profiteering.

At the national level, the nine-man labor advisory committee to the National Security Resources Board forcefully registered its opinion with that body and issued a public statement. The committee officially represents CIO, AFL, Machinists, Miners and the railway brotherhoods. It said:

"In the course of our discussion with the National Security Resources Board, we, the representatives of organized labor in America, were impelled to express our growing alarm at the sweeping increase in the cost of living during the past five weeks. These inflationary price rises overshadow every other economic factor in the nation. They spell growing hardship for millions of American families. They threaten to increase beyond all reason the cost of preparing our nation's defense of freedom.

"It is obvious that our government must move with speed and determination to halt this economic menace to our national stability. We cannot appease inflation. We must take whatever steps are necessary to halt the spiralling cost of living.

"We believe that excess profits taxation should be quickly adopted, to remove the incentive for speculative price increases, and to return to the government profits extorted from the public in these critical days through wholly unjustified rises in the price of necessities.

"Such legislation will prove to the people of America and to our boys in uniform that we are determined that no person, no group, no corporation shall profit out of the crisis in which the United States finds itself today.

"This is a time for equality of sacrifice by the citizens of our nation. We are confronted by profiteering, by price gouging—and, on the other hand, by a growing inadequacy in the buying power of millions of American wage earners. The general level of food prices has risen 9% since June 25 and 13% since January 1; shortages produced by speculative buying and hoarding are threatening to upset the living standards of the nation's working population.

"We call upon the Congress to act speedily and decisively to remedy this deteriorating situation on the American home front."

HOARDERS BEWARE! Members of CIO Transport Workers Local 234 are shown picketing a big central city supermarket in Philadelphia—or, rather, not the store itself but those of its customers who are hoarding. It's part of the local's campaign against war scare buying. All of labor is up in arms against hoarding and profiteering.

In St. Louis, the CIO joined with the AFL and independent unions and approached church and civic groups and City Hall, asking all who were able to start immediately on a campaign of education against scare buying. They also asked the Mayor to "point the finger" at anyone found deliberately profiteering.

In New York, unions were instrumental in getting the city government to pull 14 sugar profiteers on the mat and ask them to explain their perfectly legal but highly immoral and unpatriotic actions.

IN PHILADELPHIA members of the CIO Transport Workers embarked on a direct education campaign by picketing stores, warning customers against hoarding and merchants against unwarranted price rises.

The government, too, started protesting. President Truman in his message to Congress noted that the wholesale price level had risen 10% in four weeks—and even as he spoke, it went up another 3%. Secy. of Agriculture Brannan told Congress there was and would be no food scarcity, and blasted profiteers, particularly the big bakeries, whose announced 1c per loaf increase, he said, was completely unjustified because there had been no increase in wheat or labor costs. Farmers weren't benefiting, he said: profiteers were.

BUT THE sorry spectacle went on. The headlines told the story:

"Smokes Advanced Cent a Pack." "Rugs, Linoleum Prices Boosted." "Climbing Materials Cost to Boost Shoe Prices." "Grains and Lard Soar at Chicago." "Textile Products Increase Sharply: Prices up 5-20% in Two Weeks." "Prices of Cotton up 22 to 61 Points." "Rubber Again Up to New High Level: Coffee, Sugar Advance." "Gray Marketeers Demand Premiums up to 100% for Steel." "Fear of Military Buying Holds Furniture Demand at Near-Capacity Level."

Most cynical of all, from the Wall Street Journal:

"Mills Withdraw Sheets, Pillow Cases from Market Again as Retail Demand Soars: Plan Price Boost."

But: Don't hoard.

Maritime Unions, Owners Bar Reds From Korea Ships

A VOLUNTARY plan for keeping Communists and other subversives from American ships during the Korean emergency was adopted by employers and representatives of a majority of union members in the maritime industries at a meeting in Washington on July 24 with spokesmen for the federal government.

The Coast Guard will be in charge of actual policing of the agreement. No worker will be allowed aboard a ship without a pass the Coast Guard will issue on the basis of information supplied by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Naval Intelligence.

However, a worker thus barred will have the right of appeal either personally or through his union to a review board to be set up in each major port, and from that decision to an appeals board in Washington. On both local and national boards labor, management and the government will be represented.

THE PLAN was adopted as a means of assuring an uninterrupted flow of supplies to UN forces in Korea with a minimum of risk. A statement of policy issued by the unions and management said:

"We recognize that certain men, because of being known as Communist Party card carriers, subversives, or who are notorious as consistently carrying out policies of the Communist Party, will be classified as bad security risks by the military or proper government authorities.

"No ship will be delayed because any such men are rejected by the U. S. military or proper government authorities as a bad security risk.

"If such a man is thus rejected, the union involved immediately will furnish a replacement . . .

"No man shall be classified as a bad security risk as a means of discrimination because of union activities."

The union agreed that if picket lines are thrown around docks in "phony demonstrations" or comparable tactics, their members will keep working and "keep the vessels going."

THE UNION and management jointly recommended that the government take advantage of the pool of unemployed but experienced manpower available—thousands of licensed and unlicensed seamen, officers and longshoremen. Proper consideration was urged for them in manning vessels to be placed in commission from the "mothball fleet."

The unions taking part in the agreement—CIO, AFL and unaffiliated — were those which banded together informally some time ago to work together on problems of mutual concern. They include the CIO Maritime Union, Radio Association and Marine Engineers.

The Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and the Cooks Stewards, both of which have been charged with being dominated by Communists and face expulsion from the CIO, were not represented.

However, spokesmen for three locals of the Longshoremen were present and joined in signing the agreement on behalf of their members. They were Philip Sandin, of Local 10, Longshoremen, San Francisco, of which Pres. Harry Bridges of the ILWU is a member; Tom Kelly, of Local 34, Ship Clerks, San Francisco, and J. A. Hopkins, president of Local 19, Seattle, Wash.

LOCAL 10 finally put over a resolution, introduced by the officers, supporting United Nations action in Korea, after Bridges had succeeded in blocking action at two previous meetings. Bridges was booed when he said from the floor that he approved UN action in Korea but added that "I am for peace and I don't want to see World War III." The resolution condemned the North Koreans as aggressors and stated the local "will not join in, condone or recognize any phony Communist demonstrations, picket lines, etc."

Other major ILWU longshore locals in the past two weeks or so, despite Bridges' leadership, have passed resolutions guaranteeing that ships carrying cargoes to Korea will be loaded. Most of them also pledged all-out support of the UN intervention.

Local 6 in San Francisco passed such a resolution July 26 after booing Bridges when he opposed the loyalty check.

The blow is a particularly hard one on Bridges, because the World Maritime Federation, left wing body of which he is honorary president, has ordered a worldwide boycott on loading ships carrying UN cargoes to Korea.

Local 34 passed a resolution calling upon him to resign either his ILWU post or the WMF presidency. A similar resolution was introduced at the Local 10 meeting and was referred to the membership for a referendum vote.

Some Hiring Halls Found O.K.

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board ruled recently that a union may lawfully operate a hiring hall under the Taft-Hartley Act if it does so without discrimination against job seekers because of their union membership or lack of it.

In a 3-1 decision, the board held that the CIO Marine Cooks and Stewards had not refused to bargain in good faith when it proposed on Aug. 31, 1948, that Pacific Coast shipowners agree to such hiring halls. The offer was rejected.

This is the first time the board has accepted any kind of hiring hall as legal under the Taft-Hartley Act. The decision is considered an important one for the maritime industry and other industries where unions furnish new employes through hiring halls.

However, the board unanimously found that the union did in fact violate the law by agreeing to a discriminatory hiring hall arrangement in the contract that was actually signed to settle the 1948 West Coast Maritime strike. The shipowners, as part of the strike settlement, had insisted upon the continuation of the illegal hiring hall.

The Taft-Hartley Act forbids discrimination either for or against union members. The board, by its latest decision, ordered the cooks and stewards to stop giving effect to the 1948 contract.

The case is expected to land in the Federal courts for settlement.

CIO-AFL Unity Talks Off To Friendly Start

LABOR UNITY talks between CIO and AFL got off to a friendly, optimistic start last week.

After two sessions in Washington, the joint committee announced it will hold another meeting at the Drake Hotel in Chicago on Aug. 4.

Meantime, a two-man sub-committee is getting ready to prepare an agenda and line up points of discussion for the Chicago parley. Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and organization director, and Charles MacGowan, president of the AFL Boilermakers, were named to work out detailed planning during the next two weeks.

The first unity discussions since May 1947 opened on July 25 under the bright lights of newsreel and news photo cameramen. But after the photographers had left the room, the meeting quickly got down to business.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, still recuperating from a recent eye operation, was unable to attend the opening sessions, and Vice-Pres. Haywood headed the CIO delegation. AFL Pres. Green and three AFL union leaders represented the federation.

WHEN THE meeting adjourned some three hours later, the group issued a joint statement which pointed out that "we conducted a very friendly, cooperative and encouragingly constructive conversation, of an exploratory nature. We discussed many phases of this whole problem of the achievement of labor unity."

It added:

SERIOUSNESS was the keynote when CIO and AFL leaders got together July 25 to talk about unity. Shown deep in discussion (left to right) are Pres. William Green, of AFL; Pres. Daniel J. Tobin, of AFL Teamsters; Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, of CIO, and Pres. Walter P. Reuther, of CIO Auto Workers. Meeting was "encouragingly constructive."

"We recognized the serious threat to world peace and to our country as a result of Communist aggression. We vowed our complete determination to give full and united support to our government in this time of crisis. Labor in America is completely united against Communist aggression and infiltration."

The statement noted two areas of immediate agreement.

"1. We will continue to work together in the field of international relations, through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, as a means of strengthening democracy throughout the world.

"2. We will work together in the fields of legislation and political action, to insure the continued strengthening of our own American democratic institutions."

AT THE Chicago meeting, the joint CIO-AFL committee will elect a chairman and secretary.

It will also "give consideration to (1) establishing practical machinery to handle problems of jurisdictional disputes and raiding, affecting unions of our two organizations; and (2) considering specific proposals for organic unity in the American labor movement."

Both Haywood and MacGowan, talking to reporters after the two-day session in Washington, emphasized the "cordial" and "friendly" spirit of the meeting.

"Every member of the committee is optimistic that somthing substantial can come out of the meeting," MacGowan declared.

"In view of disturbing world conditions and the march of communism, it is necessary to protect the working people of this and other countries—and organic unity is virtually a 'must'."

Attainment of organic unity—merger—of the two groups is "no easy job," the AFL spokesman pointed out.

Haywood, voicing agreement with MacGowan's comments, acknowledged that "there are knotty problems to work out." But, he added, "there is a healthier atmosphere in these discussions than ever before."

"There is faith, on the part of the committee members, that unity will be worked out," he said.

"This is a permanent committee—until the job is done."

SIX OFFICERS represented the CIO at the first meeting: Haywood, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union and Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Pres. Murray and Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers were unable to attend the committee's first session.

The AFL was represented by Pres. Green, MacGowan, Pres. Daniel Tobin of the Teamsters, and Pres. Daniel Tracy of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Labor To Help NSRB Make Policy

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A VOICE AND a position for organized labor were provided last week in the Natl. Security Resources Board—Uncle Sam's top home-front economic agency.

Following a series of meetings with a nine-man committee speaking for all branches of the American union movement, NSRB Chairman Stuart Symington announced a three-way organizational plan through which labor will gain representation in the government agency.

The plan:

1. A top-level national policy committee "to consult with the board on major policy questions" has been established.

Labor, industry, agriculture and the general public will each be represented by three people on the policy committee.

Union representatives will be CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green and Pres. Al Hayes of the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists. These union leaders were nominated by the nine-man committee which has been meeting with the NSRB during the past two weeks.

Other members of the policy committee will be named in the next few days, and Symington voiced hope that the entire committee might be able to hold its first get-together early in August.

2. Two labor economists have been appointed by NSRB Chairman Symington to serve as his assistants.

They are Everett M. Kassalow, CIO assistant research director, and Eli L. Oliver, a consulting economist who has done considerable work for the railroad brotherhoods and many AFL unions.

Kassalow, a graduate of the College of the City of New York in 1938, has worked for the U. S. Dept. of Labor and other government agencies. He joined the CIO research department in 1945. In 1947, he was named research director of the United Rubber Workers, and returned to the CIO in 1949.

Kassalow has also served as director of the CIO's Full Employment Committee, and is an expert on manpower and unemployment problems.

3. Additional people from the ranks of labor will serve in the various operating divisions of the board. There are about 10 such divisions, covering all phases of industrial mobilization and home-front economic activity.

Symington also said that the labor representatives with whom he met had "recommended that all industry committees created for marshalling our resources include labor personnel experienced in that industry."

THE NSRB chairman "expressed his appreciation" for the help and suggestions offered by the special nine-man labor committee with which he has been consulting during the past fortnight.

AFL Pres. William Green, spokesman for the group, in turn voiced "complete agreement as to how the thing is to be done."

In addition to Green the committee consisted of AFL Secy. George Meany, Pres. George Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks, Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, Pres. Al Hayes of the Machinists, Pres. John Lewis of the Mine Workers—who was represented by Sec.-Treas. John Owens—and Pres. George Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives Association.

The National Security Resources Board was created by Congress in 1947, and was given the job of advising the President "concerning the coordination of military, industrial and civilian mobilizaton."

Its advice to the President would cover programs and policies on "effective use" of the nation's "natural and industrial resources for military and civilian needs," stabilization of the home-front economy, coordination of activities by various federal agencies, and "strategic relocation of industries" when necessary to U.S. security.

CIO Board Meet Set For Aug. 29

The CIO Executive Board will meet in Washington on Tuesday, Aug. 29, Pres. Murray has announced.

The CIO executive officers and vice-presidents have been called together for a session the previous day, Aug. 28. The board meeting will be held in the Mural Room of the Hotel Washington in the nation's capital.

It will be the first CIO board meeting since before the Communist aggression in Korea, and a number of important policy statements may be expected.

In addition, the board is expected to act on hearing committee reports in the case of three unions charged with Communist domination. They are the Marine Cook & Stewards; the Intl. Longshoremen's Union, and the Intl. Fishermen & Allied Workers. The Longshoremen and the Fishermen recently merged.

Meat Packing Unions In Mutual Aid Compact

THE COUNTRY'S two leading unions in the meat packing industry, both engaged in negotiations with major employers, have agreed to close cooperation to win new and better contracts for their members, it was announced last week.

"Our unions will work together in these negotiations to stop the back-breaking speedup, raise wages and establish a decent pension and insurance program for the packinghouse workers," said Pres. Ralph Helstein, of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, and Pres. Earl W. Jimerson, of the AFL Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, in a joint statement.

The two unions will pool their resources to reach agreements with the packers and neither will conclude a contract without full and thorough discussion of common problems. The agreement is the first between CIO and AFL unions in the same fields to move jointly against common employers for contract improvements on an industrywide or nationwide basis. Between them they represent more than 90% of the workers in the industry.

The fact that workers in the industry "this year more than ever before . . . need united action" has been recognized by the unions, Helstein and Jimerson said in their joint statement.

"At the expense of the public," they said, "skyrocketing meat prices are sending packer profits to new peaks.

"The packers are turning out higher volumes of production while ruthlessly cutting labor costs.

"In addition, heavier job loads and inhuman speedup methods are undermining the health of the packinghouse workers.

"At the same time, the industry as a whole has failed to keep pace with the trend to give American workers the security of pension programs and health and welfare insurance."

Armour Negotiates Just As It Always Did

Things apear to be running pretty much as in the past in Armour & Co. negotiations, even if the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the AFL Butcher Workmen have got together in a move to win better contracts in the industry.

After a joint statement announcing the working agreements, Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Packinghouse Workers and Pres. Earl W. Jimerson of the AFL counterpart issued another joint statement. Its gist:

"Armour won't even discuss pensions or welfare insurance . . . Negotiations have come to a halt."

Shipyard Strike Ends

A brief work stoppage by 1500 members of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers at the Brooklyn, N. Y. and Hoboken, N. J., yards of the Todd Shipbuilding Co. ended July 25. The walkout began July 23, following failure of two IUMSW locals to reach agreement with the company on a new contract.

Unity Move Gets Off To Good Start

CIO And AFL Announce They'll Work Closely Together In Four Domestic And International Fields

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A GROUP OF men sat around a table in a Washington hotel room last week and wrote part of another chapter in the history of organized labor.

They brought the two main branches of the American trade union movement closer together. What they did was important not only to the labor movement but to the nation as a whole.

The men—leaders of the CIO and AFL—agreed to cooperate closely on international affairs, political action, legislation and support of this nation's campaign against Communism.

And they paved the way for future action on such difficult problems as union jurisdictional matters and eventual organic unity of the CIO and AFL.

In a way, last week's meeting merely "formalized" a number of things that had been going on for some time.

The two labor groups began working together closely on international affairs when they helped establish the anti-Communist Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The CIO's Political Action Committee and the AFL Labor's League for Political Education have been cooperating in Washington and in many parts of the nation for months.

AND THE TWO organizations have been getting together frequently on legislative matters.

These things add to—not detract from—the importance of last week's meeting in Washington.

But the meeting itself focused public attention on the fact that the American labor movement has already achieved a degree of unity that was sadly lacking for a number of years.

TWO THINGS were largely responsible for the labor unity move, which was reinstituted earlier this year by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

One of these was the determination on the part of CIO and AFL leaders to do all they could to combat the creeping totalitarianism that parades under the banner of "people's communism."

The other was our domestic situation and all that it implied—difficulties under the Taft-Hartley Act, the Dixiegop coalition on Capitol Hill, the bogging down on part of the Fair Deal program, the need for electing more liberals in the forthcoming elections.

And then, too, there's a nasty situation in the Orient which requires all segments of the population to work closer together against a common enemy.

There are many problems to be worked out before there can be organic unity in the labor movement.

But the first real step has been taken. The CIO and AFL have publicly announced they will work together in certain fields which are of much importance.

And they have established a permanent committee to tackle some of the more delicate problems that must be solved before there can be a really unified American trade union movement.

WHAT HAS been accomplished constitutes one of the most important events in the labor field since the formation of the CIO.

It should give encouragement to the labor groups abroad which have been divided in many respects more widely than have the CIO and AFL.

And it should give notice to the Communists that they are bucking a more unified front.

IT'S IMPORTANT, TOO

A CIO News staff member went up to the National Press Club in Washington the other day and tried to talk politics with some of the newspaper men there.

His effort was a miserable failure, because the only subject anybody wanted to discuss was Korea.

The same thing happened when the staff member tried to get into a political discussion with a couple of his neighbors.

This gave us the idea that the same thing probably is happening all over the country. If so, it's understandable but it isn't good.

We believe that instead of trying to push politics completely aside, every American should examine the political situation—and examine it critically—in the light of what's happening over in the Orient.

In a little over three months the nation will elect a large number of men and women who will play a big role in determining the actions the U. S. will take in the future on both the domestic and foreign fronts.

Every member of the House and thirty-six members of the Senate will be selected in November.

How they vote will determine to a large degree how we live—and perhaps how we fight—in the months to come.

This is important—mighty important.

The votes of these lawmakers will have much to do with the success or failure of our efforts in the "cold war" as well as the hot one.

And that is important, too.

IT'S BIG, HARD JOB

Those in charge of directing labor's political action campaigns in an "off-year" had a big job on their hands even before the Communists from North Korea began their attack. Now they have a bigger, harder job.

They know it—and so do active PAC workers throughout the country.

But it's a job that needs to be done and it's a job that can be done if everybody will pitch in and work.

Labor should recall the difficulties it encountered during World War II and its fight to retain price and rent controls for a reasonable time after its end.

Labor should recall that efforts were made to impose unfair and burdensome restrictions on working men and women under the guise of "being patriotic."

And labor shouldn't forget that price gouging and profiteering weren't slapped down last time like they should have been.

We've not going to make any long-range predictions, but the nation is tightening its belt and the squeeze isn't going to make anybody particularly happy.

The right kind of Congress, however, could make the squeeze apply fairly to all the people—and that's desireable.

That's why politics mustn't be given a back seat. That's why CIO members should step up their PAC work.

Labor Dept. Cons 50 Years Of Union Progress

THE U. S. Dept. of Labor, in a remarkable analysis of "50 Years' Progress of American Labor", prepared by 23 experts in different fields and collated by the editors of the Department's Monthly Labor Review, finds that labor unions are unquestionably responsible for much of the stability of the U. S. economy and have made an "enormous social contribution."

It also finds, summing up the opinions of the experts, that the American labor movement, "despite its militancy, nevertheless (and almost alone in the world in this respect)—had and has no revolutionary goals and was content to and did secure a place for itself within capitalist society."

None of the conclusions in the 146-page document are advanced as the department's own: they are the opinions of the men who wrote the articles on various aspects of the labor picture. The writers include 11 from government and 12 from private life. The latter group includes Everett Kassalow, executive secretary of the CIO Full Employment Committee, who contributed an article on "The Labor Brief", in which he described the type of broad economic data now being interjected into collective bargaining sessions.

IN TERMS of benefits, the Review shows that the worker of 1950 has twice the purchasing power his grandfather had in 1900, and that he has between 15 and 20 hours a week more leisure time than his ancestor. His productivity is more than four times as great and his life expectancy is considerably longer, although one writer finds that there is more strain in one hour of work now than there was then.

A new "management" class has developed, another writer finds, men who make a career of executive work but do not own the enterprises they manage. This is a product of the growth of industrial enterprise and adds to the new impersonality of worker-owner relationships, he added.

The unions, it is found, are a direct product of the growth of industry and are shaped to fit the industrial scene. Their approach always has been "pragmatic"—i. e. they have done what the immediate situation required, without any long-range plan. Union approaches "are conservative", another writer finds, "but a new spirit of experimentation is developing."

Daniel Bell, associate editor of Fortune Magazine, says that labor's full-scale entry into politics "has marked a subtle change in the operations of trade unionism."

In this connection he notes that in the past 10 years there has been "a silent revolution" at the grass roots level—that unions which then were regarded in the community with suspicion and hostility (and returned the feeling) are now eagerly welcomed into community projects, and eager to participate.

"Across the nation," Bell says, "unionism, no longer alien, has won a respected and respectable seat at the American community table."

THREE experts in labor law, none from government agree that there has been a reversal of progress in one field—relations between labor and government. Nathan P. Feinsinger, now professor of law at the University of Wisconsin and former public member of the War Labor Board, bleakly says it would be difficult from labor's viewpoint to describe government's attitude in 1950 "as an advance over 1900." Gerhard P. Van Arkel, former general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, agrees and adds that "now, as in 1927, the law requires . . . men to strikebreak."

Several note that lack of unity had been a handicap to further union progress. Henry J. Carman, dean of Columbia College, comments pithily:

"No one will seriously quarrel with . . . the verdict that from McKinley to the second Roosevelt, labor showed an appreciation of realities, and that whatever critical defects it may have suffered came from lack of mutual coordination of labor's fighting armies."

Glazer Gets Post With Rubber Union

Joseph Glazer, for the last six years assistant educational director of the CIO Textile Workers, has been appointed director of education for the CIO Rubber Workers.

He succeeds Dr. A. L. Lewis, who was named director of public relations for the Rubber Workers. Glazer has taught at many schools sponsored by the CIO and its unions and has conducted summer schools and training institutes throughout the country. He recently recorded a set of union song records for the National CIO.

UAW Gives $30,000 To Oil Strikers

The CIO Auto Workers have announced a $30,000 contribution to the CIO Oil Workers to help them in their strike against the Texas Co., now in its 16th week.

The gift supplemented $5000 previously sent to aid the strikers. In a letter to Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote:

"When a union is engaged in a struggle against a vicious corporation like the Texas Co., we in the UAW-CIO feel that it is a part of our fight. We are confident that the solidarity and determination of the workers at the Texas Co. will win out."

He Just Couldn't Stand Whistle Blowing

IT HAPPENED about 25 years ago in Philadelphia—and for a time it looked as if the union wasn't going to get a signed contract because of a man with a whistle.

The union—the Amalgamated Clothing Workers—and two sons of the owner of a company employing about 100 workers had finally reached an oral agreement.

The contract was typed up in final form and two ACW representatives took it to the company for the signature of the owner—the father of the two who had worked out the terms.

It was placed before the old gentlemen. His sons told him everything was OK. The father asked the sons if there wasn't something they had forgotten. They said there wasn't.

The father picked up his pen. Then his neck and face became red and he shouted:

"I won't sign it. To hell with the whistle. I say to hell with the whistle."

THE ACW representatives were stunned, but they decided to get to the bottom of the "whistle" matter. Here's what they learned:

The ACW Joint Board had a business agent who carried a whistle. It wasn't a trinket but a useful part of the agent's working material.

The agent understood the workers in the plant and could appreciate their problems. Nearly all of them were Italians and the agent spoke Italian fluently.

But he had much difficulty with his English—and it was necessary for him to use that language when dealing with management.

Consequently there were frequent misunderstandings—and management often contributed to them by taking advantage of the man's language difficulty.

When a misunderstanding arose, the agent would pull out his whistle and blow it sharply. Every worker in the shop would leave his job and go to the union hall.

There the Joint Board manager would get at the facts, send the workers back to their jobs and then seek to settle the dispute.

THE WHISTLE blowing became very annoying to management—so one day the sons of the owner, the foreman and an assistant foreman cooked up a little scheme.

They put it into effect a few days later when the whistle-blower strolled through the door of the factory.

The four men grabbed him, hustled him out into a corridor and locked the door behind them.

The business agent flew into a rage. He thought there was a move on to kill off the union. So he grabbed his whistle and blew—and blew—and blew.

The chairman of the union heard the noise, walked to the locked door and called through it.

"Yes, it's me," shouted the agent. They've thrown me out. It's a conspiracy! OUT EVERYBODY, OUT, OUT, OUT."

There was a rush toward the locked door. And it was almost torn from its hinges before it was opened from the outside.

Within 10 minutes all of the workers were engaged in a meeting at the union hall.

Finally, when the matter was explained it was straightened up by the board manager.

AND, THE OWNER of the company explained to the two ACW negotiators, there would be no signed contract until something was done about the whistle.

The unionists agreed that something should be done, and quickly. They soon arranged to have the union in the plant serviced by an agent who didn't even carry a whistle.

Then the old gentleman signed the contract!

Newspaper Praises CIO For New England Prosperity Plan

By William W. Weiss

THE 12-POINT program drawn up by the six New England state CIO Councils to insure the future prosperity and economic security of the area has been termed "a document which might well be called an exhibition of labor statesmanship," by the Bridgeport, Conn., Post.

The Post editorial said the program takes "a more optimistic view than the prophets of gloom who see New England as 'all washed up' in the industrial field."

Pointing out that the CIO "recognizes the fact that labor itself has a responsibility as well as a natural stake in the goal of a steadily-expanded New England economy," the editorial calls for unity of all interests in the solution of the basic problem.

"The decline of many of New England's older industries, due to obsolescence of plants and outdating of production methods, has been offset in large part by the addition of new industries," the editorial continues, "but these too face the same danger."

"The CIO program frankly admits certain New England difficulties in the matter of geographical location, raw materials, freight rates and the like, but it points out ways in which these obstacles may be overcome by a combination of skilled workers, skilled management, and the most modern machinery and methods."

THE PLAN, entitled "Toward a More Prosperous New England," was first made public at a meeting in Washington, D. C., last month attended by representatives of the New England CIO councils, members of Congress from New England, and New England governors' representatives.

The plan, its sponsors say, would mean more jobs, expanded operations for industry with increased corporate earnings, greater purchasing power among the masses of New Englanders and increased earnings for mercantile and service establishments.

The 12-point plan would reduce railroad rates in the New England area and promote more widespread use of cheaper water transportation; expand the area's steel industry by the building of new plants; reduce electric power rates and expand power supply by developing hydroelectric resources; reduce fuel costs by extending natural gas use by manufacturers, and redevelop older industrial cities and towns.

The program also envisions a concerted drive for construction of modern factory space, especially in communities that have lost industry.

It would institute a course of action designed to break capital fund bottlenecks by establishing state and local government credit facilities for private businesses seeking to expand; promote public construction which together with private building will insure job stability in the construction industry, and develop agricultural stabilization for New England farmers which would insure them a stable market and fair prices.

Other major points include the development of a broad natural resource conservation program; establishment of a regional government body to gather and analyze economic data for use in aggressive expansion policies; and the strengthening and broadening of state unemployment compensation programs.

A statement released with the program declared that there is "wide agreement" that New England has a distinguished past.

"But there is no such agreement about the area's future," it added.

"THE PESSIMISTS assure us that our New England economy has passed its peak and is now on the road of steady decline and decay. Another group equipped with rose-colored glasses scoffs at the idea that New England faces serious economic problems.

"Our own view is that both these sets of prophets are wrong. New England does indeed face some serious economic problems. Unless these problems are tackled with intelligence, vigor and courage, New England's economic future will be as dark as her past has been bright."

CIO Housecleaning Wins Commendations

The Bridgeport, Conn. Post is one of the few newspapers in the country which has given strong editorial praise to the CIO's efforts to rid itself of Communist influence in its unions.

In a recent editorial, the paper said:

"We think this might be a good occasion to say that the CIO as a whole, both its national and local officers and its rank and file membership, deserve a vote of confidence and thanks from the American people for the job they have done in purging CIO unions of Communist infiltration and communist membership. It has been a magnificient job . . . and should commend the gratitude and the respect of all good Americans whether in the labor movement or otherwise."

TWUA Wins 11c Wage Gain From Viscose

THE CIO Textile Workers has won a new contract which will give 15,000 employes of the American Viscose Corp. an average wage increase of more than 11c an hour, pensions exceeding $100 monthly on the average, and additional collateral benefits of 2 to 3c an hour.

The agreement, which was ratified by the TWUA members covered on July 25, will yield $5 million in the first year, according to Herbert W. Payne, director of the union's synthetic yarn division. In addition, it provides for a wage boost of 4c an hour on June 30, 1951. The contract covers mills at Lewistown, Marcus Hook and Meadville, Pa.; Parkersburg and Nitro, W. Va., and Front Royal and Roanoke, Va.

Payne predicted the settlement will facilitate contract talks involving some 20,000 additional synthetic yarn workers. American Viscose, the country's largest in the industry, traditionally sets the pattern, he pointed out. Negotiations are under way with such companies as the Celanese Corp., and the Industrial Rayon Corp., also among the larger producers.

Specifically, the new contract yields:

- An across-the-board wage increase of 7% on base rates, retroactive to July 1, which will hike average hourly earnings by more than 11c, bringing them to $1.55 an hour; an additional 1c an hour for correction of wage inequities, to be made not later than Dec. 1, 1950; and a further 3c an hour across-the-board raise due June 30, 1951.
- Guaranteed minimum pension of $1200 a year, including social security benefits, after 25 years' service, with the present contributory pension plan, in effect since 1943, the foundation for the retirement system. The company will pay $1.50, instead of the present $1.25, for every $1 contributed by the worker. The actual pension range will be above the minimum, with some workers receiving double the minimum when they reach retirement age.
- Straight time, plus time and a half, or 2½ times the normal rate, for holidays worked, instead of double straight time as at present.

IN DISCUSSING the pension gains, Payne pointed out that abandonment of the contributory feature would have resulted in substantial losses to the union members. In addition, the company will continue to pay the entire cost of a complete social insurance program, including sickness and accident benefits, hospitalization, surgical expenses and life insurance, he said.

The new pact was negotiated under a wage reopening clause in the present contract. The union would have had the right to cancel the contract had no agreement been reached. As it stands, it now runs until Nov. 30, 1951.

It does not cover the American Viscose unit at Fredericksburg, Va., which was purchased from another owner and which also is covered by a Textile Workers' contract. Separate negotiations are being held and comparable terms will be achieved, Payne said.

A LONG-TIME leader in the Lewiston, Me., Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers, Ralph Verville has been appointed acting postmaster of Auburn, Lewiston's Twin City, and is expected to be permanently named to the post. A member of Local 518, he served three years as president of the Joint Board and three years as chairman of its PAC Committee, and filled many varied positions in his local.

Pay, Pension Fund Increases Sought By Dyers, Finishers

THE CIO Textile Workers dyeing and finishing division has served notice on 350 dyeing and finishing concerns in the metropolitan New York area that pension and pay increases, as well as other economic adjustments, will be proposed this year.

William Gordon, assistant director of the division, said that 14,000 members in New York City and northern New Jersey would be affected.

A monthly pension fund contribution of $10 for each worker will be asked, an increase of $9 monthly over the $1 the employers have been paying, pending establishment of a formal, industry-wide pension program.

A proposed wage boost of 20c an hour would bring the minimum for men to $1.50 hourly and for women to $1.30, Gordon said.

The third major union proposal would earmark 7% of the payroll for vacation pay. It was requested, Gordon said, because "some employers have found it difficult to pay promptly when vacations are due."

Other requests include Easter Monday as a paid holiday, bringing the total to eight; three weeks vacation after 10 years, and increased hospitalization and disability payments.

Steel Profits Soar Crazily

The U. S. Steel Corp. disclosed last week that its net earnings during the first half of this year were the highest of any half-year since 1917.

Net profits spurted to $119,078,238 from $94,052,265 in the first half of 1949—a gain of $25,015,973. This is equivalent to $4.08 a common share, compared to $3.12 during the corresponding period of 1949.

First-half earnings in 1917 were $128.036,569.

Another major steel producer, Jones & Laughlin, reported consolidated net income for the 1950 second quarter of $11,005,142, equivalent to $4.09 per share of common stock after dividened requirements on preferred stock.

These figures compare with a net income of $5,300,004, or $1.99 a share for the same period last year. Income for the first half of 1950 was $16,314,970, or $5.99 a share, compared to $15,168,899, or $5.83 a share, in the first six months of 1949.

Auto Workers Get Pact At Allis-Pittsburgh

The CIO Auto Workers have signed a five-year contract with the Pittsburgh, Pa., plant of the Allis Chalmers Co.

It provides pensions, wage increases, cost-of-living adjustments and a union shop. A similar agreement was previously negotiated for the company's West Allis, Wis., plant.

IUE Attacks GE Offer As 'Inadequate, Insult'

AFTER A detailed study of the General Electric Co's contract offer, the CIO Intl. Electrical Workers last week informed the company that its proposal is "inadequate, substandard and virtually insulting to the intelligence of the members."

The official IUE statement, handed to the company July 27, denouced GE for its failure to enter into genuine collective bargaining at a time when it is enjoying the highest profits in its history.

The IUE analysis of the GE offer, substantiated by an independent report prepared by Robert R. Nathan Associates, consulting economists, asserts:

"GE, on July 21, made public its report on operations and profits for the first half of 1950. The report is truly amazing.

"Last year, 1949, was a record year for the company. Sales, at $1,614 million, were almost five times the 1939 level, almost 12% higher than the wartime peak of 1944, and more than a fifth larger than the highly prosperous 1947.

"Profits after taxes, at $125.6 million, were almost triple the pre-war level, more than twice the wartime peak and almost a third larger than lush 1947. Those records have been tossed into the dust heap by the phenomenal record of what is happening now.

"In the first six months of 1950, GE's sales were $881.1 million, up 10% from the first six months of 1949. Profits after taxes were $77.1 million, up 66% from the first half of last year!

"GE this year is earning a profit of more than 25 cents on every dollar of stockholder investment in this company!

"DESPITE those profit figures, GE had the effrontery to offer its workers a piddling 3% (or not less than 4 cents an hour) wage increase; a pension little better than the present one, and a social insurance plan which fails to cover the workers' families and penalizes workers within 10 years of retirement."

"And incidentally," IUE Chairman James B. Carey added, "This huge profit rolled up by GE came at a time when, in a two-year span, company employment fell more than 30,000. Which means that GE doesn't want these fewer workers, without whose brain and muscle GE could not have gained those profits, to share equitably in the results."

The IUE statement said, in part, of the GE offer:

Wages: "We have already presented the company our demand for a substantial wage increase. We consider that this 3% increase is merely a 'down payment' on the long overdue and much larger wage increase which is called for by all circumstances, and which we demand."

The report said the substantial increase was justified by several factors: GE workers have lagged behind other workers; the buying power of GE workers, due to soaring living costs, is virtually unimproved over 10 years ago; the workers have not been fairly compensated for their tremendous increase in productivity; they have not shared in the "phenomenal" profits; the company is more than able to grant a pay increase without raising its prices one penny.

Pensions: "The plan proposed by the company suffers from two serious defects: it is still a contributory plan, and it offers no significant increase in pension benefits to the workers."

A non-contributory pension of $125 per month including Social Security is the IUE demand.

Social Insurance: "We propose that the cost of the social insurance program shall be borne entirely by the company, with provisions for optional coverage of the worker's dependents on a contributory basis."

Paperworkers Win Pay Boost For 4000 In Three Big Plants

THE CIO Paperworkers have signed a new contract with the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. which grants a 5% general wage increase to 4000 production workers in plants at Covington, Va., Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa.

The two-year contract, termed by UPW Area Dir. Harry Scott "one of the best in the paper industry," was signed in Washington, D. C., after nine days of intensive bargaining. He said the union came out with a total package "in excess of 10c an hour."

In addition to the general wage increase, other benefits received included a 5c wage adjustment for mechanics; job evaluation to correct wage adjustments; three weeks vacation after 15 years' service, and shift bonuses of 2c an hour for the second shift and 4c for the third shift.

Workers are guaranteed increased paid time for wire changes; one additional paid holiday, bringing the total to four in 1952, and mill-wide seniority in case of layoffs.

The agreement also provided for pension and insurance plans, won by the union for the first time last year. The company-paid pension plan calls for $100 a month, including social security benefits, upon retirement at age 65 after 25 years of service.

The contributory insurance plan includes life, sickness and accident insurance, plus hospitalization and surgical benefits.

Chrysler Bars Reuther Plan

The Chrysler Corp, has turned down an invitation from CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther to meet with other auto firms and the union to work out a plan for possible industry mobilization.

The UAW president, who headed a successful 100-day strike against the company earlier in the year, had suggested that representatives of leading automotive firms and the UAW discuss a joint movement to place the auto industry on a war production basis.

"It does not seem to us that a collective movement on the part of the automotive industry, either with or without collaboration of your organization, aimed at encouraging the government to take over the steel business, would be constructive," wrote Herman Weckler, Chrysler vice president.

Business As Usual Out For Duration—Truman

PRESIDENT TRUMAN last week soberly warned the nation that "business-as-usual" practices must go by the board for the duration—and he added that the duration "may not be short."

The President's words were included in his annual mid-year economic report—a formal document that was re-written after the Korean Communists launched their aggressive war.

To meet the nation's problems, the President said, "we must make full use of our great productive resources, our ever-improving industrial and scientific techniques, and our growing labor force." He added:

"We must re-direct a part of these resources to the task of resisting aggression. And in doing this, we must not let inflation undermine our efforts."

THE PRESIDENT'S message sought to guide the country to a middle position between "easy indifference" on the one hand, and "sensational alarm" on the other. Amplifying this middle-way position, the President added:

"We are not now living under peaceful world conditions, but neither are we engaged in a general or widespread war.

"We are in a situation between these opposite extremes, and economic policy should be guided accordingly . . .

"Economic policy, to the best of our ability and foresight, should proceed in line with our appraisal of the developing situation. While it should not lag behind, it should not run blindly ahead."

So, the President concluded, America's need for substantial increases in the military force, and in the supplies it will use, "do not call for a complete set of economic controls now"—if, he added, "business, labor and consumers practice moderation" and if steps are taken "to meet our supply needs and to curb inflation."

Organized labor, on the other hand, has recommended quick congressional action to limit the rise in prices. Reports show a 9% increase in living costs since mid-June, and a 13% jump since January.

Representatives of CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions have also urged quick adoption of excess profits taxation—not yet asked for by President Truman — as a means of keeping prices down and of returning to the government "profits extorted from the public in these critical days through wholly unjustified rises in the price of necessities."

THE PRESIDENT has already asked for allocations and priorities on the distribution of scarce goods; a $5 billion tax increase program, as a temporary measure; loans to war goods manufacturers to spur production, and controls on credit and speculation in commodities.

Though acknowledging that price controls and rationing may be needed later, he has not yet asked Congress for these powers.

The President's program was criticized by Bernard Baruch, New York financier, as moving too slowly. He told a Senate committee that "before the peace is won, we shall have to come to this (all-out) mobilization—it will never be easier than now."

President Truman, however, told Congress that "in the current situation, it should be easier than in World War II to meet our production needs while at the same time avoiding inflation."

But "this does not mean that we can meet our enlarged international obligations without some sacrifice of domestic consumption," he warned.

"Some sacrifice is called for, and I am confident that the American people will do their part."

THE COUNTRY'S civilian economy has never been in healthier shape, the President noted, and even before the Korean affair it had come back from the "mild recession" of 1949.

America's total output of goods and services, for instance, amounted to $267 billion in 1949. That was $126 billion higher than in 1929, under 1949 price structures

Industrial production stood at an index figure of 110 in 1929. In June, 1950, it was up to 199—23 points higher than last year.

Food production stood at an index figure of 97 in 1929. Today it stands at 139, just about what it was during the peak period of World War II.

"These record levels of production and productively make us better able to perform the new and harder tasks ahead," the President added.

But, he noted, the nation cannot ignore the general inflationary pressure, or the "intense and rising" pressures in limited areas of the national economy.

Changes in national economic policy are needed now to meet the emergency, the President reminded Congress.

"These changes will take us in the right direction at once," he said.

"And if the situation should become even more serious later on, the measures which I now propose for the current situation are also the measures which would make us more ready for further steps."

IN ARGUING against "business as usual," the President told industry that expansion of factory output should not be held back by fears that we will have too much output in case of international peace.

"Our obligation to resist aggression is not clearer than our obligation to maintain full prosperity at home when peace is made secure," he said.

To organized labor, the President paid recognition of the unions' "great responsibilities, rising in proportion to its increasing strength and influence upon the course of the whole economy."

"Labor," he added, "should continue and enlarge its contribution toward increasing productivity, and toward even more effective use of manpower. Wage demands of a character which might lead to another inflationary spiral should be avoided.

"Above all, labor should join with management in the further consolidation of industrial peace. Work stoppages in vital industries are something we simply cannot afford under current conditions."

TO CONSUMERS, the President urged a policy of "buying normally," so that the artificial shortages that come from hoarding will be avoided.

"Working cooperatively together, through their free enterprise system and their Government, the American people have won a great war and established a unique prosperity . . ." he said.

"We have achieved unity in our policies to resist foreign aggression.

"We must seek and achieve the same unity in economic policies, which will enable us to make that resistance successful as rapidly as possible.

"All else must yield to this controlling consideration in the minds and hearts of the freedom-loving people of the United States."

THE LEGISLATIVE program already asked by the President is moving through Congress at a substantial rate of speed.

The lifting of top limits on the size of the country's military force has been approved by both Senate and House, with little debate.

Both House and Senate committees are expected soon to report out versions of a Defense Production Act of 1950—which provides the allocation and priority power, authorization of loans to industry, and tightening of consumer credit which the President asked in an earlier message.

Some Republicans may seek broad amendments in the interim tax bill now being written in Congress. They seek to cut down spending on civilian projects—a new version of the steady conservative attack on all phases of Fair Deal legislation.

Negro Saved From Death Again

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WILLIE McGEE, 37-year-old Mississippi Negro veteran of World War II, is in terrible trouble. He expected to die last week for he was to be executed in Mississippi's portable electric chair on July 27.

This is the third time since he was convicted in December, 1945, on a rape charge brought by a white housewife in Laurel, Miss., that McGee has been dragged back from death by high court rulings so complex that he can have little understanding of them.

McGee's latest reprieve came through the highest court in the land. Just a few hours before he was to be executed, U. S. Supreme Court Justice Harold H. Burton granted a stay of execution on the plea of his attorneys, who flew to Washington in a desperate last-minute attempt to save him.

This was just after Chief Justice Harvey McGehee, of the Mississippi Supreme Court, had turned down a defense petition for a stay of execution and a writ of error based on a charge that the prosecution had conspired to secure his conviction on perjured testimony.

McGee's first conviction was reversed by the Mississippi Supreme Court, which held that there should be a change of venue because local feeling interfered with his getting a fair trial. At the second trial McGee was again convicted, but the verdict was reversed on the basis of a decision by the U. S. Supreme Court that Negroes were systematically excluded from juries in Mississippi.

The conviction at the third trial was upheld by the State Supreme Court. The U. S. Supreme Court turned down an appeal to review the case.

Justice Burton's action merely calls for a review by the full court of the ruling by Justice McGehee.

Justice Burton's action apparently will postpone McGee's execution at least until the U. S. Supreme Court resumes its sessions in October.

In case of an adverse ruling by the U. S. Supreme Court, defense attorneys said they will renew a petition to the Federal District Court in Biloxi, Miss., which was withdrawn without prejudice after Burton's ruling. If the U. S. Supreme Court decides favorably on the review petition, defense attorneys said that a trial on the perjury charges would probably come before a Mississippi Circuit Court.

Meanwhile, Willie McGee is still in jeopardy. But the complicated network of technicalities which enmesh our court system have not yet been fully explored.

Aside from the personal tragedy to Willie McGee, his four children and his wife—whose faith and confidence in his innocence is unshaken—this case brings up again the all-important question of whether it is possible for any Negro in the South to get a fair trial on charges brought by a white woman.

CIO Protests Mistreatment Of Migratory Farm Laborers

SCANDALOUS examples of long hours and starvation wages among Puerto Rican workers in the Michigan and Colorado beet fields have been cited by the CIO to state and federal agencies—with a demand for quick improvements.

In Michigan, officers of Buick Local 599 of the United Auto Workers found cases of 12 Puerto Ricans who had been working 13 days—for a total of $12 food allowance. They were living in dirty, primitive shacks.

The workers had been brought to Genesee County beet fields by Michigan Field Crops, Inc., which had promised them "hygenic housing," 60c an hour wages, and no more than 160 hours of work a month.

Reports of similar exploitation have come from other sections of the country where Mexicans and Puerto Ricans have been brought in under contract labor arrangements.

In Washington the CIO asked the President's Commission on Migratory Labor for speedy action to correct present conditions.

Ernest Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, said that migrant workers legally brought to the U. S. should be guaranteed: (1) prevailing wages; (2) strict observation of Minimum Wage Law provisions; (3) payment of three months wages in cases of cancellation of the work contract, and money for the journey home; (4) accident and illness protection or insurance; (5) decent housing and sanitary conditions; (6) and protection against discrimination on grounds of race, color or national background.

Schwartz charged that many of the workers are brought to the U. S. illegally, and become "easy victims of reckless exploitation."

He called for a tightening up on illegal labor imports, and said that "permission to import migrants should be granted only in those cases where domestic manpower is absolutely unavailable."

How Rumely And CCG Handle Income From Book 'Sales'

By CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

WANT TO contribute $25,000 to the Committee for Constitutional Government, top anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal lobby?

All you have to do is write a check. The CCG will grab it fast. What's more, CCG officers will come up with a ready-made plan to put your money to use. But you mustn't think of the $25,000 as a contribution. It's a credit against the purchase of "educational" literature. Only sums up to $490 are listed as "gifts." They don't have to be reported, as do amounts of $500 and more.

That's why Edward A. Rumely, executive head of the CCG, refused to tell the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities the names of his chief financial supporters.

The CCG is a publishing house, Rumely said. His big backers made no contributions, he insisted, they just purchased books. To release their names and the amount of their purchases would be to reveal "trade secrets." However, by something more than coincidence, all the literature attacks the Fair Deal, the New Deal, labor unions or the British Labor Party.

JUST HOW the system works is shown by correspondence between the CCG and Eli Lilly & Co. of Indianapolis, manufacturers of pharmaceuticals. On Jan. 10 an officer of the company wrote the CCG, saying:

"This is to advise you that our budget committee has approved a contribution of $25,000 to the Constitutional Government for the calendar year 1950."

The committee said it would supply its own list of teachers, clergymen and others whom it wished to receive CCG books and pamphlets.

Didn't take the CCG long to reply, either, although its officers apparently winced at the company's use of the word "contribution." On Jan. 17, Sumner Gerard, CCG treasurer, came through pretty warmly.

"Your letter of Jan. 10 announcing a $25,000 purchase of our educational material was a source of great encouragement to Dr. King and myself," he wrote. Reference is to Dr. Willford I. King, CCG hatchetman.

"Such a substantial purchase so early in the year will enable us to lift our committee's activities to higher levels of effectiveness," Gerard said.

HE ADDED the opinion that such "purchases" were "legitimate" expenses, meaning that the Lilly Co. could deduct them from income for tax purposes so long as the material purchased and its exact distribution was specifically designated. Then came the ready-made plan. Wrote Gerard:

"We will service a list of 5000 names at $4 per individual name 22 times between February and December 1950; or a list of 10,000—11 times; or of 25,000—four times."

He said the CCG would distribute 5000 copies of Norton's "Constitution of the United States: Its Sources and Its Application," a book that stresses property rights above human rights, plus 3000 copies of Sam Pettengill's "For Americans Only," a work that makes the late President William McKinley look like a wild-eyed radical. Gerard also suggested that $8 a head be set aside to send the CCG's "Paul Revere Messages" to 300 persons, including the 150 members of the Indiana legislature. A book by King also might be sent to this list, he continued.

By this time, $22,400 would be used up, Gerard said. He proposed using the $2600 balance to distribute "Compulsory Medical Care and the Welfare State," a book by Melchior Palyi attacking health insurance. Lilly could get it for a dollar a copy. Moreover, the company's card could be put in every copy of all books, Gerard added.

The proposition must have sounded good to the Lilly people. On Jan. 24 they sent a check for $25,000 drawn on the Chemical Bank & Trust Co. of New York. Meanwhile the company said Gerard's specific proposals had been turned over to its industrial relations expert, J. F. Modrall. The Lilly spokesman reported that Modrall was already cooperating with the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce on "our company's overall program"—whatever that might be.

ON FEB. 2, Rumely himself entered the picture. He wrote Nikolas L. Noyes, Lilly president, acknowledging receipt of the check "for which a credit is being set up on our books against which you may draw for any literature." A "credit," please note, not a contribution.

"Thanks again for your helpful cooperation in the purchase and distribution of the committee's educational literature," Rumely gushed.

Not missing a trick, he enclosed a bit of propaganda against health insurance he said had just been mailed to a list of top doctors in the American Medical Association.

Tories Print Another Comic Book To Trap Workers

By GERVASE N. LOVE

POOR Jack Hanson!

He was an ordinary guy, a shop steward in his union and a good family man. All he wanted was security.

So one day he heard a politician make a speech about security, with a plea for votes. Jack became active politically. He helped the party promising security to win assorted elections. Came the day when he went to Washington in a good government job. But security cost so much that taxes had to be raised. Pretty soon the bosses didn't have enough money to pay the taxes so the government took all industry over. The government wasn't able to run it. Workers who had voted for security squawked. Jack was among them.

The secret police came and got him and he lived happily ever after — in jail.

Boo!

That's the broad outline of a new comic book, "America Under Socialism," which is being offered for sale to big employers and ultra right-wing organizations of professional bleeding hearts for mass distribution to workers and others who haven't been convinced that private enprise and the Republican Party can do no wrong.

THE IDEA, of course is the same as that behind the unceasing propaganda as such outfits as the Committee for Constitutional Government, the National Economic Council, Constitutional Educational League—now being probed by the House Lobby Investigating Committee — and similar groups which purport to envision a socialist nation as the inevitable fate of the United States every time a bit of welfare legislation is passed or a millionaire pays his income taxes.

These anti-union outfits, as revealed by their literature and the testimony of their leaders before the House investigating committee, are opposed to such things as social security, TVA, the Marshall Plan, minimum wages, rent control, public housing, national health insurance, and the legal right to collective bargaining.

In short, they are against virtually everything the worker or other average American wants. They are in favor of virtually everything that the extremely wealthy and the monopolistic corporations want—down to a 25% limitation on income taxes in order to keep the federal government so poor it won't have the money to do anything but exist on a bare subsistence level.

"America Under Socialism" is copyrighted and sold by the National Research Bureau, Inc. This is the distributing agency for the Joe Ball Washington Labor Letter, written by the former Republican senator from Minnesota who was sent into involuntary retirement by the voters when they were offered the liberal Sen. Humphrey (D.) as an alternative.

WITH THE COPY that came to the attention of the CIO News was an item called "Tax Outlook," a four-page letter-size document "published periodically as a special service to clients of the National Research Bureau, Inc."

Most of the four pages is devoted to a dire warning that taxes are making socialism as certain as—well, as death AND taxes—in this country unless it takes advantage of the fact that "we've got time to back up."

Among others it quotes such characters as Dr. George A. Benson, president of Harding College, Searcy, Ark., and daddy of the Freedom Forums which have been turning industrial employes into captive audiences for anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal, anti-New Deal and pro-reactionary lectures; and Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, former chairman of the Committee for Constitutional Government.

It concludes, over the signature of W. H. Wood, president of the research bureau, with an explanation that "America Under Socialism is the result of many conferences with expert opinion moulders," though that's hard to believe, and an appeal to get its story, "into the heart of America."

THE RESEARCH bureau, of course, will be only too happy to do this for the usual fee, thus combining business with pleasure.

The use of comic books by big business to entice employes to their way of thinking (especially about unions and the so-called "free" enterprise system), is not new, although of comparatively recent origin.

More than one million copies of a 16-page comic entitled "We Hit the Jackpot," detailing the virtues of the capitalistic system, have been distributed to employes of nearly 400 firms. The National Association of Manufacturers has published several, such as "Fight For Freedom," which went to possibly millions of employes, and General Electric had one showing how everybody loves the Taft-Hartley Act. Many companies use cartoons or comic strips in plant publications.

They call it "teaching economics."

House Probers Desert Reactionaries To Look At Alleged Federal Lobbying

THE HOUSE Lobby Investigating Committee turned last week from far right and liberal organizations and shined its spotlight on what Republican members sought to prove was the spending of government funds to put across the Brannan Plan.

The committee specifically looked into a meeting in St. Paul, Minn., last April at which Secy. of Agriculture Charles Brannan was the principal speaker. Members of the Production and Marketing Committee throughout Minnesota were asked to attend. Rep. O'Hara (R. Minn.) and Rep. Brown (R. O.) tried to demonstrate this constituted coercion to "buy" an audience for Brannan.

But Charles W. Stickney, of Spear Lake, Minn., PMA state chairman, the first witness, testified that "no pressure, verbally or otherwise," was exerted to make the committeemen, who are paid by the U. S. government, attend the meeting. Salary and expenses for those who attended amounted to approximately $42,000, he testified.

"Was that conference set up directly or indirectly to influence any legislation at the federal level?" asked Rep. Doyle (D. Cal.).

"No, sir, it was not," Stickney answered.

"The farmers of Minnesota hold a cabinet member in high esteem, whether he is Democratic or Republican. We thought we were extremely fortunate to have the Secretary."

Brown asked why someone opposed to the Brannan plan, such as Rep. Andresen (R. Minn.) a member of the House Agriculture Committee, was not invited, "to be fair."

"We didn't expect there would be any argument," Stickney answered.

The General Accounting Office reported that it was able to find but one PMA official who thought it was using "coercion" to urge committee members to attend the meeting. The GAO had investigated at the committee's request and reported that use of federal funds to pay salaries and expenses of committeemen attending was legal.

Ohio CIO Battles Industry For $8 Million In Jobless Pay

WITH $8 million at stake, Ohio State CIO Council officials are carefully eyeing an unemployment compensation test case now in the legal mill.

It involves Julius Jaskiewicz of Cleveland, a member of the CIO Steelworkers and an employe of the American Steel & Wire Co.

Actually, Jaskiewicz' case is the case of 100,000 Ohio workers. It works this way:

The Cleveland steelworker became unemployed in June, 1949, and was still unemployed at the end of the year. Therefore, he started drawing unemployment compensation benefits at the old rate of $21 a week for 22 weeks.

But the Legislature amended the act, after a bitter battle between labor and management. Under the new law, which became effective on Aug. 22, 1949, jobless workers can draw as much as $25 a week for 26 weeks.

Atty-Gen. Herbert Duffy was asked if higher payments should be given workers drawing benefits prior to Aug. 22, or only to those who became jobless after that date. He decided the higher payments should go to all unemployed workers, regardless of when they lost their jobs.

Employer groups immediately launched a campaign of harassing unemployed workers. They asked the State Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition, which would have stopped the higher payments.

The Ohio CIO Council, with the AFL and Mine Workers, filed briefs and were upheld by the State Supreme Court.

Immediately, preparations were made to pay the workers. But the employers weren't through. In 100,000 of the 150,000 cases involved, employers protested and tied up the benefits.

That brings the situation up to the present. The case involving Jaskiewicz is the test which will decide these 100,000 cases.

It was heard July 6 in Cleveland by Referee John S. Taylor. Appearing for the claimant were his attorney, David Clayman, and John R. Rooney, of the Ohio CIO Council staff.

The company was represented by Frank C. Manak, chief lobbyist for the Ohio Association of Manufacturers. Taylor granted both sides time to file briefs, after which he will hand down a decision. It will be subject to appeal to the Board of Review and the courts.

Slap 'em Back With Bucks for PAC

McCarthy Comeback Attempt Fizzles Out Like First 'Hoax'

SEN. JOE McCARTHY of Wisconsin accused by a Senate investigating group of using the "big lie technique" to perpetrate a "fraud" and a "hoax"—made little progress last week in a flashy comeback attempt.

Supported by some of the most conservative Senate Republicans, McCarthy tried to erase the sharp criticism of the Democratic majority on the Foreign Relations Sub-Committee.

Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.) led off the Republican counter-attack with a 7000-word speech against Sen. Tydings (D. Md.), head of the sub-committee. He accused Tydings of having "conducted the most scandalous and brazen whitewash of treasonable conspiracy in our history."

Tydings sat quietly throughout the Jenner tirade. When it was over, the Maryland Democrat, who heads the Senate Armed Services Committee, merely filed two major administration bills designed to spur the nation's effort against aggression in Korea.

Tydings had aroused Jenner's ire by pointing out that on such key foreign policy issues as the Marshall Plan, Point Four and military aid to democratic nations, Jenner's votes had been in line with the position of Stalin and the Daily Worker.

SEN. LODGE (R. Mass.) — obviously not happy about McCarthy's smear charges, but not anxious to criticize a fellow Republican—tried to straddle the issue. Lodge argued that the Tydings sub-committee, of which he was a member, hadn't fully investigated the charges, and shouldn't have reached any conclusions.

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.) took Lodge to task for his refusal to knock down McCarthy's charges against Philip Jessup, one of the State Dept.'s top officials.

"I am not going to imply that we investigated Jessup when we didn't," Lodge maintained.

"You know," McMahon replied, "what Gen. Eisenhower, Gen. Marshall and a distinguished Republican Senator, Arthur Vandenburg (Mich.), have said about the work of Phil Jessup. And I regret to say that you wouldn't vote on him."

LODGE admitted, under senatorial questioning, that he had found no Communists in the State Dept. and that the investigating sub-committee had given McCarthy a forum to bring out the facts—if he had any.

McCarthy entered the battle a couple of days later with new "sensational" cases — which promptly blew up into his face.

He sprang the case of "Mr. X," born in Moscow and employed by the State Dept., who McCarthy said was a dangerous Communist. And the Wisconsin Republican spread into the Congressional Record the contents of a Civil Service file on the man.

The file consisted largely of FBI interviews with undisclosed persons who maintained that "Mr. X" was still an active Communist.

But the case rang a bell in the minds of Sen. McMahon and Sen. Morse (R. Ore.). Morse identified the individual as Edward Posniak, a State Dept. economist who had worked for him several years ago. Morse went down the line in upholding Posniak's loyalty during the years he knew him.

McMahon left the Senate floor, soon came back with additional files on Posniak, in which a member of responsible persons praised Posniak for his anti-Communist views. They pointed out his family left Russia soon after the Revolution to escape Communist tyranny.

COMMENTED McMahon: "This is an example of the situation about which I spoke several days ago.

"If we take simply one part of a file and say that on the basis of it, without any hearings, without giving the accused an opportunity to appear and offer evidence to contradict the evidence given, then I say that if we stand for that system, we have denied one of the basic and fundamental propositions which we hold to be basically American."

McCarthy, taken aback, spluttered some "is it not a fact that" questions and took his seat.

Little Audrey Just Laughed And Laughed

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), claiming that Edward Posniak, a State Dept. employe, is a Communist, offered a number of FBI interviews to "prove" his case. (McCarthy's charges were quickly knocked down.)

One of the FBI reports contained this statement by an acquaintance of Posniak:

"He frequently talked about their (apartment house elevator operators') low pay and long working hours. He seemed to me to be a fanatic on anything pertaining to labor, to unions, to conditions under which Americans work, and the pay scales.

"This to me was an indication that Mr. Posniak might be a Communist."

So — Sen. McCarthy — might be Philip Murray, William Green, Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin, and Pres. Truman.

CIO Leads In Battle To Save Rent Control

CIO, AT least, is on the march to save rent control.

Actions range in importance all the way from resolution-passing in Columbus, O., to joint and effective action in Boston, Mass., which culminated July 17 in a City Council vote favoring the retention of federal controls beyond the Dec. 31 automatic expiration date.

In Hoboken, N. J., CIO backed a move to retain controls, and the City Council voted July 18 to retain them. It was the same story in nearby Rutherford.

Out on the West Coast, CIO is really pounding it in.

In Los Angeles, a strategy meeting of anti-decontrol forces was held in the CIO office two weeks ago. Attending were representatives of CIO, AFL, Machinists, Citizens' Housing Council, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the American Veterans' Committee. They perfected plans for attending a hearing called by the City Council for 10 A. M. July 28, and agreed among themselves to see that tenants were represented in large numbers, in spite of the fact that it meant loss of a day's wages for many of them.

All organizations agreed to publicize the hearing, and to urge those of their members who could not attend to write or phone their councilmen expressing their opinion.

Typical of the literature issued is a call to arms by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council, which told its members: "If you want to save your shirt, if you want to stop a landlords' sneak play that will cut your paycheck, then turn out for the hearing!"

In San Francisco, unions were instrumental in the formation of an official seven-man committee to investigate the need for continuing controls and report to the Board of Supervisors. The committee consists of two labor members, two supervisors, two landlord representatives and the area rent director.

In Akron, O., the CIO Council is working overtime to get the 7500 signatures necessary to put on the November ballot the question of whether the Akron City Council's decontrol resolution should be allowed to go into effect.

Important!

Reminder (again:)

All CIO locals and councils should get on the ball to keep rent control now, enforce it, and preserve it beyond the Dec. 31 date—when it will go out of effect if local governing bodies have not, before then, passed resolutions asking that it be continued through June, 1951.

The attached story shows some of the effective types of action that are needed. It is also vitally important that locals and councils check up at once on the make-up and attendance record of area rent advisory boards, which are extremely powerful under the new law. For details see CIO News of July 24.

FTC Levels Monopoly Conspiracy Charges Against Standard Oil

FIVE STANDARD Oil companies and a supply firm have been accused by the Federal Trade Commission of a 21-year conspiracy to monopolize trade in auto accessories.

The result, says the FTC complaint, has been to shut out of the market manufacturers and other sellers who "refuse to grant illegally discriminatory prices or to pay illegal brokerage." They have violated not only the FTC act, but also the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, the FTC charges.

The complaint declares that the five Standard Oil companies, far from being merely in the business of selling gasoline and oil, since 1929 have been a major factor in the sale of "TBA products"—tires, batteries, fan belts, radiator hose, electric lamps and spark plugs. In fact, says the complaint, their sales of these accessories amount to about 10% of the total U.S. replacement sales.

The setup, according to the complaint, gets the customers coming and going, with the Standard Oil companies involved being able to buy from suppliers for as much as 28% below prices paid by competitors.

THE COMPANIES accused are Standard of New Jersey, Indiana, Ohio and California, and the Atlas Supply Co., Newark, N. J. Prior to 1911, Standard of New Jersey owned substantially all the capital stock of the Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio and California companies.

In 1911 a U.S. court in Missouri ruled that it had illegally monopolized the production and sale of petroleum products. So it distributed to stockholders all its stock in the other Standard companies and "thereby withdrew from the direct control and direction of these companies."

In 1929, says the FTC, Atlas was set up by these Standard Oil companies, "acting in concert," and has been "managed, controlled and operated" by them since. Buying collectively through Atlas, the Standard companies are now one of the largest buying units in the U.S. of the items listed.

This enormous buying power, said the FTC, got them prices on batteries from Auto-Lite Battery Corp. of 25% below competitors; fan belts and radiator hose from Raybestos-Manhattan, Inc., of 28% below competitors; lower prices on tires and tubes from U.S. Rubber Co.

THE Standard companies, said the FTC: demanded, and got discriminatory prices, discounts, allowances, rebates and terms and conditions of sale; replaced sellers who refused with sellers who did; made sellers agree not to sell to Standard-Atlas competitors at lower prices; applied part of the savings thus obtained to finance "a very large and effective merchandising and sales promotional operation;" passed on to Standard companies, in the form of dividends on Atlas common stock, rebates on purchases made through Atlas; agreed among themselves not to compete in the resale of commodities purchased through Atlas; and each sold in mutually exclusive areas items purchased through Atlas.

Now, although Atlas is wholly owned by the Standard companies, it got commissions, brokerage fees and other compensation on purchases of "TBA" products for resale by the Standard companies, said the FTC, and in turn handed over this compensation to the Standard companies in the form of dividends.

In other words, says the FTC, Atlas is in some instances, "purported to act as agent of the vendor." FTC specifically cited an arrangement with Westinghouse Electric Corp. and General Motors Co. in which Atlas agreed to act as their agent in the sale and distribution of electric lamps and related items, and got commissions from them on purchases made through Atlas by the Standard companies. LPA

URW Votes Industrywide 31c Wage Hike

THE CIO Rubber Workers will ask for a wage increase totaling 31c an hour for 160,000 members who have had no general pay boost for two years, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster announced July 25 at the conclusion of a two-day meeting of the union's 250-man policy committee in Columbus, O.

The union will propose to the five major tire companies, which a few days before had announced price raises of 5% to 12%, that members be given a 25c hourly general wage increase; 6c an hour to correct area and plant differentials, and a further rise in view of the increase in the cost of living since June 15. The conference also voted to ask immediate reopenings under contracts with Goodyear, Goodrich, U. S. Rubber and Firestone.

"The rubber industry, like General Motors," said Buckmaster, "has experienced a steady upturn in man-hour production in recent years with the exception of the war period. We feel the Rubber Workers should share in that increased value.

"Tremendous profits are piling up in the industry. They are out of this world. We feel we should get a greater share of those, too."

Guild Strike Peace Offer Turned Down

THE CIO Newspaper Guild's 50-day strike against the New York World Telegram and Sun showed no signs of settlement last week despite a Guild offer to settle three main differences on the basis of its contract with the New York Herald Tribune.

The World Telegram and Sun management declined on the grounds that the maintenance of membership and job security clauses in the Herald Tribune agreement were unacceptable.

The Guild stated its position last week in an ad in the Herald Tribune when it pointed out that the strikers were asking nothing more than Guild members were already getting on six other New York papers.

In reply to Publisher Roy Howard's contention that a Guild shop is unacceptable because "a Guild shop provision can be prejudicial to editorial independence and objectivity," ANG officials called attention to the fact that at the present time there is a Guild shop on another Scripps-Howard newspaper, the San Francisco News.

No date has been set for future negotiation meetings, according to Francis L. Maher of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

STUDENTS AND STAFF members of the National CIO's summer school at Estes Park, Colo., wanted their picture taken with those snow-decked mountains as a back drop and here they are. The worker-students came from unions in rubber, oil, steel, telephone and clothing. The fourth school held for the Rocky Mt. area was run by the National CIO's Dept. of Education and Research and was under the direction of Associate Education Dir. George Guernsey, assisted by Jane Mandel of his department. Other CIO officials who gave talks and led discussions included CIO Regional Dir. Michael Livoda; Louis F. Krainock, education director, Packinghouse Workers; Leroy H. Purdy, president, Division 17, Communication Workers, and Darrel Smith, assistant to the CIO-PAC director. Five German women trade unionists who are in this country on a tour sponsored by government agencies under the Marshall Plan, were among the students at the school. They were Hedwig Eckhart, Irene Martin, Babbette Roegner, Frida G. Walter and Else Schlotterer. Klaus Scheutz, also from Germany, assisted as a translator. He had been in the U. S. for some time and studied at Harvard for a year. The Germans told the students that although goods produced in Germany are somewhat cheaper than imported goods, it still takes five hours labor to buy a pair of cotton stockings and a half-hour's work for a loaf of bread. They observed that in America there is less class distinction between workers and management, and felt that U. S. workers appear more concerned over take-home pay than in advances in working conditions. Political action and legislation were an important part of the school's program. One of the highlights of the week's session was a labor quiz attended by a number of visitors in the area.

CIO Education Dept. Guides Smooth Shop Steward's Path

A UNION shop steward's job is no snap. The road he has to follow sometimes gets pretty rough and rocky.

Many a union member in CIO-organized plants and shops throughout the country who has agreed to serve in this important and vital capacity probably often feels like throwing up his hands in discouragement over human cussedness as he tries to straighten out the grievances, gripes and groans that his fellow workers bring to him.

The men and women who serve as shop stewards in a plant have a big responsibility upon their shoulders. They need particularly to have a thorough knowledge of the terms of the union contract and what goes on in their departments. The demands on their tact and understanding are heavy. They are the key people in the union, in close daily contact with the workers.

To help these shop stewards in the performance of their jobs, the National CIO Dept. of Education & Research a short time ago revised its pamphlet, "The Steward's Job in Building Your CIO," bringing it up-to-date. Now it has issued a "Teaching Guide for CIO Stewards" to go along with the manual.

The guide gives simple instructions and suggestions for a five-session course, prepared to help local and regional officers or education committeemen teach and apply the material given in the shop steward's manual. Part I takes up various subjects to be discussed at the meeting, and Part II tells how to set up, run and lead a good program.

This useful guide may be obtained from the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C. The price is $1 a copy.

Fly-Specked Crystal Ball Department

What does it all mean? Will the war spread beyond Korea? Will prices continue the fast upward climb—and, if so, will there be price control?

Anxious Americans have been asking such questions almost since the beginning of conflict in South Korea.

Prentice-Hall, big publishing firm which supplies information and advice to business firms has the answers—it thinks.

In a leaflet plugging its "Report," Prentice-Hall says:

"Within days you'll find a tightening labor market. It will be labor's chance; and here's what that means: a move to boost the minimum wage to $1 an hour!

"We can now tell you authoritatively that there's this very move afoot already. As a Prentice-Hall 'Report' reader you'll be advised of this well in advance of its event.

"That's the only way you'll have time to REMOVE FROM MINIMUM WAGE JURISDICTION as many employes as possible."

The leaflet asks, "Is Wage Stabilization Coming Back?" and then comments:

"The day it does, salaries will be of course frozen at once. At least one full month before it occurs you will be alerted by 'The Prentice-Hall Report' that it's coming.

"That way you'll have time to make those pay adjustments you want made for the long pull during which ALL wages will be frozen."

And on price control:

"How will price control differ THIS time from the last? What lines will feel it first? Even more important, how big a boost in them will bring upon you a charge of 'defense profiteering'?"

Prentice-Hall's leaflet leaves that last question unanswered.

Herzog Named NLRB Chairman For 2nd Full Term By Truman

PRESIDENT Truman nominated Paul M. Herzog for a second term as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board on July 24.

The letter to Herzog which Truman released was regarded as a slap at Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the NLRB, who has been at odds with the board members. Time after time labor leaders have asked that Truman fire Denham because of his anti-union bias. Moreover, there's no love lost between Denham and Herzog. Addressing Herzog as "Dear Paul," Truman wrote:

"I am familiar with the circumstances which have prompted your desire now for many months to return to private life. As long ago as last Feb. I persuaded you to continue in the discharge of the duties as chairman for which you have such exceptional qualifications.

"Now the Korean crisis is with us and is sure to bring up many problems, the solution of which will lie with the National Labor Relations Board.

"I know you had desired particularly to relinquish your duties on Aug. 1st. But the times are grave. All circumstances considered, I feel that I have no recourse except to ask you to continue to give your government the benefit of your wisdom and your long experience."

The new term covers the period Aug. 27, 1950, to Aug. 27, 1955. The nomination is the third for Herzog. He first assumed office as a member and as chairman on July 5, 1945, filling out an unexpired term, and then started to serve the full term which ends Aug. 26, 1950. LPA

Vigilantes Riding— Against Unions Now

THE VIGILANTES are riding again in Nevada. Now the members ride in Cadillacs and Buicks and the "bad men" they're after are not cattle rustlers, but union representatives.

The name in Las Vegas is Nevada Citizens' Committee. In Reno it's the Employers' Council. But the aim is the same: To run the unions out of the state.

Nevada officers of the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists have sent a report, which is being turned in to the Department of Justice in Washington. The report reveals the employers' posse is inciting lynch mobs, threatening to tar and feather union men, putting pressure on fair employers to stop recognizing legitimate unions, and threatening public officials.

Here's the first paragraph of a leaflet being distributed in Las Vegas:

"The Nevada Citizens' Committee calls on all citizens of Nevada to join in a common effort to make the Silver State too hot for comfort for racketeers, whether they be union, gamblers or any other kind of racketeer. We want none of them and we expect our state, county and city officials to clean them out . . . now."

IN RENO the employers ran an advertisement in the Evening Gazeteer. It said "let's send the Las Vegas, Los Angeles, and Sacramento trouble-makers back where they belong and settle our differences in a friendly give-and-take manner the way we always have."

(In Reno, when the AFL Teamsters tried to settle a taxicab strike and set a labor peace policy for the whole town, the answer of the Employers' Council was to write all employers urging them and the public to patronize business concerns which are being picketed. Reno labor is now urging a boycott of the entire town.)

The Nevada Citizens Committee is an active affiliate of the Committee for Constitutional Government, considered to be the top anti-labor lobby in the U. S. and now under investigation by a Congressional lobby probe committee. The Nevada group is distributing the chief CCG propaganda weapon, John T. Flynn's hysterical book, "The Road Ahead."

J. R. Henderson heads the Citizens' Committee. Joe Ronnow is treasurer. James Cashman Sr. heads the financial committee; Jack Young, the legislative committee; Harry Claiborne, intelligence committee. Al Cahlan, editor of the Las Vegas Review Journal, is one of the most active supporters and advisors.

Henderson headed the negotiating committee in Las Vegas when the employers were so anti-labor that the AFL Building Trades Council had to call a general strike. He advocated shutting down the entire city rather than compromise.

RONNOW owns the Clark County Wholesale Co. and has had a Machinists' and Central Labor Council picket line on his firm since February 1950.

Cashman is an automotive distributor, and has had an IAM and Central Labor Council picket line on his firm since March.

Young runs a string of non-union electrical shops in Nevada, Utah and Idaho. His shops are on the Building Trades Council unfair list.

Claiborne is attorney for an automobile agency being picketed for refusal to bargain. While State Assemblyman from Las Vegas, he tried to put across a right-to-scab law.

Cahlan's paper has had a Typographical Union picket line for over a year, and is on the unfair lists of all organized labor. LPA

Rep. A. S. "Mike" Monroney

Monroney Victor In Oklahoma Primary, Sims Loses In S. C.

SEN. ELMER THOMAS (D. Okla.), chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee and of the Military Appropriations sub-committee, is an unofficial lame duck as of now, while Rep. A. S. "Mike" Monroney (D. Okla.), author and chief proponent of the Congressional Reorganization Act of 1948, is preparing to move over to the Senate side.

Monroney got about 25,000 more votes than Thomas in the Oklahoma Democratic primary run-off July 25. In Oklahoma, Republicans are relatively scarce, so Monroney is as good as elected right now although there will be the formality of an election in November.

Labor didn't take much part in the campaign. Monroney voted for the original Taft-Hartley bill, although he's been right on all but one major issue since, from labor's point of view. Thomas voted against T-H but has been wrong eight times on other counts. The Fair Deal wing of the Democratic party has made a gain in this race.

There was rejoicing in high Democratic councils over the renomination, which means re-election, of young Gov. Sid McMath of Arkansas, a Democratic "regular" and Truman supporter, who walloped his opponent, former Gov. Ben. T. Laney, anti-Truman States-Righter.

Other results, however, were not so good from the liberal point of view.

All of the Louisiana House delegation was re-nominated and in the South Carolina run-off the House lost Rep. Hugo Sims, the only liberal in that delegation. Nominated in his stead was former Rep. John P. Riley.

Dump Hacks As UE Roster Drops Lower

AT LEAST two dozen members of the United Electrical Workers international staff, including the personal assistant of Organization Director James J. Matles, have been dropped from the payroll, the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical Radio & Machine Workers reported last week.

"The big personnel slashes indicate that UE, expelled from CIO last November, is on its last legs both financially and organizationally," IUE said.

"Approximately 80% of its one-time membership is now among the ranks of CIO's new electrical workers union, IUE. Additional cuts on the UE staff are expected."

IUE Chairman James B. Carey said:

"These firings are significant signs of complete wreckage. But I wonder why UE fires the little stinkers, when it should fire the big stinkers responsible for UE's sordid failure? I refer to Albert Fitzgerald, James Matles and Julius Emspak.

"It looks like UE is not only dead as a union, but also as a Stalinist WPA for unemployed Communists. I wonder if any of the persons fired will appeal their dismissal to Joe Stalin?"

Among those dropped from UE's payroll, IUE reported, are Matles' assistant, Herbert Morais; Fred Haug, Claude H. VanTyne, Frederick D'Avila, Mildred Block, Robert L. Bornholz, Everett A. Dewald, Michael Driscoll, Harriet G. Goldring, Louis Kimmel, Ruth M. Marson, William A. Nightingale, John P. Nordman, Corinne Pressman Lautman, Sol S. Rosner, Nathaniel Shelman, Frank Silvia, Olive Thompson and Walter Wofford.

Red Probers Cite Five UE Leaders

Contempt of Congress proceedings against the United Electrical Workers' James J. Matles, director of organization, and Julius Emspak, secretary-treasurer, were begun July 18 by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The committee, meeting in a closed-door session, voted unanimously to ask the House to cite Matles, Emspak and three other UE leaders for contempt on grounds of their refusal to answer questions about Communist affiliations.

The other cited leaders of the union which CIO expelled last November are Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, chief UE steward of Westinghouse Local 601 in Pittsburgh, Pa.; Thomas Quinn, UE organizer in the Pittsburgh area, and Talmadge Raley, business agent of a UE local in Cincinnati.

Puerto Rico CIO Members Back Truman

FULL SUPPORT of CIO members in Puerto Rico in the Korean crisis has been pledged to President Truman by Tomas Mendez Mejia, president of the General Confederation of Workers of Puerto Rico (CGT), which is affiliated with the CIO.

"The CGT-CIO," he wrote President Truman, "condemns the attack on the citizens of the free and democratic Republic of South Korea by the Korean Communists as an act of aggression which threatens the peace of the entire world.

"At this very moment when democracy finds itself at the crossroads and when other products in the markets of the rest of the world want to compete with it, your firm and militant attitude, Mr. President, to back up the decision of the United Nations Security Council in the case of Korea has our complete and unconditional backing.

The Four Freedoms, he wrote must be strengthened "against the false prophets of ideas which are contrary to human dignity."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The Utility Workers Union-CIO won a tremendous victory among the clerical employes of the Boston Edison Co., Boston, Mass. This victory is one of the most significant things that has occurred in a long time. It definitely shows that white collar workers prefer the CIO, despite the fact that the CIO has been maligned by such discredited groups as the UOPWA and the United Public Workers. The vote was 622 UWU-CIO, 126 independent. Congratulations to the UWU for a job well done.

On July 25, the CIO-AFL Unity Committee met. The writer was chairman of the CIO group in the absence of Pres. Murray. The committee, after examining mutual problems, determined that:

"1. We will continue to work together in the field of international relations, through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, as a means of strengthening democracy throughout the world.

"2. We will work together in the fields of legislation and political action, to insure the continued strengthening of our own American democratic institutions."

The CIO-AFL Unity Committee will meet again in Chicago on August 4. Participating in the discussions were:

AFL: Pres. William Green, Pres. Daniel J. Tobin of the Brotherhood of Teamsters, Pres. Daniel Tracy of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Pres. Charles MacGowan of the Brotherhood of Boilermakers.

CIO: Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Automobile Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The rank and file of organized labor is looking for a constructive program to result from these meetings of the unity committee. It will take time and effort, but it can be accomplished by trade union men striving in the interests of the working people of America.

Ross Blood, secretary-treasurer, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers-CIO, reports that in a representation election held at the Rundle plant, Pennsauken, N. J., the workers voted as follows: Eligible 296, IUMSWA 208, independent 55, no union 0, void 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports that in union shop election held at the Deep Rock Refinery, Cushing, Okla., 98% of the employes voted for the union shop. Bill Paara, international representative of the Oil Workers, was in charge of the campaign.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE representation election victories: Schrader Valve Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., IUE 496, UE 431, no union 23; Midwest Industries, Inc., Cleveland, O., IUE 32, no union 7.

Timberworkers Win Weyerhaeuser Strike

More than 9000 members of the CIO Woodworkers were back at work last week after a 10-week strike against the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., the largest lumber operators in the world.

Most important point in the walkout and the negotiations that followed it was a company paid medical and social insurance plan, which the Woodworkers won in the settlement.

They also gained a wage increase of 5c an hour and three additional paid holidays.

New Social Security Bill Is Ready For Congress

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE NEW, improved Social Security bill is on its way to final approval by Congress after more than two years of effort.

The only thing that can keep it from passing is new opposition from the "economy boys," using defense expenditures as an excuse for renewing their attacks on social security legislation.

Liberal forces suffered two major defeats at the hands of the House-Senate conferees, but by and large the bill is a substantial improvement over the present law.

Average "primary" benefits—i. e., benefits payable to a single man or the head of a family—are increased by about 77½% for those already retired. This will mean that over 2½ million elderly people now scrabbling along on completely inadequate benefits can look forward to larger checks, starting Oct. 1 or Nov. 1. (See attached table.)

THE INCREASE will not bring any of the beneficiaries up to even a minimum standard of living without outside help, but it will bring blessed relief just the same. No elderly single man, for instance, can go on much of a spending spree on $80 a month, which is the most any single retired worker can get under the new bill.

Another section provides additional relief to those already retired who may be able to find part-time jobs. The present law states that if a retired worker earns more than $14.95 a month in "covered" employment, he loses his benefits for that month. The new law says he can earn $50 a month extra without losing anything, and if he earns more than that, his benefits are reduced only on a pro rata basis.

The increase in "primary" benefits, plus some liberalization of other clauses, brings the total maximum family benefit to $150 from its present $85. This is the most anyone can receive no matter how many helpless dependents he has.

APPROXIMATELY 10 million people are covered under the law for the first time. The most important group probably is the "self-employed"—men like your corner grocer, in business for themselves on a small scale. There are probably five million of these people who have never before been allowed to participate in the program. Now they will pay social security taxes and, after five years of complete participation, will be entitled to retire and draw the same benefits as anybody else.

Also included are approximately one million domestic servants and 700,000 regularly employed farm workers.

The new law wipes out one feature of the old one which operated in favor of those who had worked long and steadily. Now, once you qualify as "fully insured"—which takes five consecutive years of work in a covered job—you get benefits on the same basis as somebody who has worked 25 years. Under the old law, the 25-year man would get 1% extra per extra year.

On the other hand, everybody gets a "new start" in 1950, which is an advantage that might more than make up the disadvantage to the long-time worker who loses his "annual increment."

UNDER THE new law, if you want to retire in 1955, you can look over your earnings record and decide whether your average wages were higher in 1950-55 than in the years before that. If you earned higher average wages in 1950-55, you can elect to have benefits paid on the basis of that average. This will be a tremendous advantage to many who were serving apprenticeships when the program started or who were laid off, for instance, right after the war but have worked their way up in new jobs since.

This is true because in spite of tremendous efforts, liberal forces in Congress were not able to change the definition of "average wage" in the bill. Now, and also in the new law, the average is a straight mathematical average—the number of years that have elapsed since you first started paying social security taxes, divided into your total earnings in covered employment since you started.

This method of figuring means that low pre-war wages, long apprenticeship periods, weeks or months of unemployment or sickness, or even total disability work directly against you. CIO wanted Congress to compute benefits on the basis of average wages earned in the worker's "best five years," and the House approved a proposal which would have left periods of total disability but not permanent disability out of the computation entirely. This point was lost in conference.

ALSO LOST was a House-approved provision which would have allowed a totally and permanently disabled person to get his benefits right away, if he had worked the required five years, instead of having to wait till he was 65. The new bill does provide federal "assistance" on a very limited basis, but this is relief, not earned insurance.

The worst thing the conferees did, from labor's point of view, however, was to approve the Knowland amendment, which would have the practical effect of allowing anti-labor state administrations to deny unemployment benefits to men who refuse to scab. The federal law, which sets up standards on which state legislation must be based, specifically says that benefits may not be denied to men who refuse available employment offers if the job is vacant as the result of a labor dispute.

The Knowland amendment, a highly technical piece of business, does not mention this section. It simply says that the federal government cannot withhold funds from a state which it believes has violated the federal law, until the highest court in the state has decided the question. At present, the federal government can withhold the funds first and decide the technicalities later.

THE AMENDMENT was introduced by Sen. Knowland (R. Cal.) at the request of the California shipping interests. It was suggested after the federal government had cracked down on California for, in effect, forcing men to scab during a waterfront dispute. Now the states can refuse payment for three years or so while the federal government argues in the courts.

The new law becomes effective Oct. 1 or Nov. 1, depending upon whether President Truman signs it before or after Aug. 1.

Increases in social security tax rates will not start until 1954, but higher-bracket workers and all employers will start paying more immediately after the law goes into effect because they will pay 1½% on the first $3600 of the worker's income, instead of the first $3000. The rate will go to 2% in 1954, 2½ in 1960, 3% in 1965 and 3½% in 1970.

That Queer Noise Was A Horse-Laugh

Times DO change.

Fifteen years ago, when social security old age benefits were first discussed in Congress, the seven minority members of the House Ways and Means Committee called the proposition "socialistic, uneconomical, regimentation, and destructive of the character and moral fiber of the people."

"Never in the world," they said, "has any measure been brought in here so insidiously designed to prevent business recovery, to enslave workers, and to prevent any possibility of the employers providing work for the people."

Social Security Benefits Old And New

Here is the new schedule of benefits for single persons already retired, which will go into effect in October or November.

Present benefit	New benefit
$10 (minimum)	$20 (minimum)
15	30
20	37
25	46.50
30	54
35	59.20
40	64
45	68.50

The most a single man could receive under the new bill is $80 a month, compared with $46 at present. The most a family could receive would be $150, compared to the present $85.

GCEOC-CIO Asks Defeat Of 'Loyalty' Bill

The CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee has gone on record before the Senate Armed Services Committee as being vigorously opposed to enactment of the House passed "loyalty" discharge bill, H.R. 7439.

Richard E. Shoemaker, GCEOC legislative representative, charged in testimony before the Senate committee that the bill, which provides for the dismissal of federal employes deemed security risks, "plays directly into the hands of the Communist conspirators."

Shoemaker pointed out that under the measure, federal employes will be "discharged by overzealous administrators without either adequate proof or evidence and without provision for impartial appeal."

"We in the CIO fight Communists by taking their weapons away from them—not by giving them more ammunition," Shoemaker told the committee.

Calling for defeat of the bill, he said that few people in the country will follow the program of the Communist party.

"But," he declared, "large numbers of people will fight for civil rights, for better working conditions and for fair employment practices. . . .

"Dismissal for being a security risk involves far more punishment than the mere loss of salary or income. A security risk is not a loyalty case—technically. However, the two are confused in the public mind. This results in almost as severe a handicap to the employe so discharged as if he had been discharged for disloyalty."

Shoemaker said a constructive approach to security risk cases lies in transfer of suspected employes to non-sensitive jobs.

Okla. Approves Death Pay Law

The voters of Oklahoma by an overwhelming majority have approved an amendment to the state constitution authorizing the Legislature to determine the amounts which may be paid in case of the deaths of workers from injuries covered by the state's Workmen's Compensation Act.

CGEOC Elects Old CP Foes

Veteran leaders in the successful fight to oust the United Public Workers from the CIO as Communist-dominated and to set up a new organization for civil service employes were elected first permanent officers of New York City Amalgamated Local 370, CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Frank E. Smith, of the Queens County Clerks, was elected president, and Stephen S. Gorey, of the office of the Borough President of Brooklyn, was named executive secretary. Vice presidents chosen were James P. Smith, Louis Martini, Edward J. Barry, Joseph E. Collins, Wilbert Rooks and Dominick Cuccio.

Amalgamated Local 370 has jurisdiction over all public employes in New York where an independent local has not been established. An "organizing" local in the eyes of CIO officials, it broke away from the UPW in 1948 over the Communist question. It was the first New York local to be chartered by the CIO-CGEOC, and four new locals have since been carved out of it— welfare, school lunch, quasi-public, and marine and aviation. It represents more than 5000 municipal employes.

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 7, 1950 82 No. 31

RISING PRICES have eaten a big slice out of America's "food dollar" (as illustrated above) since the war started in Korea. CIO economists figure the purchasing power of the dollar at the average grocery store has shrunk about 10% during the past six weeks. And the full impact of wholesale price increases hadn't yet reached consumers last week when the CIO asked Congress to enact price control legislation. Congress, for once, seemed determined to do something, galloped off in all directions. (See stories on Pages 2 and 3.)

Price Rises Continue, Buying Eases

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

PRICES, ON the whole, continued to rise last week and panic buying was still in evidence, although here and there it was slacking off in response to public indignation at artificial shortages.

There continued to be no sound basis for most of the price increases. And the government continued to say so. The effect of congressional debate on price control was not clear: the question was whether there would be a roll-back. If there was, a lot of those who gambled on increasing prices would be caught. If there was not, the ones who did not increase prices would be suckers.

At any rate, things went on up at wholesale—radios and television sets, woolens, cottons, washing machines, rugs, linoleum—even pencils.

Wholesale coffee prices were up 10c a pound, although this apparently was not a war profiteering increase but resulted from a boost in the price of Brazilian green coffee before the Korean outburst.

CIGARETTES IN most cities went up a penny a pack, as a result of a price boost by most major manufacturers.

Towel prices rose 5 to 8% after manufacturers withheld them from the market for a short time in order to figure out the increase.

A shortage of woolen clothing materials was predicted after the industry got hurry-up orders from the armed forces for vast quantities of uniforms. Several manufacturers withdrew their lines from the civilian market.

Candy manufacturers refused to take any more bulk orders for candy bars at the present prices.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Aug. 2 that "over the last five weeks price increases have ranged as high as 68.4% for rubber, 45.8% for tallow, 30.9% for cocoa beans, 30.6% for lard, 25% for tin, 23.6% for cottonseed oil, 23.3% for print cloth, and 22% for hides."

Ewan Clague, BLS head, the following day told the Senate Banking Committee that retail prices generally had increased an estimated 2 to 3% between June 15 and July 15.

Department store sales for the week ended July 22 rose a record 46%, evidence that scare buying by the public was widespread.

THE DEPT. of Agriculture moved in on the sugar hoarders in a hurry, offering visible proof that hoarding was unnecessary. It bought the entire sugar reserve in Cuba, which added to stocks already on hand gives this country the largest supply in its history.

There are almost one million tons more on hand right now than we used in 1949, which was a peak year, and the Cuban reserve amounts to another 600,000 tons. A sugar industry spokesman said this meant that every person in the U. S. would have 50 pounds more sugar available this year than he used, on the average, in 1949.

The extent of the panic sugar buying was made evident by the fact that nearly 284,000 tons were delivered to wholesalers the week ending July 22, which was almost twice as much as was delivered in the same week last year. And the extent of price gouging on sugar was indicated, at least, by what happened in New York, where the Markets Commissioner reported he had received 100 complaints against food retailers for charging excessive prices or forcing customers to buy unpopular merchandise in order to get sugar.

Hoarders: The people who bought the last few cans of the stuff you were figuring on getting a case of.

SOME MANUFACTURERS came right out and said they wanted price controls. Steel fabricators said so, off the record, and one textile company president, Seymour J. Phillips, of the Phillips-Jones Corp., said publicly that if controls were not put on immediately, prices of materials for men's shirts would shoot skyward.

"I don't like controls any better than the next man," he said, "but there can be no doubt that they are needed to prevent a serious drain on the pocketbook of the consumer."

He explained he was talking not only about cottons but about buttons, thread and other accessories. Much of this material, he said, has already disappeared from the wholesale market, and nylon is up as much as 350% on the resale market above prices charged by the original manufacturer.

Meanwhile, Secy. of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan sailed into the "futures" speculators in as angry a tongue-lashing as has been heard around the capital in many a day.

"A considerable number of speculators," he said, "are intent upon cashing in on the opportunity afforded by the emergency situation which now faces the nation, regardless of the effect it may have upon our economy or even on the war effort."

CONCURRENTLY, the Commodity Exchange Authority, which watches the futures markets, reported that trading has grown frenzied.

"A speculator who purchased just before the Korean episode and deposited the minimum margin," the report said, "could have cashed in five weeks later with approximately 450% profit on lard, 300% on cottonseed oil, 300% on soybeans, 150% on cotton or wool tops, and a comparatively modest 100% on the relatively sluggish wheat futures."

The House last week turned down a proposal which would allow the Secretary to fix high margin requirements on futures trading.

Cost Of Living—How It Grows

Here are the available statistics on wholesale prices as of now:

The Bureau of Labor Statistics conducted a spot-check of the wholesale prices of 28 commodities Aug. 1 and found they had gone up 34 points in six weeks. This brought them 202 points above the 1935-39 average and within two points of the nation's all-time peak in August, 1939. The increase is approximately 15% since June 23.

Dun & Bradstreet's wholesale index (of food prices only), reported in dollars-and-cents terms, showed an advance for the seventh consecutive week and reached the highest level since Sept. 28, 1948. The index reflects the wholsesale price per pound of 31 commonly used foods. Since June 20, the total cost of assorted foods has risen 59c or about 10%; it now is $6.53. It was $5.84 last year at this time and $6.70 on Sept. 28, 1948.

The Bigger They Come The Oftener They Fall

Just how stupid can you get?

A Washington grocer last week did up some loose sugar in five-pound bags and displayed it quietly, on a side counter, at 49 cents for five pounds.

He sold about 350 pounds.

Next day he moved the display to the front of the store and doubled the price. He put up a sign which in big, red letters said: "Special offer—five pounds of sugar for 98 cents."

That day he sold more than 1000 pounds.

Restoration Of Rent Control Started In Congress

RENT CONTROL may be back in force before long.

Aware that building materials prices are going up and that military production may aggravate housing problems in many areas, the House and Senate Banking Committees last week requested the Bureau of the Budget to have prepared some amendments to the present rent control law which would:

(1) Wipe out the provision ending controls on Dec. 31 in those communities whose governing bodies had not voted before then to keep Federal controls, thus keeping the law automatically in force until June 30, 1951.

(2) Eliminate the "local option decontrol" provision entirely.

Effect of the two changes would be to reinstitute the law virtually as it was in war-time, although there still remains a question of what would be done about rolling back rent in areas already decontrolled.

The Budget Bureau asked Tighe Woods, head of the Office of the Housing Expediter, to draft the proposals, and he delightedly complied. He had fought tooth and nail against both the provisions.

THE PROPOSITION is expected to be considered after President Truman's request for priorities and allocations power is out of the way, and possibly in conjunction with the price-and-wage-control proposals.

News of these developments came shortly after tenants had suffered a major defeat in Los Angeles, where the City Council on July 29 voted 10-4 to decontrol the booming city. CIO and all other unions and liberal groups had fought hard to retain controls, but were defeated by the real estate interests. The action cannot go into effect until Aug. 29, under a State law, so it is possible that congressional action will remedy the situation before that time.

The city had paid $25,000 for a survey of rental vacancies but the council refused to heed the results. It had previously agreed it would not consider decontrol unless the vacancy rate was at least 4%. The city-financed survey found the rate to be only 2.6% but the council went ahead and voted decontrol anyway.

Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Workers, who also is chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, said he was "amazed and appalled" at the Council's action, and called on President Truman to recontrol Los Angeles immediately (which he does not at the moment have the power to do.) Reuther said thousands of additional workers were being hired to meet airplane production schedules, and pointed out that production suffered in the area during the war because of lack of reasonably priced housing.

"We cannot permit repetition," he added, "of the experience in Spokane, Wash., where the families of air force pilots who had been ordered to the Korean theatre were evicted because of the lack of federal rent controls. All Pacific Coast bases affected by the action in Korea should be watched carefully and recontrolled if needed be, to prevent a repetition of the action in Spokane."

Santa Barbara, Calif., also was decontrolled by its City Council, over strong tenant protest.

In Illinois, however, the trend was the other way. Seven cities—Joliet, Evanston, Champaign, Elmwood Park, East St. Louis, Pekin and Highwood—joined the parade led last month by Chicago and voted to keep federal controls past the Dec. 31 date.

The CIO Housing Committee warned that favorable Congressional action was not a sure thing, and urged continued pressure at the local level.

Last Year's Tax Bill $359 Per American

THE NATION'S tax bill last year federal, state and local—totaled $53,583 million, or an average of $359 for every man, woman and child in the country, the Census Bureau reported last week.

The total was the largest in the nation's history except for 1948, when it was $54,495 million.

Of the $359 average individual tax, the federal government took 71% or $253. The states received $56 and local government the remaining $50.

Taxes on individual incomes provided 29% of all government revenue last year, yielding a total of $16,103 million. Most of this tax went to the U. S. government.

Income taxes on corporations yielded $11,844 million, a gain of 15% compared with 1948 but about 25% below the record collections of 1945, when the excess profits tax was in force.

Property taxes in 1949 amounted to $6,839 million compared with $6,128 million the year before.

Social insurance taxes provided 6% of total governmental revenue in 1950. Death and gift taxes and minor imposts accounted for another 5%.

Murray Asks For Truman Economic Plan

BOTH BRANCHES of Congress last week plunged into the task of drafting a home-front economic controls bill—but when The CIO NEWS went to press, about all that had been produced was growing confusion.

CIO Pres. Murray, showing concern about the confused situation on Capitol Hill, wired congressional leaders a suggestion that all economic legislation, except that covering the President's original minimum request, be sent back to committee for hearings and careful consideration.

Murray's wire was sent as representatives were voting on a series of important amendments, many of them affecting the country's home front policies, perhaps for several years. The amendments were rolling through with little debate, not much comprehension of their import, and little consideration of all the problems involved.

"Legislation designed to control prices and halt profiteering should be promptly enacted," Murray said in his wire, "but, obviously, such legislation cannot be drafted on the floor of the House or Senate without opportunity for public hearings.

"The subjects involved are complex and require careful drafting.

"The CIO, therefore, urges that all pending legislation dealing with economic mobilization other than the legislation originally requested by the President be referred to appropriate committees of the Congress for more adequate consideration."

MURRAY SAID that the President's basic program—to allocate scarce materials, to make loans for expansion of factories, to strengthen controls over credit, and to control speculation on commodity exchanges — "is urgently required and its passage is now overdue."

"The CIO likewise believes that the Congress should curb excess profits and provide the President with stand-by powers to regulate and control prices and rents, and to ration commodities, if necessary," he added.

But, he indicated, such important programs should be worked out with utmost care and consideration.

THE congressional confusion began to mount when legislators in both parties found public opinion apparently ahead of the President, who had suggested a minimum program of allocation of scarce materials, tightening of consumer credit and first-step revision of the tax law.

A swing to strengthen that program developed late in July after Bernard Baruch, elderly financier, had urged all-out mobilization steps now rather than later. In addition, Congressmen and Senators found themselves deluged with mail and wires protesting the rapidly-jumping price structure.

Republicans, apparently seeking a chance to harvest some late-summer political hay, quickly drew up a bill in the House to substitute for the Administration measure containing the President's original proposals. It was introduced by Rep. Kunkel (R. Pa.), a leading conservative.

Emil Rieve, of the CIO Full Employment Committee, said in a wire to House leaders that the Kunkel bill would "deceive the public into believing that it will get genuine relief from inflation." He asked for its defeat, and said:

"Actually this bill, by immediately freezing only wages and wholesale prices, and by instituting the freeze before adequate enforcement machinery over prices can be set up, will have the sole effect of freezing wages."

The CIO officer also pointed out that the Kunkel bill contains no provision for rent controls.

RECOGNIZING the sentiment on Capitol Hill, President Truman on Aug. 1 gave Congress a green light to vote "some kind of authority for direct controls over wages, prices and the distribution of goods to consumers."

In a letter to Sen. Maybank (D.S.C.), head of the Senate Banking Committee, the President said Congress must take into consideration four "essential" conditions:

1. The controls should be in addition to—not in place of—the legislation he had previously called for.

2. There should be no long delay in passing the basic program he had requested.

3. "Any provisions relating to prices and wages should not set up a rigid formula or freeze, in advance of experience . . . They must be written in a form which allows wide discretion and flexibility as to the method and place and timing of application."

4. "For the same reason, any grant of price and wage authority should leave open the question of the method of administration. This should remain flexible . . ."

Administration bills incorporating the price control, rationing and wage stabilization proposals in line with the President's letter were introduced into Senate and House on Aug. 2. The Senate bill was sponsored by Sens. Maybank and Sparkman (D. Ala.) and was immediately a matter of discussion in the Banking and Currency Committee.

By a 12-1 vote, the committee agreed to some form of price, wage and rationing legislation, but was hazy on what form it should take. Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) had apparently won agreement that the controls should go into effect not at the President's discretion—as he had requested—but when the Dept. of Labor cost-of-living index reached some to-be-determined higher figure.

IN THE House, a companion bill introduced by Rep. Spence (D. Ky.), head of the House Banking and Currency Committee, quickly hit the floor on Aug. 3, midst a flurry of amendments.

Acting tentatively, with more formal votes later, the House raced through a series of important proposals with as few as one-quarter of the congressmen in attendance.

By a 58-42 vote, it turned down a proposal to start price-wage controls at once.

Then, with no voice vote, the House decided to put price-wage controls into effect whenever prices go 5% over the Labor Dept.'s June 15 index. That vote thus removed the flexibility which the President had requested.

Then, by a 166-83 vote, the House refused to give President Truman emergency wartime powers in labor disputes. The vote removed from the administration bill language permitting the President to "take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense."

SUCH powers would presumably be needed to establish a War Labor Board such as functioned in World War II. The stripping of presidential powers came on a motion by Rep. Barden (D. N.C.), who has a long anti-labor record and who said he feared the bill would let Truman "circumvent" the Taft-Hartley Act.

Liberal Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Calif.) added that "it is preposterous to discuss for one moment controls of wages without control at the same time of excess profits." She said the House should tell its Ways and Means Committee what it believes are minimum needs for excess profits taxes.

Rep. Flood (D. Pa.) tried to get the House to hold up action on wage controls until after a plan had been adopted to control profits. The motion was defeated by voice vote.

AT A WHITE House press conference, President Truman was critical of the House decision to start controls when prices have risen 5%.

The President said such action would invite price increases and that if the country is going to have price controls, it should have real controls. Prices should be rolled back to about the level of the month before the Korean war, he said.

CIO officials have pointed out a growing "inadequacy" in workers' buying power and serious "inequity" arising from the fact that wages have been kept level while prices have risen—since the first of the year and particularly since June 25.

Republican proposals for a flat wage-freeze would presumably take no account of these inequities nor provide machinery for straightening out the relationship between wages and prices on a fair basis.

Consumers' Price Index

Here is background for the House proposal to clamp down on wages and prices "when the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumers' price index has gone up 5 points beyond the June 15 figure":

The BLS index, issued monthly, is based on a study of retail costs of all items going to make up the necessities budget of moderate income families of four people living in large cities. Samplings are made in 34 cities and cover hundreds of items, including everything from food and clothes to rent and house furnishings. Budget items are given differing weights—food, for instance, is counted as 40% of the total budget.

The index figures are based on the theory that prices in the period 1935-39 were normal. Therefore the 1935-39 average is given the index number 100.

By these standards, the index for all of 1945, last full year of OPA, was 128 4. In 1946, during which controls were lifted, it was 139.3. In 1947 it was 159.2 and in 1948, 171.2

The last monthly figure issued was for June 15, 1950, and was 170.2, reflecting a slight rise since the beginning of the year.

When the figure for July 15 is issued in mid-August, it will reflect what happened to retail prices in the first three weeks of the Korean crisis.

A lot of prices have to go up considerably to make even a one-point change in the index.

CIO: 'Price Control, Rationing, Excess Profits Tax'

WHILE CONGRESS debated the merits of a half-dozen home front economic programs, the CIO last week called for adoption of legislation "fully geared to our defense needs."

Emil Rieve, head of the CIO's Full Employment Committee, issued a statement calling for:

1. Control of "skyrocketing prices."

2. "Stand-by power for the rationing of scarce commodities."

3. "Drastically revised tax schedules"—including an "effective excess profits tax."

Discussing wage controls, Rieve said:

"In connection with price control, there has been a considerable amount of uninformed talk about wage freezing.

"Yet the fact remains that within the framework of the existing price and profit margins, there is adequate room for the collective bargaining process to proceed without forcing prices upward.

"The existing inadequacies and inequities in the buying power of American wage earners cannot be ignored."

The CIO statement warned that no program to mobilize the nation's economy would be balanced without action on all three major factors—prices, rationing, and taxation of profits.

"The fundamental principle of equality of sacrifice by every section of the population" must be kept in mind by both the President and Congress in shaping economic policies for the national emergency arising out of the Communist aggression in Korea.

"PRICE CONTROL legislation clearly is needed now," Rieve said.

"Without such legislation, there is no foreseeable limit to the price inflation which has already taken such a heavy toll of buying power.

"In the two weeks preceding the President's partial mobilization message to Congress, the Labor Dept.'s daily commodity index jumped 10%.

"In the days following, it has lunged forward another 5%."

The CIO official said that food price rises have not resulted from actions of farmers—but "from speculative practices in the distribution channels."

Rationing powers should be voted now, he added—even though the country is "not yet faced with serious, or permanent, shortages of consumer goods." But "it is hazardous to predict that this will continue to be the case."

EVERETT M. KASSALOW

CIO assistant director of research and executive secretary of the CIO Full Employment Committee, has been appointed an assistant to Chairman W. Stuart Symington of the NSRB.

Rationing powers, Rieve added, will help restore confidence "among those great sectors of our population whose economic status does not permit them to engage in the current all-out buying flurry."

Much of the CIO statement was devoted to the problem of taxation—and in particular to the question of excess profits taxes.

(In recent weeks, big corporations have been reporting record profits for the half-year. General Motors made almost a half-billion dollars in profits in six months, after current taxes; and U. S. Steel, General Electric and others showed tremendous increases over last year.)

"The United States urgently needs an effective excess profits tax," Rieve declared.

HE SAID such a tax would help curb speculative price rises much more than the increase in regular corporation taxes proposed by the President. He added:

"It is far more difficult for corporations to pass on to the consumer the burden of an excess profits tax than a simple increase in the surtax rate."

At the same time, Rieve voiced opposition to "unreasonable" proposals to increase income taxes for low-income individuals, who, he said, already pay too high a tax. Income tax boosts should be in the brackets above the first $2000 of taxable income.

He suggested that the excess profits tax would hit price speculation and profiteering; that income tax changes should lie most heavily on high incomes; and that existing tax loopholes should be closed.

In that way, Rieve said, we can meet the greatest share of emergency costs out of current income.

THE CIO leader stated disagreement with President Truman's announcement that enactment of an excess profits tax can be delayed until later this year.

"The Congress must act to tax profiteering at this time," he said.

"The American people are ready for whatever legitimate demands must be made upon them. They do ask for a program that will be adequate to meet the needs of the day. They ask only for a program in which equality of sacrifice will be a principle, as well as a slogan."

It'll Take Brains As Well As Brawn To Succeed

Winning Korean War In Military Sense Will Not Provide Solution To Troublesome Ideological Problems

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A MAN WHO has traveled over much of the world and knows a bit about foreign affairs recently told me that "the Communists know what they're fighting for, but we only know what we're fighting against."

"As a well-paid, well-fed American," he continued, "I find it easy to hate the Communists and everything they stand for, but I wonder if I'd feel the same way if I were a Chinese worker who had existed on a near-starvation diet most of his life."

This man no doubt mentioned "Chinese workers" because he had visited China and had first-hand knowledge of the conditions under which the people there work and live.

His parting comment was, "When you've been badly exploited and virtually enslaved for years it probably isn't hard to switch from your old master to a new one—especially if the latter holds out some hope for a better future."

THIS MAN, WHO is not an important national or international figure, certainly is more realistic about the situation than most Americans seem to be.

His remarks, it seems to me, naturally lead to such questions as:

Suppose we win in Korea, as we most certainly will, what then?

Has our treatment of Orientals in the past been such that they would automatically prefer our way of life to that promised by the Communists?

Do the Orientals, who have been exploited by our British, Dutch and French allies, think the United States is engaged in an effort to establish world peace or is fighting an "imperialistic" war?

Do our well-polished statements about the glories of democracy and capitalism make any real impression on the colored peoples of the East who know something about the discrimination suffered by our own colored people?

These are questions which all of us should ask ourselves and for which we should try to find honest answers.

OUR PROPAGANDA line up to this point has gone something like this: "Do as we do and you also can have the things we have."

Perhaps that's a good line for those who know what we have and are somewhat in a position to do as we do.

But is it a good line for those who have never seen mass production or have never directly enjoyed its fruits?

The Communists' promises of things to come in the future are as phony as $7 bills—but they're making promises.

Are we? What are we in a position to promise?

Can we honestly say to the Orient, "Stick with us and we'll help you wipe out famine and pestilence—and we'll help you build a better standard of living for all your people"?

Can we?

Should we?

That is something which we as a nation should decide quickly—and then we should back our decision to the limit.

THE UNITED STATES, as has been pointed out in this column before, has demonstrated its great ability to fight a military war which hinges largely on production.

But it hasn't yet won any prizes for the manner in which it conducts ideological warfare.

Too much of our diplomacy has been of the striped-pants variety. We've been too stingy with our propaganda dollars. Too often we've tried to apply U. S. commercial advertising techniques in our effort to sell ideas where such techniques do not work.

We have a good story to tell—a much better story than the Russians can offer. We have a better bill of goods to sell.

But are we selling it? And are we doing at home those things which would make our position stronger abroad?

THE CONFLICT in Korea isn't just a skirmish. Its outcome, in a military sense, isn't going to solve the problems created by the clash of ideologies.

We as a nation should realize this by now. And we should realize, too, that we can't go along on a "business as usual" theory and win.

We ought to quit kidding ourselves and completely discard the false idea that we can win this one with our hands tied behind our backs.

We're in it up to our ears. A lot of money, manpower and lives will be spent before it's over.

Sooner or later the nation—if it's going to win the big struggle—must realize that we must use our brains as much as our brawn and that ideas and ideals are as potent as bullets.

And they usually aren't as costly.

SHOCKING PERFORMANCE!

Over in Russia there's a fellow named Joe Stalin, who would like to smash the United States and the things for which it stands.

Over in Spain there's a fellow named Francisco Franco, who has made himself into the No. 1 symbol of fascist dictatorship to people all over the world.

And up on Capitol Hill there's a legislative body known as the Senate, which last week gave more aid to Stalin than to Franco although it intended to do just the opposite.

It was a shocking performance and it could easily lead one to believe that the majority of our Senators simply do not understand ideological warfare.

If they understood it, they certainly could not have voted in favor of $100 million in special aid to Dictator Franco.

In the first place, there's no moral justification for such aid.

In the second place, nothing which has occurred recently on the international scene—militarily or otherwise—would make the granting of such aid expedient.

And in the third place, the Senate handed the Communists one of the most effective ideological weapons that has been forged in Washington in many a moon.

Franco was a dictator of the Hitler stripe when he seized control of Spain. He hasn't changed much—if any—since. That in itself is sufficient reason for our not giving him support.

But there's another and an equally important reason.

REDS CAN 'PROVE' IT

Since the end of World War II the Communists have been trying to sell people throughout the world the idea that they can't trust the United States, that our democracy is a sham and that we aren't really interested in peace and freedom.

They've been doing a pretty good "selling" job in many parts of the world by using half-truths, distortions and plain lies.

Now they can use the Senate vote on aid to Franco to "prove" their case. Even a third-rate propagandist could really go to town on the theme "U. S. Teams Up With Dictator Franco To Subjugate Common People of the World."

The President opposed aid to Spain. So did the State Department. So did organized labor. So did every other group in the United States which believes in democracy and understands the ins and outs of the cold war.

Yet the Senate voted in favor of aid to the Spanish dictator!

The House of Representatives by decisive action in opposition to aid to Spain could dull the propaganda sword which the Senate handed to Stalin.

But, even so, the entire nation is going to suffer from the Senate's action.

And it's going to be difficult to convince people throughout the world that one of our top legislative groups wasn't speaking for a large portion of our population when it voted to help Franco.

Those senators who voted "yes" are not the only ones on a hot spot. We all are.

Too Old To Work And Too Young To Die . . .

THE POPULATION of the United States has doubled since 1900.

But in the same 50-year period, the number of Americans aged 65 and over has nearly quadrupled. And the 10.9 million people in that age group at the present will soar to 15 million in another decade and to almost 20 million by 1975, according to the Federal Security Agency.

FSA has called a National Conference on Aging, to be held Aug. 13-15 in Washington, and its statisticians have garnered figures wherever they could in order to present the 800 delegates with the full size and scope of the problem.

The charts and graphs present a sorry picture.

The composite picture of the 65-year-old in our economy—and with frighteningly little variation between the worst-off and the best-off—is this:

He (or she—and one in 10 is a widow) can look forward to living a little over 13 years.

CHANCES are about one in three that he won't feel well, will have several acute illnesses from which he will probably recover—and chances are one in five that he will be chronically ill, day in and day out, for the rest of his life.

On the basis of present income levels, he can look forward to less than $1000 a year—most likely somewhere between $500 and $1000. And again, chances are one in three that he will have no income at all—none. He'll be on relief.

He'll live with other people. He'll have to. In three cases out of four, he'll be living on his younger relatives. Or he'll have a room in a small, cheap boarding house. Chances are only one in 20 that he'll be in an old folks' home.

The income picture is so staggering that we reprint it in full:

"In 1948, about 3½ million of the 11 million persons 65 years of age and over in the United States had no money income of their own during the year. Of the 7½ million with some money income, almost one-third had incomes of less than $500.

"The 3½ million with no money income consisted of about 600,000 men and about 3 million women. About one-half of the women with no income of their own were married and living with a husband who may have had some income.

"MORE THAN six out of 10 of those 65 and over with money income had income of less than $1000. Only about one-fifth had incomes of $2000 or more. Only one-tenth had incomes of $3000 or more.

"The median income for men 65 years and over with income was about $1000. (In other words, more men had incomes around that figure than any other.) This compares with about $3000 for men in the age group 35-44; about $2800 for men with income in the age group 45-54, and about $2400 for men with income in the age group 55-64."

Cold statistics to be compared with others equally cold: for instance, the minimum budget for an elderly couple, according to the Labor Dept., at pre-Korea prices was $143 a month, or $1716 a year. So the fact seems to be that only one elderly couple in five will be able to afford to live at all, without depending on relatives. (The minimum budget is strictly a rock-bottom affair and allows one visit a year to the doctor.)

TWICE AS MANY are on relief as are receiving social security benefits. One in three is employed—somehow.

And every year, employment opportunities for elderly folk are diminishing, and more people are reaching the retirement age.

Of the 3½ million who are employed, nearly half are "self-employed," the rest are on salary or wages.

Only 9% of the people over 65 have completed high school. The largest group—36.9%—went through the seventh or eighth grade and then quit—the men presumably to go to work, the women to help at home, work, or get married.

Representatives of business and labor, doctors, educators, religious leaders, and others, will attend the National Conference on Aging, which was called at President Truman's request.

Well, Anyhow, The Bus Drivers 'Delivered'

IT WAS ONE HECK of a situation and there didn't appear to be much that could be done about it until the weather got warmer.

The CIO organizers who were attempting to unionize the rayon plant felt for a time that everything—including the elements—was against them.

About 95% of the 2000 persons employed at the plant rode to and from work in buses rented by the company. These buses loaded up on company property at the end of each shift and "highballed" through the gates where the organizers congregated.

Because it was wintertime the bus windows were tightly closed—and so the organizers couldn't even toss leaflets inside.

And a majority of the bus riders lived along the highways and byways of the surrounding mountains.

But here's the whole story as told by one of the organizers:

THE UNION obtained enough signatures on membership applications to petition the NLRB for a representation election.

"But we knew we couldn't win unless we were able to get our story across to the workers," the organizer said.

"It simply wasn't possible for us to contact some 2000 workers up in those mountains. Why, we couldn't even find most of them, much less talk with them.

"We decided that the only way to get our story over was to use leaflets, but—darn it—we couldn't get them distributed.

"The company rented the buses and paid the drivers. They also stationed guards at the company gates to make sure none of us could hand out leaflets to the riders.

"Yes, sir, it was one heck of a situation—and then one of our boys got a bright idea."

THE FELLOW with the "bright idea" did a bit of checking on the pay and working conditions of the bus drivers.

"We'd known for some time that the workers in the mill were underpaid but we didn't know until our 'bright boy' did some checking that the bus drivers were treated even worse than those who worked in the plant," the organizer said.

"Our 'bright boy' did a little scouting around and found out that one of the drivers was 100% for the union and that some of the others thought a union would be a good thing.

"He learned, too, that all of the drivers had been with the company since the plant was opened and he figured there wasn't much of a chance that they'd get fired for union activity—simply because it took a genius to handle a bus on those winding mountain trails.

"Well, to make a long story short, our organizer called a meeting of bus drivers—and by the time it was over about 35 of them had signed up with the CIO. This meant there were only five or six who didn't join the union."

FROM THAT POINT on the matter of leaflet distribution became a simple one, the organizer said.

"We'd write our leaflets and get them printed. Then we'd haul them out to the beginning of the routes and give them to the friendly drivers. As they picked up the workers they'd hand them out.

"From then on we didn't even bother about the plant gates. The drivers did a good job for us—and a couple of them became our best volunteer organizers."

And how did the election come out? the organizer was asked.

"Well, darn it, we lost the election; took a beating, in fact.

"But I'll tell you one thing. Those bus drivers voted almost solidly for the CIO. Now, if there had just been more buses . . ."

LOADING THE ENEMY'S GUN

Merged Italian Unions Launch Productivity Drive

THE NECESSITY for an extensive productivity drive in Italy was emphasized by Giulio Pastore, recently elected secretary general of the combined non-communist trade union movement in Italy, in a speech at a meeting in Rome, celebrating the merger of the free trade unions.

A capacity crowd of trade unionists jammed the spacious Adriana Theatre when the newly-formed Confederazione Italiano Sindicati Lavoratori (CISL) celebrated the official unification of all non-communist trade unions, including the Free Italian General Confederation of Workers, Italian Federation of Labor and several autonomous unions.

Four thousand representatives of these unions elected Pastore, former LCGIL secretary, as secretary general, and named five other leaders of the other unions as secretaries.

THE DELEGATES heard Pastore review the history of the fight to build a strong free trade union movement in Italy in opposition to the Communist dominated General Confederation of Labor (CGIL) which was, at the end of the war, the only national labor federation in Italy.

He pointed out that early in the struggle, he and other trade union leaders interested in the development of a democratic Italy had decided to cooperate with the Marshall Plan and to participate in the formation of a non-communist labor international, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, in London last fall

Pastore stressed the importance of the efforts of the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Organization for European Economic Cooperation to achieve increased productivity, economic integration, freer transfer of manpower and political unity.

Pastore said that productivity ultimately benefits all workers.

HE DECLARED that a better distribution of profits will be necessary before workers will realize the higher standards of living to which productivity should entitle them, and made an urgent plea to Confindustrie, the Italian confederation of industries, for more equitable representation on shop stewards' committees and around the bargaining table.

Pastore declared that "CISL supports a reform of the economic system endorsing the necessity for labor cooperation in management." He reaffirmed the full right of workers to strike. However, he added that the new organization will fight against any attempt to use strikes for political aims.

Pastore assured the autonomous unions they would have equal rights in the CISL. He urged all workers to take their trade union affairs seriously and to remember that the union movement is vital to the lives of the masses of Italian workers as well as to the life of the nation itself. He urged an intensification of the membership drive now under way.

PASTORE DECLARED that at a time when efforts are being made to array the workers against the security of their nation in favor of a possible invader, it is necessary that "democratic workers reaffirm their faith in and their love for Italy."

LCGIL, FIL and the autonomous unions were officially dissolved in a statement read by Roberta Cuzzaniti, who then proclaimed the birth of CISL. He said:

"CISL pledges itself to fight for the following: (1) the right to work; (2) the right to social justice; (3) the right to participate in making the economic policy of the country; (4) the right to security of employment; (5) the right to social security in its widest form; (6) the right of association in trade unions and of free development of union activities including the right to strike; (7) the right to representation and recognition in order to enable labor to exercise its influence in helping to shape the social policy of the country; and (8) the right of labor to participate in the management and ownership of production facilities."

Urges Union Aid To Marshall Plan

Raising the standard of living and thereby creating the economic basis for sound democracy is a fundamental task of the Marshall Plan that all trade unionists should help to attain, Chris Jecchinis, president of the Association of Greek Employees of the American Aid Mission in Greece, said in a radio broadcast to Greek workers.

"It is essential to increase production, and in this trade unionists have a key role to play," he said.

"Workers must be ready to take an active part in making fullest use of American aid, in helping to determine ways in which it can be most effectively utilized, and above all in developing their own skills and resources to the highest possible degree."

But, he emphasized, the worker must share in increased production—not only working toward it, but also enjoying its fruits.

After 13 Years, Law Catches Up With Weirton Steel

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

AFTER 13 years, the so-called union which has been operating at the Weirton Steel Co. plant in Weirton, W. Va., for the express purpose of keeping out the CIO Steelworkers has been declared illegal and must be broken up.

The U. S. Court of Appeals for the Third District at Philadelphia has handed down a decision finding the company and certain of its officers and agents in contempt of a court order dated May 18, 1943. It directed complete disestablishment of the Weirton Independent Union, Inc.

The court ruled also that the independent union was set up in 1941 as a means of blocking organization of the company's employes into the Steelworkers. Its continued existence, the court found, constitutes defiance of a previous order to disband an Employes Representative Plan and Security League which had been found by the National Labor Relations Board to be nothing more than a company union.

WIU has claimed to represent 10,000 production and maintenance workers at the company's two plants in Weirton and Stubenville, O.

ARTHUR J. Goldberg, general counsel for both the CIO and the Steelworkers, hailed the contempt decree as evidence that the company "has, at long last, been brought to justice."

"For more than 13 years the anti-labor Weirton Steel Co. has persistently defied the National Labor Relations Act, orders of the board and court orders in carrying out its anti-union activities," he said.

"Its officers have now been finally directed, under penalty of attachment for contempt, to disestablish the Weirton Independent Union, as company-dominated, to reinstate discharged members of the Steelworkers and to cease its campaign of violence against the CIO."

"The CIO wishes to commend the NLRB and its staff for their consistent efforts throughout this prolonged litigation to bring this arrogant employer to justice."

Company reaction to the federal court order was speedy. The following day it withdrew its recognition of the "independent's" bargaining rights. Thomas E. Millsop, Weirton president, announced, however, that current "union" benefits would be continued.

THE APPEALS court's order listed nine steps to be taken to purge the contempt. These include the reinstatement of 18 employes who were discharged or otherwise disciplined because of activity on behalf of the CIO. Any pay these workers lost must be made up to them by the company.

The company must also pay the NLRB $38,750 in costs, plus $10,000 to the special master appointed by the court to hear the case. NLRB officials must be given acess to the plants and records of the company to verify compliance with the order.

The company's fight against organization of its Weirton plant by any but a company union cost millions of dollars in legal fees and led to violence and martial law in the Weirton area in 1944.

THE CASE actually goes back to July, 1937, when the Steel Workers Organizing Committee filed a petition with the NLRB for an election among Weirton workers.

CITADEL of industrial autocracy crumbles at last: After 13 years, Ernest T. Weir's Weirton Steel Co. finally yielded to National Labor Relations Board last week and announced withdrawal of recognition of company-dominated union after U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals had found it in contempt of court.

From August, 1937, to January, 1939, the NLRB conducted what came to be known as the "first Weirton case."

In July, 1940, the board announced a proposed decision, followed by a final decision in June, 1941, and ordered the company to disband the Employe Representative Plan and Security League.

This was done, but some of the "loyal" employes, with the help of Nicholas Unkovic, a Pittsburgh attorney, organized the WIU.

The NLRB promptly filed a petition with the Circuit Court asking that the company be ordered to break up the WIU, too. Finally, in 1944, the NLRB demanded that the court rule the company in contempt of the order.

DRAYTON HEARD, the special master whose findings on the contempt issue were adopted by the court, began hearings in May, 1945, and continued them until August, 1947. In his report to the court, Heard found that the WIU was not illegally dominated or assisted by the company at its inception. Subsequently, however, the company stepped up its interference in the alleged union's affairs, Heard reported.

This interference, he said, included the paying of union officers, stewards and others at overtime rates while they were on standby duty as deputy sheriffs during the Steelworkers organizing drive in 1941.

The company also interfered, Heard found, by firing 10 CIO adherents and laying off eight others. He said the firm's offer to reinstate these employes was not "adequate."

HE FOUND collusion between the company and Sheriff Dick Wright during the organizing drive and said that the sheriff and his deputies had headquarters in a building made available by a subsidiary of the National Steel Corp.

In a statement following the contempt ruling, Goldberg declared:

"The Weirton case points up the lack of adequate enforcement machinery against unfair labor practices by employers in both the original National Labor Relations Act and the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Despite obvious and glaring violations of the law, this company has been able to continue its unfair labor practices for 13 years. Congress should take note of this and when it repeals the Taft-Hartley Law, as it must, should provide more efficient enforcement machinery to protect workers in their rights to self-organization and collective bargaining."

Old Timers Spark Win After 10 Years' Effort

VICTORY, as Napoleon said, belongs to the most persevering.

That goes double for a bunch of veteran CIO Textile Workers in the woolen and worsted plant of the Walther Manufacturing Co. in Philadelphia.

An organizing campaign they started nearly 10 years ago has just paid off in victory in a National Labor Relations Board election to the tune of 134 for the Textile Workers, 33 against, one challeneged and two void out of 182 eligible.

It was the second NLRB election held in the plant. The first was in April, 1944. The workers were wooed away by the company's blandishments and voted against the union.

But some of the old timers didn't give up. People like James Petrie, Ray Metzker, Earl Miner, John Sebilla and Katherine McCloud. They were on that first organizing committee. They kept the union spirit alive in the mill. And when the time looked ripe, they started up another organizing committee, went to work and came out with the victory they missed more than six years ago. The drive was under the direction of Joseph Hueter, manager of the Philadelphia Joint Textile Board, aided by Organizers James Coyle and Walter Ellis.

"This year's campaign lasted four months," said TWUA Regional Dir. Sol. Stetin." TWUA has really been carrying on a campaign at this plant off and on for 10 years.

"I recall the campaign in this very plant in 1942-43. We had a good, loyal core of TWUA supporters, and many of the employes were dues-paying members of our union who had worked in organized plants in Philadelphia. But in that campaign the workers were fooled by the promises of the company, promises carefully designed of course, to keep our union out of the plant."

The promises, incidentally were never kept. Walther wage rates and working conditions are nowhere near as good as those in organized Philadelphia textile mills.

The TWUA staff took a lot of satisfaction out of the victory.

"Without the determination and persistence of these old timers and of many other devoted people in the shop," Said Coyle, "we could not have won. Again, it proves that when workers really want a union, nothing can stop them—even though the fight takes 10 years."

UAW-Chrysler Pension Plan Approved By U. S.

The pension agreement entered into by the CIO Auto Workers and the Chrysler Corp. in May has been approved by the U. S. Commissioner of Internal Revenue and went into effect on Aug. 1. First pension payments are due about Sept. 1.

Company OK Kiss Of Death To Fake Unions

THIS IS THE sad story of the "Independent Union of Petroleum Workers," which complained that the company's affection was "a kiss of death."

On that basis it contested the result of an NLRB election which it lost. The NLRB, hardhearted, still ruled that the CIO Oil Workers are the bargaining agent at the plant of the Standard Oil Co. in Richmond, Calif.

In a consent run-off election in June, the "Independent Union" got 904 votes to 955 for the Oil Workers. The "Independents," asserting the company's actions had made a free choice impossible, asked the election be set aside. The NLRB regional director checked, threw out the complaint. The union filed exceptions and the matter went to the full board.

It seems the day before the election the company wrote all employes telling them to consider the choice carefully, and that during the election campaign the Oil Workers had accused the other group of being a company union. The company's letter, said the "Independent," with a straight face, "was an inferential endorsement of the Independents" in that "it allegedly proved the campaign claims" of the Oil Workers, and therefore the letter was in effect "a kiss of death."

CIO Demands Congress Refuse Loan To Spain

A SHARPLY-worded demand that Congress reverse the Senate's decision granting a $100 million "political" loan to fascist Franco Spain was sent to leaders of Congress by the CIO last week.

Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee, said the Senate vote to give U. S. financial aid to the Spanish Dictator "is a reversal of the U. S. foreign policy of opposition to all forms of totalitarianism."

He said the Senate's vote has "already weakened the precarious position of democratic forces in Asia, and will considerably weaken the struggle of our democratic European allies against the encroachment of communism."

Potofsky charged that the loan plays directly into the hands of Kremlin propagandists, and warned that it "jeopardizes the continuation of labor support which the Economic Cooperation Administration has obtained throughout the free world."

THE LOAN was aproved August 2 by a 65-15 vote, in a reversal of the anti-Franco attitude which has been dominant in the Senate for several years.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) charged that the loan was a bribe to Dictator Franco for air bases.

"I don't feel we are going to win this war around the world," he said, "if we support totalitarianism, be it Communist or Fascist."

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), said this nation could not preach democracy "if we go back on our principles." He dubbed Franco "a man who is as completely totalitarian as any man in my knowledge in the last quarter of a century—a man who has completely stifled freedom of choice and freedom of expression."

Sen. Chavez (D. N.M.) alleged that "Communist influences" were back of the opposition and that "a lot of people are afraid of a few votes in New York and elsewhere."

THE LOAN must be reaffirmed when the Senate votes on the $34 billion omnibus appropriations bill, and the Senate action must be accepted by the House and the President.

Spain is now excluded from the United Nations. A year ago the Senate voted 42 to 35, against qualifying Spain for Marshall Plan aid. Since then the official American attitude has softened. The State Dept. is still against a U. S. government loan to Spain, but not against a loan by the Export-Import Bank .

The $100 million for Spain was in addition to $2.450 billion voted the day before for the 16 nations in the European Recovery Program. The Senate defeated a move by Sen. Kem. (R. Mo.) to cut the fund by $718,691,473. That move was backed by only two Democrats, Byrd of Virginia and Frear of Delaware. Of the nine Republicans who voted for the cut eight later voted for the loan to Spain. There were: Kem, Butler (Neb.), Capehart (Ind.), Dworshak (Ida.), Langer (N.D.), Malone (Nev.), Martin (Pa.), Mundt (S.D.), Wherry (Neb.). Taft (Ohio) was among the 22 Republicans to vote against Kem.

The Senate then adopted unanimously a declaration by Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.) giving Prisident Truman discretion to halt Marshall Plan aid to any nation that fails or refuses to support the UN in the Korean war "by supplying armed personnel, material of war or services."

A voice vote defeated a move by Malone to halt all Marshall Plan aid and to use the money for the domestic military budget.

The Senate defeated a number of other amendments, but restored the $16.9 million cut in Point Four funds to aid underdeveloped nations.

IT WENT BOOM! Six firecrackers like these, plus a couple of whistling crackers and two flares, were touched off amid construction work at the plant of the New York World Telegram & Sun—and management broadly implied that striking CIO Newspaper Guild members tried to fire the place with a "home-made incendiary device." Eight firecrackers failed to explode, and pickets and police quelled the "blaze" with one (1) well-directed bucket of water. The Guild chuckled, denied all responsibility.

Don't Hoard Manpower, Tobin Pleads

SECY. OF Labor Tobin urged the nation's employers not to hoard manpower or pirate workers from defense produtiion.

His warning was contained in an announcement July 31 that he had ordered the "fullest use" of the 1800 offices in the U. S. Employment Service and the affiliated state employment service to meet the needs of defense plants.

In World War II the U. S. Employment Service was not in the Dept. of Labor but served as the labor recruiting agency of the War Manpower Commission. The USES and state agencies made 42 million placements during the war.

Tobin said he acted because of the progressive tightening of the labor market. He said spot shortages in certain skilled occupations had already appeared in widely scattered areas.

"I am confident," he said "that severe labor stringencies can be avoided and defense employers can be provided with needed manpower as required if the employment service is given the wholehearted cooperation of both employers and workers."

Tobin said that a study by Robert C. Goodwin, head of the Bureau of Employment Security, showed there would be a difficulty in channeling workers, for these reasons: Of a civilian labor force of 64 million only 3 million are jobless, as against 8 million in 1940; while population is up 20 million, workers between 14 and 24 have declined by 2 million, with an increase of 5 million in the number of Americans over 55; a larger percentage of young women have small children, and will not be available for the work force.

Goodwin reported that nine labor areas have been removed from the "E list" (those with unemployment of 12% or more); of the remaining 22 E areas, most expect stable or rising employment.

HCL Sends Up Wage Proposal In World-Telegram Strike

THE CIO Newspaper Guild has notified the management of the New York World Telegram and Sun that it has withdrawn a previous offer to scale down wage and job security proposals.

Guild members on strike at the WT&S since June 13 told the company in a telegram that "due to the rising cost of living, our position in regards to wages is no longer what it was when the strike began."

The company also was informed that a previous Guild offer—to settle the walkout on the basis of the union security provisions in the New York Herald Tribune contract—was likewise rescinded.

IN THE telegram to Ezra Bryan, attorney for the newspaper, the Guild said:

"Recently the Newspaper Guild of N. Y. offered as a basis for a quick settlement of the World Telegram and Sun strike, the union security provisions of the Guild contract at the Herald Tribune.

"Since management summarily rejected the proposal, its formal withdrawal scarcely seems necessary but this is to inform you that the Herald Tribune clauses can no longer form the basis of a settlement."

The Herald Tribune pact requires nine out of 10 employes to join the union. Guild spokesmen indicated that the full Guild shop would now be demanded at the World Telegram and Sun.

Originally the union had proposed an 18% over-all wage boost and other benefits. This was later reduced to 10% but is now revoked.

Another strike development last week saw the strike-bound newspaper announce that the plant will remain shut down until a settlement is reached.

Ed Easton, chairman of the Guild unit, hailed the closing as an indication that management "has realized it cannot break this strike either by a back-to-work movement from the Guild or by forcing members of other unions to cross the picket line."

Play The Hunches To Win At Races

The CIO Newspaper Guild strike at the New York World Telegram and Sun should have given three old Sun employes a good hunch when they visited a race track recently. One of the hay-burners was named "No Sun," but the three "experts" passed him up. He won, paying $100.

The story has a happy ending, however. A few races later, when a nag by the name of "Empty Talk" ran, they recalled that's what the World Telegram and Sun management has been giving the strikers so they plunked down their dough in time to collect $20 for a $2 ticket.

Senate To Scan Bell Unionism

A Senate Labor sub-committee on Labor-Management Relations, headed by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), will take a look at the labor-management relations of the Bell Telephone System beginning Aug. 10 in Washington.

Hearings will continue for 10 days with the CIO Communications Workers and the Bell parent company, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., each alloted five days to present evidence.

CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne is expected to testify that AT&T frustrates collective bargaining and creates bad labor relations.

Beirne will point out that the union is required to bargain with the management of local telephone companies, despite the fact that all powers of decision on questions of collective bargaining are exercised by AT&T instead of the local campanies.

Curran Re-Elected NMU Head In Hottest Election Contest

PRES. JOSEPH Curran of the CIO Maritime Union was returned to office by a five to one majority last week in one of the hottest election campaigns in the union's history.

Curran hailed his victory as the "membership's intelligent answer to the disruptive and union-wrecking tactics of the Communist Party."

The election, conducted over a period of three months by the Honest Ballot Association, resulted in victory for Curran's entire ticket.

Curran, the only president the union has ever had, received 23,101 votes while his opponent, Robert McElroy, polled 4532. Adrian Duffy, and H. B. Warner were elected to two of the vice-president posts. Neal Hanley was re-elected national secretary and M. Hedley Stone was again named treasurer.

Jack Lawrenson, a spokesman for the opposition, was defeated in his bid for re-election as vice president by John McDougall, port agent in New Orleans. Lawrenson had been outspoken in his criticism of Curran and had consistently opposed the latter's policies.

All voting took place in the union's offices within continental U. S. Each voter then mailed his ballot to New York for deposit in a special vault.

California UAW-CIO Planning To Buy $100,000 Country Club

Locals of the CIO Auto Workers in California may soon take over a $100,000 country club in San Miguel as a site for a summer camp.

The UAW has an option on five acres which it tentatively plans to purchase, and on an additional 65 acres which would be added later. The property is owned by the government and originally cost $109,000. It is about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The UAW expects to pay approximately $16,000. The property would be used both as a summer vacation camp and as a center for labor institutes and conferences.

This Tip Is For Businessmen But It's Good For All Of Us

MEMO TO businessmen: Don't sign contracts without reading them.

So says the Federal Trade Commission in ordering the Independent Directory Corp., of Chicago and New York, to give up a practice it has used in soliciting ads for its business directories.

FTC said the company mailed contracts to businessmen enclosing clippings of their ads in telephone directories. Many businessmen have signed the contracts under the mistaken impression that they were merely renewing the telephone ad.

The commission said that there would probably be no misunderstanding if businessmen would take time to read the small print in the agreements.

Commissioner Lowell Mason dissented by pointing out that the FTC "is the protector of public interests, but we are not guardians to the Mortimer Snerds who can read but won't, who don't have to sign contracts but do."

Minnesota CIO Farm Program Sold To Farmers

Members of the Minnesota State CIO Council Farm Relations Committee have been having a busy summer for themselves.

They've been carrying the message of the CIO to Minnesota's farmers—going out to meet them at the county fairs (Minnesota has a lot of counties), talking to them and showing them how the farmer prospers when the worker prospers, and vice versa; and that when one suffers economically, the other suffers, too.

They'll keep it up as the weather grows chiller, which it does early in Minnesota. With more crops in, the fairs will come faster—and then there will be roasts, too, at which they hope to demonstrate to the men who feed us that the horns and hoofs were put on city workers by the same exploiters who drive down farm prices as willingly as they try to drive down wages.

Plans for the summer were announced in an article in MINNESOTA LABOR, official organ of the Minnesota CIO Council. Included with them was the council's Farm Relations Program, part of which is reprinted here.

FOR MORE than a century of American history it has been necessary for Americans who raise our food to come together in organizations in order to protect themselves from exploitation and to try to improve and secure a livelihood for themselves and their families.

During the same period, Americans who work in shops and factories have found that they, too, must organize to gain and protect a minimum standard of living for themselves and their families.

Since 1850 many voices have risen, including those of the farmer and the city worker, to point out that the essential needs and aims of the farmer and of the worker are the same.

It would appear a simple and logical conclusion that long ago America would have experienced the unity of purposes and aim that the meeting of these two mainstreams of American life implies. This has not happened.

THOUGHT control and censorship of the avenues of communication have interfered. Division of farmer from farmer, worker from worker, and especially farmer from worker, has been carefully fostered.

Misunderstanding and disunity have been fomented deliberately by a few people who happen to own the newspapers and radio stations, the shops and factories, the mortages on the farmers' land and equipment and the credit of the small businessmen who supply both the city worker and the farmer.

The Minnesota State CIO Farm Relations Program does not intend to launch an over-all farm-labor economic or political organization. It does not intend to indulge in 'a vituperative propaganda campaign.

It does plan to present simple, verified facts as they are reported by our government; by responsible, capable researchers and by big business itself. These facts will speak for themselves.

THE PROGRAM is intended to reach the family farmer who operates the land he owns or has rented. It is not intended for the agricultural individualist who owns and operates great tracts of land, often to the detriment of the small farmer.

We of the CIO are going to meet these farmers who work their own land and tell them exactly why we support sound farm legislation. We are going to tell them, too, about our problems and discuss the reasons why the problems of the farmers are ours, and why the problems of labor are, in great part, the problems of the farmers.

We are doing this in the good old American way of calling on our neighbor and talking to him.

This summer the Minnesota State CIO Council, its Farm Relations Committee and committees from a hundred local CIO unions are going to the fair. We are, in fact, going to 40 county fairs where we hope to meet with hundreds of thousands of Minnesota farmers and the small businessmen they support. We will talk over the following major points of our program:

I. Why The Brannan Plan?

A IT IS A PLAN to support farm income and not farm prices as such. Farm products would all flow into the open market and be sold at market prices, but the farmer would be guaranteed a minimum support for his crop.

B THE CONSUMER would only pay once—through taxes to provide government payment to the farmer. At the grocery store the consumer would get full benefit of low food prices resulting from abundant farm production.

C THE government wouldn't be stuck with surplus commodities that it can't do anything with.

D THIS MEANS more food for families in the low income brackets and less waste of this food because of lower consumer prices and greater consumer purchases.

F THE PLAN requires good soil conservation practices from participating farmers as a condition of support payments.

G FINALLY, the Brannan plan provides real encouragement to the family type farm by setting an upper limit on the size of government payments to any one farm.

II. Price-Wage Relationships

A FARM PRICES down. Farmers know better than anyone else that farm prices have fallen. In July, 1949, farm income decreased three billion dollars. A look at these figures based on reports of the U. S. treasury department and the federal trade commission will give the true story of what it costs the farmer to buy one tractor.

	In steers	In hogs	In corn
1948	7½	25	612 bu.
1950	9½	54	1600 bu.

Cost of a tractor in terms of wheat, beef cattle, dairy products and cotton has risen comparably. What the farmer experiences in the cost of a tractor is also true in his purchases of other farm equipment.

B REAL WAGES down. Your "real wage" is your yearly money income measured in terms of how much it will buy at a given price level. Because of the inflated prices, real income of wage workers is very low. The Federal Reserve Bank says that factory workers have the lowest real wage, gaining only 3 percent since World War II.

C PROFITS UP. (1) The United States department of commerce, bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, when studying profit change from 1945 to 1949, found that in these postwar years corporate profits, after taxes, increased 44.4 percent.

(2) U. S. Steel made total profits in 1949 (first nine months) of 133 million dollars, 51 percent more than in 1948.

(3) The experience of U. S. Steel is duplicated or exceeded by scores of other industrial giants.

D WHAT happens? (1) Depressions are caused by low farm income, low real wages and high profits. It's the farmer and the city worker who consume goods and when they cannot buy the whole economic system collapses.

(2) Today we have low real wages, a low farm income and high profits. We must not depend upon a war economy to bail us out of this situation. Serious study and action are necessary.

Business Is Wonderful, Business Reports

INDUSTRY IS making the biggest profits ever.

Second quarter 1950 earnings were 46.5% above those a year earlier . . . That's not the CIO NEWS talking. It's the Wall Street Journal, in its issue of Aug. 1.

Playing safe, it added that the biggest profits are "on paper" because they are based on earnings after deduction for taxes imposed by the laws now on the statute books. But even if they were trimmed to meet the tax boosts President Truman has asked for 1950 as a result of the Korean situation, they'd still be "something like 25%" above April-through-June earnings in 1949, the financial paper says.

The newspaper published a table showing the profits of 321 early reporting corporations, divided into 21 classifications. Only two classifications showed losses. One was coal, where a normal second quarter drop in business was offset in 1949 by stockpiling in anticipation of a strike. The other was railway equipment makers, who ran out of business this year because they cleaned up most of their backlog last year. But recently, "they have been getting new orders again, and they have the promise of much more," the Journal adds.

"It's easy to demonstrate the 1950 showing is something more than recovery from recession," observes the newspaper.

"Just glance at the half dozen industries which had no second-quarter earnings decline last year. Every one of them has registered another substantial gain, on top of those reported a year ago.

"Most notably, the automobile companies and iron and steel concerns showed advances of over 57% from a year ago. The chemical, distilling, tobacco and tool and machinery groups shared in the gains both years."

Shed A Tear For The Boss

Here is the Wall Street Journal's tabulation of net earnings supporting it's statement that "industry is making the biggest profits ever." The three columns shows net profits for the second quarter of 1950, the percentage of change from the first quarter, and the percentage of change from the second quarter of 1949.

INDUSTRY GROUPS	Net Profits June 30, '50 Quarter	Percentage of Gain over or Decline from March 31, Quarter '50	Percentage of Gain over or Decline from June 30 Quarter '49
7 Aircraft	$ 8,663,055	+63.4	+117.2
22 Autos & equipment	345,500,372	+50.6	+ 57.9
22 Building materials	56,772,198	+36.3	+ 79.0
19 Chemicals	74,528,839	+15.9	+ 69.8
9 Coal	8,098,320	+91.2	— 7.6

15 Food products & baking	31,368,810	— 4.0	+ 42.0
24 Iron and steel	196,857,727	+37.0	+ 57.5
11 Mining and metals	11,273,540	+45.3	+498.5
8 Office equipment	14,439,568	+ 1.9	+ 3.5
12 Petroleum products	116,804,599	+15.3	+ 17.0
15 Pulp and paper	21,784,097	+18.3	+ 68.1
7 Railway equipment	6,878,736	+32.2	— 26.0
11 Textiles	19,089,889	— 7.8	+ 75.5
8 Tobacco	11,629,646	+21.3	+ 6.4
22 Tools and machinery	12,781,150	+60.4	+ 20.3
76 Other companies	42,716,653	+33.9	+ 34.1
TOTAL 321 FIRMS	1,122,704,155	+31.8	+ 46.5

A casual glance at the financial pages of newspapers shows profit increases all up and down the line.

Standard Oil of New Jersey reported for the first six months of 1950 estimated net earnings of $159 million after charges and taxes, or $5.27 per outstanding share of stock, compared to $137 million, or $4.54 a share, in the first half of 1949.

ARMCO Steel netted $25.7 million, or $6.46 a share of common stock, in the first six months, compared to $16.1 million, or $4.01 a share, in the first half of last year. Significantly, business was better in the second quarter—$13.8 million, or $3.47 a share, contrasted with $7.7 million or $1.92 a share in the same period last year.

Parke, Davis & Co., drug producers, reported the greatest six months and three months earnings and sales in the 84 years it has been in business. For the first six months of this year it earned $9 million, or $1.84 a share, compared to $5.2 million and $1.07 a share in the first half of 1949. For the second quarter, earnings were $4.6 million, compared with $2.1 million in the same period last year. The previous high quarter in the company's history was the first three months of 1950, when earnings were $4.3 million.

The Federal Trade Commission chose last week to announce that 17 major U.S. industries had higher profit rates in 1949 than in 1940, two had the same and six had lower rates. The sharpest increase was won by motor vehicles, which jumped from 17.3% in 1940 to 29.6% last year.

CIO-AFL Unity Talk Postponed

A second round of CIO-AFL unity talks, scheduled for August 4 in Chicago, has been postponed, and no definite date has yet been chosen for the next meeting.

CIO spokesmen said that difficulty in bringing all the committee members together accounted for the postponement of the meeting.

World Brands Stockholm Peace Petition A Red Fake

THE COMMUNISTS' phony "Stockholm peace petition," although exposed for the fraud it is from one end to of the world to the other, is still being circulated to the gullible in this country.

The petition calls for the same strict controls of atomic weapons that Russia blocked in the United Nations, demands that "A" weapons be outlawed—an indication that the Soviet may not be as far advanced in atomic research as is generally conceded—and seeks to brand the United States, only nation known definitely to have the atomic bomb, as a warmonger and international outlaw.

Many CIO local unions and industrial union councils have condemned it, but every once in a while one of the brethren attempts to collect signatures. Some of these efforts have lead to plant disorders which CIO leaders have roundly condemned.

SECY. OF State Acheson condemned the Stockholm resolution—drawn up by the Cominform—as a "propaganda trick in the spurious 'peace offensive' of the Soviet Union," and pointed out that more than half the population of North Korea signed it just before attacking South Korea.

The Greater Los Angeles Industrial Union Council and the Chicago Industrial Union Council both passed resolutions calling the attention of CIO members to the fraudulent nature of the petition and condemning it as Communist propaganda.

"These so-called peace petitions are not intended to promote peace," said the Los Angeles resolution. "They are intended to promote Soviet Russia's foreign policy of unprovoked aggression and imperialistic expansion, and exploit the American people's genuine and heartfelt desire for peace."

The Chicago CIO Council resolution used equally strong language.

"The prime objective in securing signatures on this phony peace petition," it said, "is an attempt to confuse the American people and weaken the morale of the workers in the trade union movement in order that these Communist agents may better be able to perform their task of sabotage against our soldiers and our country when so instructed by the Soviet Union."

THE COUNCIL'S action won praise from the Chicago Sun-Times. In an editorial it said:

"The Chicago Industrial Union Council, the central body of the CIO's 250,000 members in this city and vicinity, is so far from being hoodwinked by the notorious Communist 'peace petition' that it has issued a vigorious warning against it.

"Trade unionism has a good reason to react against the petition scheme here. Petitions have been circulated by something calling itself the Chicago Labor Conference for Peace. The name lends itself readily to an appeal to union members."

In France the Force Ouvriere the anti-Communist trade union body, printed in its official publication, a two-page warning to the Reds' fakery, suitable for use as a poster in union offices and shops.

"AGAINST HYPOCRITICAL WARMONGERS, FOR THE DEFENSE OF PEACE," it is headed.

"Workers:

"For weeks you have been asked to sign the Stockholm Appeal. It is presented to you as the peaceful will of the Communist Party and the General Confederation of Labor.

"This is a monstrous moral swindle.

"Peace is the property of every worker. It is one and indivisible.

"There is no good or dirty war, but just war, with its sacrifices, miseries, ruins and dead.

"The Stockholm Appeal is a treachery and we must denounce it.

"It masks the ways of Soviet expansion.

"The war in Korea is endangering world peace. It throws a sinister light on an aggressive will which reminds us of Hitler's against Austria and Czechoslovakia, as well as against Poland after the German-Russian treaty had been signed.

"CGT and WFTU (the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions) want you to support such acts.

"This is too much.

"Listen to the voice of reason. Listen to the judgment of 52 nations gathered in the United Nations which, according to international law, condemned the aggressor.

"We call upon the workers, we call upon public opinion to act against the campaign launched by a well organized fifth column.

"French workers!

"Your silence, your passivity would encourage new aggressions. You will be accomplices if you stay silent.

"French Men and French Women!

"It's time to act to save the peace . . .

"Join our efforts, push back treachery!

"Stand for peace without discrimination!"

In New York, on Aug. 2 the officers of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the National Catholic Welfare Conference and the Synagogue Conference of America — representing a majority of the country's Protestants, Catholics and Jews—issued a joint statement branding the Stockholm appeal as a "spurious peace petition" and declaring aggression like that in Korea is the "greatest menace to world peace."

British TUC Finds Another Commie Phony

THE BRITISH Trades Union Congress has warned its members to be on the alert for another Communist trick. The chances are it will pop up in this country, too, so CIO members also had better be on the alert for it.

The TUC said in its statement that the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions—which the CIO bolted about a year ago—recently gave its trades department the job of going behind the backs of free national labor organizations, such as the CIO, and persuading individual unions to associate with them.

"No union affiliated to the TUC has responded to these invitations," said the warning, "but unions have been warned that they can continue to expect invitations to work with the WFTU trade departments, to attend conferences, congresses or meetings of working committees as guests or observers, to exchange publications and to enter into correspondence on topics which appear to be of common interest.

"Other methods of influencing the free trade unions are proposed. For example, a section called 'Friends of the WFTU,' to be recruited from small traders, intellectuals and women's organizations, has been suggested as an instrument which could add to the influence of this Communist-dominated international in the free countries.

"Whatever blandishments may come from WFTU sources, TUC unions have already declared their policy in straightforward fashion."

Tory Lobbies Spent $866,403 In 3 Months

THE AMERICAN Medical Association spent $322,045 in the first three months of 1950 fighting national health insurance, according to its report to Congress.

If you add to that the $47,481 reported spent by the medical societies of North Carolina, New Jersey, District of Columbia, Vermont, Pennsylvania and Indiana, plus the American Dental Association and the American Hospital Association, the total in three months was $369,526, according to figures compiled from the Congressional Record by the Committee for the Nation's Health.

If you consider together the sums admittedly spent fighting President Truman's Fair Deal program not only by organized medicine but its allies—big business, insurance, and real estate lobbies—the total for the three months is $866,403. In that period, these groups admitted using the services of 62 lobbyists and distributing 8,996,934 pieces of propaganda.

That means an average spent of $10,000 a day for every day from Jan. 1 to March 31, and an average distribution of close to 100,000 pamphlets every day during that period. It's at the rate of nearly $3½ million a year.

THE AMA'S chief target has been, of course, the national health insurance program, which it has falsely tagged "socialized medicine." But by its alliance with other groups, the AMA has also been fighting rent control, public housing, aid to education, and other social welfare legislation. In fact, the AMA bragged that it was influential in the defeat of Sen. Pepper in Florida and Sen. Graham in North Carolina, in Democratic primary elections.

Organized medicine led the lobby parade last year, having budgeted more than $2 million against the President's health program, according to the records of the Committee for the Nation's Health. In 1949 it distributed 55 million pieces of propaganda.

Here is the breakdown on the sums the lobbies admitted spending between Jan. 1 and March 31, 1950:

Type	Lobbyists	Spent	Propaganda Distributed
Medical	15	$369,526	6,049,311
Life Insurance	7	49,276	83,098
Real Estate	5	31,735	1,200
Big Business	35	451,866	2,863,325
Totals	62	866,403	8,996,934

THE COMMITTEE for Constitutional Government, which has insisted to a congressional lobby investigating committee that it is purely an "educational" institution, admitted spending $291,660 in fighting Fair Deal legislation.

The National Economic Council, also being probed as a lobby, admitted spending $13,211.

The figures reported may be only a small proportion of the true amounts spent, because the lobbying law is toothless and the lobbies report only that portion of their expenditures that they themselves consider lobbying. They assert their activities are "educational," and claim that only a fraction of their time and money is devoted to "legislative interests." LPA

UAW Local 602 Helps Unfortunate Member

Members of Local 602, CIO Auto Workers, at Lansing, Mich., have contributed more than $2000 to a relief fund for Wayne Booth, one of their members.

Booth lost his wife and three children in a fire that destroyed his home. One daughter, not at home at the time, escaped. Local Pres. Tom Eno said that 3000 contributed, believed to be the largest number in the local's history.

Michigan CIO Radio Network Is Expanded

The expanding network of Michigan CIO radio programs will add its 14th broadcast on Aug. 8 when "The Bay County CIO News" goes on the air at 5:45 p.m. over station WGRO in Bay City.

The broadcast will be prepared by a program committee consisting of Ike Pallas and Ralph Little of Local 144, Utility Workers Union-CIO, and Wynn Barry, Local 101, Communications Workers-CIO.

UNITY AT local level may pay off in higher wages, pensions and better working conditions for New York cops and firemen. CIO and AFL agreed to aid the city workers in their fight at a meeting attended by: (Seated, l. to r.), Michael J. Quill, president of the New York City CIO Council and of the Transport Workers; Martin I. Lacey, president of the AFL Central Trades & Labor Council, and John E. Carton, president of Patrolmen's Benevolent Association; (standing) Morris Iushewitz, CIO Council secretary-treasurer; James C. Quinn, secretary of AFL Council, and John P. Crane, president of the Uniformed Firemen's Assn.

10 Million 'Lost' Voters May Decide 1950 Election

IT'S UP to 10 million "lost" voters to determine if the next Congress will be more or less liberal than the present, Louis H. Bean, political statistician, says in a new book, The Mid Term Battle.

If they stay at home again, the reactionaries will triumph. If they come out and do their duty, the liberals may be in a position to do something effective about President Truman's Fair Deal and repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Bean's conclusions, in general, are in many respects similar to those reached years ago by the CIO Political Action Committee and constantly emphasized by it. He tentatively predicted the Truman victory in 1948, winning fame as a political forecaster. CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll made the same prediction without qualification and also correctly gave the answer to the outcome of the congressional races.

The Mid Term Battle was written before the Communist invasion of South Korea. In it Bean made three predictions contingent upon there being, before the election, no material change in our international relations (that has already come in Korea), no sharp let-down in business activity, and effective Democratic campaigning against Republican charges of Communism in our government (the Senate Foreign Relations sub-committee headed by Sen. Tydings took care of that). The predictions were:

1. House: The Democrats face a normal mid-term loss of about 25 to 30 seats, more than half of them in the northeastern states.

2. Senate: Democrats face a normal mid-term loss of three or four seats; Indiana, Iowa and California are toss-ups, victory is possible in Missouri, Colorado and Ohio.

3. Governorships: The Republicans can be held to a gain of one.

"Analysis of the 77 districts the Democrats gained in 1948 over 1946," Bean writes "corroborates the conclusion that labor, with help from the farmers, elected the 81st Congress."

YET 10 MILLION people who should have voted in that election, on the basis of population figures, stayed away from the polls, he points out. A "normal" vote, he indicates, would have produced 285 Democratic congressmen instead of 263.

The "lost" votes, says Bean, are to be found in the 13 states casting more than one million votes each. They are New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, California, Michigan. Massachusetts, New Jersey, Missouri, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

Bean's forecasts on the outcome in the states in the fall elections—which are not necessarily the same as those of CIO-PAC—follow:

Massachusetts—Can the Republicans win back the 2nd district, and can the Democrats pick up the 8th district?.

Connecticut — "A mid-term fall in voting and a decline of the Democratic percentage below 50 would jeopardize the political destinies of a Democratic governor, two Senators and three congressmen."

New York—New York will usually elect 23 to 25 Democratic congressmen, 20 to 22 Republicans and one Democratic and one Republican senator."

New York City—"The fact that the pre-1948 balance was restored in 1948 warrants the expectation that 21 to 23 Democratic congressmen will be elected in New York City this year."

New Jersey—"Given a 1950 turnout about equal to that of 1948, the Democrats might hold their own. Otherwise they might lose their two Newark seats."

Pennsylvania—"A few Republican congressional candidates and the Republican senatorial and gubernatorial candidates have the 1950 mid-term drift in their favor unless it is offset by powerful Democratic political action."

Pennsylvania's industrial districts—"The 1950 mid-term battle will again rage in these industrial centers and it is here that the Republicans will recoup several seats unless the vote is large."

Ohio—"If Ohio Democrats show as much interest in the 1950 congressional elections as they did in 1948 and turn out in sufficient numbers, they might accomplish the unusual and avoid mid-term losses." Sen. Taft (R.) can be beaten if the Democrats get 50% of the vote, he says.

Indiana — "Democrats could retain nearly all their present seats and seriously jeopardize the Republican senators' reelection if they can sustain their 1942-48 trend and if turnout is normal." ("Normal" means greater vote than in 1948.)

Michigan—"It should not surprise anyone if no congressional upsets took place this year."

Illinois—"On the basis of the 1944 congressional and senatorial results, the Democratic congressional percentage could drop as low as 48 or 49%, compared with 52.8% in 1948, before Senator Lucas would have to be counted out."

Downstate Illinois—"There are two, possibly three, city districts that might be won by Republican candidates in a general mid-term drift of about two percentage points."

Missouri—"If the vote is about 60% Democratic, all but one of the districts will go Democratic. If the vote is about evenly divided, the Democrats win about five districts."

Iowa—"For Iowa to elect Loveland to the Senate in 1950 would be the equivalent of choosing Truman in 1948."

Colorado—"One of the few states where mid-term trend is not at all clear."

California—"What might develop . . . is beyond the range of historical, statistical anticipation."

N. J. PAC Unit Seeks Reform InRegistration

THE ESSEX-West Hudson (N. J.) CIO Council is putting on a strong campaign to get a reform of the Essex Co. (Newark) registration system, which it claims, "is creating a vast segment of second-class citizens in the county."

The present regulation provides that registration shall be conducted in central offices, Monday through Friday, between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. There is no exception to these rules and no provision for mobile registrars.

Consequently, the council says, men and women who work for a living are virtually deprived of a chance to register. Throughout the city of Newark, the council says, 113,346 eligible citizens, or 43.5% of the adult population, are not registered.

The council has called on the county commissioner of registrations to authorize the opening of registration offices evenings during August and September, establish mobile registration units, and authorize establishment of "a corps of deputy registrars to accept registration . . . in industrial, commercial and business sites."

THE PETITION points out that registration in the "silk stocking" districts of Essex Fells and Glen Ridge is about 80 and 85%, respectively, because in those districts the residents have leisure enough to get to the registration places while they are open—while in one working-class ward in Newark, for instance, it is only 40%, and the countywide average is only 62%.

The council also has made an intensive study of CIO registration in the county, including a complete breakdown of all CIO local union membership by wards and precincts and a complete check against registration lists. A two-pronged drive to register all CIO members is under way; ward chairmen and district leaders approach the members at home evenings.

VIRGINIA COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS are on the ball—politically. Here Wallace C. Keene (1.), legislative director of CWA Norfolk Local 2, confers with Pres. Charles C. Webber (r.) of the Virginia State Industrial Union Council, on CWA's political action program.

Physical Exam Is No Bar To Jobless Pay

A worker who fails to pass an employer's medical examination is still entitled to unemployment compensation if he can perform other work.

So the New Jersey Employment Security Board of Review has ruled in the case of a Jersey City factory worker. Coronary thrombosis disabled him in 1949. Five months later doctors said he could do light work. His last boss had no such work, and he tried elsewhere, but failed to pass medical exams.

The Board held the law did not impose as a test of ability to work that the claimant must pass medical exams required by prospective employers.

CWA In Virginia Plans Intensive Political Action

THE THIRD annual convention of Virginia Division 3 of the Communications Workers, CIO went all-out for political action.

The convention, held at Virginia Beach, teed off on the Byrd machine and its infamous Public Utilities Labor-Relations Act, and unanimously voted full participation in the most active program of political action yet undertaken.

The Public Utilities Act, under which the Virginia government seized the Clifton Forge-Waynesboro Telephone Co. and set up a company union, was roundly condemned. The situation in Virginia was described as "a saga of political machinations and rottenness."

The delegates voted approval of a move to set up a ward and precinct organization within CWA with the purpose of getting every member and his family registered and qualified to vote. They urged CWA members to run for public office.

The convention also unanimously approved a resolution endorsing the action of the recent CWA national convention in proposing to set up a two-level structure in the international, and recommended that all Virginia members vote to ratify the constitutional amendment.

Baptists Urge Wiping Out Of Segregation

THE WORLD Baptist Congress has called upon all of its associated organizations, comprising 18 million members, to remove from their worship and fellowship all forms of segregation and discrimination "based on race, color or culture."

The plea went out to Baptists in 52 countries in the form of a resolution adopted at the meeting of the World Baptist Alliance, held in Cleveland, O. Twenty thousand delegates attended the seven-day session.

Such discrimination, the delegates warned, "provides fertile soil for the development and spread of communism, fascism and other anti-social programs."

"We believe," the resolution stated, "that discrimination and segregation based on religion, race, color and culture are ethically and morally indefensible and contrary to the Gospel of Christ and the principle of freedom for which Baptists stand."

The resolution called upon Baptists in their respective countries to use their influence to have discriminatory laws repealed and other laws enacted to safeguard the rights of oppressed racial groups.

In another resolution, noting that only six more governments need ratify the convention of the United Nations outlawing genocide, the congress gave its endorsement of the convention and its hope for speedy ratification.

U.S. Rubber Co.'s Price Practices Hit By FTC

The Federal Trade Commission has ordered the United States Rubber Co. to stop unlawful price discriminations in the sale of rubber and canvas footwear. The firm, said the FTC, is the largest single producer of waterproof rubber footwear in the US.

40-Day Pension Strike Won By IUE Local 621

A 40-DAY pension strike by 800 members of Local 621, CIO International Union of Electrical Workers at the Metric Metal Works, Erie, Pa., ended in complete victory with a one-year contract guaranteeing the workers a 14½c-an-hour package increase.

Al Hartnett, assistant to IUE-CIO Chairman James B. Carey, headed the negotiating committee. The company agreed to a non-contributory, 9½c pension system which replaces the contributory plan previously in operation. It will provide 5c an hour for severance pay. Metric is the sixth IUE local to win a pension providing both severance pay and non-contributory pensions.

OTHER GAINS won in the contract include:

Three-cents-an-hour general wage increase.

Three weeks vacation after 15 years, instead of the present 25 year requirement, effective this year.

Increase in the night shift differential for 150 workers from 10 to 15 cents an hour.

Equal pay for women on jobs evaluated the same. Women workers formerly received 3c less an hour than men for the same work.

Increase in beginner's rate for women from 99c to $1.10 an hour.

Increase in holidays from six to seven, with Election Day won as new holiday, and payment for holidays falling on Saturday.

Job posting for categories of $1.20 up instead of present $1.27 an hour.

Immediate payment for vacation period during the strike, which started June 21.

Credit of 160 working hours toward next year's vacation for time lost during strike.

THE STRIKE, first in history at Metric, was voted after the company stubbornly insisted on a 4c-an-hour increase and demanded a continuation of the contributory pension.

"This historic contract will show workers in the Erie electrical industry, still under the domination of UE-CP, that they can make more bread-and-butter gains with a militant, democratic union like IUE-CIO," Hartnett declared after the contract was approved.

"The UE hasn't been able to win a single non-contributory pension plan anywhere in the country. IUE-CIO's success at Local 621 will encourage other Erie electrical workers to boot out their commie bosses and join an honest trade union."

PRETTY ENOUGH to be in the movies, Mrs. Josephine Formica, chief steward of Local 629, CIO Textile Workers, at Salamanca, N.Y., would rather be in politics. The TWUA member, widow of a war veteran, has become the first woman to run for the New York State Assembly from Cattaraugus County.

'Labor' Ad Racketeers Still Making It Pay

ORGANIZED labor is cooperating with Better Business Bureaus throughout the country in an attempt to stamp out the phony "labor" press racket.

The racket, which is estimated to cost legitimate business firms approximately $100 million a year is not new, but the approach has been streamlined to include the veiled threat of labor trouble if a contribution for an ad is not forthcoming.

The first indication a businessman is likely to have that he is on the "sucker" list of a professional "dynamiter," operating from a centrally located "boiler room," usually comes in the form of a long distance telephone call. He may be told that his plant is in danger of having "labor trouble" if he doesn't take an ad in the monthly periodical of the Brotherhood of Butchers, Bakers and Candlestick Makers. So he puts a check in the mail and thats the last he hears of the BBB&C.

A NUMBER of widely used "pitches" are designed to extract dollars from gullible businessmen. One of the more successful, operating in Akron, O., and Chicago, bore the imposing but misleading title of "The United Labor Front." This outfit was eventually exposed as a fraud, but meantime ran up a $550,000 "take" in the two cities.

In Los Angeles, the "Police and Public Employees Labor News" masquerading as a legitimate labor publication, managed to unload $1 million worth of worthless ads in a 12-month stay.

Police bunco squads, post office inspectors and local and federal prosecuting attorneys are constantly on the lookout for unscrupulous individuals who promote and sell phony labor advertising.

Every so often, the Post Office Dept. smacks guilty parties with fraud orders, or a federal grand jury returns a mail fraud indictment. Unfortunately, however, the authorities are usually left out of the picture until the "touch" has already been made and the promoter is operating in some distant and greener field.

Better Business Bureaus say it is up to the executive to protect himself from the fast sales patter of these phonies. The first requirement is that he have the intestinal fortitude not to go limp and hand over his money at the mere mention of such words as "labor" and "Communism."

TIMID businessmen might do well to tack the following declaration by CIO Pres. Philip Murray above their telephones:

"The CIO has taken steps to protect itself from racketeers who pose as advertising solicitors and collect money under false pretenses in the name of the CIO. In seeking to protect the good name of the CIO, we are also seeking to prevent businessmen from being victimized by unscrupulous people."

Five rules have been laid down by Better Business Bureaus which if followed will save businessmen hundreds of thousands of dollars each year.

- Refuse to pay in advance for any advertisement under any circumstance.
- Refuse to buy a Compliments-of-a-Friend advertisement which, after all, can be sold over and over again.
- Demand to see a sworn statement of circulation.
- Demand to see an official indorsement from a trades assembly, local industrial union council, or some other major labor body.
- Double-check both circulation statement and indorsement claim with the union involved, the BBB or the Chamber of Commerce.

Truce Opens Texaco Plants

THE PORT Arthur and Port Neches, Tex., refineries of the Texas Co., strike-bound since April 4, were reopened July 31 under a stipulation between the company and the CIO Oil Workers.

O. A. Knight, president of the Oil Workers, said that a contract had not been written, but that the stipulation provided a basis upon which further negotiations can be held.

Meantime, the union continued its strike against the Texas refinery at Casper, Wyo. At Lawrenceville, Ill., the company continued its lockout of union members. The Lockport, Ill., plant was in operation under a truce arrangement but is subject to being struck again without notice, Knight said.

The truce at Port Neches and Port Arthur meant that about 5000 strikers returned to their jobs. The Texas Co. Port Arthur works is the third largest refinery in the country.

UNDER TERMS of the stipulation, which was signed July 29, the company agreed to cancel disciplinary penalties it had levied against 13 Port Neches union leaders. Both the union and the company agreed to withdraw all lawsuits and National Labor Relations Board cases filed in connection with the walkout. These included the company's $500,000 damages suit against the union in the Port Neches dispute and a $2 million cross-action brought by the union against the company there.

Negotiations are to begin soon on a complete contract. Union spokesmen said that they believed commitments made by company representatives provided grounds for an ultimate settlement, but that if negotiations are deadlocked again, the union is in a position to strike the Port Arthur and Port Neches plants on 60 days' notice.

Red Politicos Hand Out Jobs To Mariners

THE CONDITIONS under which Russian sailors work have been revealed by Enno Kustin, an Estonian who deserted.

To get a seaman's job, one must go to a school. To be accepted, a man must furnish a written recommendation signed by three members of the Communist Party; a testimonial from his last employer; a certificate from the local police; six photos; information about any relatives living abroad. Those with parents living in the Soviet Union are preferred. The applicant also must appear before the Political Commission, which has the last word.

Kustin, as an ordinary seaman, got 465 rubles a month ($37.20). Compulsory deductions included income tax, childlessness tax, state loan and trade union contribution. Overtime is paid at the regular rate.

In foreign ports, special permission is needed for shore leave. Seamen may not drink, visit restaurants or write letters while ashore. Only under special circumstances may they visit a movie, and then only with a ship's officer. Each seaman must enter in a book all purchases made.

A political chief is aboard each ship. He watches the men in foreign ports, gives them political instructions, and distributes Communist literature in port. At union meetings there are no discussions of working conditions. It is dangerous to attempt to raise such questions, said Kustin. The political chief at these meetings, he said, expects to hear whether each man has filled his working quota.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Death came last week to one who has made a great contribution to American Labor, an old anthracite coal miner. He worker untiringly with the CIO and others. He helped settled the great strike at GM in 1937 and the Ford strike. He rendered yeoman-like services in all that he undertook. The writer worked closely with him on a number of occasions. The United Auto Workers and the CIO hold the many deeds of James F. Dewey and the memory of Jim himself with the deepest sense of gratitude.

Assistant Organizational Director R. J. Thomas recently addressed the Washington State CIO Council Convention. Director of Councils John Brophy requested the services of CIO Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson, and CIO Natl. Rep. Walter Smethurst to help bring this Council into the CIO.

The writer proceeded to Burlington, Ia., to address the Iowa State CIO Convention. More about this next week.

CIO Natl. Rep. George DeNucci has returned to Puerto Rico. He had come to the States to look into the conditions of Puerto Rican workers in the beet fields in Michigan. The CIO had learned that these workers were being treated viley. The CIO will protect the interests of its Puerto Rican brothers to the fullest extent in seeing that they are accorded proper working and living conditions.

CIO State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that in a representation election at the Smith Douglas Co., Norfolk, Va., the workers voted in favor of the Oil Workers CIO over the AFL. The vote was as follows: OWIU 161, AFL 12, no union 3.

CIO Field Rep. Ben Stahl reports that the Brewery Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Riebs Elevator Co., Milwaukee, Wis. by a margin of 3 to 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following representation election victories for UAW and USA: American Perforator Co., Chicago, Ill., UAW-CIO 24, no union 12; Gits Brothers, Chicago, UAW-CIO 55, Independent Defense Workers 29; Hub Plating Works, Broadview, Ill., UAW-CIO 62, UE 1, no union 14; Armour Fertilizer Works, Division of Armour & Co., Chicago Heights, Ill., USA-CIO 58, against 4, challenged 6; Austin-Western Co., Aurora, Ill., USA-CIO 388, Machinists 336, no union 4, challenged 13.

Reg. Dir. Sol Stetin of the Textile Workers Union-CIO reports that in a representation election at the Walther Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa., the workers voted overwhelmingly for TWUA-CIO. The vote was: 182 eligible, 134 TWUA, 33 no union, 1 challenged and 2 void.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE election victories: Jacobson Machine Co., Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 14, UE 0, no union 2; Dollinger Corp., Rochester, N. Y., IUE 58, no union 6; Wheelco Instruments Co., Chicago, IUE 81, UE 31, no union 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports that in a representation election held at the Diamond Match Co., Ogdensburg, N. Y., the United Paperworkers won by a large majority: UPA-CIO 180, AFL 71, no union 6, challenged 6, void 1. This campaign was conducted by UPA Reps. August Bahr, William Sheer and Ted Covey.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a run-off election among bookbinders at the Simpson Doeller Co., Baltimore, Md., the United Paperworkers won by a vote of 8 to 3.

Oregon FEP Gets 21 Cases In First Year

OF THE 21 complaints of discrimination in employment, 19 involved Negroes and most of the offenders were employers of small business establishments, the advisory committee of the Fair Employment division of the Oregon State Labor Bureau, set up a year ago to outlaw racial or religious discrimination against job seekers, said in its first annual report.

No complaints were brought against employment agencies. Five were filed against labor unions, three of which involved exclusion of Negroes from membership.

Chairman David Robinson noted that several other complaints were adjusted before reaching the filing stage. Of those filed, seven were adjusted by conferences and conciliation. In no case have the teeth in the FEP act been used. The maximum penalty is a $500 fine or a year in jail or both.

A survey of 267 application forms used by Oregon firms showed that 172 contained unlawful inquiries. Only two forms with unlawful questions were used by unions, one of which was quickly revised. A question is illegal if it concerns citizenship, other than U. S.; membership in clubs, societies or lodges; birthplace, unless specifically permitted by the labor commissioner; and ancestry. Photographs, birth certificates, and baptismal records cannot be required. LPA

Truman Urges Two Changes In Social Security Bill

PRESIDENT Truman went to bat for two important changes in the social security bill last week, urging Congressional leaders to recommit the measure to the House-Senate conferees in order to get the proposals adopted.

The measure, as reported out of conference, was scheduled to come up for House and Senate consideration Aug. 7. Conference, reports rarely are recommitted, since the conferees are supposed to have worked out satisfactory compromises between House and Senate versions. But the President's action roused hopes in liberal circles that in this instance a recommittal motion might carry.

His first proposal was that the infamous Knowland amendment be stricken from the bill. This amendment was not in the original House bill nor in the Senate committee bill: it was adopted on the Senate floor after 10 minutes' debate. In essence, it would permit states to deny unemployment compensation checks to persons who refuse to scab, in spite of a provision in federal law which specifically forbids such action.

THE PRESIDENT'S second request was that the House provision on federal care for totally and permanently disabled persons be substituted for the Senate version.

The House version, supported by all of organized labor and by the Social Security Administration, would allow persons who are "fully insured" under the social security program, if they become totally and permanently disabled, to start receiving their social security benefits before they reach the standard retirement age of 65.

The Senate turned this proposal down, substituting a highly unsatisfactory arrangement which would allow such persons to qualify for outright, federally-financed public assistance. Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, urged the House to bounce the Knowland amendment as "malignant."

Puerto Rican Farm Laborers Found Working Under 'Barbaric' Conditions In U. S. Fields

"BARBARIC" IS the way Puerto Rican Labor Commissioner Fernando Berdecia described conditions his countrymen face as field workers in the Saginaw, Mich., area. Berdecia went there after an investigation by the Flint local of the CIO Auto Workers uncovered wretched conditions under which 12 Puerto Ricans were working in a nearby camp.

He found those conditions duplicated elsewhere. He found failure to provide hygienic housing, adequate living allowances, and current statements of money earned by the workers. In one area his staff found 24 men housed in a two-story frame building with a broken-down coal stove on the second floor being held up by a cement block. In another they found 54 men using one latrine.

The Flint UAW probe brought improvements in living conditions, and the employer, the Michigan Field Corp., finally made part payment on long overdue wages. Rep. Robert J. Chase, who helped with the original probe and who helped obtain improvements, is working with Berdecia and members of his staff, as is Herbert McCready of the Michigan CIO staff.

At a public hearing of the President's Commission on Migratory Labor, recently held in Washington, the CIO asked for speedy action to correct present conditions.

THE EXTREMELY high tuberculosis and diphtheria death rate among Texans of Mexican descent in the Lower Rio Grande Valley is evidence of a maladjustment caused principally by cheap labor, Dr. George Sanchez, of Texas Univ., told the President's Commission at a public hearing at Brownsville, Tex.

Sanchez, who is directing a survey of Spanish-speaking people, said that valley people pushed north by illegal Mexican immigrants are complicating economic and social conditions in the state.

"Unless we establish controls to prevent scandalous, disgraceful exploitation of illegal labor, we are whistling in the dark when we talk about improving conditions among the 2 million Spanish-speaking people in the Southwest," he said.

The commission is concerned with the problems created by illegal immigrants; the responsibilities of federal, state and local authorities toward migrant workers; the social, economic, health and education conditions among them, and the situation created by temporary migrations of foreign workers.

The commission must submit its findings and recommendations to the President by Dec. 15. LPA

He Would Not Say Either 'Yes' Or 'No'

IF WILLIAM L. Patterson, executive secretary of the communist-dominated Civil Rights Congress is a Communist, he didn't say so—or "no"—last week when questioned by the House Lobby Investigating Committee.

He refused to say whether he is or ever was a member of the CP on the grounds that to ask him was "in violation of my constitutional rights."

Patterson testified that CRC is not a lobby group and is not within the scope of the investigating committee's activities.

He admitted, under quizzing by Rep. Brown (R. O.), that he helped organize a mass trip to Washington in 1948, to buttonhole congressmen on pending legislation, but said such activity is merely "incidental" to the purposes of the Congress.

"The Civil Rights Congress," Patterson said, "is a defense organization . . . to defend the constitutional, civil and human rights of the American people."

BACK IN 1947, when the CRC was registered as a lobby group, the Communist Party was listed as a contributor. It has failed to register since 1948.

Patterson failed to produce some of the CRC records requested by the committee. Some of them do not even exist, he claimed.

In an earlier session, the committee questioned Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing. Members wanted to find out if he had violated the lobby regulation act or other federal statutes in pressing for President Truman's national health insurance bill after returning from a visit to Britain and Europe last winter.

Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.), backed by Brown, asked if during his trip he had gathered material to campaign in this country for the health insurance bill.

EWING SAID he had learned a great deal about health insurance from the British plan, including the fact that it was much different from anything proposed for America.

He repeatedly stressed his opposition to "socialized medicine" and said the British plan was part of the British Labor Government's program of "nationalization." The Truman plan, on the other hand, is a federally-operated insurance program, he declared.

Brown was unable to prove violation of any statute.

Denham After NLRB Again

The private war being waged between the five-man National Labor Relations Board and its general counsel, Robert N. Denham, flared anew on two fronts last week.

The board asked the U. S. Court of Appeals at Cincinnati to disregard a brief filed in its name by Denham.

Denham put into effect the appointment of Anthony Sabella as NLRB officer in charge at Memphis, Tenn. He had announced the appointment earlier in the month in defiance of the board.

Denham has now told the NLRB administrative division which is under his direction, to put Sabella on the payroll, despite contrary instructions from the board.

The Cincinnati case involved the Vulcan Forging Co., Dearborn, Mich. The board ordered the company to bargain with the CIO Auto Workers and directed Denham to seek enforcement of the order. The board didn't like his brief and told Denham not to file it. He filed it anyway.

The board then mailed a motion to the court stating that Denham's brief was against board instructions and asked time to submit its own brief.

10c, Pensions Won By 'Strike'

A 5½ hour strike that cost neither lost time nor lost production won a 10c an hour pay raise and a pension plan for 23,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers at the Caterpillar Tractor Corp., Peoria, Ill.

Picketing started at 12.01 a.m. on July 31. The agreement was reached by 5:30 a.m. and the pickets were called off. The annual two-weeks vacation, during which the entire plant is shut, had started on July 29, so the workers will not vote on the settlement until after their holidays. The pact is patterned after the General Motors agreement and runs for two years, with a wage reopening at the end of the first year.

The CIO News

Vol. XIII | WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 14, 1950 | 82 | No. 33

A PLEA for an excess profit tax is made by Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) before the Senate Finance Committee. He estimated that on the basis of the first quarter returns profits would mount this year to $29.2 billion, compared to $27.6 billion last year. "Let's take those profits now," O'Mahoney said. "To take them next year will be too late, because every dollar of those billions of profits which do not go to war now will be adding to the inflationary pressures and thereby hinder the war effort." The White House disagrees. (See Page 3 for story on taxes and House's action on price, wage and other economic controls.)

Picketing To Get Jobs For Union Men Illegal

The National Labor Relations Board last week made two new rulings under the Taft-Hartley Act.

In one ruling affecting two unions it held that picketing and the threat of picketing to force an employer to hire only union members is illegal.

In another case it ruled that there was no T-H violation in a "consumer boycott" instituted by a union against the products of a struck firm.

The twelve-man executive board of the local union involved who had been fired by the company were ordered re-instated. (See story on Page 6.)

Dixiegops Aided CP Idea For Korean Thrust—Kroll

The Dixiecrat-Republican coalition in Congress failed to heed the warning of President Truman to give economic aid to South Korea and thus gave "a big green light" to Joe Stalin to attack there.

That's what CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll told the Iowa CIO Council convention.

Kroll noted that although the Truman request came in June, 1949, the coalition succeeded in postponing action until January, 1950, and then defeated the proposal for aid to South Korea by a one-vote margin in the House. (See story on page 8.)

Manhandling Reds Hit By UAW Leaders

CIO AUTO Worker members have been cautioned by their national leadership against participation in unlawful acts, such as walking alleged Communist party members out of plants.

In a letter sent to all UAW locals and signed by the union's top officers, it was pointed out that "violent action that deprives individuals of their democratic rights is the weapon of the totalitarians themselves . . . it is not a weapon of democracy.

"We cannot defeat the Communists or the adherents of any form of totalitarianism by falling into the trap of using their own tactics.

"THE CONSTITUTION of our union offers democratic means for dealing with members of our union who are guilty of conduct detrimental to the best interests of the union.

"We call upon all members of the UAW to practice in fullest measure the democratic policies of our union and nation."

The letter bore the signatures of Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, and Vice Presidents John W. Livingston and William Gosser.

From the West Coast came a warning from the new California CIO Council that the present "scare atmosphere" weakens the United States, political, economic and military strength.

The council recently was organized to replace the old one, which was dissolved on the charge that it was Communist-dominated.

The council's executive board, in a resolution, declared that awareness of danger is a good thing, "but when the awareness degenerates into paralyzing suspicion and distrust between the people and their government, and within the government itself, it operates to defeat the very aims we are trying to achieve.

"If all Americans are taught to regard all other Americans as potential traitors, our unity will be destroyed and the complex, delicate fabric of our democracy will be torn to shreds. We will handicap ourselves by accepting the illusion that the smear and spy hunt and rivalry to out-investigate other investigators is an adequate substitute for the difficult, long effort this country must make if the free world is to survive.

"Our internal security will be strengthened by devoting our energies to this effort, leaving security police problems to the government agencies already entrusted with them. It is the method by which we have progressed in the past; it is the only method by which our democracy functions at full strength."

Delaware U. Ordered To Admit Negroes

The Univ. of Delaware must admit Negroes on the same basis as white students. So the Court of Chancery ruled Aug. 9, on the basis of a state law requiring equal education facilities.

About three months ago a group of Negroes filed 10 suits against the university, charging that facilities at the State College for Negroes, Dover, were unequal to those at the university. Dover lost its rating as an accredited college in 1949.

The university opened its graduate school to Negroes last year. The current ruling means Negroes must also be accepted for all courses.

Contempt Citations Recommended For Rumely, Kamp, Patterson

CONTEMPT of Congress citations have been recommended for three witnesses who appeared before the House Select Committee on Lobbying.

The three are Edward Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government; Joseph P. Kamp, director of the Constitutional Educational League; and William L. Patterson, national executive secretary of the Communist-front Civil Rights Congress. CCG and CEL are anti-labor and anti-Fair Deal groups.

All refused to give information requested in subpoenas served on them by the committee and refused to answer questions of committee members concerning contributors to their organizations. Kamp is serving a term in a federal prison for contempt of another Congressional committee.

Committee Counsel Benedict Fitzgerald recommended the contempt citations at the close of hearings August 4. He views Rumely, Kamp and Patterson, he said, "as sharing the same philosophy insofar as refusing to cooperate with this committee." All of these organizations, he declared, "have shown a desire to go underground."

Because of the pressing situation in Korea and throughout the world, Fitzgerald said he did not think the committee members should waste any more time trying to get information from the witnesses who refuse to give it.

Except for some fancy footwork by the National Tax Equality Association, an anti-cooperative group, all the other groups subpoenaed by the committee answered directly all the questions asked. (There were 43 questions on the subpoenas, all of which were identical.)

Patterson said he would not supply the membership list of the Civil Rights Congress, names of its big contributors, or any of its correspondence. He said his organization did not keep records of most of this information, and those records he had he would not make available. He said his group is not a lobbying organization, despite the fact that it seeks to influence legislation.

Rumely refused to give full financial records of the CCG. He said that CCG sells books and pamphlets for educational purposes and would not reveal the names of bulk purchasers. Kamp refused to give similar information about CEL.

Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), chairman of the committee, believes there is a network of anti-Fair Deal lobbies, with the CCG at the top, which have common financial backing. These include Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council.

When the hearings opened, Buchanan said he felt the public is entitled to know who lobbies for what, and how much each group is spending a year. He estimated that only about a fifth of the organizations engaged in lobbying actually are registered under the lobbying act.

Lobbying itself is not necessarily an evil, Buchanan points out, but "there are evils in lobbying."

GM Acts To Keep Wolf Away From Stockholders

Ed Wynn once opened his act at New York City theater by walking to center stage inches back of the footlights and loudly declaring:

"In behalf of General Motors . . ."

Then he paused while the audience waited for him to continue. In a loud stage whisper he added:

"I'd like to be half of General Motors."

Being even a small fraction of GM paid off well last week, when the corporation's board of directors, which this year had already declared two quarterly payments $1.50 on common stock, decided that come Sept. 9 stockholders will receive not only a quarterly payment of $1.50 but an extra payment of $2.50.

Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., and Charles E. Wilson, chairman of the board and president of GM, respectively, declared:

"A dividend increase at this time will keep their (the stockholders') return since the war more in line with the increased cost of living."

Wallace Walks Out On Progs

HENRY A. WALLACE has quit the Progressive Party, formed in 1948 to back his candidacy for President.

He resigned because the party's national committee and state committees stick to the Communist line on Korea. Wallace on July 15 broke with the party on the Korean issue. He got no backing from the party leaders, so he walked out.

"I am convinced that I can more effectively serve the cause of peace by resigning," he wrote to C. B. Baldwin, party secretary, and long a Wallace aide.

In his July 15 statement he said, "I hold no brief for the past actions of either the United States or Russia, but when my country is at war, and the UN sanctions that war, I am on the side of my country and the UN." He added that the Soviet Union could have prevented the attack by North Korea, and could halt the attack any time it wished.

The Communists immediately turned on him. (LPA)

SEVERAL HUNDRED CIO Steelworkers have already attended Summer Institutes being conducted by the union in cooperation with various state colleges and universities through the country. Hundreds more are registered for institutes to be held later this summer. Above is a group at the labor school conducted by the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations on the campus of Cornell Univ. Prof. J. J. Jehring (right) is demonstrating a CIO turnover talk to USA-CIO members (l. to r.) Gerald Dimeis, Jack Shinnick and Rocco Dolce. Summer leadership training courses are held by many unions.

Continued Aid For Low-Cost Homes Asked

REPRESENTATIVES of 22 national organizations, including the CIO, urged President Truman on Aug. 5 to change his mind about cutting back on the low-cost public housing program.

Instead, they suggested that luxury-type and non-essential housing be curtailed and that materials not needed directly in the mobilization effort be channeled into "a maximum number of standard permanent homes, single or multiple, private or public, at the lowest possible rentals or sales prices, in accordance with national plans for increased production and local housing needs."

"It is in the national interest," the signers declared, "that priority be given to moderate-priced housing and to low-rent housing, as distinguished from high-priced or luxury housing, always maintaining existing preferences for veterans."

TRUMAN'S first major domestic mobilization move was to order the public housing program cut approximately in half for the balance of 1950 and to order mortgage and credit regulations tightened up throughout the housing field. When he announced this decision he also stated that the entire public housing question should be "re-studied."

The group also asked that prices for building materials be "stabilized" at June 1950 levels, that high priorities be assigned for completion and new construction of essential community facilities such as schools, and that demolition or sale of government-owned dwellings be halted.

The requests were in a letter signed by Rt. Rev. Msgr. John O'Grady, secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities, and countersigned by 21 other individuals representing labor, veterans, religious groups, social workers, cooperatives, minority and public interest groups.

BreadSoftener Rule Disputed

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission last week decided to give the American public a better staff of life.

FTC issued a tentative standard for bread that would rule out the newer chemical bread softeners known in the trade as "tweens and spans."

The tentative standard was issued after Food and Drug Commissioner Dunbar held long and controversial hearings and decided that there was not sufficient proof that "tweens and spans" are harmless.

A long, drawn-out fight is in prospect over the proposed FTC standard. That was indicated by Pres. Isaac Fogg of the Atlas Powder Co. of Wilmington, Del., who said that his company would file exceptions to the proposals.

FURTHERMORE, the bakers' trade has 30 days to file exceptions to the standard, and a Food and Drug Administration spokesman said that it was unlikely that the order would become final before 90 days. And after the final order is issued it may be taken to the U. S. Court of Appeals.

House Votes HST Wide Economic Curbs

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE HOUSE on Aug. 10 passed a bill apparently authorizing the President to set up price and wage controls, priorities, allocations and rationing, whenever, under whichever rules, and in whatever order he deems necessary, in one field or over the entire economic structure. This was far more power than he had asked.

The vote on this phenomenon was 383-12. It was so unlike Congress that the wiseacres were almost as confused as they were the day Truman was elected.

(Alfred Friendly, writing in the Washington Post, commented that "America has been watching a temperance society trying to make a man take another drink.")

Wholesale Food Prices Highest Since Sept., 1948

Here was the price situation, statistically, at the end of last week:

Retail food prices had risen a total of 2.7% since the outbreak of the Korean War, but were apparently levelling off at the new high peak. (This figure came from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which made a special survey of prices paid by consumers for 25 different types of food in 13 large cities as of August 1.)

The Dun and Bradstreet wholesale food price index remained unchanged for the week Aug. 1-Aug. 8 after previously registering a gain every week since June 20. The wholesale food price level now is at the highest level since Sept. 28, 1948.

Wholesale prices of commodities other than foods (i.e. textiles, metals, fuel, building materials, chemicals, etc.) went on climbing, however. The sharpest rise was in textiles, which gained 6% in the week ending Aug. 1, led by cottons and woolens. Building materials gained 4%, and the other items on the list went up 1% or 2%.

The full-dress BLS consumers' price index for the month ending July 15, which takes into account all items that make up the cost of living for an urban family of four, had not yet been released.

Rough On Hoarders

A food market in Brazil, Ind., has its own way of dealing with hoarders.

It advertised a soap powder at 23c a box, or two boxes for $5.

"With the purchase of two boxes," the market said, "we will publish the buyer's picture, free."

THE SAME day, the Senate started debate on its very similar bill. Approval was expected to go more slowly over there. The atmosphere was more familiar, too. Sen. Taft (R. O.), faithful to the pre-Korea conservative line, attacked the proposal because it would give the President too much power and "completely abdicate the duties and authorities of Congress." That sounded normal.

And in the field of taxation it looked as if the President might get what he asked, too: a $5 billion increase now, a substantial part of it to come from increased retroactive corporation taxes, and an excess profits tax in January. On this point, CIO disagrees—it wants excess profits legislation now.

Here are the highlights on the control and tax fronts:

Price control: This section of the House bill sounded tougher than it was. The House in effect told the President he could set up price controls, piecemeal or blanket, at producer, wholesaler, or retail levels or all three, anytime he felt like it. But although he was ordered to "consider" price levels prevailing from May 24 to June 24 in setting up the ceilings, there was no specific provision for a rollback to those levels, which CIO has repeatedly asked.

Food prices could increase considerably under the type of ceiling envisioned for farm products, since the President was told to set levels which would reflect the highest price in the May 24-June 24 period, or the parity price, whichever was higher, and many foods were below parity then.

Wage control: The House adopted an amendment by Rep. Poage (D. Tex.) which was intended to order the President to set up wage ceilings at the same time as he instituted price ceilings, but this was so hedged about with restrictions and contradictions that its effect was unclear.

What it apparently amounted to was that the President could set up wage controls if he wanted to, but was not necessarily required to do so. The Senate bill now under discussion calls for a form of War Labor Board, but the House had no such provision before it.

Rationing: The President was authorized by the House to set this up if necessary.

Allocation of essential materials, and priorities: The House granted the President's full request, which would allow him to see to it by regulation that defense industries get materials they need in the order in which they need it—by requisition, if necessary.

Government loans to defense plants: Again, the House did what the President asked, voting to authorize the government to loan up to $2 billion to industries for defense production purposes.

Hoarding: The House threw in, gratis, a provision making it a criminal offense punishable by a $10,000 fine and a year in jail, to hoard food, clothing, automobile tires and other "necessaries."

Credit controls: The House wound up giving the President broad power to control all forms of credit both consumer and business—after first voting not to go that far. Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.) succeeded in getting an exemption for his pet real estate industry, persuading the House to limit credit controls in that field to new construction and "extensive remodelling" instead of applying them to the entire real estate financing field.

Commodity speculation: By a vote of 198 to 194, the House turned down the President's request for power to regulate speculation in the commodity futures markets, after chairman Cooley (D. N. C.) of the Agriculture Committee persuaded a raft of Republicans that commodity exchange trading was necessary and did not drive prices up—he said. The Senate bill contains no such provision.

Rent control: The House defeated by voice vote two proposals to add rent control to the bill, but this was not taken as an indication that strengthened rent control was a dead duck, since the administration intends to introduce a separate bill on that subject when this one is out of the way.

Taxes: There was no tax provision of any kind in the House-passed economic controls bill, and the House refused, 148-87, an amendment by Rep. Flood (D. Pa.) which would have put on record a Congressional intent to approve 100% excess profits taxation of large corporation earnings over the pre-Korea level. In the Senate, Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) was fighting a losing battle along the same lines.

The administration intended, Pres. Truman made clear at his Thursday press conference, to ask for excess profits legislation in January and meanwhile wanted its $5 billion general tax increase bill passed now.

The Senate Finance Committee on Aug. 10 partially approved the corporation part of the request, approving a hike in regular rates from 38 to 42%, but making these rates retroactive to July 1 instead of January 1 as the President requested. This would yield an estimated $1.5 billion and the rest would come from increased individual tax rates in the middle and upper brackets.

Duration: The House bill would give these powers to the President only until June 30, 1951, whereas the Senate version would end them June 30, 1952.

The Senate was expected to debate the measure at length and to make many changes in the House version.

It'll be a long time, probably, before the public finally knows what it's all about.

One indelicate political maneuver by the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition in the House nearly succeeded in putting Truman royally on the spot. Rep. Kunkel (R. Pa.) introduced an amendment striking out the President's power to impose piecemeal or selective controls, this supposedly forcing him to control the whole economy if he wanted to control anything. This passed, 118-96, but Kunkel neglected to attack another provision which empowers the President to make exceptions to any regulation he issues, so the amendment was totally ineffective.

PAC Anti-Hoarding Campaign Praised

CIO-PAC in Passaic Co., New Jersey, has put on such an effective anti-hoarding drive that it has drawn favorable comment from the Paterson Morning Call.

Without even a crack about "we wish labor always behaved itself like this," the Call in its featured editorial July 28 said:

"The CIO . . . deserves highest commendation as well as the co-operation of all good citizens."

The drive is under the direction of CIO Intl. Rep. Edward G. Wims.

Dr. Leonard Z. Johnson, Negro physician of Harrisburg, Pa., has made a contribution to solution of the country's racial problem along an entirely new line.

When a baby is brought into the world, the attending physician is supposed to fill out a birth certificate which among other things has a space for the specification of "Race." On May 9, Dr. Johnson welcomed the arrival of another Pennsylvanian. When the time came to fill out the birth certificate, he thoughtfully wrote the word "human" in the space for race.

He's still fighting it out with the Census Bureau and health authorities, according to the National Medical Association.

Well, Pretty Sharp

The Eberhard Faber Pencil Co., is going to stop saying its Mongol pencils stay sharper longer than, or are superior in point sharpness to, every other well-known pencil in the same price range. The company so agreed in a stipulation with the Federal Trade Commission. More than that, the company will stop claiming that scientific tests show a sharpness superiority for Mongols of 29%.

Fight Follows Negroes' Test Of Rights At Va. Beach Town

COLONIAL BEACH, Va., scene of a near riot Aug. 4 when a group of 15 Negroes staged a "test" swimming party at the Potomac River resort near Washington, D. C., faced another showdown in the near future over the rights of Negroes to swim at the "white only" beach.

During the altercation, a white youth was stabbed, a white news photographer roughed up, one Negro was arrested, press cameras were smashed and automobiles stoned.

There was no demonstration while the Negroes were swimming but when the photographer, Frank Tripett, Fredericksburg, Va., attempted to take pictures of Negroes on the boardwalk, he was assaulted, he said, by two white men who knocked his camera out of his hand, knocked him down and rubbed his face in the sand.

He said a mob of between 300 and 400 white persons gathered quickly and blows were exchanged between whites and Negroes.

AT THE height of the outbreak, white men hurled threats at the Negro party and stoned cars occupied by Negro spectators, newspapers reported.

The first swimming party was planned by Martin A. Martin, Richmond, Va., attorney, to test the town's reaction to an anti-discrimination suit filed in Federal District Court in Richmond several weeks ago, charging the town had failed to provide adequate swimming facilities for Negroes.

At that time town officials said that Negroes had never been barred from the beach.

Martin indicated another attempt would be made "maybe next week" by the group to conduct a similar "test."

CSC To Open Service Center

LEO PERLIS, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, has announced that a recreation and information center will be established in Los Angeles, Cal., for servicemen going through that city on their way to and from duty in the Pacific theatre.

The project, known as the Veterans' Service Center and located at 306 W. Third St., will be operated under the joint direction of Greater Los Angeles CSC Dir. Charles Harding and CIO Rep. John Gross.

Entertainment will be provided for the troops and a number of services will be available, including the procurement of theatre tickets, housing information and part-time work for families of GIs.

Arrangements also are being made for the "adoption" of hospitalized servicemen away from home.

"This stuff? Uh . . . well we're really keeping it for when you come back from Korea, son."

Sauce For The Goose And The Gander

Joe, The Working Stiff, Tries To Apply A Bit Of 'Free Enterprise' To His Pay Scale And Gets Fired

By ALLAN L. SWIM

JOE, THAT famous fictional character whose last name is Doaks or Smith, really made a mess of things the other day.

It wouldn't have happened had he not been so stupid as to figure that what was sauce for the goose was sauce for the gander.

And then, too, he blew his top right in front of the Big Boss and really said what he had on his mind—said it right out loud in a sarcastic manner.

The Big Boss blew his top, too—and that's why Joe is out looking for a job or some "sensible" task like shooting a few Reds over in the Orient.

Of course he feels like taking a few pot shots at the Big Boss, too.

THE STORY of Joe is pure fiction, of course, but it's based on a number of facts which are bothering a lot of people.

Joe did his bit in the last war and came home dreaming about peace and prosperity.

Ah, it was going to be a good world—with the threat of totalitarianism gone and with everybody in the U. S. facing a fine future.

Joe had a heck of a time finding a good job—and that darn apartment he finally rented after living for months with his brother wasn't much better than Army barracks.

But Joe kept telling himself everything was going to be OK after "reconversion."

As time passed Joe began figuring that his job wasn't so good, after all. He wasn't extravagant but he just couldn't save a dime.

Those "adjustments" in prices which opponents of price controls had promised simply didn't come about.

Then Joe got laid off for nearly a month last fall—and for a couple of months early this year he worked only three or four days a week.

THINGS BEGAN looking up for Joe at the beginning of this summer, when he started working a full five days each week.

He started paying off his debts by scrimping on his lunches and cutting all the other corners he could.

Then the Reds from North Korea invaded South Korea. Before long the U. S. was directly involved.

Joe read the newspapers avidly. One day he saw a story about wholesale food prices shooting upward. Then he heard his landlady complain about "nearly everything's up at the grocery store."

Joe paid an extra penny for his cigarettes. Then his favorite dish at the restaurant went up a dime.

It seemed for a couple of weeks that he heard about price increases every time he turned around.

"Why? Why? Why?" Joe asked himself. "There aren't any shortages."

The more he thought about it the angrier he got.

JOE COULDN'T get the foreign and domestic situation off his mind no matter how hard he worked.

He did a bit of checking and found that farmers weren't getting higher prices for the stuff they supplied the stores.

This made him sore, too.

Finally Joe told himself that he'd been pretty stupid and that until that moment he hadn't really understood what the profiteers meant when they made speeches about "free enterprise."

"Well," said Joe, "if 'free enterprise' is good for them it ought to be good for me, too."

He left his machine and walked right into the office of the Big Boss, where he said:

"I want a 20% pay increase just because there's a war over in Korea. I know there's no shortage of workers, but I want a pay increase right now. After all we ought to inject a bit of speculation into the labor market.

"Who knows? If you give me a pay boost other Big Bosses might do the same thing. If all of us dumb stiffs followed suit we'd be making a real contribution to inflation. And wouldn't that be just dandy?"

You can understand, can't you, why Joe's out looking for a job?

DON'T BE RIDICULOUS!

We know a fellow who would "solve" the nation's No. 1 problem simply by dumping atomic bombs—without advance notice—on all the major centers of population in Russia.

There's a fellow who lives down the street from him who would "solve" our domestic Red problem simply by tossing all of the U. S. Commies into jail.

Then, here and there are a number of characters who'd meet the threat of world Communism by putting the people of the U. S. in an economic-political straitjacket so we'd be "prepared" for any emergency.

Such people, of course, would destroy the very thing we're fighting for and, frankly, we're not too much worried about them at this stage of the game.

But we are worried about those persons in and out of Congress who don't go quite so far in their thinking but are playing around with the idea that we can preserve our freedom by sharply limiting it.

Sure, we'll grant you right off that in times of great national emergency we must submit to controls which we would never tolerate in normal times.

But what we're kicking about isn't necessary controls and necessary legislation. We're talking about "sleepers"—those nasty pieces of business which are touted as being one thing but turn out to be something different.

Let's use the Mundt-Nixon-Ferguson "subversive control" measure as an example. It's avowed purpose is to put a crimp in Commie activities by exposing them to public view.

But the measure could easily be used to crack down effectively on labor unions and other liberal groups. And you're just kidding yourself if you think it wouldn't be used for that purpose.

CLUBS CAN'T KILL IDEAS

It's been demonstrated time and again that you can't beat an idea to death with a club, no matter how heavy it is or how hard it's swung. Communism is as much a state of mind as anything else and you can't outlaw a state of mind.

Sure, you can clamp down on undesirable activities that result from a bad state of mind—that result from a bad idea. And we should crack down on the Commies whenever they engage in subversive activities.

But in doing so we shouldn't destroy the civil liberties of others and we shouldn't provide machinery which can be used to harm non-Communist liberals.

What we're trying to say is that you shouldn't throw the baby out with the dirty bath water—that we shouldn't put ourselves in a straitjacket in an attempt to hamstring the Commies.

We don't like the CPers and we've said so time and again. We've baited the Reds all over the place. We think the U. S. party-liners are a bunch of stupid jerks. And we don't think we have many illusions about the role they'd try to play if Russia and the U. S. tangled in a war.

But we simply can't see the domestic Reds seizing control of our country tomorrow or the next day.

Meantime we shouldn't provide them with ammunition to use in the worldwide ideological battle.

And that's exactly what we'd be doing if we went off half-cocked and tried to ape Russian thought-control measures.

Labor Throughout World Hits Aggression

COMMUNIST aggression in Korea and elsewhere is being denounced throughout the world.

Nederland Verbond van Vokverenigingen (NVV), the major Dutch trade union, is holding a series of five meetings to protest Communist aggression in Korea and to pledge its support to the action of the United States and the United Nations in combatting it.

The meetings are being held in five principal Dutch cities, and the NVV central office also said two additional mass meetings may be held.

The call of NVV, which is Socialist, is the first action taken by any Holland trade union and is believed to be the first call for democratic unity in the face of Communist aggression in Korea issued by any large trade union in Western Europe.

The NVV, which represents 400,000 workers and about 40% of Holland's labor force, hopes to rally free workingmen everywhere in support of the UN action in Korea.

IN GREAT Britain, the Labor Party has formally protested recent acts of Communist aggression against Eastern European workers.

The party's national executive committee reported that the Communist offensive against Eastern European trade unionists has reached "a new pitch of fury," including the arrests of leading Socialists in Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Among those whose arrest in Czechoslovakia has been confirmed by party sources are Vojtech Dundr, former secretary general of the Czechoslovak Social Democratic party, who, at the age of 71, has been sentenced to 15 years' hard labor. Zdenek Peska, also a Social Democrat and a leader of Czech resistance to Nazism, was given a similar 25-year sentence.

"In Hungary," the Labor Party said, "over 500 Social Democrats have been imprisoned without trial. They include all party leaders hitherto at liberty—Anna Kethly, the most loved and respected of all figures in the Hungarian labor movement; Ferenc Szeder, secretary of the Social Democratic Party in the first years of peace; Ference Takacs, once minister of industry; and Oedoen Kishazi.

"These are only a few of the men and women who have now disappeared into the hands of the secret police.

"The national executive committee of the Labor Party declares that these arrests are a crime against the international labor movement. It warns those responsible that workers of the West are watching them. The spirit of freedom cannot be crushed in Eastern Europe. When liberty is restored, the oppressors will be punished for their crimes."

The Labor Party resolution also noted that "savage labor legislation and destruction of trade union rights have caused unrest and resistance in the factories," causing the Communists to attack Socialists for allegedly leading that resistance.

AT GENEVA, Switzerland, the UN's Economic and Social Council has refused to hear the Commuist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions on the question of UN social and economic aid for South Korea.

More than a year ago the CIO withdrew from the WFTU because WFTU was following the Communist Party line and is now affiliated with the International Confederation of Free Trade Union, which it assisted in forming.

WFTU Spokesman George Fischer denounced UN action in Korea and said his organization would not put its resources at the disposal of the Unified Command in Korea even if requested to do so.

Fischer said the WFTU would be glad to aid in reconstruction in North and South Korea as a whole. He accused UN forces of using terroristic attacks and torturing political prisoners.

Walter Kotsching, United States representative on the council, said this statement showed that the WFTU considered the UN to be a terroristic organization.

IN THE meantime, CIO Industrial Union Council Dir. John Brophy, a member of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions mission to Asia and the Far East, told a press conference in Manilla that ICFTU "considers it necessary to strengthen the democratic free trade unions in Asia and to help them coordinate their efforts through effective regional organization in promoting social and economic progress of the vast and under-developed areas of the East."

He said ICFTU is primarily concerned, not with propaganda on behalf of any ideology or party, but with coordinating the efforts of the world labor movement toward the achievement of certain well defined objectives designed to improve the economic and social conditions of the workers and to enhance the dignity of labor.

1950 VOTING RECORD

HOW CONGRESS VOTED

"This year, our CIO Political Action Committee is more important than ever. . . . If our country is to achieve victory for democracy throughout the world, we cannot permit reactionary political action to win by default."

—CIO Pres. Philip Murray

"The best judges of what's best for the American people are the American people themselves. . . . It is because we believe in democracy, because we believe that the American people are the best judges of what is right, that we in the CIO present this Voting Record."

—CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll

Dixie-Gops Killed Lots Of Bills

ON SUNDAY, June 25, Korean Communist military forces moved south of the 38th parallel in the opening round of an invasion which the United Nations promptly branded as aggressive.

That act of aggression quickly changed the course of thinking and action throughout the world. Our United States quickly began to mobilize against this new threat to the peace. The effects were felt in every corner of the land—and in Washington.

The 81st Congress was at once confronted with gigantic new problems rising out of the nation's effort to mobilize its resources.

How will Congress react to these new problems?

As this CIO News 1950 Voting Record goes to press in mid-August, it is yet too soon to see how Congress will vote on the great home-front issues now coming up.

But even in battle a tiger does not lose his stripes—and the patterns of thinking of the men and women who make up the 81st Congress are bound to be reflected in the voting issues ahead. Reactionaries, conservatives, liberals are likely to show, from their votes in time of peace, how they are apt to vote in time of national emergency or war.

So this Voting Record, based on the issues of 18 months of peace, has value to Americans as a guide to show how their public servants are apt to vote in the months ahead.

IN NOVEMBER, 1949, CIO Pres. Philip Murray reported to the CIO convention this summary of the first year of the 81st Congress:

> "This (Fair Deal) program has only partially been carried out . . . due to the vicious bi-partisan coalition of Dixiecrats and reactionary northern Republicans.
>
> "Disregarding the expressed will of the people, they have run the gamut of legislative delaying tactics to stymie the enactment into law of the Fair Deal program.
>
> "Led by Senator Taft, they have dragged out committee hearings on vital pieces of legislation by endless, repetitious questions; in floor debate, they have given long, drawn-out speeches, often completely irrelevant to the subjects under discussion; they have used the filibuster.
>
> "All these things have been calculated to prevent passage of the Fair Deal legislation."

By June 25, 1950—when the North Koreans launched their warfare—the situation had not improved in the halls of Congress.

In the columns that follow there is summarized the victories, the defeats and the delays which have been recorded by the 81st Congress:

Labor Laws

It's a far from satisfactory record.

Efforts to repeat the Taft-Hartley Act and to re-enact the Wagner Labor Relations Act were defeated—by close votes—during the 1949 session. In 1950, Congress did nothing further to meet the mandate of 1948 that Taft-Hartley be wiped off the statute books.

The votes were close—but the liberal bloc was lacking the strength to beat down the combined power of the southern Dixiecrats and the conservative Republicans from the north.

In the Senate, a swing of only three votes could have repealed T-H. Taft, battling furiously for his own anti-labor law, introduced a series of spurious amendments; despite his claims, they offered little change from T-H in spirit or in wording. By votes of 46-44 and 49-44, the Senate failed to stop the Taft offensive and to repeal the vicious anti-labor law.

In the House, the story was much the same. Rep. Wood (D. Ga.), fronting for northern corporation lobbyists and their friends in Congress, introduced a bill even worse than Taft-Hartley. It passed by 14 votes—217 to 203.

Next day the Administration was able to rally; it sent the Wood Bill back to committee pigeonholes by a vote of 212-209. But the campaign to repeal Taft-Hartley was over for the 81st Congress.

On minimum wages, Congress did a better job. In November 1949, it lifted the minimum pay rate under the Fair Labor Standards Act from 40c an hour to 75c—though the CIO argued that $1 an hour would be more equitable.

But here, too, the coalition got to work. Instead of expanding minimum wage coverage to millions of workers now outside the law, the House drastically cut down on the number of workers to benefit. The final Senate-House conference kept coverage just about where it had been in the past.

The labor extension service bill—designed to provide training and classes in labor-management relations, through schools and colleges—received many fine words, but little support. As in previous Congresses, it was never acted upon.

The Labor Dept.—a governmental orphan during the 80th Congress—did better in 1949-50. Congress approved the President's Plan 2, to give the Department more functions, and it increased Labor's appropriation.

But Congress refused to end the divided authority in the Labor Board; it vetoed the President's Plan 12 to make General Counsel Robert Denham subordinate to the Board. Confusion and conflict mount each day in the NLRB, as a result.

Civil Rights

Congress made its worst showing—a big goose egg—on civil rights.

The Dixiecrat-GOP coalition, working cynically and effectively, stopped every element of the civil rights program, which had gained widespread endorsement during the 1948 elections.

Defeat of the civil rights program was foreshadowed early in the first session, when Fair Dealers tried without success to adopt a simple means of closing debate in the Senate. Those proposed rules would have ended the filibusters, under which Southern poll-taxers have defeated almost every civil right measure.

The Fair Dealers lost—and the Republicans and southern Democrats then adopted their own new rules—sponsored by Sen. Wherry (R. Nebr.). Though billed as a curb of filibusters, the plan actually strengthened the talk-fest institution. For it provided that debate could be limited only when 64 Senators so voted.

After that proposal passed, the job of killing the civil rights program was easy. Each time an end-filibuster motion came up, the coalition did a quick job of arithmetic; each time, just enough Republicans voted with the southern bloc against limiting the filibuster to prevent the rules from working.

That done, all the other Republicans voted merrily to limit debate—secure in the knowledge that northern Democrats and Republicans would be able to get the necessary 64 votes to end debate and consider the bill.

That happened twice in the Senate on FEPC. Anti-lynching and anti-poll-tax bills never even reached the floor.

In the House, two bills were passed. The anti-polltax bill was approved, for the fourth time in eight years. An FEPC bill, with enforcement powers yanked out by a Republican amendment, was also passed on to the Senate—for inaction.

One other item made a little better headway. A District of Columbia home rule bill surprisingly passed the Senate in 1949; in the House, it got the cold shoulder. But by mid-August, 204 signatures—out of 218 necessary—had been placed on a petition to force it out of committee for debate and vote. There's a slim chance of action before Congress adjourns.

While doing nothing to strengthen civil rights, Congress played with a number of bills that threaten existing liberties.

Most serious of these is the Mundt-Nixon-Ferguson bill. Proclaimed as a means of protecting the country from subversive activities, it has been attacked by the President, the Justice Dept., labor, liberal and civic groups as dangerous to basic civil rights.

Social Welfare

Spurred on by demands from scores of organizations, Congress was prepared in August to pass an improved social security law. It would improve benefits—though less than CIO and other groups desired—and extend coverage, though not completely.

Passage of new social security legis-

Seven Already Defeated

Five Senators and two Representatives have failed to win their party's renomination for office during primary elections held up to mid-August.

The five Senators who will not be back in January are: Pepper (D. Fla.); Graham (D. N. C.); Thomas (D. Okla.); Gurney (R. S. D.); and Taylor (D. Ida.).

The two Representatives defeated in the primaries are Sims and Hare, both South Carolina Democrats.

Victors in the primaries over Pepper and Graham were conservative Democrats: Rep. Smathers of Florida and lawyer William Smith of North Carolina. Elections in those two states are usually a mere formality; the big contest in the southern states is in the Democratic primary.

Up until mid-August, primaries have been held in about 30 states.

About This Voting Record...

THIS 1950 CIO NEWS Voting Record was compiled by the CIO Legislative Department, the CIO Publicity Department and the CIO Political Action Committee.

It covers major test issues of the 81st Congress between January 1949 and June 1950. Other significant votes arising out of the national emergency will be made available between now and Election Day through the CIO News, the PAC's Political Action of the Week, and other CIO publications.

The Voting Record does not constitute an endorsement of any Representative or Senator, or of any candidate for Congress.

It does seek to show how your national legislators voted on a variety of bills vitally affecting labor and the general public.

The voting record helps to show the attitude of your Congressman or Senator. But it doesn't necessarily tell the whole story: whether he was fighting hard for labor's program or merely casting routine votes; whether he voted from principle or from pressure.

Endorsements by CIO unions and the Political Action Committees in each state and Congressional district are made "back home." Obviously, a Senator or Congressman with all "right" votes is more apt to get labor's endorsement than one whose votes have been all "wrong."

Read the Voting Record; give your dollars to PAC; make sure you're registered to vote. Then, in November, you can help insure the future of Fair Deal government—government that, in peace or war, will be responsive to your needs and your problems.

lation was due in large part to the success of CIO unions in gaining collective bargaining pension programs. The country's big corporations soon afterwards dropped their opposition to better social security provisions.

But there was danger to the country's unemployment compensation system, in the shape of the Knowland Amendment to the social security bill. Tacked on to the bill in the Senate, without hearings, it cuts federal supervision of the state jobless benefit agencies.

Labor experts fear that without such supervision, state agencies may become the tool of business groups, and that jobless benefit programs may be misused for strikebreaking purposes.

National health insurance—a major issue in the '48 campaign—ran into headwalls of resistance, while the powerful American Medical Association spent millions to fight it. Health insurance bills never got beyond committee.

Federal aid to education didn't do much better. Passed in the Senate was a bill permitting each state to decide whether both public and non-public schools would receive governmental aid. But this CIO-supported compromise foundered in bitter controversy in the House Labor Committee and never was reported out for action.

Housing

Congress did better on housing. In 1949 it passed a long-sought slum-clearance, low-rent public housing bill, which had been urgently demanded by labor, liberal and civic groups for years.

But a companion measure—to provide middle-income housing—for millions of other citizens was defeated, thanks to the efforts of the ever-potent real estate lobby. It would have provided long-term, low-interest government loans to cooperative groups seeking to build housing projects.

Rent control was extended—though with declining effectiveness. The 1949 law paved the way for spreading decontrols. The 1950 extension—won over protests of the real estate lobby—keeps federal controls until Dec. 31, or until June 30, 1951, for those cities or towns that vote to retain them.

Pressures of the national emergency, however, may lead to still further extension of the rent control act.

Big Business

Congress didn't make much of a showing on legislation to control the powers of big business. In fact, the President was forced to veto two bills on grounds they would give too much to the corporations.

One was the Kerr Natural Gas Bill, approved in both House and Senate. It would have poured millions of additional consumers' dollars into the treasuries of big owners of natural gas preserves. (One of the big owners is a firm controlled by Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.), sponsor of the bill.)

The President also vetoed, with labor and consumer approval, the basing point bill. That complex price-fixing measure would have permitted corporations to get around much of the anti-trust legislation on the books, and to jack up prices to consumers.
